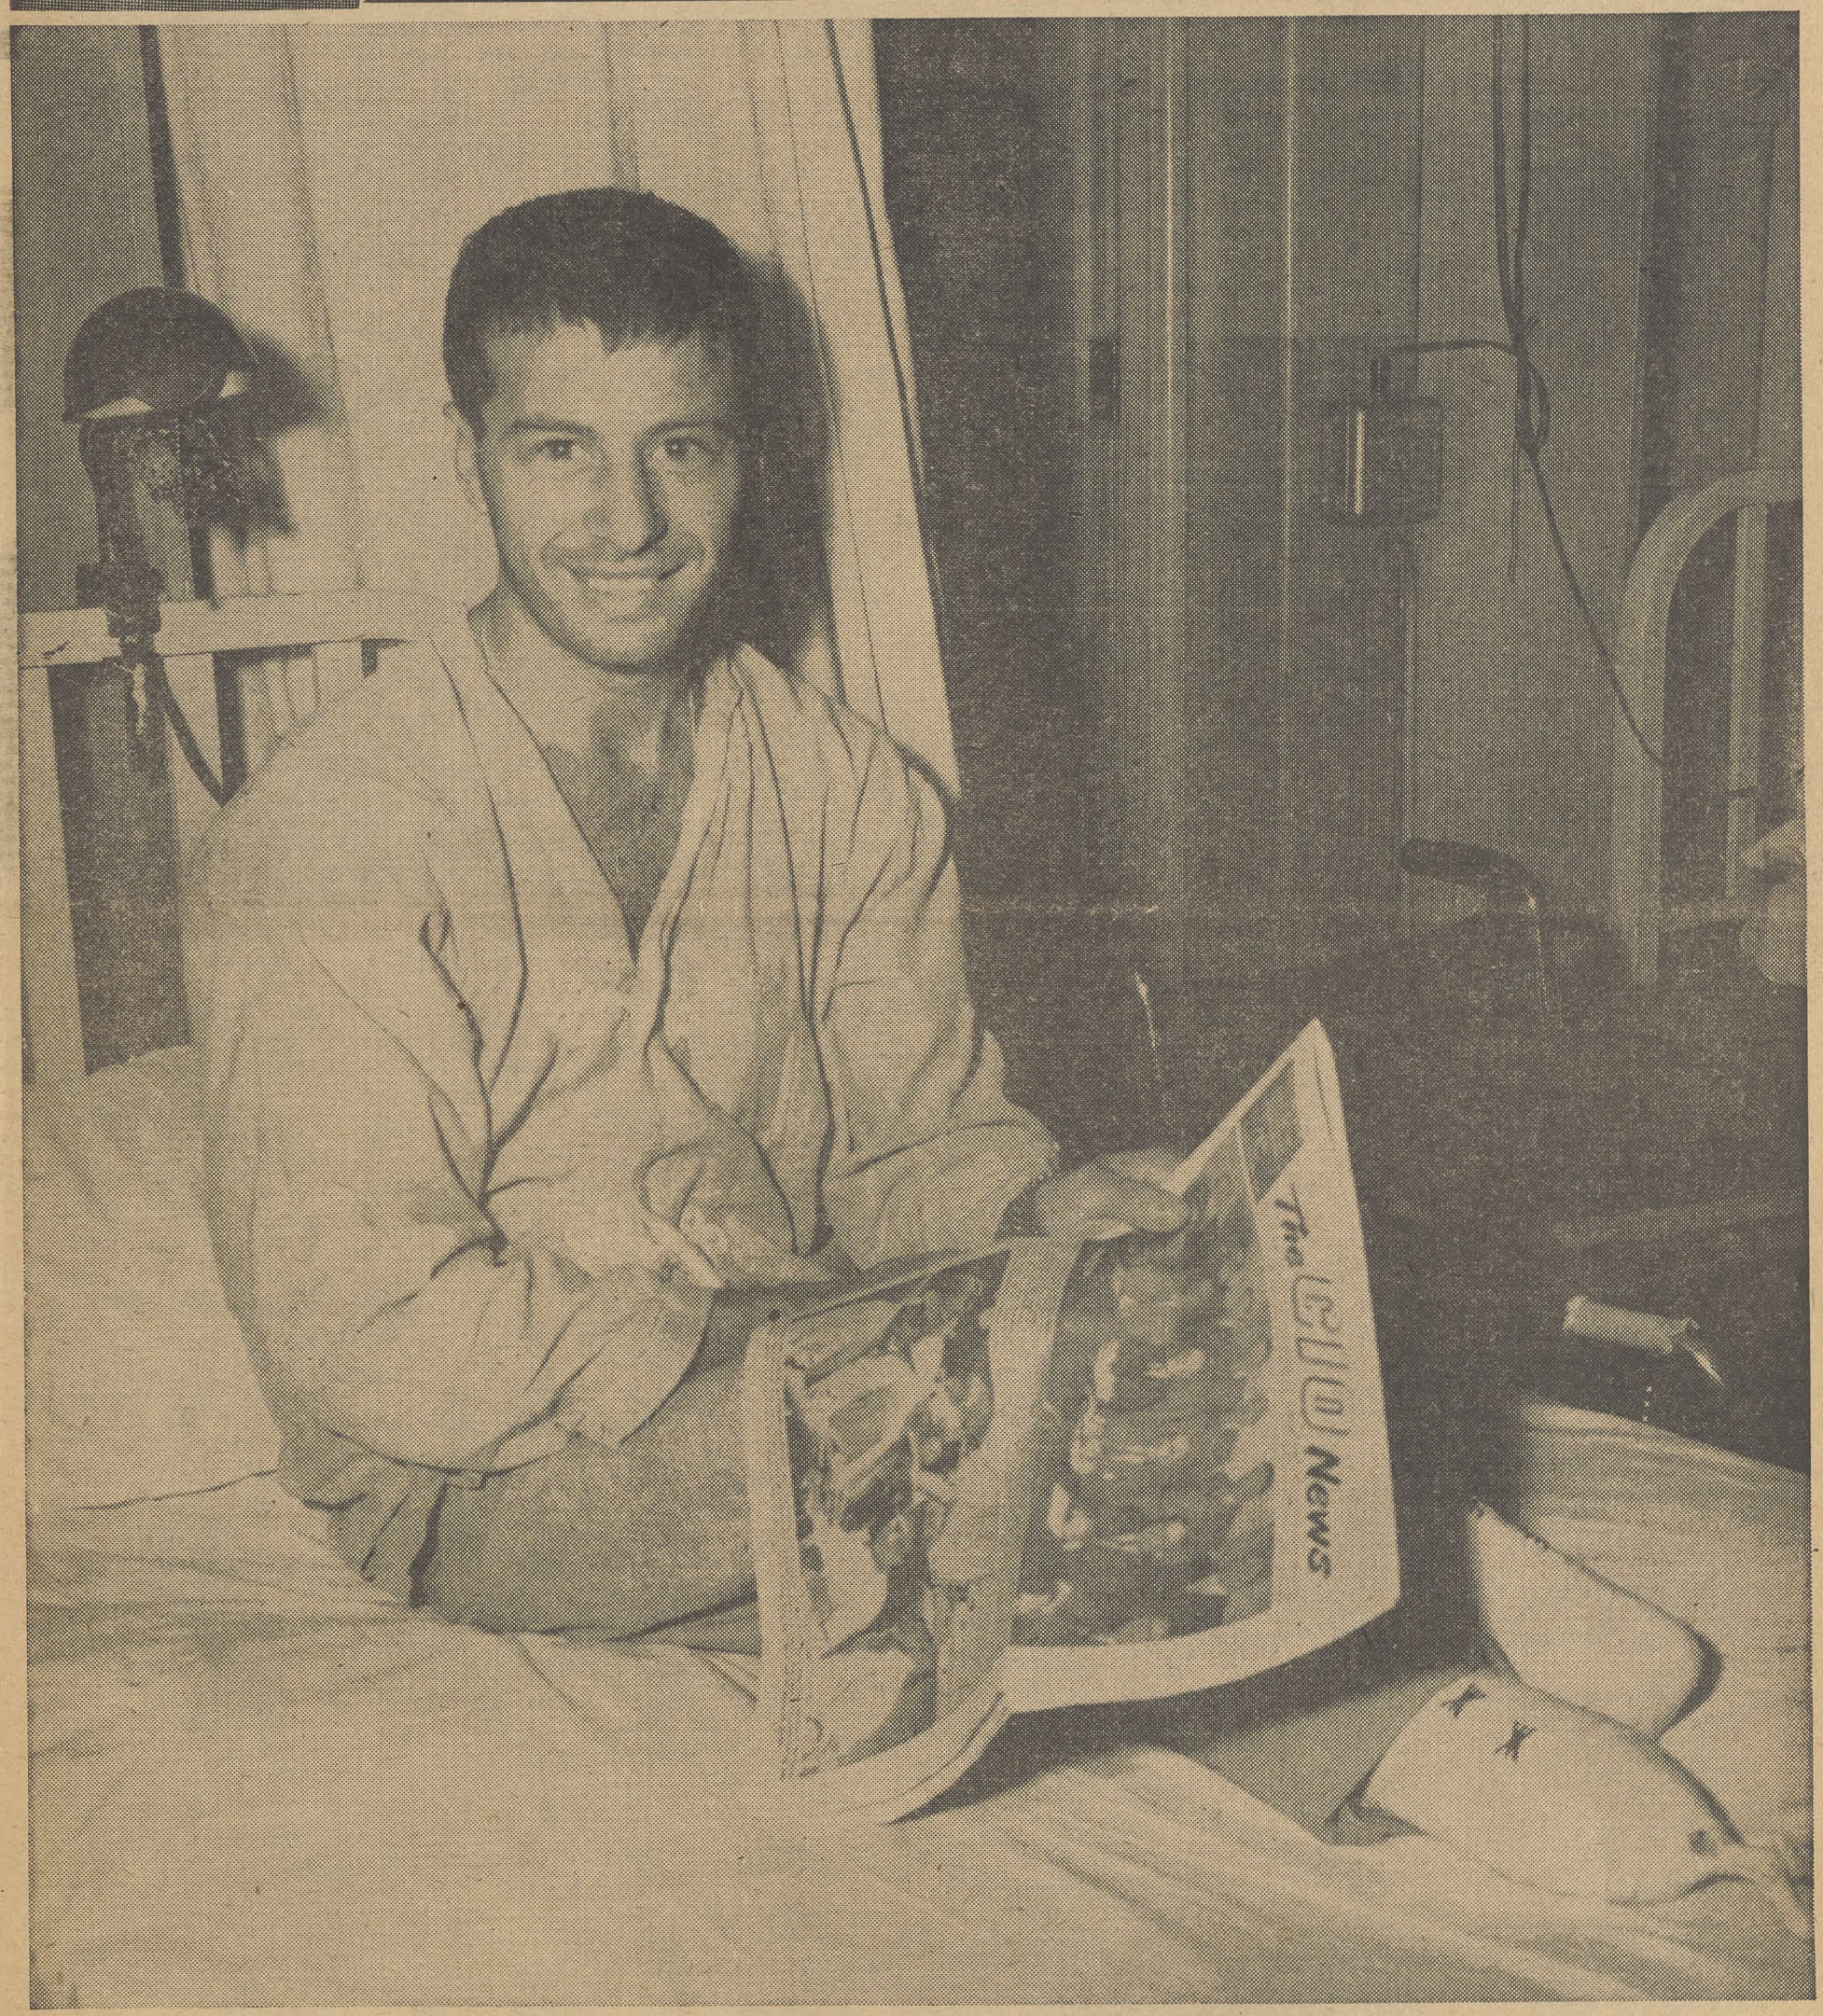
Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY 1, 1951 82 No. 1



ANTHONY ("TONY") TROILO, CIO Steelworker, looks over a copy of the CIO News as he lies on his bed in Walter Reed Hospital, Washington. Both his feet were amputated at an Army hospital in Japan when gangrene set in as a result of frostbite. He was forced by North Koreans, who captured him and stole his shoes, to walk barefoot through the snow until he collapsed. Tony is a World War II veteran who re-enlisted. For story of Troilo and his experiences in the Korean conflict see Page 10.

Spiritual Mobilization, Labor Foe, Plumps For Isolationism

SPIRITUAL Mobilization, which has been plugging private enterprise in the country's Protestant churches for the last 16 years, is embarking on a program of isolationism like many other far rightwing organizations, its director, Rev. Dr. James W. Fifield, Jr., said last week in Washington.

Dr. Fifield is minister of the First Congregational Church in Los Angeles, and is regarded in California as a neo-fascist enemy of organized labor and the New Deal who has used his pastorate and his church as a springboard for spreading the gospel of big business.

He was in Washington to make plans for a series of Spiritual Mobilization regional conferences.

At a press conference he announced that his organization agrees with former President Hoover's stand that the United States should take care of its troubles at home and leave the rest of the world to itself. This country is in no shape to send 10 divisions of troops to other nations, he claimed.

Dr. Fifield indicated that the 17,000 ministers he said are actively identified with Spiritual Mobilization take the same stand. He also said that more than 125,000 Protestant clergymen are associated with the "crusade."

He founded the group in 1934 as a weapon against "state-ism which destroys basic freedoms and spiritual ideals." His local church took it over in 1937, and in July, 1942, it was incorporated in California.

It has distributed large quantities of bulletins, pamphlets, magazines and other literature, and run advertisements in religious publications in favor of "free pulpit, free enterprise, free press," and against "social planning" and government "meddling."

SPIRITUAL Mobilization and its director have attacked the "rising power of the executive branch" of the federal government as vigorously as have the Committee for Constitutional Government or the National Economic Council.

One of its publications was a pamphlet written by the late Channing Pollock, author and lecturer who served on its advisory committee, ridiculing the late President Roosevelt's Four Freedoms. Roosevelt's Four Freedoms included those described as "basic" by Spiritual Mobilization, except for "free enterprise." But Pollock attacked the Four Freedoms as "the preposterous and impossibe 'Four Freedoms' of slaves and convicts."

ANOTHER member of the advisory board has been Upton Close, isolationist radio commentator who at one time was sponsored by Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council and is a super-nationalist of the America First type as well as a pro-Nazi and anti-Semite.

Spiritual Mobilization has worked with extreme right-wing groups such as the old League for Constitutional Government whose leader, John B. Snow, sold the phony Protocols of Zion, and the National Physicians Committee, which broke up in 1949 after unfavorable publicity.

It also advertised in the Defender while its publisher, Gerald B. Winrod, a pro-Nazi clergyman, was on trial in Washington on a charge of conspiring to overthrow the government.

U. S. Freezes Auto Wages Until March

WAGES and salaries in the new passenger automobile industry were frozen by the government, until Mar. 1, just in time for Christmas.

The new regulation, signed by Economic Stabilization Director Alan Valentine, is a companion piece to the previous rollback on new car prices to the Dec. 1 level, an order also in effect until Mar. 1. It was the first wage ceiling imposed since the present war crisis began to take shape.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers pointed out that the order "does not disturb the basic provisions of UAW contracts."

"We have already achieved through our collective bargaining contracts the stability essential to national defense," he said.

"The Wage Stabilization Board and the Economic Stabilization Agency recognized that in their interim order. We are certain they will recognize the same fact in any long-range orders they may issue in the future."

The next adjustment date under the union's cost of living clauses in auto industry contracts is on Mar. 1. What the order boils down to, then, is that the Wage Stabilization Board has two months to determine its policy on such clauses and make recommendations to Valentine.

The order is not an air-tight wage freeze. If a worker is transferred to a job of higher skill where he would have received a pay boost under normal circumstances, he can be paid the higher wage or salary that goes with the new job. Merit increases are also permitted if they can be justified under an established plan.

Industry Boosts Working Capital To $75.9 Billion

AMERICAN industry, including corporations whose officers have been screaming about "confiscatory" taxes and the trials of free enterprise under an alleged "socialist" government, have managed to pile up $51.4 billion in additional working capital in the last dozen years, the Securities & Exchange Commission reported Dec. 26.

In the third quarter of 1950, the SEC reported, the working capital rose $2.2 billion to a new high of $75.9 billion—compared to $24.5 billion at the end of 1939 and $32.3 billion at the time of Pearl Harbor in 1941. The SEC said the total at the end of 1950 was likely to end up around $77 billion.

Industry hasn't been doing badly on another front, either. While it has been building up its working capital, it has been improving its physical plant and equipment, though not at a rate which in every instance has been sufficient to meet all of the country's needs. More than $18 billion was spent on plant and equipment in 1950, according to the SEC, and an outlay of approximately $4.8 billion is anticipated for the first quarter of 1951.

The SEC said the status of U. S. industry permits it to tackle the task of meeting increased defense production with plant and resources in better shape than when the country entered World War II.

UE Lost Value To Locals When Expelled, Court Rules

THE OLD United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers lost its value to the locals when the CIO expelled it because of Communist domination, Chief Justice Charles Loring of the Minnesota Supreme Court ruled in upholding a lower court decision that a local which quite can take its treasury with it.

The ruling was made in a case involving Locals 1145 and 1140, both of Minneapolis, which bolted the UE and joined the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The decision is important because it is the first made by an appellate court in the nationwide series of legal actions involving the assets of locals which left the UE for the IUE. The court fights have tied up a number of local treasuries and have made other locals hesitant about leaving the discredited UE for its rapidly-growing CIO successor.

When Locals 1145 and 1140 joined the IUE, their combined treasuries and interests in the CIO Building in Minneapolis—owned jointly by a number of locals—were estimated to be worth $250,000.

The UE, unwilling to lose control of that much in assets, took to the courts. When the county court ruled against it, an appeal was filed with the claim that the assets should go to the international under the union constitution.

Loring ruled that the constitution was no longer enforceable because part of the agreement between the international and locals was an "implied condition" that UE remain within the CIO.

"UE exists because of its membership," he ruled. "Hence it is in argument 180 degrees off course to say the locals owe their existence to UE when the truth is that UE owes its existence to the locals."

HE REASONED that a local union "is a separate and distinct voluntary association which owes its creation and continued existence to the will of the members."

"Where members of a local union vote to disaffiliate from an international union," he added, "such vote is sufficient authorization for representatives of the local to institute suit to accomplish such disaffiliation."

Maritime Unions Meet On Security

Representatives of non-Communist CIO, AFL and unaffiliated unions in the maritime industry will meet in Washington Jan. 3 to take a joint stand on new Coast Guard security regulations in the country's ports.

The new regulations were handed down recently by Vice Admiral Merlin O'Neill, Coast Guard commandant, but were revised somewhat at hearings at which unions registered objections. Some union leaders indicate they regard new restrictions on the right of suspected subversives to work on docks and aboard ships as a violation of the voluntary agreement made last June by labor, the industry and the government.

TWU Members Stage Sit-Down

Members of the CIO Transport Workers employed as mechanics by Pan merican Airways at Airports in New York, San Francisco and Miami sat down on the job for an hour on Dec. 28 to show the company they meant it when they asked for cost of living wage increases.

The company refused to give a "voluntary" increase at negotiations before Christmas by declining to reopen the contract. The union is asking 16c an hour and some collateral benefits to help its members make ends meet.

Savings Fall As Debts Rise

THE AMERICAN people are digging into their liquid assets and putting themselves in hock more spectacularly than ever before, a report of the Securities & Exchange Commission revealed.

They've been spending reserves at such a furious rate, what with the increase in the cost of living and higher taxes, that they're nearing the vanishing point, the SEC report on Volume and Composition of Individuals' Saving, July-Sept. 1950, disclosed.

The report showed that the total liquid saving of individuals in the third quarter of 1950 was $100 million, compared to $1.4 billion in the same period of 1949—a drop of $1.3 billion. The rate of saving in 1950 was less than one-fifth of 1% of income after taxes. In 1949 it was more than 2%, and before the war it was 6%. In other words, the 1949 rate was 10 times the 1950 rate, and the prewar rate 30 times that of 1950.

Liquid savings, according to the SEC's definition, are "saving in the form of currency and bank deposits, equity in savings and loan associations, private and government insurance and pension reserves, securities and repayment of mortgage debt and other consumer debt."

Time and savings deposits dropped $800 million, a record, and cash holdings went down by about $100 million. Net security holdings were $300 million less in the third quarter, compared to an increase of about $100 million in the same period of 1949—the result of cashing of government bonds.

Poised against this disappearance of the people's liquid assets is a sensational increase in debt, according to the report. Mortgage debts of individuals jumped $1.8 billion in the third quarter of 1950, a new record, and other consumer debts increased $1.7 billion, a sum the report described as "substantial."

BLS Consumer, Wholesale Price Indices At New Highs

THE COST of living pursued its accustomed upward flight in the last week, with new all-time highs being set in a number of indices.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that its consumer price index reached the highest point in its history on Nov. 15 when it climbed to 175.6. The figure represents a jump of one-half of 1% since Oct. 15 and of 3.2% since June 15, just before the Korean war started. It also is 4.2% higher than a year ago, and 31.7% above the level of June, 1946, when wartime price controls were lifted.

The new high figure reflects increases in the prices of all major commodities in the period between Oct. 15 and Nov. 15. Leading the way was house furnishings, which jumped 1.3%. Government statisticians, according to the report, expect another increase for the month-long period ending Dec. 15.

THE BLS ALSO reported that the wholesale price index set a new high for the fourth straight week by soaring to 174.7. The figure represents a percentage of the 1926 average, whereas the retail index is a percentage of the 1935-9 base.

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index jumped 10c to $6.90 in the week ended Dec. 26—the highest point since Sept. 14, 1948, when it stood at $6.95.

This index is the total of the wholesale prices per pound of 31 foods in general use. The prices of 13 of them advanced during the week, 13 remained unchanged and only five dropped.

The new figure is 96c higher than in the week before the Communist invasion of South Korea and 78c above the 1949 high of $6.12. It compares to an all-time high of $7.36 on July 13, 1948.

Incidentally, prices of wooled lambs and butter reached all-time highs on wholesale markets during the week. Grains also rose sharply on Chicago markets in expectation of a price freeze.

The Senate Committee on Utilization of Farm Crops is attempting to complete an investigation into jumps in the cost of living and have its report ready for the Senate by the end of January.

Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.), the chairman, said recent price fluctations in the egg market and price boosts in meat and sugar need more investigation.

"Fluctuations in coffee prices clearly have been and are being manipulated," he added, "and we hope to get more information about that, too, before the deadline."

The committee is looking into reports that most food prices shot up over night after President Truman proclaimed the state of emergency.

19 Swift Strikers Win $14,654

Two years of grim haggling by the grievance committee of CIO Packinghouse Workers Local 167 paid off handsomely for 19 members who were denied re-employment in the South St. Paul, Minn., plant of Swift & Co. at the end of the 1948 strike.

After pushing the grievance to arbitration, the committee forced the company into two additional sessions with the arbitrator for clarification of his awards, and then turned down two company offers.

It persisted until finally it came up with an agreement by Swift to pay a total of $14,654.95, a substantial boost from the company's second offer of $7999,85. The firm's first offer did not include premium earnings the workers normally would have made. Its second included the premium earnings, but left out pay for weeks when they were employed elsewhere at lower wages, the company claiming they were "not available" for work.

CIO: Voluntary Rollback 'Shoddy Christmas Present To Families Of The Nation'

EMIL RIEVE, administrative chairman of the CIO Economic Policy Committee, last week termed the government's call for a voluntary price rollback a "shoddy Christmas present to the families of the nation," and said the time has passed for attempts at "piecemeal" stabilization of the national economy.

Rieve, who is president of the CIO Textile Workers, said that predictions of success for the government's call for voluntary price rollbacks would soon prove "cruelly deceptive."

He added that the pricing standards set forth by the Economic Stabilization Agency "will not roll back the cost of living, which is already at a new postwar peak. They will not even stop living costs from spiralling still further."

The CIO official complained that the ESA's pricing standards "are poorly drawn" and that "on many items . . . they actually invite price increases."

"Any appeal for 'voluntary' price controls is a well meaning but empty exhortation," Rieve said. "After our long and sordid World War II experience, have we not learned that price rules without enforcement powers and penalties are futile?"

TEXT OF Rieve's statement follows:

"When the Government, last week, called for a voluntary price rollback to the Dec. 1 level, it gave a shoddy Christmas present to the families of the nation. Blaring newspaper headlines told the public that the price rise would be checked. But these accounts were cruelly deceptive, as the housewives of America will soon discover.

"The 'Pricing Standards' that were released by the Economic Stabilization Agency will not roll back the cost of living, which is already at a new postwar peak. They will not even stop living costs from spiralling still further.

"The Standards themselves are poorly drawn. They actually invite price increases on many items. But to understand the main reason why the rollback plea is ineffective, we must examine the Defense Production Act in which Congress set up the stabilization rules last summer.

"We will find that despite good intentions, the hands of the economic stabilizers have been tied tightly because the Defense Production Act prevents them from effectively checking the rising cost of living.

"Why are the new Pricing Standards doomed to failure?

"BECAUSE they do not touch the most important cost of living items. Food takes about 40% of the average family budget. Yet, the Standards exclude the rollback of food prices at the producer level, because the Defense Production Act prevents it. Rent accounts for about 13% of average living costs. It, too, was excluded from control by the Act and is not now effectively controlled by any other legislation.

"Any appeal for 'voluntary' price controls is a well meaning but empty exhortation. After our long and sordid World War II experience, have we not learned that price rules without enforcement powers and penalties are futile?

"Because the Pricing Standards provide that any 'unprofitable' item can be raised above Dec. 1 levels. But most businesses have customarily sold so-called lead items at cost or at lower than usual profit levels. Now, the price of any of these items can be increased above Dec. 1 levels to 'the amount necessary to make it profitable'—whatever that may mean. Here is a 'come and get it' invitation.

"Because, while the Standards talk about holding down prices so that they return profits to the 1946-1949 level—the highest four-year profit average on record—it actually does no such thing. By rolling back prices only to the Dec. 1 level, all of the super profit gains since the Korean invasion would be frozen into the price structure.

"THE CIO has already recorded its full support for a nation-wide economic stabilization program which is fair and equitable—and will work.

"But the Congress of the United States must provide legislation which can be used effectively to give stability to the economy of the nation. The Defense Production Act failed to meet that responsibility. The Administration cannot stabilize with an inflationary 'stabilization' Act.

"No power was provided to stop speculation on the commodity markets—a major scandal in this critical period.

"Under the Act the price of farm products can be controlled at 'parity' which is a sliding scale. But most food prices are now below parity levels. In addition, after the product leaves the farm, the processor is singled out for a special guarantee that his prices must be high enough to insure him a 'fair and equitable margain.' Any way you look at it, prices at the grocery store can only continue to rise under the rules laid down by the Act.

"During World War II, food prices were rather effectively controlled by a stabilization program which included farm subsidies. The Defense Production Act, however, fails to provide any method to hold down food prices for the consumer while assuring a fair return to the farmer.

"Even where power to hold the price line seems to be secure, there are the same loopholes we saw during World War II, which permit hidden price rises through lowered quality standards.

"NEED THERE be any wonder that the Economic Stabilization Agency is without effective power to hold the cost of living?

"Congress must meet its obligation to the American people by amending the Defense Production Act so that real—not 'phony'—price controls can be enforced.

"If the economy is to be stabilized, it can no longer be done piece-meal. It just doesn't make sense to freeze the earnings of the workers in a few selected industries, when the prices of the products of only these particular industries become frozen. The families of auto, steel, and rubber workers don't eat automobiles, steel, or rubber.

"Finally, Congress must make equality of sacrifice more than a patriotic slogan. The Excess Profits Tax now being considered falls far short of the needs of this national emergency, both as a revenue measure and as an equitable charge on the corporations of the nation.

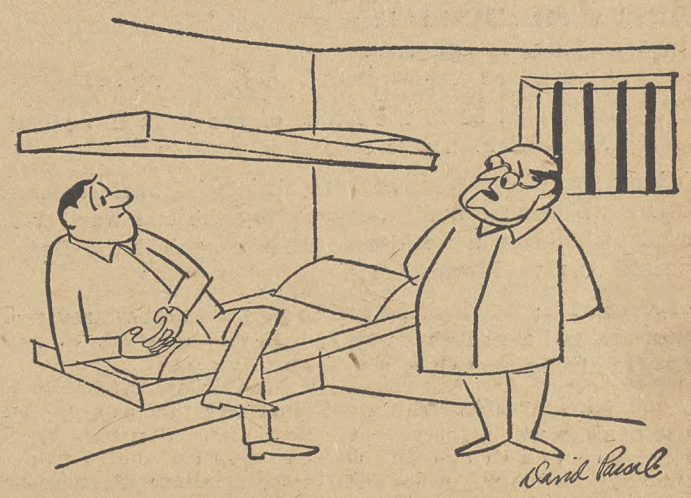
"Organized labor and all of the American people have the right to expect—and to demand—that the new Congress proceed immediately to protect and strengthen the mobilization effort by enacting a fair and workable stabilization program now."

Changes Asked In 2 N. J. Laws

The New Jersey CIO has asked that the state's unemployment compensation law and temporary disability insurance law be completely overhauled.

Testifying at Trenton before the legislative commission to probe and report on the two employment security laws, Harry Kranz, state CIO legislative director, called for 13 changes. The intent would be "to insure that every worker unemployed through no fault of his own or disabled off his job will receive promptly, fully and equitably state benefits that will prevent his becoming a burden on his family or the community."

Among the changes the CIO asks were additional benefits payments to disabled workers when they are hospitalized, and state payment of all or part of the patient's doctor bill.



"My best legal advice is: 'Get a good lawyer.'"

There's A Tough Year Ahead For Us

But Things Will Go Better If We Unite And Seek Greater Equality Of Sacrifice

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S BEEN an exciting, interesting and disheartening year—the one we've just wound up.

In one part of the world the cold war became hot—and all over the world was posed the threat of international conflict.

In our own country we began moving from an uneasy "peace" economy to one containing the controls and restrictions that go with war.

This brought unwelcome changes into the lives of all of us. It made many of us jittery, uneasy and uncertain.

It made it difficult—if not impossible—to say "Happy New Year" with any real expectation that the new year would be a happy one.

But circumstances did not do away with the traditional idea of selecting the end of one year and the beginning of another as a period in which to look both forward and backward.

Let's take a backward look first—just to see if we did the things needed to make us strong and secure in the uncertain future.

Let's start with politics, because through political action we select those who lead us in the struggle between democracy and totalitarian communism.

The election campaigns in many parts of the country were disgraceful because they sewed seeds of hate and doubt—because they were conducted on completely phony issues.

Perhaps we could easily afford such a doubtful luxury in times of peace, but we couldn't afford it in 1950.

But that's not the worst of it.

Bitter attacks on the Administration and particularly upon the secretary of state continued after the election was over.

And today we have a badly divided government at a time when unity is sorely needed.

CONGRESS certainly acted unwisely when it handed President Truman the hodge-podge law with which he is supposed to maintain economic stability.

What has occurred to date indicates that nobody likes the law and that few think it will work with either fairness or effectiveness.

It will serve further to divide—not unify—the various groups of our population which need to work together.

The wrangle over the type of new tax legislation to be enacted also aroused bitterness and distrust.

And the lack of coordination among governmental agencies dealing with mobilization made many of us wonder about not only where we were going but how we were possibly going to get there.

LABOR, GENERALLY, was able to set aside its differences and get together on a unified program insofar as mobilization was concerned

Major segments of the union movement worked closely on international affairs through the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

In recent weeks they formed the United Labor Policy Committee to deal with mobilization problems.

And labor, perhaps more than any other group, has appealed for greater unity among all the people.

This was done because labor feels we cannot successfully combat a common enemy if we spend too much time fighting among ourselves.

PREDICTING WHAT 1951 will bring is an impossibility—but indications are that we're in for a lot of trouble.

Taxes will go up again. Prices will continue to rise unless the government acts promptly to keep them from doing so.

We're going to have to take up a notch in our belts if things go reasonably well—and a number of notches if they don't.

Rents will become a major problem in a short time unless Congress enacts a new—and effective—control law.

Shortages will begin appearing here and there. In some lines they'll become acute, or nearly so.

Life for most of us will be much like it was during the last war—perhaps a little easier—perhaps a little harder by the end of the year.

All of these things will be easier to bear if the people who make governmental policy will get together, stop throwing rocks at each other and enact legislation designed to bring about the greatest possible equality of sacrifice.

HOOVER AND HEARST

Maybe Herbert Hoover didn't intend to confuse people when he went on the air recently to give his views on international affairs—but he made some very confusing statements.

He said the nation's first lines of defense must be the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—and then he claimed he wasn't preaching isolationism.

Western European countries, he declared, must build up "organized and equipped combat divisions of such huge numbers as would erect a sure dam against the Red flood" before U. S. lands "another man or another dollar on their shores . . ."

Can you tie that?

Our former President wants us to withhold aid to our allies until they no longer need it!

His plans sounds a bit like throwing a life preserver to a man after he has safely reached shore—but there's little possibility that Western Europe could reach "shore" without our help.

We—as you may have guessed by now—thought the Hoover speech was a bad one, that it was poorly timed and that it contributed only confusion to an already-confused world.

But the Hearst newspapers thought it was wonderful. An editorial in the New York Daily Mirror said:

"Herbert Hoover stands like a Gibraltar against the tide of partisan propaganda and doctrinaire dillies that come out of Washington."

And the Mirror carried an editorial cartoon showing the face of Hoover carved on the side of the Rock of Gibraltar.

It was a touching—and unrealistic—tribute to a voice from the past.

U. S. MUST CARRY OUT ITS PLEDGES

We wouldn't be much concerned about the Hoover speech if we didn't feel it was the beginning of a campaign to get the United States to go back on its pledges to other nations which are fighting communism.

Those pledges were made legally by our government. The idea of helping our allies has been approved in many ways by votes of a majority in Congress.

There is a strong possibility that a good part of Western Europe already would be in the hands of the Reds if we had not put the Marshall Plan into operation.

We have spent huge sums of money bolstering anti-Communist nations which were badly weakened by the last war. We have tried to build up a world-wide defense against the Reds, who operate on a world-wide basis.

Yet Herbert Hoover had the gall to propose that we reverse our course and tell our allies we won't help them any more until after they're strong enough not to need our help.

By doing so he performed a great disservice to the U. S. and the cause of democracy.

And those who gave him support—editorial or otherwise—did likewise.

What Some Folks DON'T Like About South

"NOBODY'S going to push me around!" You have probably heard people say that in some form many times. They usually mean that somebody has violated what they consider one of their basic rights of citizenship.

Nothing will rile the average person more than to see somebody who considers himself a privileged character cut in ahead of a line at a movie box office, or brazenly park in a no-parking zone.

What would it be like, then, to live in a community where you were constantly being made aware that you weren't considered good enough to have the same rights and privileges as other citizens?

It was to throw some light on this subject that a survey on the limitations of the rights of Negroes in the South was conducted by the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta, Ga. Its results have just been published in a pamphlet, "Safety, Security and the South," by A. F. Miller and Mozell Hill.

The council is a non-profit, non-political, organization set up in 1944 to study problems of the South and to mobilize southerners to solve them. It includes among its members people from all classes, faiths and races, from all parts of the South.

BASED on intensive interviews and on a questionnaire distributed last summer to 1000 Negro students at the Atlanta University Summer School, the survey was designed to find out from articulate Negroes themselves to what extent they and their people are today permitted to enjoy such simple rights as safety and security or "Freedom from Fear."

Although the survey was too limited in scope to support any general conclusions as to improvements in race relations, it did throw some sidelights on the subject and brought forth interesting and significant comments from the Negroes who took part in it.

Questioned on discrimination against Negro car drivers, one student remarked:

"THEY do not object to Negroes driving cars, but there are certain places you must not park. You cannot park in front of the post office and get out and get your mail. You must park in back or down the street. The space in front of the post office is reserved for white folks' cars."

On forced labor, another said: "In certain work seasons, as the peanut season, you are forced to work. They come around to your homes looking for you. If you don't work, they will arrest you on some charge. In October a Negro school opened up in one section. The children had not gathered a man's peanuts. He closed the school down for a week until they were all gathered. He had the teacher go home and ordered the children to the fields."

On bias in the courts, one Negro student, remarked:

"He (the judge) is neutral unless there is an issue involving whites and Negroes. Then every time you get the short end."

A PORTION OF the survey dealing with the right to vote leads to the implication that there is a close relationship between Negroes voting in appreciable numbers and improved treatment by police and in the courts. Where the Negro vote was large, city officials, police and courts seemed to be fairer to the colored citizens.

The authors of the pamphlet express the hope that it "may contribute in a modest way, to the current effort to make the promise of our democracy meaningful to the rest of the world."

"If we are to convince the long-submerged peoples of the world that our way of life offers the most in personal freedom and opportunity," they added, "we must face up honestly to such problems as those dealt with here." H. R.

Elisabeth Gilman Dies In Baltimore

Deep sorrow over the death of Elisabeth Gilman, of Baltimore, Md., who spent her long life working for the cause of labor and the oppressed, was expressed in a resolution passed by the Baltimore Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers.

"For over a quarter of century," the resolution stated, "Elizabeth Gilman helped us in our struggle to better our wages and working conditions."

Miss Gilman, daughter of Daniel Coit Gilman, first president of Johns Hopkins Univ., started her social service activities as a young woman trying to brighten the lives and increase the opportunities of underprivileged youth.

The Baltimore Clothing Workers remember her particularly for her activities during a general strike in 1932, when she helped form a committee of leading citizens who forced the holding of hearings in the City Hall at which the terrible working conditions in some clothing shops were exposed.

He Told Stranger, 'Why, I'm Just A Bum'

TWO MEN who had never seen each other before boarded the same airliner at the Washington airport and took off for Chicago.

By chance, they sat in adjoining seats. It was apparent that they were accustomed to air travel.

Each had a copy of the same newspaper tucked under his arm. Both were neatly dressed and there appeared to be little difference in their ages.

Before long they were engaged in conversation, and the casual observer might easily have jumped to the conclusion that they were in the same business or followed the same profession.

One of them, however, was a corporation lawyer who dabbled in real estate and the other was a union representative.

THEIR conversation continued as the plane sped westward—and they discussed a number of related and unrelated subjects.

First came sports—and the two men agreed on the possible outcome of the World Series.

Then the talk switched to aviation, and the union man talked with considerable knowledge about jets, their speed, fuel consumption, etc.

Talk about planes led to talk about travel—and both men told about their experiences abroad.

The unionist explained in detail about the manner in which European Communists worked. The lawyer listened attentively, then finally asked, "What were you doing over there?"

"Oh, I was on a little mission for the government," replied the union man.

NEXT CAME a discussion of economics, and the two men argued earnestly—but without heat—on the basis of their pet theories.

The lawyer followed a conservative line and the unionist talked like a New Dealer.

Before long they were discussing politics—and here they reached sharp disagreement. But each listened politely to the views of the other.

The lawyer was busy damning the "Roosevelt-Truman" trend when the plane landed at Chicago.

The men alighted, walked around the airport for a few minutes, then reboarded the plane just before it headed for Los Angeles.

They soon resumed their discussion.

AS TIME passed the two men switched rapidly from one subject to another.

They learned they had read many of the same books, that they liked the same kind of music, that they disliked "breezy" radio commercials and that both were born on farms.

Their views on public speaking were exchanged with considerable eagerness after each told the other that he appeared frequently before audiences.

On philosophy they were not in accord—and the unionist switched the subject quickly after the lawyer started talking about the ballet.

"Maybe I'm a low-brow, but I just can't go for that kind of dancing," said the unionist.

AS THE plane neared its destination the lawyer said, "This has really been an enjoyable trip. I enjoy talking to a well informed man who has been places and done things."

Then he introduced himself and told what his profession was. The unionist did likewise.

The lawyer's mouth dropped open. He hesitated awkwardly and then blurted out, "Say, would you mind telling me what the hell a well educated man like you is doing working for organized labor?"

"Not at all," replied the union man. "In the first place I believe in what I'm doing. In the second place I went to work for the unions in the hope I could learn some of the things I missed by not being able to go to college.

"I only went to school 10 years—and alongside many of the fellows I work with I'm just an intellectual bum!" A.L.S.

Operation Ostrich!

Editor & Publisher Opposes Plugging Trust Loophole

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

FAITHFUL FOLLOWERS of this column may suspect that old man Carter takes a dim view of the commercial press. He does, and with reason. A big segment of the daily press and its defenders some times provide fresh reasons for misgivings.

The other day the Senate voted overwhelmingly to plug a major loophole in the anti-trust laws. The effect is to give aid and comfort to the little businessman and to the farmer in their everlasting struggle to keep from being swallowed up by the giants.

But here is what Editor & Publisher, the weekly spokesman of the publishers, said editorially Dec 16 in opposition to the measure: "We can't see any justification for telling a man or a corporation that he, or it, cannot sell out to the highest bidder (if desired) when the bidder happens to be a competitor."

So here we go again. Any time it's a question of the people against big business, the daily press (with all too few honorable execptions) lines up against the people.

This is the anti-merger legislation that's been before Congress nearly 25 years. When the Clayton anti-trust law was passed the people cheered until they discovered the very clever loophole.

Corporations were forbidden to buy up other corporations if that tended toward monopoly. But nothing was in the law to prevent them from buying the physical plants, inventories and other assets. And that's what the corporations did, at an ever-increasing and alarming pace through the years.

During debate, Sen. O'Conor (D., Md.) pointed to the resulting tremendous increase in economic concentration, and said that if allowed to continue it would destroy the American free economy.

He gave the figures. In 1909 the 200 largest non-financial corporations owned a third of the assets of all corporations. By 1929 they owned 48%, and by the early 30's it was 55%. In 1946 one-tenth of all American corporations owned 49% of all corporation assets; 2% owned 78%; 8% owned 89%; 12% owned 92%.

IN SHORT, one-eighth of the corporations owned all but 8% of the assets of all corporations. At the other end of the scale, 45% of the number of corporations (the small ones with assets of $50,000 or less) owned less than 1% of the assets.

The Small Business Anti-Monopoly Conference, which includes representatives of labor, small business, the farmers and the co-ops, supported the measure closing the loophole. (The same group was active in persuading President Truman to veto the basing point bill, which would have legalized monopoly pricing practices in 25 major industries.)

The conference, in a joint letter to all members of the Senate urging passage of the measure, pointed out: "Great corporations are securing control of industry after industry. Little business is being put out of business. Farmers are being forced to pay monopoly prices and big industry is using its enormous economic power to secure the bulk of scarce materials. Big business is using this power to take over the entire economic life of the nation."

Despite all that, Editor & Publisher, mouthpiece of the nation's publishers, said, "We can't see any justification for telling a man or a corporation that he, or it, cannot sell out to the highest bidder when the bidder happens to be a competitor."

Fight Due On Virginia School Bias

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is planning an all-out, direct legal attack on segregation in the Virginia school system during 1951.

Spottswood W. Robinson, of Richmond, lawyer for the organization, has announced that the NAACP will seek court injunctions against segregation itself, and will concentrate on this rather than on equalization of educational facilities.

The approach has been carefully studied, and the decision to press for a court injunction was based on a series of important legal precedents.

Most telling of these was the decision of a federal district court on Sept. 5 that Gregory Swanson, a Negro attorney practicing in Martinsville, Va., must be admitted to the state's only graduate school of law, regardless of the fact that Virginia's state constitution calls for segregation. The decision did not direct the state to establish equal facilities for Swanson—it simply ordered him admitted to the existing school.

The second significant decision came in a case involving schools in Arlington, Va. Here the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals held that the state must provide equal opportunities—spiritual and intangible—as well as equal material facilities, for all children.

Dixiegops To Try To Revive Legislative Bottleneck

By IRVING FAGAN and CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

THE Dixiecrat - Republican coalition will be coming at you from all sides this winter.

One thing the coalition was sure to try to do right away in the House of Representatives was give back to the House Rules Committee its old power to clamp down on legislation Congress wants. The effort was slated to come on opening day, Jan. 3, when the House would adopt its rules for the next two years.

Here's the background: The House Rules Committee is a kind of "traffic cop" or "production manager." It decides when various bills are to come up on the floor and how they are to be debated. Its powers used to be so vast that it literally could veto measures which had been approved unanimously by other House committees. In short a seven-man majority of the Rules Committee members could control House action.

The 81st Congress clipped the Rules Committee's wings in January, 1949, by voting that the Rules Committee could sit no more than 21 days on a bill approved by another committee. At the end of the 21-day period, the chairman of the committee which originally approved a measure could call it up on the floor no matter what the Rules Committee thought.

During the 81st Congress, eight vital measures were brought to the floor under the 21-day rule—and passed by the House. These were the anti-poll tax bill, rivers and harbors legislation, Alaska statehood, Hawaii statehood, National Science Foundation, national minerals bills, Veterans Administration hospital bill and funds for such United Nations agencies as the World Health Organization, Food & Agricultural Organization and the International Labor Organization.

IN ADDITION, observers are careful to point out that a vast amount of legislation backed by Labor and by liberal groups generally was speeded by the very threat of the 21-day rule. Among these were minimum wage and social security legislation and various housing measures. A reluctant Rules Committee scheduled these measures for action because any attempt to sit on them would have been foiled by floor action.

The 1950 election gave the Dixiecrat-Republican coalition a chance to wipe the 21-day rule off the books. Or so members of the coalition were saying in the closing days of the 81st Congress.

RING-LEADER in the move to restore the power to kill legislation to the Rules Committee has been Rep. Gene Cox (Ga.) as irascible a Dixiecrat as you'll find in Washington and a member of the Rules Committee. What steamed Cox up was the fact that under the 21-day rule the House passed a modified FEPC, the anti-poll tax measure, the Alaska-Hawaii statehood bills and an amendment upping the minimum wage. All these were bitterly opposed in the South, and the fact that the Senate failed to follow through on all of them didn't eliminate the danger to southern feelings from the Dixiecrat point of view.

Working hand-in-glove with Cox has been Rep. Joe Martin of Massachusetts, Republican floor leader. Martin was claiming, "We've got the votes." Close behind Martin came Rep. Clarence Brown of Ohio, another Rules Committee member.

Brown, whose outline roughly resembles a medium sized brick house, likes to have you think he's a carefree country boy fresh from the sticks. Actually he's one of the shrewdest manipulators of all the Republican manipulators in the House—and one of Sen. Bob Taft's strongest lieutenants in both Washington and Ohio. Behind Brown stood Rep. Charlie Halleck of Indiana, another slick GOP operator. So one thing was certain: the coalition campaign to alter the rules was smartly led.

Advocates of dumping the 21-day rule could argue that there still would be a way of getting around the Rules Committee if the House really wanted to act on bottled-up legislation. All that was necessary, they could say, was to get up a petition forcing the bottled-up bills to the floor. However, such a petition must be signed by a majority of the members of the House. That means 218 signatures.

Obtaining them is a lengthy, sometimes impossible task. There are simply too many obstacles, especially if the proposed legislation is controversial. There are too many opportunities for log-rolling of one kind and another, as Gene Cox, Joe Martin and Clarence Brown well know.

An attempt was made a year ago to kill the 21-day rule. At that time 171 Democrats and 64 Republicans jointed hands to save it by a majority of 53. What made the prospects tougher this year was the fact that 27 of the Democrats who helped form the majority were replaced by Republicans. Whether Joe Martin had the votes he claimed would be settled swiftly. Independent Republicans hold this balance.

HOW DOES the Rules Committee get that way? Why is it that a Dixiecrat-Republican coalition within the committee itself is allowed to block legislation, even though the chairman is liberal Adolph Sabath, a New-and Fair-Dealing Democrat from Chicago? Why can't we have a liberal Rules Committee?

The answers to those questions are another matter indeed. You'd have to change the creaking machinery by which Congress forms its committees. Seniority is king. You get good committees when fortune favors you.

The way things are, the Southerners generally have the seniority inside the Democratic party. And when the Southerners are Dixiecrats too (all of them aren't, by any means) you get Dixiecrat leadership—and sometimes Dixiecrat rules. That's one reason the Dixiecrats remain in the Democratic party.

Senate Unit Finds Hurricane Damage To Vets' Homes Due To Poor Construction

THIS IS A postscript to a sad story that occurred Oct. 17 and 18, when a not-too-awful hurricane roared over Miami.

When it was gone, so were the roofs of a shocking number of newly built veterans' homes, whose financing had been guaranteed and insured by the Veterans' Administration or the Federal Housing Administration, or both. Estimated total damage: $7 million.

The damage was much heavier in the veterans' housing developments than elsewhere, and since no government-financed or guaranteed home is supposed to be okayed without strict inspection and without adherence to rigid construction standards, the Senate Banking Committee wanted to know the answers in a hurry.

A subcommittee consisting of the two Florida Senators and a staff investigator went piling down there, and here is what they found:

Neither the building codes, nor FHA minimum standards, nor contractors' specifications had been consistently adhered to in building these homes. Workmanship was inferior and haphazard.

(The report states that this was because common labor was used for skilled work: it implies, but does not state, that this common labor was also non-union labor.)

In fact, says the report, "if the chief cause of damage could be pin-pointed, it might be ascribed to the employment of inexperienced labor."

How did these homes pass inspection? They didn't, in many cases. Inspections were neither "adequate" nor "proper." Why? Both government agencies are terribly understaffed, says the report, and such inspectors as they have are underpaid.

One sidelight, also brought out by the report: the Veterans' Administration is forbidden by one of its own regulations to discriminate against any builder because of anything in his previous record.

The wording of the regulation specifically says that loan applications must be "processed and approved, if otherwise eligible, despite previous indictments or convictions of the sellers or builders or knowledge that they have accepted side payments."

(This seemingly incredible regulation is an outgrowth of the VA lending policy, which is set forth in law; under the law, the VA's responsibility is to guarantee a loan as financially sound, not to determine whether a veteran is wise in making a particular purchase.)

Although the report is not written in startling language, there is one truly astonishing section in the recommendations made by the sub-committee members, neither of whom is noted for red-hot radicalism.

"It was generally conceded," they said, "that the level of profit per house was very good . . . and thus it cannot be maintained that low-bid subcontracting, sub-standard workmanship, or sub-standard construction are the only alternatives to higher-priced houses.

"Consideration should be given by the industry to lowering its level of profit . . . Lowered costs ought not to be obtained by sacrificing reasonably sound construction."

Pensions, Insurance Protect 7½ Million

More than 7,650,000 U. S. workers are covered by pensions and insurance plans, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

Only about half that number were covered in 1948, the bureau said. Pension plan agreements covering about 80% of the employes protected are paid for in full by employers, it added.

One Million More U. S. Women Workers

Census figures show that a total of 18,668,000 women in the United States were working as of Oct., 1950, an increase of more than one million since Oct., 1949.

The greatest increase during the period was in non-agricultural industries, where the total was raised to 16½ million, an increase of 599,000 over 1949. Women in agricultural work totaled 1,902,000, a gain of 595,000 over October in the preceding year.

ACLU To Revise Study Of Unions

A full-scale study of democracy in labor unions is not needed at present, the American Civil Liberties Union reported last week on the basis of a preliminary survey by Prof. Philip Taft, of Brown Univ.

The ACLU made a definitive study of the subject in 1943, the directors recalled, and pointed out that since then significant steps toward democracy have taken place in this area. So instead of proceeding with the original plan, the ACLU will bring the 1943 report up to date.

"It's a union buy-law. My husband installed it as a reminder!"

House Stages Sit-Down Strike On Railroad Union Shop Bill

A HOLIDAY season "sit-down strike" in the House went almost unnoticed by everybody except those directly concerned—those who want a law that will permit a union shop on the railroads.

Most of the newspapers which reported the incident said routinely that there was no quorum present because so many Congressmen had rushed home for Christmas.

Labor press reporters, however, told a different story. They said there were many members in the House chamber but they refused to answer when their names were called. And they reported others were in the corridors and their offices.

A quorum (simple majority) was obtained only after a Dixiegop coalition forced an agreement that the rail union shop bill would not be brought up.

This happened four days before Christmas—but there was still a possibility of action on the measure before the 81st Congress adjourned.

An effort to bring the measure up on Jan. 1 was to be made by supporters of the measure, but they weren't betting on the outcome. Congress is slated to act this week on President Truman's request for an extension of war powers and it was expected that opponents of the bill would plead that war legislation must come first.

THE union shop bill had been bottled up in the Rules Committee, and its opponents had to use a 40-year-old rule to bypass that committee, and call the measure up. Rep. Biemiller (D. Wis.) sought to get approval and Rep. Smith (D. Va.) immediately raised the point of no quorum. Smith, an ally of Byrd of Virginia, does not like the bill.

The bill would permit railroad management and labor to sign contracts calling for the union shop and the checkoff. The rail unions, including the CIO Railroad Workers, have pointed out that other unions already have those rights under the Taft-Hartley Act, but the union shop at present is forbidden under the Railway Act. The measure before the House would amend the act to permit the union shop.

MCS Group Asks NMU For Aid In Organizing

THE OFFICERS of the 1000-member committee to Combat Communist Influence in the National Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards have asked Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union for assistance in "organizing under NMU to provide for all steward department workers."

The request was contained in a telegram to Curran.

The NMU represents a majority of the steward department workers in the U. S. shipping industry on both the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts. MCS claims a membership of some 4000 on West Coast ships.

The committee acted on request of rank-and-file MCS members aboard the S.S. President Cleveland, who by a four-to-one vote in a stewards' department shipboard meeting voted to "call upon the National Maritime Union, an organization in the same industry, to aid us in this fight to the end that Communist enemies of free labor and a free country be eliminated from the labor movement of America."

The stewards' department crew of the President Cleveland, in a separate resolution, unanimously demanded the resignation of MCS Pres. Hugh Bryson and other officials of the union, which the CIO expelled as Communist dominated.

Meet The Thomsens of Denmark; They're Foes Of Communism

THE STRONG, cordial handshake and direct blue eyes of Poul Thomsen make you like him immediately. You know instinctively that this six-foot Danish dairyman is the sort of fellow that people take to, and you hope that his oldest son, Kaj Viggo Thomsen, who is seeking his fortune somewhere in the United States, is getting a good break.

You couldn't interest Poul in Communism if you offered him the Kremlin. He loves his independence and the Danish democratic system's way of giving him and his family a chance to live decently too much to look even once toward Russia's totalitarianism.

Poul is the product of a democratic nation—a progressive democratic nation where government and the trade union movement have combined efforts toward making the working people secure, proud and happy.

IT IS A GOOD life the Thomsens lead, as "homey" as "God Bless This Home" in Danish cross-stitching on the wall. But it isn't an easy life. There are too many mouths to feed for Poul or his wife, Anna, to relax for long.

"I have so many children I can't remember their exact ages," Poul laughs as he discusses his family.

There are eight of them: the oldest son, 21 years, who as a Danish seaman has seen the world and chose America as his home; a daughter, 24 years, who is married and lives in Sweden; two daughters, 19 and 16 years, who work; and four younger children, 14, 12, 9 and 6 years, who are in school.

Financially, by dollar standards, Poul isn't much better off than workers in some of the Southern European countries. His 48 hours of work each week as a butter maker in one of Copenhagen's large cooperative dairies brings him just over 163 kroner, or almost $24 a week.

(The United States with its 40-hour week is ahead of Europe, where the standard work week is 48 hours.)

Food in Denmark is high, and feeding his large family, even under Mrs. Thomsen's good management, takes more than half of Poul's salary. They eat well. They always have at least one large piece of meat a week, which Mrs. Thomsen manages somehow to serve for at least three meals.

Their two food luxuries are butter instead of margarine and a big family breakfast, including buns from the bakery, on Sunday morning. Those "buns from the bakery" are a special treat because normally Mrs. Thomsen does her own baking twice weekly.

True to her husband's profession, Mrs. Thomsen believes that dairy products are necessary for the health of her growing family, so her butter and milk bill runs 15 kroner or about $2.10 each week.

EVERYONE in the Thomsen household works, right down to six-year-old Hans, who shares the responsibility of the family's garden plot with the other children. Young Allan, who is 12, maintains another garden plot for the family in connection with school. The very progressive school which all the younger Thomsens attend supervises garden plots for youngsters and Allan thus supplies the family with potatoes, beets, carrots, peas and onions.

The family lives in an attractive two-storied apartment, having a living-dining room and kitchen on the ground floor and three bedrooms and a bath upstairs. The group of workers' homes belongs to the Workers Cooperative Building Association and Poul and Anna saved a long time to pay the 1000 kroner (about $145) to join the association so they might enjoy the benefits of low rent and the conveniences of these little model homes. The Thomsens' rent is just 93.84 kroner (about $13.64) each month. Gas and electricity run about $6 a month and during the winter months their central heating costs an additional $6 per month.

MRS. THOMSEN is proud of the fact that she has taught all her children to look after their clothes and do their own mending and darning. Clothes are another expensive item in the budget, especially shoes for the four rough-and-tumble younger Thomsens.

A suit of clothes for Poul, even with a worker's card which allows him to buy clothes at low cost, will take a week and a half of his salary. A utility type overcoat costs a little more than a week's salary, and utility type shoes, bought with special cards issued to workers with large families, cost just under $2. But with good managing and planning, Mrs. Thomsen keeps the clothes budget in line.

"This year I shall not have a dress because Poul has a new suit. Next year is my year," she says proudly. She and the older girls knit socks, sweaters and mittens for members of the family, and the older girls are now able to buy most of their own clothing.

When sickness strikes the household, they do not have the added worry of how to pay for medical attention. As members of Sygekasse, the Danish Health Insurance system, which costs about $2 each month, the Thomsens and their children under 15 years old receive medical care and hospitalization.

If Poul loses time from his work because of illness, he receives the equivalent of about $5 each week for his family. Furthermore, they can look forward to a comfortable old age due to Denmark's social security system and the retirement plan in effect at the cooperative dairy where Poul has worked for the past 25 years.

The independence and pride of the Thomsens is exemplified by his refusal to accept all the benefits to which he is entitled under the Danish democratic system.

"I LIKE TO manage as many things as possible on my own." he says proudly, "after all, there are others who may need help more than we do."

This year Poul and Anna will celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary. There is still a light in their eyes and kindness in their attitudes which tell of devotion and struggle to maintain a decent, secure home for their large family.

Gradually they have replaced the odds and ends of furniture with which they started their marriage by pieces for which they longed as youths. They have accumulated books and pictures and the little things of living which change a house into a home. Bright with color and spirit, the Thomsen home reflects a good balance of work and play.

Once a week all their married life, Poul and Anna have had a "night out." Usually they go to a movie. The older children take care of the young ones.

Poul is an ardent bridge player and once a week goes to his club, where he has won several of the competitions sponsored by the group. Other evenings he reads or listens to his radio while he smokes his pipe.

POUL KEEPS UP with the news. He knows about the Marshall Plan and what it has done for his small country of just four million people.

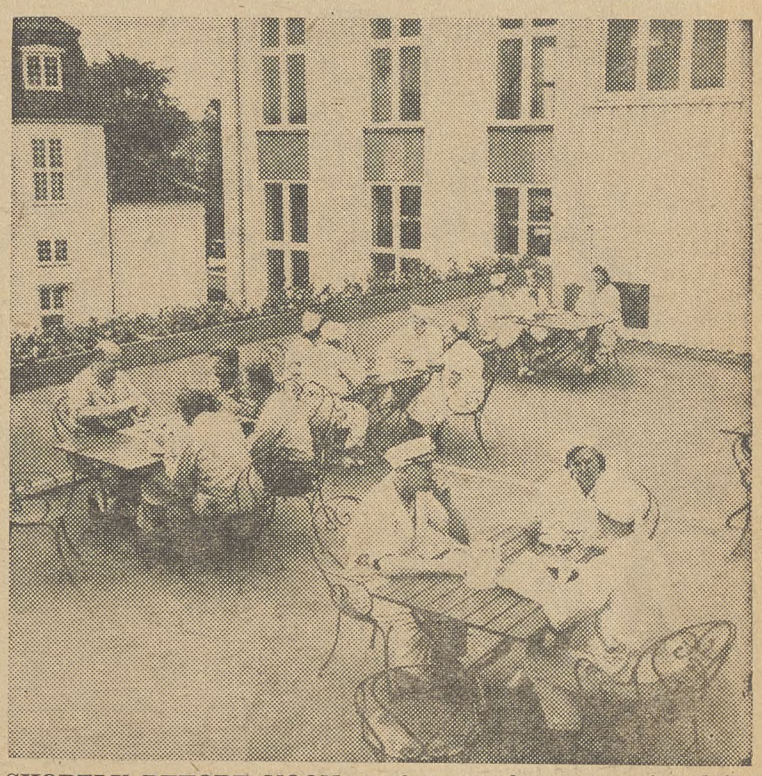
"I know it has been a good thing for Denmark, keeping unemployment down and making trade with other nations possible," he says with thanks to the American people.

The Thomsens are the kind of family the United States is most interested in maintaining in Europe. It is the kind of family the Marshall Plan dollars were put into action to save, both from the threat to Danish economy posed by war-time losses of livestock and a low industrial output.

Today Denmark is well on the road to recovery. Production recently hit a pre-war level. Employment is high. Communism is low. Imports and exports, largely with other European countries, have risen. Butter, which is Poul Thomsen's business, is one of the country's largest exports. Like Poul, Denmark has worked at achieving the good things of life. It has given its workers, through the trade union movement, a chance to live decently in security and peace. Such cooperation between people and government will continue to stymie Communism.

MEET POUL THOMSEN, the chief breadwinner of his family. Here Thomsen is at work as a butter-maker at one of the most progressive cooperative dairies in Copenhagen. This six-foot, 47-year-old Dane earns the equivalent of $24 weekly.

POUL AND MEMBERS OF HIS FAMILY wave good-bye to Mrs. Thomsen as they leave for work and school. Their two-story apartment with a separate entry is in a block reserved by a cooperative building association for workers with large families.



SHORTLY BEFORE NOON, workers at the cooperative dairy where Poul is employed have a snack on the dairy's terrace, which is bordered by flower boxes. Poul, in the center of the foreground, eats sandwiches which he has brought from home.

"This never fails—essence of sizzling steak."

32 Leaders Join Fight On McCarran Act

SIX PROTESTANT bishops, two Nobel prize winners, and leading educators and scientists are among the 32 prominent Americans who have formed a national committee for repeal of the "infamous" McCarran (anti-subversives) act.

The announcement was made by John B. Thompson, of Rockefeller Memorial chapel, Univ. of Chicago, and Robert Morss Lovett, former acting governor of the Virgin Islands. They said more than 1000 others have joined the 32 who initiated the movement, which has grown out of the appeal by more than 1900 leading Americans last fall for defeat of the measure. President Truman vetoed the bill, but his veto was overridden.

"The hysteria and intimidation the law has evoked in the two months since its passage have strengthened the opposition of those who were against its passage, and have opened the eyes of many who were not fully aware of the dangers of such regressive legislation," said Thompson and Lovett.

THERE HAVE been three developments, they said, which give hope that "this shameful legislation can be erased from the books by demand of the American people."

They listed these as the repeal measure introduced by Rep. Adolph J. Sabath (D. Ill.), declarations asking repeal by such groups as the CIO, AFL, American Civil Liberties Union, and League of United Synagogues; the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision that grand jury witnesses cannot be forced to reveal Communist connections if they claim self-incrimination.

The act requires registration of the Communist party, Communist "front" groups and individual members of the Communist party; bars Communists and their followers from government jobs and defense plants, and tightens the immigration laws. LPA

Labor Dept. Finds Hundreds Of Minors Working In Fields During School Hours

SO YOU THINK we don't have child labor in this country. Listen then to some of the facts recently discovered by government investigators, as reported in the Dept. of Labor's information bulletin.

"Hundreds of minors under 16 years of age, 65% of them under 14, and many under nine years of age, are still working all day in the fields picking tomatoes, cotton and potatoes, or topping onions or sugar beets, instead of attending school."

After school opened last fall, investigations of farms were made by the Dept. of Labor's Wage-Hour & Public Contracts divisions to find out if the child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, amended last year, were being observed. These apply in agriculture areas only during school hours in the minors' school districts.

There are not enough investigators in the field to do an extensive job throughout the country, but even with the limited number permitted under the money appropriated by Congress, some disturbing facts were revealed.

It was found that minors under 16, of Spanish-American descent from Texas, worked in large numbers in Ohio and Minnesota, and some were also employed in Colorado.

Under-age Negro children from Florida and Georgia helped in the potato fields in New Jersey, and American Indians from reservations in South Dakota worked on harvesting operations in Nebraska and Colorado. These youngsters travel in family groups and work with their parents in the fields. Many under-age minors also work on farms in their own states.

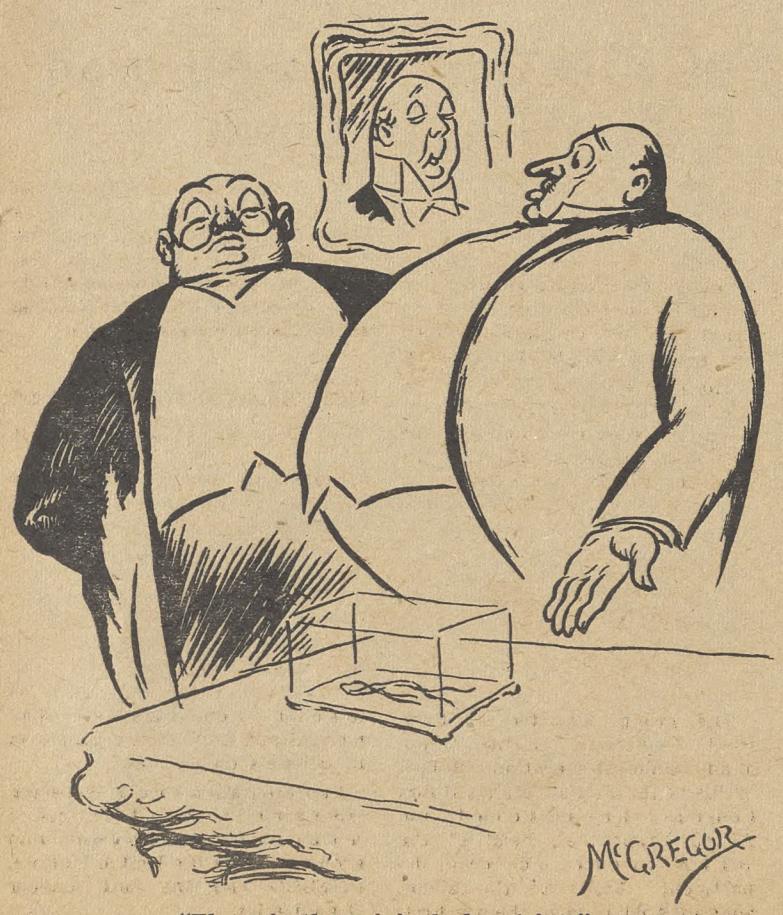
Accidents, hazardous work, and long hours were among the items included in investigator's reports. A 11-year-old girl was observed in an onion field with blood dripping from her hand, which she had cut with the large knife she used to cut tops off onions. A 15-year-old boy acted as relief truck driver in harvesting potatoes. A 9½-hour day with a half-hour for lunch was not uncommon among cotton pickers for 11 and 13-year-old children.

Large numbers of children, especially migrants, do not attend school, although many school officials do make an effort to round them up when school opens. In one area, 200 migrant children of school age were reported as not enrolled in the local school.

The children work mostly on "stoop" crops, such as cotton, strawberries, beans, blackeyed peas, tobacco, peppers, sugar beets, potatoes, asparagus and tomatoes, and some are employed to harvest fruit.

They are employed at such occupations as picking, shaking, gathering, pulling, sorting, and weeding vegetables. Some are engaged in plowing, pegging tobacco, vaccinating chickens, and cutting tops of sugar beets with sharp knives.

The farms where these minors are illegally employed are scattered all over the United States. The children were born in 27 different states and Mexico.



"There is the original shoestring."

Another Chiseler Tripped By FTC

Just because the mechanical pencil you carry in your pocket bears the inscription "Made in America," it doesn't necessarily mean that its components actually were manufactured in the U. S. —particularly if it was put together by the Windsor Pen Corp. of New York.

The Federal Trade Commission has charged the firm with importing mechanisms plainly marked "Made in Japan" and press-fitting them into pencil barrels actually made in this country. The company's failure to reveal the foreign origin of the mechanisms "has the tendency and capacity" to mislead the consuming public, the FTC says.

Cal. Council Has 6-Point Plan For 1951

A SIX-POINT program, including support for continous political organization as a "year-round responsibility," has been adopted for 1951 by the executive committee of the California CIO Council.

The program was approved at a meeting in Los Angeles with the realization that its objectives may be expanded "as the events of the coming year indicate the need for modification."

Two other major points concerned organization matters. They stressed affiliation of all California locals with the state council, and championed the traditional union aims of collective bargaining and organizing.

The other points involved the defense effort. Summed up, they are:

Communism: "To support and to sponsor legislation which will strengthen and benefit the people of this state and nation and of the free world, and be effective in opposing communism; this legislation to include matters such as child care centers, fair employment practices and improved workmen's compensation laws, as well as strictly 'national emergency' legislation."

Manpower: "To press for regional voluntary labor-management committees within this state to advise the governor on programs in connection with the mobilization of state resources, to press for expansion of training facilities to create a larger supply of skilled labor in California, and to demand inclusion of labor representatives in formulating policies affecting the welfare and activities of the state."

Economic Controls: "To demand that economic controls instituted because of our national emergency be in the form of rationing and priorities, rather than credit controls, so that the economy can be maintained in a healthy condition and goods be distributed according to the needs of the people, rather than strictly according to their financial status."

FBI Says Forged CIO Letter Wasn't Taken From Files

THE FEDERAL Bureau of Investigation has advised the CIO that the forged letter bearing the purported signature of John Brophy, former director of CIO industrial union councils, which appeared during the election campaign in Buffalo, N. Y., was not taken from its files.

Existence of the letter came to light when Dr. A. H. Aaron, professor of clinical medicine at the Univ. of Buffalo Medical School, read it during a discussion of President Truman's national health insurance plan before a Parent-Teacher Association meeting.

CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson, who presented the CIO position in favor of the plan at the same meeting, promptly challenged its validity. Aaron, who presented the American Medical Association stand against the health plan, said the letter came from a "government" source. When Thompson demonstrated to him that the letter was fraudulent and the signature a forgery, the physician publicly disclaimed it.

The FBI advised the CIO that it had determined the identity of the person who circulated the letter and said that he has no connection in any way, shape or manner with the FBI.

The letter, on what appeared to be a legitimate CIO letterhead, directed that "all Local unions participate in an allout drive for passage of socialized medicine legislation, repeal of the infamous Taft-Hartley Law."

The CIO is opposed to socialized medicine, but unlike the AMA does not regard the President's health insurance plan as socialized medicine or anything like it.

URW, Goodyear Open Pact Talks Jan. 9

The CIO Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. will open negotiations for a new contract in Cincinnati, O., on Jan. 9.

The Goodyear local union section of the union's international policy committee will meet in Cincinnati the day before negotiations open. The Rubber Workers, who represent 25,000 Goodyear employes, won a 12c package boost in October under a wage reopener, setting a pattern for wage increases in the industry.

War Of Words Pushing Pearson And McCarthy Toward New Headlines

THE "BATTLE of Sulgrave Club" between Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and Columnist Drew Pearson—in which no blood was shed—appears to have been only the opening skirmish in a "total war" of words.

Both men are fighters. Each has strong dislike for the other. Both speak freely—Pearson in his column and McCarthy on the floor of the Senate, where he is protected from libel by congressional immunity.

Reports of the skirmish at exclusive Sulgrave Club in Washington conflict vary, but the version given much credence around Washington is:

McCarthy taunted Pearson about a speech McCarthy said he was going to make about the columnist, then kneed him in the groin and slapped him on the forehead.

A few days later McCarthy made his speech in the Senate. He called Pearson the "voice of international communism."

Pearson replied by calling McCarthy the "headline happy senator from Wisconsin" and then said that he (Pearson) fought communism long before McCarthy became a national figure.

THEN, RECENTLY, Pearson hit out strongly at the Republican forces with which McCarthy is closely allied. He wrote in his column about what he termed a confidential GOP policy plan of opposition to the Truman Administration written by George H. E. Smith, secretary and staff director of the GOP Policy Committee.

Observers said that although the column was aimed specifically at the forces headed by Sen. Taft (R. O.), McCarthy also was a Pearson target.

The plan for "total non-cooperation" during the national emergency, as quoted by Pearson, says:

"Superficially the President's proposal (for a national emergency) is a question of patriotism—in the crisis all must close ranks. Fundamentally far more may be involved. It is more than likely that the United States is entering upon a struggle where its survival may be in question. The question of loyalty may go far beyond that of any individual citizen. There may arise the trustworthiness of the executive branch itself."

THE PLAN SAYS in essence that President's declaration of national emergency is just a scheme to get Congress and the nation behind the Administration.

One of the purposes of the declaration, according to the plan, is "to put behind the present Administration in the eyes of the public, the strength of something approaching a 'coalition' government, in which the minority shares responsibility for the operations and events along with the majority."

Republicans of the Taft and McCarthy schools do not relish such a role. McCarthyism played an important part in the last elections.

Since election day there has been little let-up in the attacks on the Truman program.

The battle between Pearson and McCarthy is attracting much attention because of the records of both men.

McCarthy's role in the November elections was a significant one that brought much condemnation on him from liberal quarters which objected to his tactics.

EXPOSES by Pearson are credited with having put several members of Congress behind bars.

One of them, J. Parnell Thomas, former chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, was recently released after serving a sentence for getting cutbacks from salaries paid by the U. S. to his aides.

It was Pearson who first made charges against Rep. Brehm (R. O.), who has been indicted on charges of illegally accepting $1380 in campaign contributions from two women who formerly worked in his office.

Pearson has long been saying that McCarthy failed to pay sufficient Wisconsin income taxes.

Answers You Give BLS Aide May Help Decide Your Pay

By JOHN McCARTHY
For Labor Press Association

A MAN from the Bureau of Labor Statistics may ring your bell during the next few months and ask you more questions than your wife did the night she found the blonde hair on your lapel.

Answer the questions fully, because they will help to shape your wages and your way of living for years to come. The questions will be asked of 17,000 families in 91 cities as part of the Bureau's three-year plan to revise its consumers' price index and give it a new look instead of the patched-together, pitched-together look it now has.

Despite the fact that upwards of 2 million wage earners are now covered by contracts providing wage changes when the price index changes, the index is still based on 1935-39 figures and includes many items which "moderate-income" families no longer buy.

FOR THAT reason Ewan Clague, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, started a survey in the summer of 1949 to modernize the index. How much it needs revising is pointed out by the fact that a "moderate-income" family under the old index was considered one which made $500 to $2000 in 1936.

Clague points out that average factory earnings now top $60 a week and that if more than one person in the family works income can soar to figures which would have been anything but moderate in 1936. He estimates that the new "moderate income" will probably be from $1500 to $5000 or $6000.

First, let's see what the present index does and then we can explain the proposed changes.

The consumers' price index measures monthly changes in what the city family can buy with a dollar. It is based on 200 items of clothing, food, rent, fuel, house furnishings, and other odds and ends used by the average man, his wife and kids. It uses the prices of these things during 1935-39 as 100% and adjusts today's prices on a percentage basis so that a tie that cost $1.50 in 1939 and $3 today would show a jump of 100% and be listed now at 200 percent in the index.

The index tries to limit itself to items bought by people who are not at extreme ends of the income scale—the millionaires, people on relief, retired and living on a small income, etc. It does not try to tag things as "luxuries" or "necessities," but merely lists those things for which people spend most of their money.

THE REVISED index will follow the same general line, but it will include smaller cities because it was criticized during World War II for selecting only heavily populated areas.

Clague does not know as yet whether this will mean that there will be an overall index, or whether it will have to be broken down into "large" cities, "small" cities, or possibly into regions. That's one of the questions he and his staff will have to answer when the survey is completed.

They will also have to decide whether or not to stick to 200 items and to the 34 towns currently surveyed every month. The number of towns will probably depend on the size of the appropriation that Congress gives the Bureau to work with, but the number of items can be juggled around to adjust to modern day living.

For example: During the first quarter of 1951 a few changes will be worked into the index—beer, cola drinks, layer cake, baby foods, table model television sets, group hospitalization plans, and ice cream. There will be less emphasis on ice and iceboxes and more on electric refrigerators, less on butter and more on margarine.

These, Clague says, are not arbitrary decisions reached by him, but merely reflect the changing buying habits of the American people. Other changes which will be reflected are based on the fact that city families are now buying more meat, poultry and eggs and less flour and wheat than in 1936.

They buy frozen foods, new chemical cleaning powders, televisions and other things which were practically unknown 10 or 15 years ago. They spend a smaller proportion for rent and a bigger share for recreation, medical care and automobiles, according to Clague.

WHILE theoretically the new index which goes into effect in August, 1952, should work out exactly the same as the one now in use, Clague suggests that labor unions and manufacturers include an "escape" clause in contracts using the consumers' price index to peg wages. He says this will help prevent industrial disputes growing out of differences which are bound to work out in practice.

The survey on rents was done during 1949 and will be adjusted upward 1.3 points in the January index to correct estimates made by the Bureau. The current survey will start January 11 and, depending on the size of the city, will last from six weeks to three months.

Interviewers will be hired locally through the United States Employment Service and trained by the bureau's survey supervisors. About 1200 will be hired.

CITIES WERE picked according to their population size and density, climate, income level, and distance from marketing centers. Included will be New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia on the one end and places like Nanty-Glo, Pa.; Grinnell, Iowa; Grand Island, Neb.; and Rawlins, Wyo.

Families to be interviewed were chosen from census returns and other BLS surveys and form a reliable cross-section of all families in each city. One family is selected for each 500 others with the same general characteristics.

If your family is selected you'll get a letter from Clague asking your cooperation—that's the time for you to get out your pencil and thinking cap and try to figure out what happened to your pay last year. Remember—your answers are important, do your best.

AVC Urges Congress Act To Impeach McCarthy

Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) will be ex-Sen. McCarthy, if the American Veterans Committee has anything to say about the matter.

The AVC, an organization of World War II veterans, has called for the impeachment of McCarthy on three counts:

1. That he used his position as Senator in 1948 to "subvert American justice and the policy of the U. S. for the occupation of Germany by intervention in the Malmedy (War Crimes) trials."

2. That he retained his seat as circuit judge in Wisconsin in 1946 "contrary to the laws of the state and the ethics of the bar" while he was running for the Senate.

3. That he attempted subversion of the State Dept. "with a series of lies which were not even consistent with each other, lies which contained unsubstantiated and unproven charges of treason against officials and employes of that department."

"For these and other reasons," the statement concluded, "it seems incredible that the new Congress can long tolerate the presence of Sen. McCarthy." The AVC suggested that the Senator be impeached by the House and tried by the Senate under Article II, Section 4, of the Constitution.

Michigan CIO Units Sponsor Radio Classes

EFFECTIVE USE of the radio is being taught at radio institutes sponsored by CIO groups in Michigan.

An institute held in December at the CIO hall in Cadillac, in northern Michigan, was the first attempt at concentrated radio education for CIO radio personnel in the state.

Another will be held Jan. 6-7, in Lansing, for the southern part of the state. Three workshops will be open to the students attending. They will take up script writing, with emphasis on the preparation of local news for broadcast; voice training and broadcast techniques for commentators; and promotion, dealing with the importance of building a radio audience through effect publicity.

Instructors for the institute will include a radio station manager, a member of the Univ. of Michigan's radio department, and representatives of the Michigan CIO Council educational staff.

ICFTU Unit Finds Austrian Strike Attempt Soviet Move

THE GENERAL strike the Communists tried to foist on Austria last September and October was intended as a decisive step in a Soviet power grab, according to an Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions delegation which just ended a visit to that country.

The delegation, on its return to ICFTU headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, reported finding the ground had been prepared for the strike by the Russian sabotage of treaty negotiations, which left the country in a state of economic, social and political instability.

The Austrian workers, by the vigilance and courage they showed under the leadership of their free trade unions, deserve the bulk of the credit for balking the Soviet maneuver, it said.

The group consisted of Pres. Henk Oosterhuis of the Dutch Trade Union Federation; Robert Willis of the British Trades Union Congress General Council and Alfred Brauenthal, head of the ICFTU economic and social department. Visits to the Soviet zone of Austria gave them a first-hand opportunity to learn of the terrific pressure under which the more than 50,000 workers in Soviet-administered mines and factories must work. Russian efforts to introduce the Stakhanovite speedup also were unmasked.

Many Countries' Unions To Be At ICFTU Meet

Some 100 unions in about 40 different countries are expected to be represented at the congress of non-manual and professional organizations scheduled by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions for Brussels, Belgium, on April 18-21, according to reports to a meeting of the ICFTU Intl. Consultative Committee for Professional, Administrative, Commercial and Supervisory Employes in Brussels on Dec. 21.

Representation also is expected from some 15 international bodies and a number of intergovernmental groups, such as the United Nations, UNESCO and the Intl. Labour Organization.

Wounded GI's Story

There's Little Bitterness In Tony Troilo's Voice

By WILLIAM WEISS

TONY TROILO and 12 of his buddies of the 465th Artillery were sleeping in an Army truck on the outskirts of Manila late in 1945. The truck suddenly became a raging inferno. Infiltrating Japanese had crept up under cover of darkness, poured gasoline under the truck and set it afire.

One of Tony's best friends died that night as the result of the burns he received. Tony was luckier, he came out with first, second and third degree burns which put him in hospitals for three months.

The world looked pretty good to Tony in January, 1946, when he was discharged from the Army. The action he had seen during the two years he had spent in the Philippines, New Guinea and the Solomons seemed like nothing more than a bad dream. He had recovered from his burns and he was going home.

He couldn't wait to get back to Norristown, Pa., where his widowed father lived with Tony's five brothers and one sister. He knew his old job as inspector of coal chutes at the Allen Iron & Steel Co. would be waiting for him and after what he had been through, all he wanted was to settle down and enjoy life.

AFTER TWO years at the mill, where he was a member of the CIO Steelworkers, Tony began to miss the Army. He received letters from former buddies who were still in the Army and read with envy of the things they were doing and the places they had seen.

A young fellow Tony's age forgets the horrors of battle and the pain of wounds quickly. In July, 1948 he re-enlisted. He was sent to Fort Dix, N. J., and to various other camps throughout the country. He finally wound up at Fort Devens, Mass., and after spending six months there was shipped overseas in August, 1950. As a member of the 99th Field Artillery he went directly to Korea and into action.

Troilo is just a little guy, weighs about 130 pounds and is about five feet, five inches tall. He is mild mannered and has a slow, quiet way of speaking. His large brown eyes look at you as he lies on his bed at Walter Reed Hospital in Ward 34. He does appear to realize what has happened to him.

He has lots of company in the ward, fellows like himself with whom he swaps stories about the Korean war, football, home towns, families and a host of other subjects.

TALK RUNS out sometimes and then Tony has lots of time to think. Listening to his radio gets tiresome, too. He thinks about Norristown, his old job at the Allen Steel mill, his buddies in Korea and most of all he thinks about Judy.

Judy Page is Tony's fiancee. She is 22 years old and lives in Lowell, Mass., where Tony met her when he was at Fort Devens. Tony thinks she is the prettiest girl he has ever seen and has a pocket album containing nothing but pictures of Judy.

He carried it with him all over Korea, during the terrible 21-day march after the North Koreans had taken him prisoner and stolen his shoes.

Did you ever try walking in snow without your shoes? Tony did it for three weeks—that is, he was without shoes in the bitter Korean winter for that time. He walked in the snow five days. After that his feet were frozen, and he had to be carried by the other prisoners.

Those 21 days were a nightmare for Tony. The Chinese patrol which picked him up after he was left lying in the snow by the North Koreans, travelled only at night, partly because of fear of American planes and party to keep Tony and the other prisoners from knowing what direction they were going.

THE SECOND week Tony's feet began turning black and gangrene set in. He said he must have been unconscious for several days before he was rescued by a patrol from the U. S. 25th Infantry division. At the time of the rescue he was five miles behind the enemy lines. He recalls one of the Chinese shaking him into consciousness and telling him they were leaving him where our troops were sure to find him. He said he thought they were kidding and that he was being left to die.

That was Thanksgiving Day, he later learned. And he really had something to be thankful for. The American patrol found him and took him to an aid station. From there he was flown to Japan where he was operated on. On Dec. 15 the hospital plane bearing Tony landed on the west coast. He arrived at Walter Reed in Washington, D. C., four days before Christmas.

There is little bitterness in Tony's voice as he talks with visitors and frankly tells them of his ordeal. Looking at the little guy, lying on the white hospital bed, a visitor wonders what's wrong with a world that puts Tony (and thousands like him) where he is.

Tony, looking down at where his feet used to be, must wonder about the same thing.

Democracy Means 'Doing Our Share' GI Says

Asked what he had learned from his experience, Tony Troilo, GI wounded in Korea, replied: "I figure it's a tough battle ahead, but we can win if we all pitch in and do our share. As I always say, that's what democracy means."

Political Status Of Women Better

Women are permitted to vote in all elections on an equal basis with men in 56 countries, reports the United Nations.

In three countries, higher qualifications are required for women than for men, and in five countries women are allowed to vote only in local elections.

Sixteen countries deny women any political rights, but three have no electoral rights for men, either. These findings were included in a report submitted by the Secretary General to the UN General Assembly.

Record Of 81st Congress Good, Bad And Indifferent

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

FAREWELL to the 81st Congress — the swan that turned into an ugly duckling.

It started out in a glow of liberal hopes, after the 1948 election surprise had returned a majority of Democrats to both Houses. Before many months had passed it came increasingly under the control of a powerful, working coalition of conservative Democrats and reactionary Republicans. The result was compromise action all along the line, except where progress was stopped entirely.

As the Korean outbreak neared, the character of the coalition became more violently anti-everything, and the shadow of the fear of Communism fell over the entire Congress.

After the Korean war started, reaction got into the saddle and stayed there. The new ugly term "McCarthyism" came into being, representing a change from guilt-by-association to guilt-by-deliberate-falsehood. It was a shameful, fear-ridden reaction to genuine crisis. And it had its effect on the elections.

Withal, the 81st Congress did leave a record of worthwhile accomplishments, mingled with blots and failures. Here is a brief sketch of what it did and did not do.

INTERNATIONAL SCENE: Congress twice approved renewal of authorization and appropriations for the Economic Cooperation Administration still popularly known as the Marshall Plan—the biggest, most imaginative venture in international goodwill ever undertaken by this country. It renewed the President's authority to negotiate Reciprocal Trade Agreements. It approved the North Atlantic joint assistance pact, and passed its companion Military Assistance Program. It reluctantly approved the Point Four program and gave it a little money. It improved the Displaced Persons' Act.

On the other hand it balled things up on civilian aid to South Korea—stalled around for six months, licked it by one vote, and only then turned around and approved it—too late, and after the Communists had wrested full propaganda value from the early failure. And most ironically of all, the Senate failed, in these times of organized murder, to ratify the International Genocide Agreement, which would outlaw the killing of ethnic groups.

It should not pass un-noticed, although there was no legislation on the subject, that toward the end of the session, the most conservative GOP big-wigs did their level best to scrap the bipartisan foreign policy and set up a lamentable howl for Secretary of State Acheson's scalp.

MOBILIZATION: As the international crisis grew worse, Congress frantically tried to go in two directions at once—maintain business as usual, and get the nation onto a war footing. The resulting mess is already showing up in the headlines, the costs of rearmament, and the workers' pay envelopes.

For instance, Congress passed an inadequate, foolish and in some aspects vicious Defense Production Act, giving the President full authority to order the nation's industrial might into concerted war activity, without the necessary accompanying power to control inflation, hold down prices effectively, and stabilize the economy. The measure paid only lip service to these aspects.

Faced with the necessity for financing new and vast military expenditures, Congress—having refused to do anything to assure the government's ability to purchase its needs at reasonable prices—also refused to tax in anything like adequate fashion the corporations whose super profits it had thus guaranteed. It did pass an excess profits tax, reluctantly, in the lame duck session—but if this stands unchanged, the corporations plainly won't be carrying their share of the new tax burden. The real tax increase fell on the working population.

Along the same lines Congress gave in to landlord pressure and refused to strengthen the rent control law—merely extending the time limit for automatic expiration of federal controls.

And finally, it passed the McCarran Act—a law which is supposed to control subversive activities by requiring subversives to register as such, and which sets up a five-man board, as yet unfunctioning, to decide what groups are subversive, and a new series of regulations designed to keep subversive aliens out of the country. So far its only practical effect has been to embarrass both the U. S. and a series of distinguished foreign visitors. The Communist Party, of course, has refused to register.

SOCIAL LEGISLATION: Congress raised the legally payable minimum wage from 40c to 75c an hour—a figure that became out-dated by the rising cost of living almost as soon as it had become law. It improved the benefits and coverage of the Social Security Act. It passed a low-rent housing bill calling for construction of 810,000 units, very few of which have yet been built. It sustained the President's veto of the Kerr Natural Gas Bill, which was a thinly disguised power grab by the big natural gas companies.

It extended the Commodity Credit Corporation's authority to make crop loans. It strengthened the anti-monopoly laws by passing the Celler Bill, which forbids corporations to establish monopolies by buying the physical assets of rival companies. And the House took away the life-or-death power of its Rules Committee over legislation.

AS AGAINST this fairly good record, Congress refused to pass a decent middle-income housing bill, did nothing about national health insurance, federal aid to education, extension of the valley authority program, repeal of Taft-Hartley, or reorganization of the National Labor Relations Board, and failed miserably on the civil rights front.

This last failure deserves more than passing mention, because in CIO's opinion no single aspect of our domestic situation is more critically important to U. S. relationships abroad, aside from the plain human injustice involved.

In a time when this nation is longing desperately for the support and friendship of the teeming millions of dark-skinned people of the Orient, when it is almost unimaginably important that we show in deeds democracy, not Communism, affords them a hope of decent existence, our Congress has refused to do anything, however small, to wipe out civil injustice in the United States.

THE SENATE, with a great show of earnest debate on high-minded issues, actually tightened up its rules so as to make filibusters more effective, thus slamming the door on any hope of civil rights legislation whatsoever.

The House knew this, yet when it debated and voted on the establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission, it did not pass a bill with teeth in it, even though it knew in advance the Senate would kill the measure. The House substituted a measure with no enforcement provisions whatsoever — so mild and meaningless that even the Dixiecrats voted for it.

Ending Congressional Immunity Proposed

Sen. Hunt (D. Wyo.) wants to end the immunity of members of Congress from suits for libel for what they say on the floor. He told the Senate he would propose legislation in the 82nd Congress to that effect.

At present any Senator or Congressman can say anything he pleases about anyone, and nothing can be done about it, for the Constitution says that "for any speech or debate in either House they (Congress members) shall not be questioned in any other place."

Hunt said he would propose either a Constitutional amendment to end libel immunity, or a law permitting citizens to sue the government for damages if they are libelled in congressional proceedings.

Red Stall Causes Unions To Demonstrate At NLRB

ABOUT 150 employes of the Superior Sleeprite Co. descended en masse on the Los Angeles office of the National Labor Relations Board last week to register an emphatic protest against delays in certification caused by Communist-inspired maneuverings.

The workers are members of CIO Furniture Workers Local 1010, which was chartered a few months ago as a haven for "refugees" from the Communist dominated, unaffiliated Furniture Workers Local 576.

Local 1010 won an NLRB representation election from Local 576 in November by a vote of 87 to 62. Gus Brown, business agent of Local 576, who is regarded in the Los Angeles area as a party hack, filed charges with the board that the CIO had campaigned "illegally."

To demonstrate its majority—which had grown after the balloting—Local 1010 agreed to another election. Two days before it was scheduled Brown filed new charges. The board called off the election to investigate—and the workers boiled over in a spontaneous demonstration of protest.

CIO leaders pointed out that the size of the protest was a definite indication that support for Local 1010 had grown to near unanimity as a result of Brown's "rule or ruin" tactics.

Give Back Pay To Two, NLRB Orders Unions

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board, in two separate cases, has ordered a union to bear the full cost of back pay for an employe whose discharge was caused by the union.

In both cases the unfair labor practice charge was filed by the employe only against the union. In both cases the unions argued they could not be found in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act or held solely responsible for back pay, because no charges had been filed or complaints issued against the employers, who actually made the discharge.

NLRB member Abe Murdock agreed with the unions' position, and dissented from the majority opinion, delivered by Chairman Paul M. Herzog and members John M. Huston and James J. Reynolds, Jr. Member Paul L. Styles did not participate in the decision.

THE UNIONS involved were the Marine Cooks & Stewards, and the AFL Carpenters. The individuals were a seaman named George C. Quinley and Viola Dodd, an employe of a Berkeley, Cal., venetian blind concern

The board found Quinley was fired because the union instructed members to refuse to sail on any ship employing him after he had been blacklisted by the union as as "stoolpigeon." Viola Dodd was fired, the board ruled, because she was not a member in good standing in the union.

The board majority in the seaman's case said "we do not mean to imply that every union 'attempt' to have an employe discharged for discriminatory reasons, if followed by his discharge, necessarily means that the discharge was caused by the union. The burden of proving that the union caused the discharge . . . must be satisfied before such a finding will be made." The board said it was convinced that the union actually caused the discharge.

MURDOCK, in dissenting, argued that under T-H, a union cannot be found to have illegally caused a discriminatory discharge unless the employer who made the discharge has also been found to have violated the T-H act by the discharge itself. He agreed the union was guilty of an unlawful "attempt," but since the employer was not accused he dissented from the finding that the union "caused" the employer to fire Quinley.

"I must hold," he said, "that the complaint against the union falls as to this branch of the case, for the employer is not before the board, and the board is foreclosed from making the necessary finding that it was a 'violation' of Section 8 (a) (3) which the union 'caused'."

The board ordered the unions not only to reimburse the two, but to notify both the employers and the two persons involved, in writing, that they withdraw objections to employment of the two, and ask in each case that an offer of immediate and full reinstatement be made. The unions must also post notices at their business offices that they will not attempt similar action in the future, and that the unions will imburse the employe for the loss of pay. LPA

Defender Of Small Business Unmasked As Industry Front

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CONFERENCE of American Small Business Organizations has a neighborhood drug store label but speaks with the voice of big business, a report by the House Lobby Investigating Committee disclosed on Dec. 26.

The committee, of which Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) is chairman, made a special study of the CASBO as typical of an organization of its kind.

It came up with a lot of interesting facts. Among those it didn't come up with—or at least didn't mention — is that the CASBO's founder and presiding genius, Fred A. Virkus of Chicago, is a notorious enemy of labor, particularly the CIO; is a violent anti-Semite, fought equal pay for women in Illinois and claims credit for the defeat of Fair Employment Practices Commission legislation in that state.

He has long had contacts with other right-wing reactionaries, isolationists and anti-laborites such as Merwin K. Hart, of the National Economic Council, and Gen. Robert E. Wood, the old America Firster and chairman of the board of directors of Sears, Roebuck & Co.

The Buchannan Committee came up with the fact that the CASBO letterhead proclaims it expresses "the deliberated opinion of delegates from organizations representing over 260 lines of industry in 48 states, representing an affiliated membership of over 600,000 small business concerns (the country has about 3.8 million) . . .

The committee pointed out CASBO's "regular membership is approximately 2875 dues-paying individuals, concerns, organizations and trade associations."

THE LETTERHEAD claim, the committee added in the report, is "somewhat of an overstatement."

"The annual session," it continued, "may express the deliberated opinion of 600,000 concerns, but it expresses this opinion largely by ratifying propositions prepared in advance for it by a handful of CASBO officers."

In addition to its dues and assessments, the CASBO receives "gifts of money" which in the first quarter of 1950 amounted to $9242 out of total income of $20,690. Among the small business firms which contributed $500 or more, and hence had their donations listed under the Lobby Act, were such modest outfits as the Household Finance Co., which has assets of $221 million; U.S. Gypsum, with assets of $156 million, and Acme Steel Co., $32 million.

The committee also reported that Virkus appealed for funds in letters to such corner store enterprises as Willys-Overland Motors, which has assets of about $70 million, and the Libby-Owens-Ford-Glass Co., with some $80 million.

THE LETTER told of the CASBO's role in opposing or supporting legislation in Congress and added:

"These (bills) are merely illustrations of legislation affecting our over-all economy in which we take an interest, and in which big business, as such, cannot come out in the open for obvious reasons."

The CASBO at the time was plugging a bill to put the country back on the gold standard. It was trying to raise $48,000 to mail 3.8 million letters to small business men.

"We have had the kind of assistance necessary on a number of occasions," Virkus wrote in the same letter, "where one or a small group of business concerns have paid the printing bills direct to the printer as a private printing bill of that concern, and in such a case the amount of the bill is deductible from income tax, as is any other bill for printing. This is what we prefer."

If the CASBO ever got such kind of assistance previous to the time of Virkus' letter, it was not mentioned in its Lobby Act reports, the committee found.

"This appeal to substantial corporate interests," the committee commented," with its reference to legislation 'in which big business, as such, cannot come out in the open for obvious reasons,' hardly reflects a single-minded purpose to represent the 'deliberated opinion' of 600,000 small businesses. In the context of the letter, the statement that 'Big business should be keenly interested in consolidating the efforts of its small partner' does little to bolster CASBO's claim that it is the champion of small business men."

THE ORGANIZATION'S Lobby Act reports disclosed to the committee that it received from $40,000 to $60,000 a year and spent about the same.

"These figures do not qualify CASBO as one of the largest of pressure groups," the committee observed, "but they do place it among the top 35 so far as receipts reported under the Lobby Act are concerned."

It sought, among other things, to persuade large businesses to pay the membership dues of customers, officers and branch managers, thus avoiding the need of reporting large gifts. It also mailed appeals to selected lists of prospects in addition to its own members, and engaged salesmen who sold memberships on a commission basis, getting half of the first year's dues.

"In view of the fund-raising devices indicated above," the committee said, "neither the Congress nor the public nor the small business men of America can rely on CASBO's reports under the Lobby Act as a full and accurate disclosure of its sources of financial support. For all its posturing as the spokesman for small business, CASBO has made devious and sometimes successful efforts to secure big-business support for its activities."

OHE Reports 7¾ Million Units Frozen

THE OFFICE of the Housing Expediter, in a year-end report, stated that it had approved 973,542 applications for rent increases in the 11 months ending Dec. 1, 1950, with a total increased take by the landlords of nearly $100 million.

During the same 11-month period, approximately 4 million dwelling units were removed from rent controls entirely, either by OHE or on their own motion. This left 7½ million units still under control.

Having thrown this sop in the direction of the landlord lobby, which keeps snarling that rents are "frozen" and the law is "unfair," OHE then turned around and showed a few of the things that might have happened to tenants if there had been no rent control law at all:

Nearly 35,000 landlords were forced to pay back their tenants for illegal overcharges. The tenants received $5,447,121 in refunds —or an average of nearly $160— $1,760,047 of it through court action by OHE which also netted the U. S. Treasury $379,584 in fines.

Rent reductions, or restoration of services, were ordered in 28,458 instances; 26,369 evictions were halted, and 100,650 lesser violations of the law were corrected.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The CIO and organized labor generally have gone through another year of great achievements. Starting with 1951 there are opportunities for still greater accomplishment. We shall devote ourselves and energies to more and more organizing.

Allan Haywood

We shall intensify our efforts in 1951. Organized labor will measure up in the present world crisis to protect the freedom of mankind throughout the world. Let us increase our strength through more organizing in 1951. Let us all get on the team and make it work!

FLASH from Arizona!

Acting Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that the DPO, the Communist "dying puny outfit," a conglomeration of Office & Professional Workers, Farm & Tobacco Workers and the Distributive Workers, got a body blow from the Superior Court at Phoenix in their efforts to keep from the workers the property that rightfully belongs to them, the Fruit Tramps' building in Phoenix. American justice has rendered a just decision against the Communist dominated DPOWA and in favor of the CIO Shed Workers.

Morris Pizer, president, United Furniture Workers-CIO, reports the representation election victories at the Kent Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., UFW-CIO 58, no union 26; Stowe & Davis, Grand Rapids, UFW-CIO 19, no union 11; Arlington Chair Co., Gardner, Mass., UFW-CIO 108, no union 47; Wiley Mfg. Co., Gardner, UFW-CIO 26, no union 23; Southeastern Cabinet Co., Lenoir, N. C., UFW 224, no union 4; Vaughan Furniture Co., Galax, Va., UFW-CIO 171, no union 72; Vaughan-Bassett Co., Galax, UFW-CIO 136, no union 105.

The UFW was also victorlous in two union shop elections: Gregg Mfg. Co., Nashua, N. H., yes 274, no 14, and the Stewartstown Furniture Co., Stewartstown, Pa., yes 92, no 4. Special credit should be given to Business Agents Thomas Binnall and Lubert Taylor for the successful elections held at the Arlington Chair Company and the Wiley Mfg. Co. Brothers Binnall and Taylor, with some assistance from the UFW, are conducting an all-out campaign against open shops in this important furniture center.

The CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers has been certified by the Ontario Labour Relations Board as bargaining agent for 800 General Electric Co. office employes at Peterborough, Onto., and the Davenport Works in Toronto.

The certification was granted without the formality of an election, despite the attempted intervention of the discredited United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The UE was thrown out of the CIO and the Canadian Congress of Labour, with which CIO unions in Canada are affiliated, more than a year ago because of its Communist domination. Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the IUE reports representation election victories at the Monitor Process Co., Jersey City, N. J., IUE 7, no union 2, and Despatch Oven Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 123, no union 7.

Field Rep. T. D. duCuennois reports that in a representation election at the Armour Fertilizer Works, Norfolk, Va., the workers voted in favor of the Oil Workers International by 33 to 0 for no union.

duCuennois also reports that in a representation election at the Hinde & Dauch Paper Co., Richmond, Va., the United Paperworkers won by a vote of UPA-CIO 41, no union 40. At the Reliance Fertilizer & Lime Co., Norfolk, Va., the Oil Workers won a representation election by a vote of OWIU 15, no union 11.

Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports that the United Steelworkers won a representation election at the Lodge & Shipley Co., Cincinnati, O., by the following vote: 285 eligible, 221 USA-CIO, 45 no, 3 void. USA Intl. Rep. Chester Morgan was in charge of this campaign.

Reg. Dir. Walter Harris reports that in a representation election at the Western Products, Inc., Newark, O., the employes voted for the Textile Workers-CIO by a vote of 90 to 39 for no union. Rep. William H. Walters was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that in a representation election at the Kelly-Weber Fertilizer Co., Lake Charles, La., the workers voted in favor of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, CIO, by a vote of CIO 39, spoiled 1. CIO Rep. Harry Cochran and Intl. Rep. Perry Allen handled this campaign. The CIO won a union shop election at the American Creosote Works, Winnfield, La., by a vote of 52 for union shop, 2 against.

1950-A Year of Crisis

1950 was a year of crisis throughout the world, a year of difficult problems and difficult decisions for every American.

At the turning point of the century, it was the year in which the Soviet Union's cold war against democracy shifted to shooting battles in the hills and valleys of Korea. 1950 was the year which dashed humanity's hope of true and lasting peace; and it was a year which found the unions of the CIO working at fever pitch to speed the mobilization of American resources for the challenges of the present and future.

1950 was a curiously divided year—a year marked by "before Korea" and "after Korea." Until June 24, the nation's interest had been primarily directed toward domestic problems.

JANUARY, for instance, found organized labor hailing President Truman's call for congressional action on the Fair Deal program. The 75c minimum wage—a big jump from the old 40c level—went into effect on Jan. 25. The CIO started the first of a series of hearings on nine unions charged with Communist domination. Union-management contracts throughout the nation emphasized pension and welfare programs along the lines of those negotiated a month or two earlier by the United Steelworkers.

FEBRUARY saw the start of one of the year's longest strikes—the CIO Auto Workers at Chrysler Corp.; it ended in a union victory, on wages and pensions, three months later. The CIO Executive Board expelled four Communist-dominated unions, and called for the removal of Robert Denham, the labor-baiting general counsel of the NLRB.

MARCH brought the first big victory for the fledgling new CIO electrical union—the IUE, headed by CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey. Leading the year's biggest organizing campaign, to smash Communist union domination in an essential industry, IUE battered the "old UE" by 8-1 in a Labor Board election at GM. It forecast later victories at GE, Westinghouse, RCA and other sections of the industry for IUE in the months ahead.

APRIL brought not only showers but clouds on the economic and legislative horizon. Congress passed—but President Truman vetoed—the big business-supported Kerr Gas Bill, which would have gouged consumers and enriched the corporations.

Even more serious, the nation's economy seemed to be missing on at least one cylinder. From every big city came reports of lay-offs and dim job prospects. CIO beat the drums of complaint in Washington and state capitals, brought delegations to Washington to demand effective relief.

Deeply concerned by the drift of things, CIO Pres. Philip Murray addressed letters to every non-Communist labor organization in America; he stressed the need for labor unity and joint action on common problems. It was hailed by workers throughout the land.

In MAY, the Fair Deal civil rights program received a major setback, when the FEPC anti-discrimination bill was licked by Senate filibusters, with the connivance of the northern GOP leadership. The Supreme Court, in a mixed decision, upheld the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavit provision (two months before it had also approved the T-H ban on union-controlled maritime hiring halls).

From Detroit came news of a major union contract—a five-year renewal of the UAW-General Motors contract, providing cost-of-living increases, annual productivity benefits, and pensions. It was hailed as a step to industrial peace in a turbulent industry, and later in the year similar pacts were signed by Ford, Chrysler and many smaller companies.

JUNE found Taft-Hartley being used to bust a textile strike at Enka, Tenn. Murray warned a big PAC rally that Congress must meet its responsibilities by adopting laws to overcome the serious unemployment problem.

CIO-AFL unity showed up glowingly in a Newspaper Guild strike at the N. Y. World Telegram-Sun, printers and pressmen cooperated in shutting down the paper until demands were won. A weak rent control extension law was finally passed in Congress.

. . . And then the North Korean Communist army launched its war of aggression south of the 38th parallel, and America and the world entered a new phase of history.

In JULY, the CIO rallied to support the fight against Communist aggression in the Far East. Murray hailed the "strong program" set forth by President Truman and pledged labor's backing to all necessary steps to mobilize the country's resources.

Union leaders—from both CIO and AFL—met with top government agencies on ways to handle the host of new problems arising from the crisis, and set the stage for greater labor participation in the federal government's mobilization effort.

And formal committees from the CIO and AFL got together to talk unity, on the basis of Murray's April letter. Out of that meeting came agreement on unified action on legislative, political and international matters between the two great union organizations.

AUGUST dog-days found the nation buckling down to the colossal task of building its defenses. The CIO called for vastly-expanded production, and for effective price control and tax programs to halt the steadily rising cost of living.

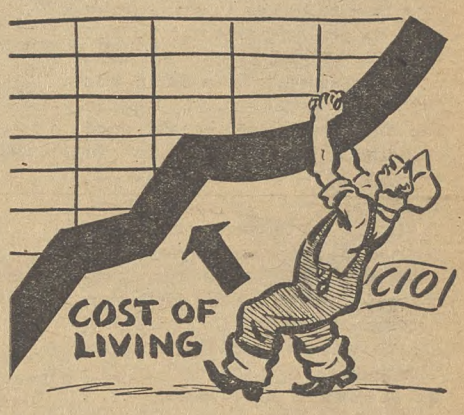
Criticism was directed at moves to weaken both controls and tax legislation in Congress. The 81st Congress, meanwhile, fulfilled a major 1948 promise by voting substantial improvements in the nation's social security law; benefits and coverage were increased and expanded.

SEPTEMBER saw the CIO producing new, more detailed programs for mobilization, and calling for a more effective democratic foreign policy throughout the world. The CIO Board completed its task of cleaning out Communist-infiltrated unions. President Truman gave the old-fashioned heave-ho to NLRB Counsel Denham, whose attacks on the Administration and on unions had become increasingly bitter; labor applauded the move.

By OCTOBER, unions were moving for improved wages to meet the rising cost of living. Negotiations were under way in steel; in other industries, agreements were being signed on a wide scale. The CIO pointed out that speculative price jumps, not union wage demands, had spurred the inflationary trend.

And the "off-year" election campaign headed towards its climax in an atmosphere of unparalleled name-calling and smearing . . .

NOVEMBER brought disappointments. A number of liberal stalwarts were defeated, in both the House and Senate; and Sen. Taft romped to an easy re-election in Ohio. Although Democrats kept control of Congress,



GOP isolationists took courage and increased the tempo and sharpness of their attacks on President Truman, Secy. of State Acheson and other Fair Deal figures.

CIO's 12th Convention—most harmonious in the organization's history—opened in Chicago and strongly ratified the policy of support to the battle against Communist imperialism. Murray, completing 10 years at CIO's helm, was enthusiastically re-elected for another term.

DECEMBER carried with it new threats to the national security as the Chinese Communists plunged squarely into the Korean conflict, and the nation redoubled its effort to develop the strength of American democracy.

Labor, conscious of its role and responsibility, moved further along the road to unity, with formation of a formal United Labor Policy Committee to offer programs and policies in behalf of CIO, AFL, Machinists and Railroad Brotherhoods.

"We pledge ourselves unreservedly to the service of our nation, and to the support of the President in the present crisis," the committee said.

It was on that note of patriotism and grim recognition of the tremendous challenge to American democracy that labor and all the people turned to face the year 1951.

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY 8, 1951 82 No. 2

PRESIDENT TRUMAN signs the Celler Anti-Monopoly Bill which will prevent corporations from buying the property of their competitors and thus obtaining dominant positions in their fields. The measure which had the backing of the CIO and other progressive groups was described by the President as "a major element" in the program to protect small and independent businesses. The signing is witnessed by a number of members of Congress who helped obtain passage of the measure and by federal officials charged with the enforcement of anti-trust laws. (See story on Page 6.)

Dixiecrats, Republicans Score Victory In House

When the new House organized last week, it restored to the Rules Committee its life-and-death rule over new legislation. This marked a defeat for the Administration and showed the strength of the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition.

The committee's power was cut by the old House in its early days in 1949 when it changed the rules to provide that the committee could not hold up House consideration of a bill more than 21 days. (See Page 3.)

Wolves Always Protest When Sheep Fight Back

How impartial do you think ol' Doc Henderson of AMA could be about the national health insurance plan? How objective could a Commie be about the UN position in Korea?

How disinterested would you expect an organization financed and directed by business to be when it comes to analyzing pending legislation for Congressmen? The House Lobby Investigating Committee found out the answer and made it public last week. Read about the American Enterprise Association on Page 9.

Equality Of Sacrifice May Be Imperiled

Equality of sacrifice, which labor regards as an absolute "must" in the mobilization picture, was notably lacking in the year-end recommendations to the President by his Council of Economic Advisers—at least when it came to wage and price stabilization.

Since the report was expected to serve as the basis for the President's message to Congress and as an important policy guide for the men in charge of shaping wage and price policy, it caused no little furore in labor circles. Union leaders who had just been summoned to a series of meetings with Wage Stabilizer Cyrus Ching were expected to let him know their opinion in no uncertain terms.

Trouble with the recommendations was not so much that they were tough as that they called for gigantic belt-tightening by wage earners without mentioning (a) vitally needed toughening amendments to the price control authority or (b) necessity for equally binding restrictions on the purchasing power of the non-wage groups.

The President's Executive Order centralizing and strengthening defense production authority, issued last week, also called for further consideration of the extent and effectiveness of labor representation at the policy level.

Appointment of labor members of a union-management production advisory committee, and of full-time labor consultants to the National Production Administration, both announced last week, was somewhat beclouded by the executive action, which came after the appointments and left the exact status of the appointees unclear. (See story on Page 12.)

Oliver Gets Golden's Labor Adviser Post

ROBERT OLIVER, who is on leave as CIO Texas regional director and as CIO Organizing Committee director for that state, has been appointed an ECA Economic Adviser, it was announced last week by ECA Administrator William C. Foster.

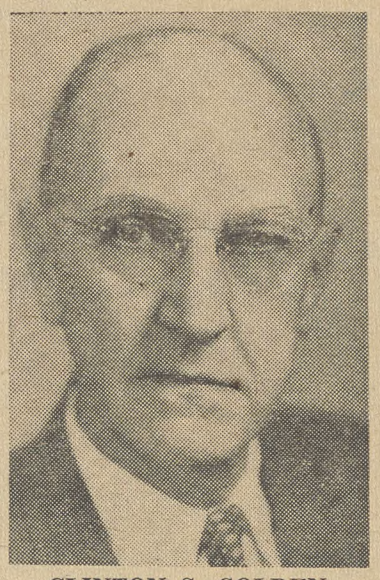
He succeeds Clinton S. Golden, former vice president of the CIO Steelworkers.

ROBERT OLIVER

Oliver has been executive assistant in the Office of Labor Advisers since September, 1950. He now becomes one of the two ECA Labor Advisers. The other is Bert M. Jewell, formerly president of the AFL Railway Employes Dept.

Oliver and Golden left this week for an official visit to Europe to take part in trade union conferences. Upon his return, Golden will assume consultant status with ECA.

Oliver began his labor career in 1934 as a member of the Oil Workers International Union, CIO. In 1938, he began work for the Textile Workers Union, CIO, becoming its Washington representative in 1942. After 1946, Oliver was CIO



CLINTON S. GOLDEN

Texas regional director as well as Texas director of the CIO Organizing Committee, from which job he is now on leave.

His service with the CIO was interrupted in February, 1944, when he joined the armed services. He saw combat service in France, Holland, and Germany. After the end of hostilities, he worked on evacuation of displaced persons until the Office of Military Government assigned to him the task of formulating policy for the rebuilding of democratic trade unions in Germany.

Oliver was born in San Augustine, Tex., Nov. 4, 1909. He attended the New Mexico Military Institute and the Univ. of Texas.

Elbert Thomas Gets U.S. Post

FORMER SENATOR Elbert Thomas of Utah has been appointed High Commissioner of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands — the former Japanese-mandated islands, such as Guam, which U.S. forces occupied during the last war.

The appointment was announced by President Truman last week, and is a singularly appropriate one for the 68-year-old Thomas, a former missionary to the Far East, whose scholarly specialty for many years has been the Orient and who served with distinction on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee during his three terms in office.

Thomas, a Democrat, also was chairman of the Senate Labor Committee during his last term, and led the unsuccessful 1948 fight for repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and re-enactment of the Wagner Act with certain amendments.

He was defeated in November by Wallace Bennett, Republican and recent board chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers, after one of the dirtiest campaigns conducted anywhere in the United States.

GCEOC Locals In N.Y. Form Joint Council

New York State locals of the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee have formed a Joint Council to work for repeal of the Condon-Wadlin Act, which prohibits strikes by public workers in the state.

Court Asked To Invalidate Utilities Law

THE U. S. Supreme Court will hear CIO arguments this week that it should declare unconstitutional a Wisconsin law providing compulsory arbitration of strikes in public utilities.

Although the strike in question —conducted by the CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers—was quickly settled, the Board obtained contempt of court penalties against the union leaders, on grounds that they had not called off the strike as soon as an injunction was issued.

The case was brought to the U. S. Supreme Court after the Wisconsin Supreme Court upheld the state law as constitutional.

Preparing the brief for the Supreme Court hearing were Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel; Thomas E. Harris, CIO associate general counsel; and Max Raskin of Milwaukee, attorney for the local union.

Their brief pointed out that through the Taft-Hartley Act, which contains no provisions for compulsory arbitration, the federal government has passed legislation covering the entire field of labor-management relations in industries in interstate commerce.

"The state may not, therefore, impose additional restrictions or regulations upon collective bargaining or strikes in industries affecting commerce," the CIO brief declared.

Mich. CIO To Hold Winter Institute

The Education Dept. of the Michigan CIO Council will stage its first winter training institute in the northern part of the state Jan. 27-30 at Weber's Resort, near Marenisco, on Lake Gogebic.

Under the direction of Bill Kemsley, the council's education director, courses will include union administration, steward training, collective bargaining and education program planning.

CIO Sends Delegation To ICFTU Parley

A NINE-MAN delegation is representing the CIO at the first Inter-American Regional Conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which opened today in Mexico City.

The conference is one of a series being held in different parts of the world to set up regional sub-divisions authorized under the ICFTU constitution adopted at the organization meeting in London in December, 1949. The Mexico City meeting also will adopt a course of action and make plans for future activities of the ICFTU in the Western Hemisphere.

The CIO delegation includes Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO International and Latin American Committees; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers and Secy-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, members of both committees; Exec. Secy. Martin Kyne of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union and Secy.-Treas. Lewis J. Clark of the Packinghouse Workers, members of the CIO Latin-American Committee; Vice Pres. John W. Livingston of the Auto Workers; Secy.-Treas. William Pollock of the Textile Workers, and Dr. Ernst Schwartz, secretary of the Latin-American Committee.

The AFL, Canada and most countries of Central and South America and the West Indies will be represented except for Argentina, the spokesmen for which probably will be labor leaders exiled by Dictator Peron. J. H. Oldenbroek, general secretary of the ICFTU, is making the trip from headquarters at Brussels, to attend.

Affiliates of the ICFTU in Europe recently held a similar conference. Meetings are planned within the next few months for Africa and Asia.

The ICFTU, in setting up plans for regional conferences in various sections of the world set up a number of tasks for the regional bodies.

Among them is the job of helping "free trade union organizations in the region," and the establishment of new unions where none now exists.

The permanent regional organization also has the task of collecting and distributing information about "working and social conditions, social legislation, trade unions and their activities" for use by the ICFTU and its various union affiliates.

Future conferences will be held at regular intervals by the new organization to be created at Mexico City. It will also set up a permanent headquarters and staff, at some city to be chosen in Latin America. In between conferences, the organization will be governed by a regional council.

The conference is the first inter-American labor union meeting to which the CIO has sent an official delegation. With the AFL similarly represented, it will mark a new step in U.S. labor unity in the realm of international affairs.

Three-Man CIO Delegation Leaves For Europe To Study Unions

A THREE-MAN delegation of CIO trade unionists went to Europe last week to find out how to strengthen the free, democratic labor movement abroad in its fight against Communist imperialism.

Announcement of the mission was made by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, as chairman of the CIO International Committee.

The members are Victor Reuther, who has taken a leave of absence from his post as educational director of the Auto Workers to become CIO European representative; Frank Bellanca, former organizer and editor for the Clothing Workers, and Edgar de Lasalle, Steelworkers' representative in Easton, Pa.

The three will study union problems particularly in France, Italy and Western Germany for six weeks and then report back to the CIO International Committee, Potofsky said. The committee will then plan future CIO activity in Europe. This will be directed toward helping non-Communist unions in the three nations to build their organizations, improve their collective bargaining functions, and strengthen themselves generally as bulwarks of democratic society.

While in Europe the CIO representatives will send reports directly to Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs and secretary of the International Committee.

As CIO representative in Europe, Reuther succeeds Elmer Cope, of the Steelworkers, who has held the post for the last four years. Cope has been appointed CIO assistant director of international affairs and will coordinate much of the CIO work carried on abroad.

While the CIO delegation to Europe will be guided by what it finds there, Potofsky reiterated the broad principles under which the CIO and also the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, with leaders of which the mission will consult, is operating in the war for men's minds.

"Freedom can be achieved only through economic and political democracy," he said. "We must achieve a world in which people are free from the tyranny of Communist, Fascist, Falangist and any other form of totalitarianism, as well as from the domination and exploitation of concentrated economic power in the hands of cartels and monopolies.

"We reject the false theory that workers must sacrifice political and spiritual freedom to obtain economic security and social justice.

"In a worldwide struggle over conflicting ideologies, we must remember there must be economic security and social justice for all. The task before us is to mobilize the tools of abundance possessed by the industrially advanced nations of the world, to assure full employment, security against want, old age and sickness, and to provide ever-rising standards of living and a richer and fuller life for peoples everywhere.

"Peace, itself, can be attained as a lasting thing only on the basis of free and democratic peoples—united in a common effort to achieve economic security, social justice and political freedom. The free and democratic trade unions of the world are the vanguard of the forces determined to build a just and lasting peace."

Dad's Job No Cause To Fire

IF YOU work in the office and your Pop wants to organize the shop it's perfectly okay with the National Labor Relations Board.

It's so okay that C. W. Whittemore, trial examiner at Denver, Colo., has ordered the Screw Machine Products Co. to rehire Marie Saltzgaber and three others who were fired during a union drive at the plant.

C. A. Baukman, owner of the company, fired Marie because her father was a business representative for the Intl. Union of Operating Engineers-AFL which was organizing the production workers.

She protested that she wasn't even eligible for membership in the union, but Baukman was unmoved. Now a trial examiner has ordered her rehired with back pay, along with others fired during the drive, and directed a representation election at the plant.

Attention, All Aliens!

Under terms of the Internal Security Act of 1950, all aliens are required to report their addresses to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization by Jan. 10 of each year.

Necessary report cards may be obtained from any U.S. Post Office (Form 1-53). An alien must indicate his alien registration number on his form.

In the case of any alien under 14 years of age whose registration under the Alien Registration Act of 1940 was applied for by a parent or guardian, it is the responsibility of such person to submit the address report to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

Failure to comply with the address notification requirements of the Act can result in a fine of $100, or imprisonment for not more than 90 days, or both.

Sen. McFarland Has More 'Right' Than 'Wrong' Votes

SEN. Ernest W. McFarland (Ariz.), newly elected leader of the slender Democratic majority in the Senate, has a wavering liberal voting record that has improved as his tenure in office lengthened.

He has voted "right" much more often than "wrong" on key issues set forth in recent editions of the CIO Voting Record. Equally significant, he seldom has taken refuge in absence when an important issue was due for a vote.

In general, he has followed the Truman administration except on issues directly affecting the South. Thus he has voted "right" every time the Taft-Hartley Act came up, but has been consistently "wrong" on civil rights measures.

McFarland, who is 56, succeeds former Sen. Scott W. Lucas (Ill.), who was not reelected, as Senate majority leader.

He was elected with the backing of southern and conservative Democrats by a 30 to 19 vote over Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), one of the Senate's most distinguished liberals. O'Mahoney, who had the solid backing of administration stalwarts, moved to make McFarland's choice unanimous.

The Arizonan, who has demonstrated thus far no outstanding capacity as a leader, was supported for the majority leadership by a coalition of southerners sparked by Sen. Lyndon Johnson (Tex.) and Sen. Robert S. Kerr (Okla.) which was unsympathetic to O'Mahoney's liberalism and most of the Fair Deal program.

Johnson, incidentally, was elected Democratic whip by a unanimous vote after the liberal Sen. John J. Sparkman (Ala.) withdrew following his nomination by Sen. Paul Douglas (Ill.) Johnson succeeds former Sen. Francis J. Myers (Pa.), who like Lucas lost his bid for reelection.

McFarland last spring voted for the bill introduced by Kerr which would have exempted independent producers of natural gas from regulation by the Federal Power Commission. Had the bill become law it would have permitted the independents, who produce some 85% of the country's natural gas, to put into effect price boosts which over the years would have drained billions of dollars out of the pockets of consumers. Kerr, himself a wealthy gas and oil producer, would have shared, but the bill was vetoed by President Truman after the Senate passed it.

McFarland frankly stood on the floor of the Senate and told his colleagues he had been literally blackmailed into voting for the measure because Texas producers refused to sell additional gas to Arizona's rapidly growing industries and homes until they got a higher price for it.

HST Signs Excess Profits Tax, But Expresses Dissatisfaction

AS THE New Year dawned, the "lame duck" 81st Congress got down to business with a flourish to clean things up. The 82nd Congress, containing many new faces, was ready to take over Jan. 3.

Meeting on New Year's Day, the House approved a watered down version of an excess profits tax drafted by a House-Senate conference group and the railway union shop bill. (See Page 6 for story about the latter).

Both measures has already been passed by the Senate so the House action sent them to President Truman.

IN SIGNING the excess profits tax measure Jan. 4, President Truman expressed dissatisfaction.

"In developing this tax in the few weeks at its disposal the Congress may have been overly liberal in its concern over some corporations in special circumstances," President Truman said.

"Some of the provisions of this bill will give an undue advantage to some corporations, especially in relation to tax burdens necessarily borne by others.

"Excessive exemptions and relief provisions create inequities and reduce the government's revenue needlessly.

"For this reason, I am requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to keep excess profits tax under continuous review so that if it develops that some of its provisions need revision, the facts can be placed before Congressional committees without delay."

At the same time he warned of "more and much heavier taxes" all along the line. There is a strong possibility that the President will tell Congress how much more he wants it to raise when he submits his Budget Message Jan. 15.

In addition, the House celebrated the holiday by approving a $20 billion supplemental appropriation bill for defense and the program for training some 15 million persons in civil defense. The Senate passed these measures the following afternoon, sent them to the President.

ON JAN. 2 the House gave President Truman half of the emergency war powers he had requested. Specifically, the House gave the President the power to modify defense contracts.

While there was little real objection to this bill, legislators for big business presumably saw a chance for their friends to renegotiate more profitable agreements. Within an hour, the Senate approved the measure, including a House amendment giving the comptroller-general authority to inspect the books of companies concerned.

In the House, Administration leaders dropped their attempt to get approval of the other emergency power requested by the President, the power to reshuffle federal agencies if by so doing the defense program could be speeded up.

In the Senate, Administration opponents led by Sen. Taft (R. O.) already had blocked this grant of power once and the opposition view prevailed in the end. The Administration will make another attempt to obtain the re-shuffling power for the President this winter.

The excess profits tax finally enacted by Congress fell far short of what organized labor or the Administration wanted. President Truman had requested a tax that would raise $4 billion. Labor wanted one that would yield up to $7 billion. The measure Congress approved will bring the Treasury about $3.3 billion, according to estimates.

Here's how corporations will be taxed under the new law. The first $25,000 of profits will be taxed 25%. Higher profits will be taxed 47% Excess profits will be taxed 77%.

Excess profits are defined as those exceeding 85% of the annual earnings in the best three years of the four-year 1946-1949 period. Or excess profits can be defined as those exceeding a stipulated percentage of a company's invested capital—12% of the first $5 million of capital, 10% of the next $5 million and 8% of anything over $10 million.

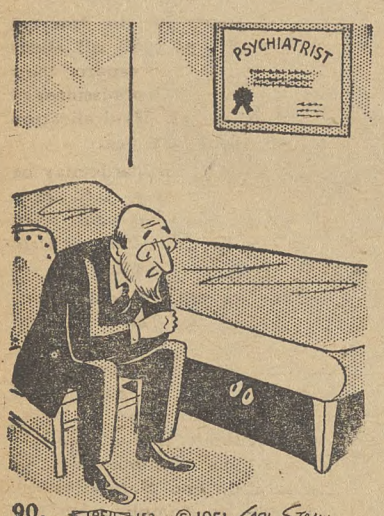
The excess profits tax is retroactive to July 1, 1950. A 2% increase in the regular tax rate is applicable to a firm's first tax year beginning after that date. There are special relief provisions for "growth" companies, publicly regulated businesses such as public utilities and railroads, and certain "strategic" mining industries.

Credit Control Hits Installment Buying

Just as labor had predicted, the consumer credit controls hit hardest the people least able to live on a cash basis. For the first time in seven years, the rise in installment buying was halted in November.

Between October and November installment credit dropped $74 million, first drop since Nov., 1943. Most of the decline, the government reported, was "attributable to a drop in automobile sale credit."

But while installment buying tapered off, loans to business kept going up. For the week ended Dec. 27 loans were $38 million, bringing such loans to an all-time high of almost $18 billion, or almost $4 billion above a year ago. Real estate loans also increased during the week by $16 million to an all-time high of $5.27 billion. Total loans and investments of the banks in the Federal Reserve System were up $390 million on Dec. 27 to $71.8 billion.



"The best remedy for your type of inferiority complex, Mr. Moody, is a union card!"

House Action Would Please Joe Cannon

THE BONES of Uncle Joe Cannon must have twirled merrily in their grave last week as the House, organizing itself for the 82d Congress, turned happily back in the direction of the dictatorship that won him renown.

Cannon, a Representative from Missouri, was Speaker of the House in the early part of the century. He was virtually czar—a title his foes pinned on him at every opportunity—over everything that went on in the House until his power was clipped in 1909.

The House restored "dictatorship" when it organized on Jan. 3, but tossed the power into the lap of an oligarchy—the Rules Committee—instead of giving it to an individual.

A coalition of Dixiecrats and tory Republicans spearheaded by the reactionary Rep. Cox (D. Ga.) and the equally reactionary Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.) killed an administration proposal to operate under the same rules as the 81st Congress. These rules included a requirement that the Rules Committee, after 21 days, schedule for House consideration any bill which had been approved by another committee.

THEN THE same coalition specifically killed the 21day rule and restored to the Rules Committee its old power to pigeonhole indefinitely any bill it doesn't like regardless of whether it has a chance of being approved by House vote. The Dixiecrat-Republican cabal controls the Rules Committee despite the chairmanship of the veteran liberal, Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.).

Its iron-handed seizure of control of what the House will be allowed to consider means, to all practical intents and purposes, that any bill which organized labor favors has little chance of getting to the floor if its passage be likely. The only machinery left to pry a measure out of the committee's clutches is the petition, which requires the signatures of a majority of House members. Experience has proved the petition of little practical value in getting a bill to the floor.

The two votes on rules give the nation an idea of the character of the House that is entrusted with a major role in the difficult job of guiding the country through what may prove to be the most crucial two years in its history.

The Dixiegops won the first vote by 247 to 179. This came on Sabath's motion to continue the old rules. Then the powerbund voted for a substitute set of rules offered by Cox, which threw out the 21-day rule and restored the rules that had been in effect for 40 years prior to their liberalization in 1949

THIS SET gave the Rules Committee life and death power over all legislation. The tally was 247 to 179; voting for the motion were 158 Republicans and 89 Democrats, against it 136 Democrats, 42 Republicans and one independent.

The two tallies give a clue to the approximate vote that can be expected during the next two years on issues backed by labor and liberals.

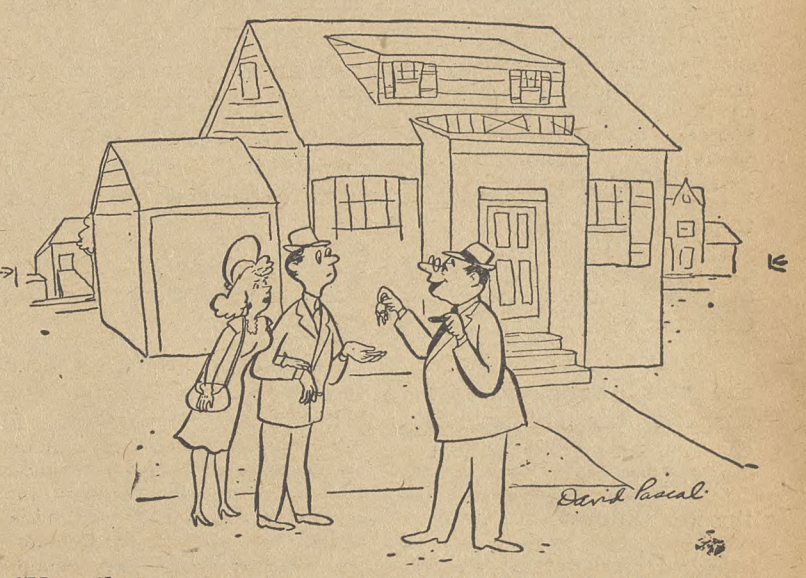
In warning the Republicans they were "on trial," Rep. McCormack (D. Mass.), the Democratic leader, told them they would be only "the tail of the kite" of the Dixiecrats in any coalition.

Halleck said the Rules Committee always had been "the strong right arm" of the leadership and would continue to be. However, he had given the play away in earlier discussion when he maintained the 21-day rule should be thrown out so the Rules Committee could block "ill-timed proposals" such as President Truman's national health insurance plan, which he described as "socialized medicine" even though it isn't.

The 21-day rule was an important factor in getting bills favored by labor to the floor in the last session of Congress. Eight measures were forced to votes this way and won passage by the House: statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, the anti-poll tax bill, rivers and harbors bill, National Science Foundation measure, National Minerals bill, VA Hospitals bill, and a measure providing funds for certain United Nations agencies.

THE THREAT of the 21-day rule was enough to force action on several other measures, including the bill that raised the minimum wage to 75c an hour and another expanding social security.

Rep. Sam Rayburn (D. Tex.) was re-elected Speaker in a perfunctory contest with Rep. Joseph W. Martin (R. Mass.), Speaker of the Republican-controlled 80th Congress. The vote was on strictly party lines.



"Now that you own the house, how's about renting me the upstairs attic room?"

People Should Demand National Unity

Nation Cannot Afford Petty Political Bickering And Continued Partisan Squabbling Over Foreign And Military Affairs

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE JAPANESE attacked Pearl Harbor—and within a matter of hours we had a stunned but united nation.

All of us understood the sudden death that dropped from the skies. All of us understood that we were at war and that war called for real sacrifices.

Those who had been spewing hate at Roosevelt because of his domestic program suddenly became quiet.

Political differences may not have been forgotten, but they were put on the shelf because there were more important matters at hand.

We knew who our enemies were, what they stood for and what would happen to us if we lost.

So we worked together—and we won.

THE RUSSIANS began an ideological attack on us soon after the end of World War II.

It wasn't sudden, dramatic and shocking like the attack on Pearl Harbor but its intent was just as deadly.

Its objective was to undermine or overthrow our way of life and to make us the victims of a dictatorship as bad as Hitler's.

But many people didn't understand what was going on and many refused—at least at first—to believe our wartime ally would turn against us.

Se we continued our squabbling as the Reds took over control of Eastern Europe and moved into the Orient.

We were angered by the blockade of Berlin, but even that dramatic event did not unite us.

WAR BROKE out suddenly in Korea and within a short time Americans were being maimed and killed on the field of battle.

This should have served as notice—both sudden and dramatic—that the Reds really meant business — that they had turned from cold to hot war.

An it should have served to unite our nation against a common foe.

But it didn't.

We soon were in the midst of a political campaign, and many races were decided on completely phony "Communist" issues.

A segment of the Republican Party went after Secy. of State Acheson's scalp and in some quarters he was pictured as a worse enemy than Stalin.

On election day many of us gave sighs of relief because we thought that our political leaders would stop fighting among themselves and begin fighting the Reds in a unified manner.

But they didn't.

THE WAR was nearly over in Korea, dispatches from the front indicated, and then the tide turned suddenly.

A new group of Communist fighting men —from China—had entered the battle. Our victory march soon turned into retreat.

Again we had witnessed something which should have made our political leaders get their heads together and work out a unified program.

But it didn't.

The campaign against Acheson was intensified. Republican sniping at President Truman was stepped up. One GOP group even went so far as to advocate a program of "no cooperation" with the Administration.

Senator Taft expressed lack of confidence in our military leadership.

And an attempt was made to "get" Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, nominated as assistant to Secy. of Defense Marshall.

THAT ABOUT brings us up to date but it doesn't project us into the uncertain future.

But it illustrates that we have two big problems on our hands.

One of these is to unify our forces behind a real mobilization program.

The other is to combat international communism.

The second can't be done successfully if our political leaders are unwilling to do the first.

The people—whose necks are at stake in the big struggle—have a right to demand that the politicians shelve their comparatively petty differences while the nation tackles its No. 1 problem.

The demanding should be done where it counts—on the members of Congress.

THE NEW CONGRESS

Make no mistake about it; the new Congress has a tough row to hoe.

The measures it passes—or fails to pass—may well determine the course of world events for generations to come.

That's not stretching it, either.

Whether we like it or not, our job is to provide leadership to the world's democratic forces and to give them the aid they must have if they're to be effective in the struggle.

It's time for Congress—and for all of us—to be realistic about the situation. We either play the role which circumstances have created for us—or we don't.

And if we don't, we then give up our position of world leadership. It's almost as simple as that.

Now, back to Congress and the problems confronting it:

One of the biggest tasks right now is to speed up our mobilization program so we'll be in a position to prosecute the war in Korea and prepare ourselves for what may follow.

This will disrupt our economy and work hardships on all of us. The new Congress should do everything possible to hold the disruption to a minimum and make the sacrifices as equal as possible.

The economic stabilization measure passed by the last Congress will have to be revamped if this is to be accomplished. The present measure won't permit the President to do the job that needs to be done.

WAR PROFITEERING MUST BE STOPPED

The Congress should give attention soon to methods of halting the war profiteering that is already going on and to the establishment of adequate safeguards against excess war profits once the mobilization program hits its stride.

It should get prepared to enact an effective rent control program at least by the time the present rent curbs are due to expire.

It should prepare an "economic cushion" for workers who will leave their jobs because of material shortages and transfer to plane, tank and munitions plants.

And—above all—it should refuse to follow the "politics as usual" pattern established by certain elements of the 81st Congress.

This means that McCarthyism should go into the ashcan and that certain elements of the Republican Party should abandon their partisan efforts to destroy public confidence in the Truman administration.

It means putting the welfare of the whole nation ahead of the welfare of special-interest groups.

It means giving the world a real demonstration that we can make our democratic machinery function well in time of crisis.

Contract Held Good 2 Years

A UNION contract without a duration or termination clause is good for two years, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled, 4 to 1.

Reversing Trial Examiner Martin S. Bennett, the Board directed the Sanson Hosiery Mills, Inc., Meridan, Miss., to bargain with Local 171, United Textile Workers-AFL.

NLRB first ordered an election at the mill in January, 1947, when it was owned by Artcraft Hosiery Co. The 120 employees voted for UTWA after the Sanson mills took over and the union was certified in May 1947. A contract was signed on Nov. 19, 1947.

Exactly a year later, the company wrote UTWA that the contract was terminated because decertification proceedings had been started against the union. The board dismissed the decertification petition saying a contract is good for two years unless otherwise noted. It said decertification proceedings were barred for that period and the company was "under obligation to recognize and bargain with the union."

The company thought otherwise and refused union overtures. UTWA filed unfair labor practice charges on July 29, 1949. Company lawyers contended that the last definite refusal to bargain by the company was Nov. 29, 1948—more than six months before the filing of the charges and therefore not subject to action under the Taft-Hartley law. The trial examiner agreed, and dismissed the charges.

The board in reversing the ruling, in effect, asked where the company had been during the six months preceding the charges and intimated that it hadn't heard any rumors of the company rushing around looking for bargaining sessions.

"We are satisfied that on and after Jan. 29, 1949 (the beginning of the six-month period) the union's request for bargaining and the company's refusal to bargain continued," the NLRB majority said.

Paul M. Herzog, board chairman, dissented. He said he thought the fact the union answered the company's letter saying it was willing to negotiate a "new contract" was evidence that UTWA considered the old contract dead.

Bosses Have Cadillacs!

YOU HAVE been told many times recently how much better off you are than the workers in various foreign countries.

The government has published pamphlets showing how many hours of labor a worker in the United States has to put in to earn this or that piece of merchandise and how many more hours the workers in these foreign countries have to labor to get the same piece of goods.

Yes, we American workers are better off than those in other countries.

But there is some room for studying how the earning rates of American workers compare with the earning rates of some other American people.

For example, if it takes a refinery worker three days to make enough money to buy a suit of clothes, how long does it take the president of the company?

The government has made no studies on this subject. But E. E. Phelps, OWIU's director of research and education, has made such a study and here are his findings:

TO BUY A $50 suit of clothes, the average U.S. refinery worker must work three days, two hours and 48 minutes (based on 1949 average wages).

But the average big oil company president could pay for this same suit by working 44 minutes. (Probably he would take off 44 minutes on company time to select the suit, anyway.) This figure is found by averaging the 1949 salaries of the presidents of Standard of Jersey, Standard of Indiana, Standard of California and the Texas Co.

TO BUY A $15 pair of shoes, the average worker had to put in a little more than one day in the refinery.

To buy a $15 pair of shoes, the Texas Co. president had to work 8 minutes and 36 seconds. (About as long as it would take him to smoke a cigaret.)

TO BUY HIS wife a $1.50 pair of nylons, the average refinery worker had to put in 49 minutes on the job.

The president of Standard Oil of California could buy his wife a pair of nylons by working 1 minute and 40 seconds.

TWO HOURS, 22 minutes and 30 seconds work would enable the refinery worker to buy a loaf of bread, a two pound chuck roast, a pound of coffee, a pound of butter, a quart of milk, a can of beans, and a dozen eggs. But the oil company president could buy the same sack of groceries by working 3 minutes and 36 seconds.

AND WHILE it takes the refinery worker about a half year's labor to buy the cheapest sort of automobile, the oil company president can get himself a new $5,000 Cadillac by working nine days, 1 hour and 20 minutes.

He Was Organizing The Difficult Way

THE UNION organizing campaign at Oak Ridge, Tenn., back in 1946 was a fantastic affair.

Everything at the atomic energy project was on a super-secret basis and the Army was firmly in the saddle.

None of the union organizers knew exactly how many production workers were on the project. They didn't know which plants were likely to be expanded and which ones might be shut down.

They didn't know too much about the pay scales of many of the workers—simply because the workers had been instructed not to discuss their jobs with anybody.

And the restrictions! There seemed to be hundreds of them.

"COMMITTEE" meetings were permitted but "mass" meetings were prohibited—so giant "committee" meetings were held now and then.

Organizers were required to pass about the same security tests as production workers, and there was always fear that an incident—regardless of who provoked it—might result in the union men suddenly being on the outside of the reservation trying to get in.

For a while the Army placed rigid restrictions on the use of an organizing newspaper by the CIO. Most of these were lifted when the CIO started buying advertising space in the newspaper in nearby Knoxville. The Knoxville papers were circulated freely on the project.

The organizers found it extremely difficult to discuss business over the organizing headquarters telephones because they believed they were tapped.

THE RESTRICTIONS resulted in CIO organizers being selected with extreme care. Men with imagination were needed because it was impossible to follow the familiar membership campaign techniques.

And, above all, there was a need for men with a sense of humor—because selling unionism in Oak Ridge that year was a bit like organizing in jail.

The barbed wire around the place and the rigid restrictions were very depressing.

There was very little entertainment on the project. The food at most of the restaurants and cafeterias was poor.

There were frequent illnesses among organizers because of the food and the water.

And the feeling that somebody was always looking at what you were doing was a bit hard on the nerves.

AMONG THE top CIO organizers was a man who vowed he would keep smiling "even if it kills me."

Sometimes it was extremely difficult for him to do so, but he demonstrated one day that you can get smiles from others even when you're physically unable to grin.

It happened one morning when he went to one of the gates of a big plant to hand out copies of the organizing paper.

A worker refused to accept one of the newspapers and made a dirty remark about both the organizer and the CIO.

The organizer told the man he was mistaken and said he'd like to discuss the matter with him.

The worker became angry, doubled up his fist, smashed the organizer in the mouth and knocked him down.

Reporting the incident later, the organizer said:

"I got up, dusted myself off and said, 'Buddy, I know you're wrong because if you had any good arguments you wouldn't have used your fist.'

"I didn't win him over but I got a lot of guys on our side because I didn't hit him back and because I didn't get nasty."

Reds Battle To Control Burma's Free Trade Unions

COMMUNIST-BENT and free trade unionists are slugging it out in Burma. Latest dispatches from the area present a murky picture of the status of Burma's labor movement—but one fact emerges unmistakably: The trade union leaders in sympathy with Soviet Russia, despite a major setback this year, have not given up the ghost.

That's the situation into which a Marshall Plan labor adviser will be plunged next year. And it's a situation known already to some dozen employes of the Economic Cooperation Administration, recently established in Marshall Plan headquarters in Rangoon.

THE STRATEGIC importance of Burma, sometimes described as the gateway to China, has led the ECA's Office of Labor Advisers to urge that a U. S. trade unionist be sent there to work with like-minded Burmese labor leaders.

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions put the country of some 18 million on the agenda when the latter dispatched a special mission to Southeast Asia last summer. And it has caused serious thinking on the part of many key government and labor officials—both in the U. S. and abroad.

The labor situation in Burma—which achieved independence Jan. 4, 1948—complex in itself, is further complicated by its enactment against a backdrop of almost continuous insurrections and warfare. However, a thumbnail sketch of developments in the last five years shows:

The trade union movement in Burma has grown by leaps and bounds since the end of World War II.

Among the principal organizations developing was the Trade Union Congress, established in 1945 under the auspices of the strongly anti-Communist Socialist Party. By the end of 1949, TUC claimed 100,000 members. Today it is the foremost labor organization in Burma—and the only recognized union in the country.

But—in spite of its close relationship to the Socialist Party, the Communists succeeded in making major inroads into the leadership. And, in the spring of 1950, the leftist leaders tried to take the TUC into the World Federation of Trade Unions, Communist-led international organization.

In September, 1950, the executive committee of the Anti-Fascist Peoples' Freedom League, a combination of parties, groups and individuals supporting the current Socialist government, expelled from its ranks Thakin Lwin and Thakin Hla Kywe, president and vice president of the TUC, in the wake of several pro-Communist speeches by them. One of the speeches was made by Thakin Lwin at the Workers Day celebration May 1; at that time he urged TUC to affiliate with WFTU. The other speech, by Thakin Hla Kywe, announced his support of the North Korea military operations in South Korea.

After the two leaders had been expelled from their union posts, the TUC was permitted to reaffiliate with the AFPFL.

HOWEVER, IN recent weeks, the two expelled leaders have led in a splitting of the Socialist Party. They have organized a "peasants and workers organization" and are seeking to take with them the TUC membership.

Sidelights on the labor picture don't add a bright note.

1. The Chinese in Burma have their own trade unions and last May Day held private celebrations in Chinatown. Moving spirit was the general secretary of the Burma Branch, Communist Party.

2. The All-Burma Trade Union Congress, until early in 1948 as successful as the TUC in building membership, is clearly Communist-controlled. It works underground these days—and is affiliated with the WFTU.

Why has Communist thinking had such success even in a country with a Socialist Government?

A MEMBER of the ICFTU mission to Southeast Asia perhaps supplied some clues in remarks which he made on his return. He said then, in part:

"How can the workers in the eastern world look kindly to America when Standard Oil instructs in writing its administrative staff to develop recreational activities for the workers so they will be too physically tired to attend union meetings? How can the workers look kindly to the Western world when Burma Oil dismisses 5000 workers and closes down its production fields and imports oil because it's cheaper! Such actions are an open invitation to turn to Communism."

And then—

". . . the workers want freedom, not Communism. They told us that. They also told us nothing could be worse than what they had in the past and what still exists. They are going to turn in one direction or another for a solution to their economic problems. Communism promises them food; democracy offers them food and freedom."

He suggested that we "give them a true picture of democracy," that we "let them know that the American labor movement will not tolerate exploitation of the workers in America or in any other part of the world . . ."

The Marshall Plan mission in Burma will seek to help the war-disrupted little country (it's about the size of Texas) develop her resources, improve health conditions and agricultural techniques, provide education for greater numbers.

Truman Signs Toughened-up Trust Measure

PRESIDENT Truman on Dec. 29 signed a measure to close a wide gap in the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, under which big corporations have been squeezing out the little guys for years.

Truman described the law as "a major element" in a program to protect small and independent businesses. "Much of the concentration of economic power which has taken place since 1914 has been due to this gap in the law," he said.

The Clayton Act bars corporations from buying up the stock of other firms if that would reduce competition substantially. But this ban did not prevent the big boys from gobbling up other companies by buying their physical property. The measure just signed closes that gap.

Even before the measure was signed, its passage was reported to have stopped one big business merger—that of the Carborundum Co. of Niagara Falls, N. Y., and the Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. of St. Paul. The companies are defendants in a pending anti-trust suit.

Passage of the measure was a big victory for the trade unions, which had long fought against the growing concentration of business. The House acted in August, 1949, voting 223 to 92 for the measure; the Senate acted Dec. 13, 1950 approving the bill 55 to 22. All 22 votes against the bill were by Republicans.

The mobilization speedup made passage especially timely because it will protect small firms from a squeeze that forces them to merge in order to get orders, especially defense orders.

GCEOC Asks 20% Pay Boost For All Federal Employes

A LEGISLATIVE program that includes provision for a 20% wage increase for all federal employes will be pushed during the 82d Congress by the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee, it was announced last week.

The pay boost bill would jump the wages of all classified grades, postal workers, legislative and judicial employes, and all District of Columbia workers including teachers. A proviso for a minimum of $1 an hour would give workers in the lowest classification an actual increase of more than 20%.

Another measure, like the salary increase bill ready for immediate introduction in Congress, would set up a supervised recreation program under joint labor-management planning and supervision which would include construction of recreation centers in the District of Columbia and other areas having heavy concentrations of federal workers.

Additional important bills now being drafted for later introduction during this session of Congress provide:

1. A combined Social Security and employer (government)-financed retirement system.
2. Coverage for federal employes under unemployment compensation, and provision for severance pay.
3. Repeal of the Whitten (temporary appointment) Rider.
4. Provision for time-and-a-half for all work performed over 40 hours in one week. (Present regulations are full of holes and widely violated. GCEOC feels that federal workers need a far stronger law, without options.)
5. Impartial appeal to the Civil Service Commission for grievances of non-veterans. (Veterans can appeal some grievances under the Veterans Preference Act of 1944.)
6. Genuine collective bargaining for federal workers.
7. A health insurance program financed by the government.
8. An on-the-job training program for federal employes.

* * *

In announcing the GCEOC program, Dick Shoemaker, the union's legislative representative, stressed the urgency underlying the pay-raise measure.

"The first thing most people ask about a job is how much it pays," he declared, "and the federal government can't expect to attract good people into service at the present rates.

"Twelve years ago government workers were comparatively well off, but as the wages of non-government workers have been pushed up as the cost of living has risen, government wage-rates have remained almost static. Analysis of these rates indicate the net expendable income of federal workers has actually declined 20% since 1939. Under the circumstances, we feel that even our proposed 20% increase is a minimum demand.

"While the pressure on the government budget is heavy, Federal employes should not be asked to underwrite the defense effort. Federal employes pay taxes like everyone else. All we ask is equality of sacrifice on the part of industry, labor and Federal employes. Let's not ask Federal workers to foot the major portion of the bill."

UAW Given Copper, Brass Jurisdiction

THE CIO Auto Workers are taking immediate steps to bring about the unification of workers in the copper and brass fabricating industry into the ranks of the UAW.

A three-way agreement between the Steelworkers, the Shipbuilding Workers and UAW, provides for the transfer of affiliation of 13 local unions of the Progressive Metal Workers Council, containing 14,000 members, to the jurisdiction of the auto union.

The Progressive Metal Workers Council members should complete their vote for affiliation with the UAW by the middle of January. Approximately 5000 employes of the Scoville Manufacturing Co., Waterbury, Conn., have already voted unanimously to affiliate with the UAW.

The action came about as a result of a decision by National CIO calling on the other two unions to award jurisdiction of these workers to the UAW on the grounds that such a transfer will facilitate the building of a united organization of copper and brass workers and will greatly strengthen their collective bargaining efforts.

With the addition of the PMWC workers, the UAW will represent an overwhelming majority of the employes in the copper and brass industry.

Southerners Cleared Off Track, Rail Union Shop Bill Is Passed

ORGANIZED railroad workers now have the right to bargain collectively for union shop contracts, after being forbidden to do so by law ever since the passage in 1926 of the "model" Railway Labor Act.

The House, in the closing hours of its lame duck session, on Jan. 1 passed the simple measure by a vote of 292-52, after the Dixiecrats had made five unsuccessful roll-call attempts to prevent action on the bill. The Senate had passed it Dec. 11.

Rail workers are not guaranteed the union shop by this legislation, but are allowed to ask for it—a simple enough privilege.

Yet such was the Southern Democratic objection to the measure that the House was completely tied up shortly before Christmas by the "quorum call" technique of the bill's opponents. This affected not only the Railway Union Shop bill but several "must" mobilization measures and forced the House to hold its unprecedented Jan. 1 session.

AT THE earlier session, the Dixiecrat bloc, led by Reps. Smith (D. Va.) and Cox (D. Ga.), both of whom were reelected, pulled a series of shenanigans on the floor which were unequalled in the memory of several House old-timers.

Knowing the bill was bound to pass if it came up, they asked for "a call of the House"—a procedure which requires a lengthy, time-consuming roll-call to determine if a majority of House members are on the floor.

They then turned around and asked their own cohorts and their supporters across the aisle to stay away, so that no quorum could be present and no vote could be taken. The maneuver succeeded. They were unabashed in their tactic, which is the only type of filibuster available to House members, and were entirely willing to hold up action on vitally important defense measures in order to win their point.

The blatant nature of the technique was made evident when it was revealed that more than 30 Southern Democrats had been present on the House floor when the quorum call was taken, but had simply refused to answer to their names.

ENOUGH supporters of the bill had already left for the Christmas holidays so that the defection by a comparatively small House group succeeded. However, when the same tactic was adopted Jan. 1, all but a few members were back in town and the move was obviously designed for failure, if repeated.

In spite of this, Smith asked a quorum call, which revealed a quorum present. He then demanded and got a roll call on the pending motion that the House consider the bill. This passed, as Smith knew it would, but at least he had wasted an hour of the House's time. Rep. Williamson (D. Miss.) then asked another quorum call. A quorum was still present.

Smith then moved to send the bill back to the Interstate Commerce Committee, and again asked a roll call. The recommit motion lost, 280-61. Smith then moved that the House vote on the bill. This passed. Then the House actually voted on the bill, four useless hours after it had been ready to vote.

The bill had CIO support.

TVA Set For Peace, War

THE AVERAGE domestic consumer of electricity throughout the nation in 1950 used 1756 kilowatt hours and paid $51. The averager consumer in the region served by the Tennessee Valley Authority used 3079 kilowatt hours and paid only $46.

The figures are part of the 17th annual report of TVA, which says "The Tennessee Valley region is stronger today, more capable to meet either the demands of national defense or peacetime economic development, than it was at the beginning of World War II."

Capacity of the TVA power system has multiplied nearly four times since 1940. The 17½ billion kwh produced last year was 12 times that generated in 1933 and 3½ times that of 1940, and the construction schedule is designed to increase the power system capacity from 3 million kilowatts to 4 million by 1953. Present production is greater than any other integrated system in the country.

The chemical facilities at Muscle Shoals, Ala., which the nation almost lost at one time, "stand ready at almost a moment's notice to produce munitions," says the report.

In 1933, when TVA was established, there were 275,000 consumers of electricity in the area. Now there are 1 million. Farm electricification, 3%, in 1933, is now 82%. L. P. A.

D&B Index Climbs Again

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index climbed 3c more in the week ended Jan. 2 to $6.93, the highest it has been since touching $6.95 on Sept. 14, 1948.

The week was the 12th in a row in which the index either went higher or remained static. During the period it advanced a total of 45c, which added to previous increases raised it to 99c above where it stood when hostilities started in Korea. The present level compares with $5.73 a year ago and an all-time high of $7.36 on July 13, 1948.

The index represents the total of the prices per pound of 31 foods in common use. In the last week, costs of 12 rose, 11 held unchanged and eight declined.

Segregationists Win, Lose In Supreme Court

The U. S. Supreme Court ruled Jan. 2 that Louisiana State Univ. must let Negroes attend its law school by affirming the Oct. 30 ruling of a special three-judge federal court in New Orleans ordering the school to admit Roy S. Wilson.

The segregationists won in another Supreme Court decision, however. The court for the second time refused to rule on the constitutionality of Baltimore's segregation policies for public playgrounds. The ruling was on the technicality that the appeal had been filed too late.

Press Agents Come Up With What Seems Like Good Idea

"What will it gain these foolish companies to have the love of the AMA and the contempt of the consuming public?"

That's what the National Assembly for the Advancement of Public Relations asked in Washington in referring to insurance companies and other private businesses which play along with the American Medical Association in its campaign against the national health insurance program.

Denouncing the District of Columbia Association of Insurance Agents, Inc., for publishing newspaper advertisements implying support of the AMA's charges against health insurance as urged by President Truman and organized labor, the assembly said:

"Private insurance companies and any other private businessmen have the unquestioned right to publish their support of a vicious campaign against the interests of the American people if these concerns and businessmen want to do this.

"But, for their part, the American people have the right to punish these companies and these businessmen for working in the interests of the greedy hierarchy of the American Medical Association and against the interests of the people who need and favor a system of national health insurance.

"The American people have the right to strike back at private insurance companies and other kinds of private firms where it will hurt the most—the pocketbook nerve.

"No doubt millions of American citizens, for their guidance, are keeping lists of those concerns which work hand in glove with the American Medical Association."

Manufacturers' Net Profits 16% Higher In 3d Quarter

REMEMBER the breath-taking stories of the lush business the Federal Trade Commission said American manufacturing corporations were doing in the second quarter of good old 1950? The new records they were setting for sales and profits—before AND after taxes—and dividends?

Pikers. That's what U. S. manufacturers were in the second quarter. At any rate that's the first conclusion that jumps from the FTC's figures for the THIRD quarter, which were published last week. They go like this:

Sales: $48.6 billion. That's 12% more than the previous high set in the second quarter.

Profits before taxes: $6.6 billion. That's 28% higher than the second quarter record.

Profits after taxes: $3.7 billion. The increase over the second quarter was 16% despite higher corporate income tax rates.

Dividends: $1.3 billion. The increase over the previous high, set in the second quarter, was $200 million, or 18.1%.

On top of that, the FTC said that the annual rate after taxes on stockholders' equity, a fancy way of saying the rate of profit on investment, jumped to 17.6%, an increase of 12.8% over the second quarter.

And the profit in cents per dollar of sales—a bookkeeping device dreamed up by business to conceal its actual rate of profit—increased from 7.4c in the second quarter to a new high of 7.6c in the third.

Smaller manufacturing corporations got somewhat more than their usual allotment of crumbs in the third quarter, the FTC report shows.

THOSE with assets under $250,000 earned 19.2% on their stockholders' equity after taxes and those in the $250,000 to $1 million class netted 18.8%. But the behemoths didn't do badly. Those with more than $100 million earned 17.6%, a rate of return generally regarded as tidy. In the next smaller class, $5 to $100 million, the rate was 17.2%, while in the $1 to $5 million bracket it was a comparatively modest 16.4%.

The FTC described the trend as "reversal of the pattern existent in the past several years."

The report classified the manufacturers into 22 different groups. All but three showed higher net profits than they did in the second quarter. Earnings after taxes for manufacturers of autos and parts were off 9%, those of other transportation equipment and primary iron and steel were less by 4% each.

On the other hand, the net return in apparel and finished textiles waddled upward by a bloated 221%, while leather and the miscellaneous industries both boosted their net take by an even 100%.

During the third quarter manufacturing corporations increased their assets by $5.5 billion to $120.5 billion at the end of September, the report showed.

(Editor's Note: The industrial workers who made all this prosperity possible came out, as usual, on the short end. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the average production worker in the manufacturing industry had gross net spendable weekly earnings—or earnings before taxes—of $58.74 in June, last month of the second quarter, and $60.68 in September, last month of the third quarter. The increase: 3.3%. His "net" after taxes, if he had three dependents, was $56.76 in June and $58.41 in September, a boost of only 2.9%.)

Longer Week Hit By CCL

The Canadian Congress of Labour, to which CIO unions in Canada belong, has condemned the action of the Canadian government in lengthening the work week of all full-time civil servants from 36½ to 39 hours weekly.

CCL Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy termed the move, effective Jan. 1, "directly contrary to the industrial trend. The theory of efficiency with long hours now has few supporters." It is peculiar to see the federal government, which might be expected to give a lead in such matters, imposing longer hours at a time when organized labor's efforts to have hours shortened are being accepted by other managements.

"In extending hours at the same time that long-overdue wage increases are granted civil servants, the government is giving with one hand and taking away with the other," he declared.

Jobs In Industry Rise In December

An additional 354,000 workers found jobs in industry during December to raise non-farm employment to a near-record 54,075,000, the Census Bureau reported Jan. 4.

However, seasonal layoffs of farm workers forced total employment down to 60,308,000, or 963,000 under November, the bureau reported. Consequently, unemployment increased to 2,240,000 compared to November's 2,229,000.

Employment in 1950 averaged 59,957,000, or just a shade under the 60 million mark once regarded as "full employment," the bureau noted. The 1949 average was 58,710,000. The 1950 peak and all-time high in non-farm employment were reached in August, when 54,207,000 people had jobs in industry, mines, the service industries and the professions.

"Go out and get another club. I'm writing a new anti-labor bill I want you to enforce."

NAACP Sees Dixie Progress

IN THE past year approximately 1000 Negro graduate and professional students have attended state-supported universities in the South from which they formerly were excluded, according to Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

White, who spoke at NAACP's recent annual meeting in New York City, said that this fact means that the color line in higher education in the South has been smashed. The break came through a series of "notable victories in the Supreme Court," and the brunt of the struggle was carried by Negroes, he said.

This kind of progress, he added, "if properly publicized and continuously accelerated, is the most important means of lessening anti-white feeling in Asia, which is one of the chief reasons why Americans die in Korea.

"It is for this reason that the work of the NAACP is vital to the best interest and the continued existence of every American," White continued, "irrespective of race, creed or color. If the people of the United States awaken to this truth in time, the democratic way of life can be saved. If they do not awaken, Asia, Africa and Latin America may turn in despair to Russia because they have lost faith in the U. S."

Plan Fight On 'Forced Listening'

An all-out, bipartisan legislative attack on forced listening both in industry and mass transportation will be launched in Congress this winter, the National Citizens' Committee Against Forced Listening has predicted.

The committee voiced objection to radio programs and their attendant "commercials" now imposed on street-car and bus passengers in Cincinnati, St. Louis, Washington, and other cities.

NLRB Rules

Faulty Sample Ballot Cancels Poll Results

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board by a 3 to 1 majority last week threw out a representation election because a union circulated a sample ballot marked in its favor which bore the name and title of the board's regional director.

The ballot was circulated by Local 214 of the unaffiliated Fur & Leather Workers—which was expelled last year from the CIO because of Communist domination—and was used against the CIO in a campaign at the Am-O-Krome Co., Cincinnati, O. The Fur & Leather Workers won, 85 to 25.

The majority decision was signed by Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members John M. Houston and Paul L. Styles.

"WE BELIEVE," they said, "that it is unnecessary to determine whether or not any eligible voter was in fact influenced by the presence of the Regional Director's name on this sample ballot, for it was misleading on its face and therefore improper.

"No participant in a board election should be permitted to suggest to the voters that this government agency, or any of its officials, endorses a particular choice. That was the plain implication of including the director's name and title directly under a recommendation as to how the voters should vote.

"The implication was in no wise cured by the inclusion of the word 'sample' on the ballot, and cannot be lightly disregarded, as our colleagues would have us disregard it, on the ground that voters are so sophisticated that the government can afford to tolerate such misrepresentation."

Members James J. Reynolds, Jr., and Abe Murdock dissented. They held the circulation of marked ballots is common in political elections and that it was unlikely a voter in an NLRB election would be misled.

THE DECISION was one of two made by the board in a move to tighten its election procedures and the standards of conduct of those participating in the elections.

In the second the board dismissed a union's exceptions to a regional director's recommendation of dismissal of the union's challenges to the right of certain employes to vote in a representation election, because the union did not serve the exceptions on the employer as board rules require.

The case involved the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union and the R & R News Co., Atlanta, Ga. The election ended with nine votes cast for the union, eight for no union and nine challenged. The regional director recommended that five challenges be sustained and the remaining four ballots, which were challenged by the union, be opened and counted.

The board held that the union's failure to advise the employer of its exceptions to the regional director's recommendation constituted "a failure to follow fundamental procedures essential to fairness, as set forth in the rules and regulations."

Textile Union Files Proposals For Woolen Pay Increases

THE CIO Textile Workers have filed wage proposals with 150 woolen and worsted firms asking a 15c hourly increase, plus pay hikes of 6c each this year and next, and a quarterly cost-of-living escalator clause for 70,000 TWUA members.

The proposals were drawn up by a TWUA policy committee following an industry-wide conference of workers in Boston, Mass., last November. Notice of contract termination already has been served upon all firms affected.

John Chupka, TWUA woolen-worsted director, said the requests were contained in a proposed new two-year agreement to replace contracts expiring Feb. 1.

The union also asked a $100-a-month pension program for workers reaching age 65 with 25 years' service, two additional paid holidays for a total of eight, a third week's vacation with pay after 10 years' service, group insurance improvements, severance pay for permanently laid-off workers and specific occupational minimum rates.

Chupka said that present straight-time earnings in the industry are $1.42 an hour. The last general increase was a voluntary one on Oct. 9, the first since Feb. 1948.

Last month at a TWUA north-south wage conference in Washington, 700 delegates from 400 cotton-rayon mills voted to ask for substantial wage increases, quarterly cost of living adjustments with annual wage improvements and other benefits for 200,000 members in the industry.

Bingham To Head Loyalty Review Board

The new chairman of the Civil Service Commission's Loyalty Review Board is Hiram Bingham, former Governor and Republican Senator from Connecticut.

He is 75, a former explorer and lecturer. He succeeds Seth W. Richardson, who has been appointed chairman of the Subversive Activities Control Board under the McCarran Act.

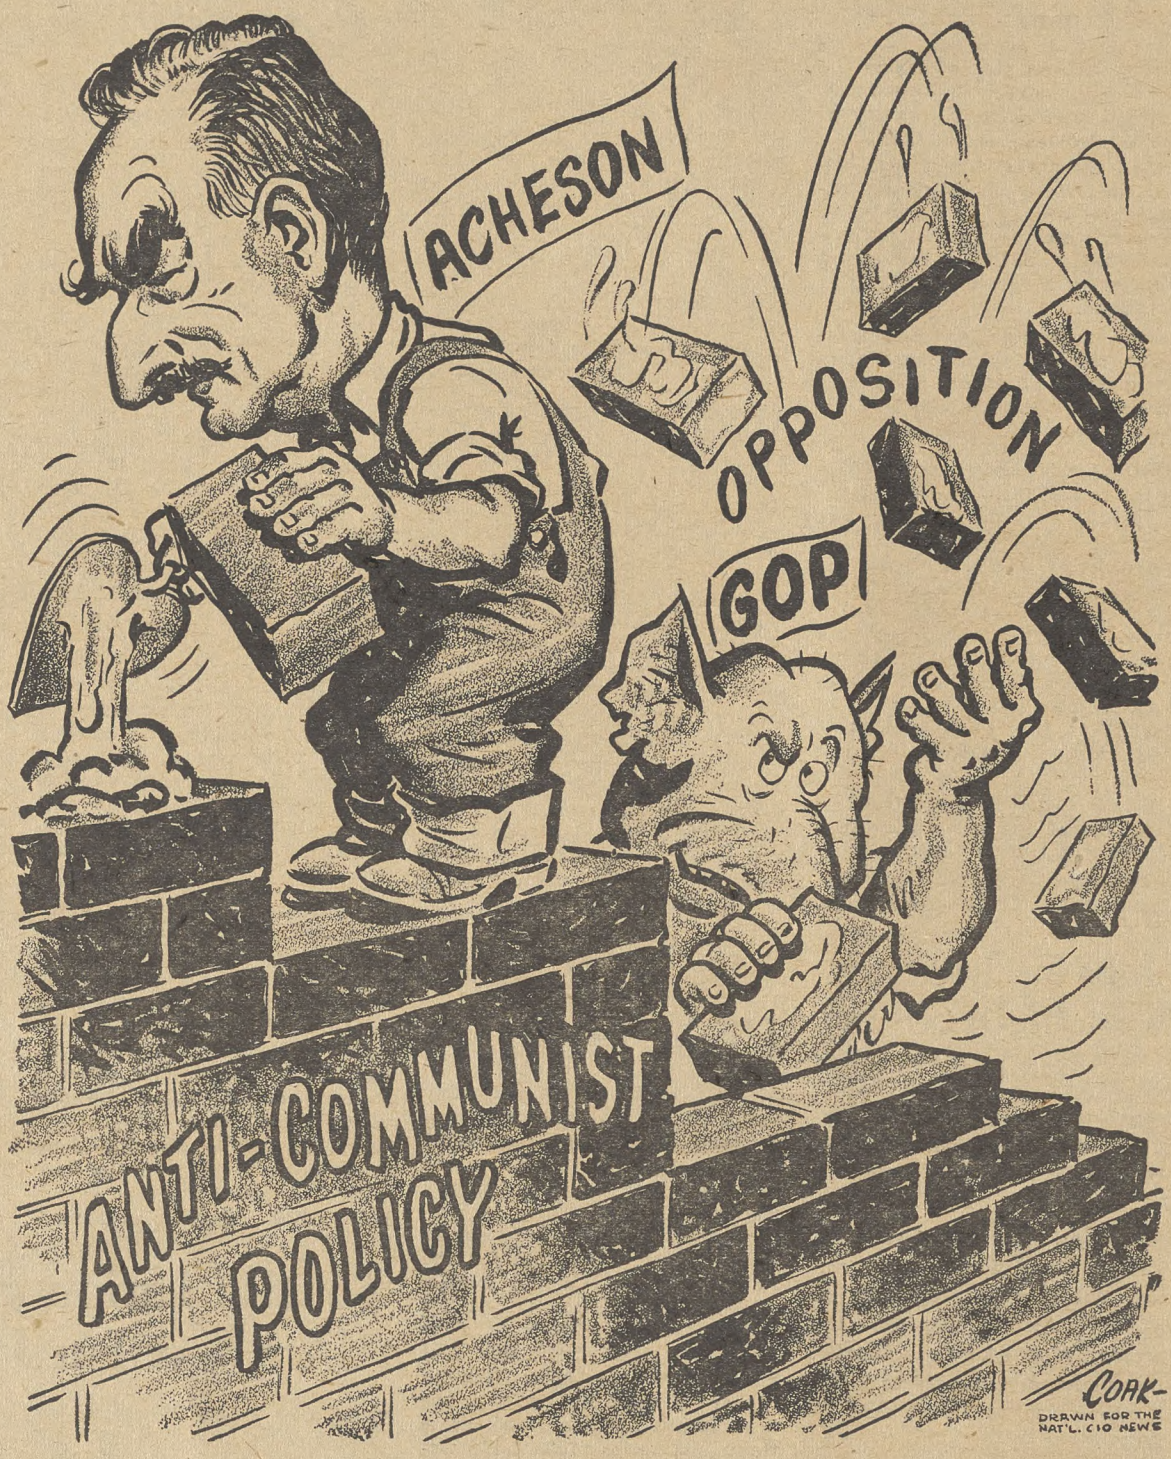
"The union grievance committeeman to see you, sir. with fire in his eye!"

Acheson Has 'A Right To More Than Mere Rhetoric'

The following article by Francis Downing, formerly eastern educational director of the CIO Auto Workers, appeared in Commonweal, liberal Catholic weekly, for whom Downing writes a column every fortnight.

Downing is a teacher of social science at Brooklyn College. He has also taught at Fordham Univ. and Queens College.

The CIO News reproduces the article in full because it is a thorough analysis of the nature of the Republican attack on Secy. of State Acheson.



IT MAY BE a fact that Dean Acheson has, in the words of the Republicans, "lost the confidence of the country," and it may be that the removal of Mr. Acheson is in the cards. It may be admitted that if Mr. Acheson is compelled to leave office the Republicans will have won a victory.

What kind of victory they will have won, that their victory will be our victory, that the victory will have enhanced the prestige and valor of the United States, that our position in world affairs, our foreign policy, will be wiser, safer, sounder, more significant—all these are things not made plain to me.

They are not made plain to me because the attacks of the Republicans—including the latest resolution of the otherwise sensible Senator Ives—proceed from partisanship and a fundamental dishonesty. To put it clearly, they proceed from no criticism that rests on any plain bill of indictment. Stripped of the frenzied and floating vocabulary in which they are made, the criticisms come down to this: We are "in a mess;" Mr. Acheson is "soft on Communism;" Mr. Acheson did not, or does not "get tough." I did not invent these charges.

Taft Doesn't Know

The first two are the words of Senator Taft. The first phrase, "in a mess"—surely a subtle description of things, the obvious product of a careful and dispassionate, unvulgar mind—Mr. Taft used on a CBS broadcast. Replying to the question put by the reporters on "Capital Cloakroom": "What can we do now?" Senator Taft said, "I don't know."

Preferring to discuss the mistakes made at Yalta (things for which, even granting Taft's case, Mr. Acheson was not responsible) and being brought back to the question: How do we get out of our present situation? Senator Taft said, "I don't know."

This is the position on foreign policy of a man so seemingly distinguished that he is one of the leaders of the Republican Party, is called "Mr. Republican," and is seriously regarded among the candidates for the presidency. What does he offer? Remove Mr. Acheson. What then? "I don't know." I submit that this is irrational, irresponsible and undistinguished.

I submit that no intelligent political party has a right to call on Mr. Truman for consultation with it, to call for a bipartisan foreign policy, and say that it is as free from knowledge about what we ought to do—as free even from ideas—as this man indicates it is.

On another network, Mr. Harold Stassen, also a flying contender for the Republican nomination, attacked "blundering internationalists" without naming them. He made it clear, however, that he did not mean the Republicans since he called them "freedomists," and alleged they have "a common sense foreign policy." What does this consist in? Stassen would reverse the Administration's "Asiatic Policy." What does that mean? How do you reverse it?

What do you do that Mr. Acheson did not do, or not do that Mr. Acheson has done? Mr. Stassen gave no reply to that. He was making a speech to Republicans and they applauded. But nobody asked him these questions. He did say that he was in favor of the Open Door in China; and he did say that that meant we should not open the back door of China to Russia.

He did say that we should "make essential decisions," and that we should develop "a dynamic opposition to communism," at the same time he said we should stop "handouts at home and abroad." All these confusing and conflicting and undefined things Mr. Stassen added to Mr. Taft's self-confessed ignorance.

But I point out that none of these things, nor all of them, is the basis of a foreign policy, and that all of them and none of them is a bill of particulars against Dean Acheson.

All the Republicans, including these two, have kind words for General MacArthur, or they did until recently, but there is no evidence that Dean Acheson has ever opposed General MacArthur, much less attacked him.

I have no professional brief for Mr. Acheson. If he ought to be removed, all I insist is that somebody make out an honest, documented case against him. Neither Mr. Taft, nor Stassen, nor Ives, not to speak of Knowland—none of these men is clear enough, nor quiet enough, nor legal enough to make out the copy.

Any American on trial, whose words and conduct are impeached, has a legal and a moral right to more than rhetoric; he has a right to the indictment to which he is expected, and indeed required, to plead.

Attlee vs. Acheson

American soldiers have been moving slowly and perilously out of a Chinese trap in Korea. Does someone become so bold, or so morally crass, as to blame Dean Acheson for that?

But given that situation, Mr. Attlee flies to Washington to try to temper impulse, or anger, to oppose even a "limited war" lest we aggravate the Chinese into remaining Russia's ally. Mr. Attlee wanted, according to James Reston of the Times, "a negotiated settlement on all outstanding questions including Formosa, recognition, representation in the United Nations, etc."

And who do you suppose opposed him. Obviously this is one more sign that our Secretary of State is "soft on communism."

What arguments did Mr. Acheson make to the British proposal? Let Mr. Reston answer:

> Mr. Acheson replied that he did not necessarily differ from Mr. Attlee's estimate of the future relations between Peiping and Moscow. Maybe one day they would split. He profoundly hoped so. The next three years, however, were the critical years, and therefore he did not believe it was wise to enter into negotiations under which we might merely exchange the important strategic island of Formosa for a few Communist promises in Korea that probably wouldn't be kept.

The fact of the matter is that we moved into Korea wholly unprepared for the consequences which are now upon us, and morally supported with some reluctance by our allies, and by them physically supported with very little because they had very little to give.

Senator Taft and his anti-Acheson Republicans, the fact is, had been unwilling to rearm South Korea, had sniped at the economics which the Marshall Plan required, and had been hostile to our State Department's Military Assistance Plan, ambiguous in their attitude toward German rearmament while attacking Acheson—as Time still is doing—for failure to get the Germans rearmed, though France's hostility to it was almost a declaration of open warfare.

This, I submit, is a statement of the facts, and a description of the total atmosphere in which Mr. Acheson was working.

Acheson Not Soft

That Mr. Acheson's estimate of the meaning of the Communist movement in China may have been wrong is, and will continue to be, a matter of historical dispute. But that this proved something loosely called softness toward communism is certainly not valid. It was not Dean Acheson who recognized Peiping; it was the British.

The British, among others, wanted the Peiping government recognized and seated in the UN. It was Mr. Acheson who, up until this moment, at any rate opposed this. It was Mr. Acheson who suggested that we should devise a foreign policy whose essence would be that we should lead from strength. But the strength from which he had to lead could not tumble over a chattering child.

It was not Mr. Acheson who swaggered irresponsibly and stridently through a delicately suspended diplomatic universe, nor proceeded in the belief that any bluster could, in the last analysis, depend for support on the atom and hydrogen bombs. Whatever else he did he acted as a diplomat is supposed to act: he thought that some things could be negotiated in a world in which Republicans attacked him for not being "tough" while Wallaceites, Communists and alleged liberals attacked him for failing to negotiate, a world in which a division among the Western powers was building up, in which what is now, at last, out in the open, was then being softly whispered. All this had the effect of making the actions of Mr. Acheson provocative.

So that now such a reliable reporter as Mr. Reston can write that, "Indeed, the hard truth of it is—whether it is fair or not—that the United States is being charged by influential officials within the Western coalition with having adopted a provocative diplomacy toward Peiping, with having stirred up forces that the United States could not handle and with proposing now to enter into a policy of 'limited war' after 'limited negotiations'."

Mr. Acheson is being blamed for our going into Korea as he would have been blamed had we stayed out of it. MacArthur's personal intelligence officer makes a fatal mistake in Korea, the Chinese pour in, we sadly and grimly retreat, and no one of the anti-Acheson crowd—not a single solitary one of them—rebukes MacArthur, or calls for Major General Willoughby's scalp, while their spiritual adviser and helpmate, Time magazine, after admitting the fact, and even calling it "blameworthy," decides that the Willoughby lapse was "not crucial."

This whole attack on Mr. Acheson, now put on the presumed ground that he has lost our confidence, is so ruthless and shameful in character that it has won even the recent rebuke of Governor Dewey.

Dean Acheson will fall, I have no doubt of that, pecked at by the cawing and sound-filled crows. But that he deserves better enemies in a more honorable contest I have no doubt of either.

Law Analysts 'Impartial' As Business Lets 'Em Be

BY GERVASE N. LOVE

THE HOUSE Lobby Investigating Committee bowed out of the picture last week, as the 81st Congress passed into history, after throwing a final spotlight on a comparatively little-known but influential molder of public and congressional opinion, the American Enterprise Association.

The AEA was set up in 1943 to supply research information, legislative anaylses and similar material to the public and to Congress. Until 1949 it analyzed in one phase of its service each year about 50 major bills. When it suspended this service—it plans to resume it in somewhat different form—376 Senators and Representatives were receiving these analyses.

The AEA maintains it is an educational and impartial body that takes no stand in favor of or against any proposed legislative measures, but which "seeks to utilize the services of the most competent available experts, without regard to the political or economic views held by them."

After studying some of the analyses, looking over the AEA's list of officers, trustees and advisory board members, and considering the experts who made them, the Lobby Committee came up with what was a polite but scarcely disguised "Oh, yeah?"

"While the expressed aim is laudable," the committee commented with restraint, "the general tone of AEA's studies suggests either that the advisory board has been unsuccessful in finding qualified experts with views opposed to its own, or that is has simply not exerted any great effort in this direction.

"In either case, AEA's studies show a striking and consistent similarity of viewpoint."

THE LOBBY probers in their report do everything but come right out and say that the analyses and the AEA's other publications, known as the National Economic Problems series, are slanted strictly on the side of big business in spite of the self-donned cloak of objectivity. The report cites an AEA note attached to analyses of bills in 1947 and 1948 which read:

" 'Note—All analyses are prepared by the American Enterprise Association with special reference to the following: (a) How these measures affect the public interest; (b) how they affect the broad general interests of the free competitive economic system; (c) possible financial effect on government and on industry.' "

The report continues:

" 'The public interest' or 'the broad general interests of the free competitive enterprise system' are, of course, terms about which reasonable and intelligent men may have widely different opinions. Each of us views the world through a window of our own inarticulate major premises.

"There are indications that the American Enterprise Association is no exception to this proposition, however often it may claim to be 'objective and impartial' in its approach . . .

". . . AEA officials have themselves described the association's work in ways that indicate that it is not without premeditated design, purpose and direction . . .

"The association's officers are equally aware of the political realities of our time and their relation to the association's work."

The concepts about which it talks, such as "public interest," and about which there may be legitimate differences of opinion, appear to be understood by the AEA, the report says, "only as these concepts are understood by AEA's individual and industrial subscribers."

FINANCIALLY the AEA is in comparatively modest circumstances, operating on a budget of about $170,000 a year which is secured by contributions and subscriptions. Eighty-five firms and one individual kicked in $500 or more in 1949, supplying 77.7% of the total contributions.

The gifts range downward from General Motors' $7500 and Ford's $5000 to 33 of $500 each for an average of $1095. Other larger contributors include the Chrysler Corp., Carnegie-Illinois Steel, Consolidated Edison, Intl. Harvester, General Electric, Atlantic Refining, American Cyanamid and other corporations.

The lone individual who fell in the 'plus-$500 class was Lammot du Pont, whose name has popped up as a contributor to every tory, big business outfit the Lobby Investigating Committee was able to dig up.

The officers of this organization that presented big business views to members of Congress under the guise of impartiality are enough to give away its true purpose.

President of the association is former U. S. Sen. Sinclair A. Weeks of Massachusetts, chairman of the board of directors of the United-Carr Fastener Corp., a member of the Republican National Committee since 1940, its treasurer from 1941 to 1944, now chairman of its finance committee and Republican National committeeman from Massachusetts, and a director of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Vice presidents are C. J. Abbott, John T. Hopkins, Robert L. Lund and Fred A. Poor. Abbott is a director of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, a banker and industrialist. Lund is a former NAM president and board chairman. Poor is president and board chairman of Poor & Co.

N. Baxter Jackson, the treasurer, is president of the Chemical National Bank of New York.

The advisory board includes Henry Hazlitt, reactionary business columnist for Newsweek magazine and an incorporator and trustee of the Foundation for Economic Education, brain trust of the reactionary outfits; Dean James E. McCarthy, of the Notre Dame School of Commerce, tory economist who also is a trustee of the FEE, and Leo Wolman, professor of economics at Columbia, a trustee and incorporator of FEE and writer of some of its pamphlets.

The trustees are noted reactionary business leaders, such as Raoul E. Desvernine, who was an officer of America First, and Ernest T. Weir, chairman of National Steel.

THE COMMITTEE'S final report on legislative recommendations was something of an anti-climax.

Its suggestions were principally technical. One was to eliminate the word "lobby" from the title of the Lobby Regulation Act—the only place it appears in the measure. Another was for repeal of a section that bars convicted lobbyists from plying their trade for three years. Others suggested simplification of expense reports, exemption of persons spending or receiving less than $1000 a year, and a ban on contingent fee lobbying.

It also proposed that all contributions used directly or indirectly to influence legislation be reported, including money given for purchase of books. This would hit directly at the technique of the Committee for Constitutional Government, which drew the bulk of its income from subscriptions by the wealthy for CCG publications to be sent to a wide variety of people who might influence legislation or public opinion.

Both reports were signed only by the Democratic members—Rep. Buchanan (Pa.), chairman; Rep. Lanham (Ga.), Rep. Albert (Okla.) and Rep. Doyle (Calif.).

THE Republican minority of the committee was pretty mad about the majority report and made no bones about it.

So Reps. Brown (O.), Halleck (Ind.) and O'Hara (Minn.), filed a minority report, charging the Democratic majority tried to use the committee to influence the 1950 elections.

Wrote Brown & Co.: "The majority of the committee were determined to prove that lobbying by organizations openly opposed to Fair Deal legislation was selfish and reprehensible while lobbying in support of Fair Deal objectives was perfectly all right."

Retorted Buchanan: "That's just a political diatribe. When the sun strikes it, it'll melt like the snow."

The Republicans maintained that the committee "whitewashed" lobbying by Secy. of Agriculture Brannan and Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing. They also said the committee should have chided Americans for Democratic Action for accepting contributions from unions for political activity. It's illegal for unions to spend money on politics, they declared.

Penna. CIO Has 19-Point Program

THE 1951 session of the Pennsylvania Legislature opened last week with a 19-point State CIO Council program before it, aimed at improving the lot of workers and strengthening their unions.

The program includes long-needed improvements in workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation and in the Occupational Diseases and Women's Acts, with full restoration of union rights that have been chipped away by the State Labor Relations and Anti-Injunction Acts.

It also calls for an FEPC law with teeth; a $1 an hour minimum wage for all intra-state workers; lowering of the age limit for voters to 18 years; wage increases and full collective bargaining rights for all public employes; more adequate relief payments and elimination of the pauper's oath, and enactment of rent control, with a State Authority to provide low-cost housing.

"Such a program," said Pres. Harry Boyer, of the State CIO Council, "would improve the social and economic well-being of all the people. We will cooperate with other state labor bodies in pursuit of these legislative objectives."

OLD-TIMERS CELEBRATE—George Pantea, 75, retired Chrysler worker, receives a Retired Member union button from Oscar Garrison, at a banquet in Detroit, which the Chrysler locals of CIO Auto Workers threw for 150 Chrysler workers who are now drawing checks under the union-won pension plan. There was a 100-day strike last year before the UAW won its pension demands from the company. (LPA)

Cited As ECA Goal: Good Living Standards

Improved living standards for workers is one of four goals upon which a free Europe's future depends, Ambassador Milton Katz, Marshall Plan Chief in Europe, told the Comite Parlementaire Francais du Commerce in a recent speech.

The head of the Economic Cooperation Administration in Europe, Katz told the French legislators the other factors were increased exports, especially to the dollar areas, heavier investment in capital equipment, and stronger defenses against aggression.

"Conditions must be established," he said, "under which the disaffected element among the workers of France and Italy will regain belief in the society of which they are a part, and will retrieve their trade unions from the grip of communism."

UAW Wins Deere Pact After 112-Day Walkout

THE CIO Auto Workers have won the longest strike in the history of the state of Iowa—112 days—with a wage and pension settlement with Deere & Co., makers of farm equipment machinery.

The strike was also the longest conducted by the union last year, topping the Chrysler walkout by 12 days. It closed five Deere plants in Iowa and adjacent Illinois.

UAW Reg. Dir. Pat Greathouse said the settlement "represents an outstanding victory aside from the economic gains and contractual improvements in that all during the time of the strike, not one of our people has been hounded and persecuted for being a union leader."

There were, however, violence, injunctions and back-to-work movements galore.

"In an area where long strikes have been broken and the unions conducting them smashed, UAW has effected a settlement providing for a 15 to 21c per hour increase and funded $100 minimum pensions," Greathouse said.

In addition, the new contract provides for an annual improvement factor of 5c per hour and a cost-of-living increase of 1% for every 1% rise in the price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The settlement covers 13,000 workers.

Region 4 is launching an organizing drive in Ford's aircraft division in South Cicero, Ill. The plant, which will make B-36 engines, is expected to employ 25,000 workers when in full operation.

Last Strike Meal

Joe Goffinet, of the CIO Auto Workers in Dubuque, Iowa, smiles broadly as he prepares the last meal for Deere & Co. strikers, before returning to his job as an inspector in the plant.

A Chapter In Labor History

Unionism Late In Arriving In Timber Industry

By WILLIAM WEISS

MOST UNIONS making up the CIO had to go through turbulent periods during their early days but few of them have histories which can compare with that of the Woodworkers when it came to fighting against odds to build a union.

The legendary Paul Bunyan was said to have the strength of a thousand men, but reading of the hardships under which the first lumberjacks worked it would seem they were all Bunyan-like.

These men in the early logging camps were almost a unique breed—quite appropriately described as "womanless, homeless and voteless workers."

THE HISTORY of labor relations in the lumber industry is a story of workers in an often unnatural, restricted social environment. They were taken advantage of and exploited by an industry which has always been vulnerable to cutthroat competition. The heroic struggles of the workers to rise to higher planes of living is revealed in early attempts to form unions and improve conditions.

Unionism, except in late years, made little or no headway in certain sectors of the industry and has always been carried on under extreme difficulties. Not until after 1880 was there any concerted movement toward organization. Always the intense opposition from employers, schooled in individualism, was one of the greatest obstacles.

The only place where unions developed with any degree of success during this period was in the West. By the time lumbering developed on a large scale there, the spirit of organization was more fully established throughout the country.

A militant spirit of unionism developed in the mining regions there, and intolerable living conditions in the lumber camps and poor working conditions forced the men to organize for their protection.

In characteristic industry fashion, unions were vigorously opposed and harshly dealt with. Blacklists, strike-breakers, "law and order committees," and strong disciplinary measures were used to break strikes when they did occur.

Many strikes and walkouts occurred in both Michigan and Wisconsin in 1885. All were somewhat localized and few were of long duration. These uprisings were the result of prevailing unrest which broke out in demands for improved wages and shorter hours.

Local labor organizations appeared but were for the most part, short lived. In 1885, the Knights of Labor first appeared in the Michigan-Wisconsin area.

BY 1890, THE 10-hour day was more or less widespread. Many other grievances such as "script" payment of wages had been rectified. As a result, the number of strikes declined during the ensuing years. The unions did not spread, and later when the industry began to decline, no continuous organization of workers was found. Only a few isolated labor struggles are recorded during the next decade.

Of the early labor organizations, perhaps the Industrial Workers of the World were the best known. Other unions which figured prominently in the earlier years were two AFL affiliates, the Shingle Weavers and the Intl. Union of Timber Workers.

Most of the operators looked upon any labor union as little better than the IWW although the majority preferred either of the two AFL groups. There has perhaps never been a better illustration than the IWW of the extent to which a labor organization is a response to environment.

It was embraced by the oppressed, downtrodden, "outcast" workers as the answer to their search for some of the natural enjoyments of life which was denied them.

IT GREW OUT OF "a bond of groping fellfellowship" which led men to the organization although they did not always understand its philosophy. The AFL never offered much directly to industrial as opposed to craft workers, and lumberjacks who fell into the industrial grouping, often refused AFL leadership and joined the industrially organized IWW.

The Centralia massacre on Armistice Day, 1919, which occurred when a mob stormed the IWW meeting hall in that Washington town, was part of a wave of "anti-red" hysteria which swept the western part of the country and played havoc with the activities of the IWW during the early twenties.

FOR A NUMBER of reasons, the great strike of 1935 had unusual significance in the history of labor in the lumber industry. The rapid, genuine response to the call to organize and the almost complete support of the strike by the workers themselves were surprising. Unionization was gained, although unity was damaged and the men failed to get a standard agreement.

The ending of the 1935 strike did not mean the advent of peace in the West. To the 20,000 to 30,000 unionized men, organization was new and dissension smouldered within the ranks. Employers, too, lacked experience in collective bargaining and many of them had to be convinced it would work before they accepted its principle.

When the Committee for Industrial Organization (which became the Congress of Industrial Organizations in 1937) was formed in 1935, the Sawmill and Timber Workers Union, fed up with craft policies of the AFL United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, looked with hope to the formation of the new organization. The lumber industry workers, being in a mass production industry, were naturally interested in the program of the CIO which was to organize the unskilled workers in the country.

Because of the treatment given SWTU delegates at the Carpenters convention in Lakeland, Fla., in 1936, when they were termed "non-beneficial" members and refused seats, sentiment among timber workers to affiliate with the CIO increased and gained momentum.

A DELEGATION was sent to Washington to talk to CIO officials but they were told that the CIO was set up to organize the unorganized and not to take in AFL groups.

The men were determined to join with other industrial unionists however, and in May, 1937, the executive board of the Federation of Woodworkers was requested "to consider ways and means of affiliating with the CIO and to call a special convention of all affiliates in the immediate future for the purpose of considering formal affiliation."

In a referendum, which was held prior to a Federation of Woodworkers convention at Tacoma, Wash., in July, 1937, the vote for affiliation was 16,754, and 5,306 ballots were cast against affiliation. The opposition group made a point of the fact that the Federation had a membership of "approximately 90,000 or 100,000" and wanted to know what right the convention had to accept a ballot for this number when only 22,000 votes were cast.

On the fifth day of the convention itself, a roll call of the 525 delegates resulted in 365 in favor of requesting a CIO charter, 75 opposed, 26 absent, and 59 uninstructed.

NLRB Says Official Can't Stall Union To Play Golf

DOCTORS maintain that golf is a healthy and relaxing game but the National Labor Relations Board has taken a dim view of an employer using it as an excuse to avoid a bargaining session with representatives of the CIO Textile Workers.

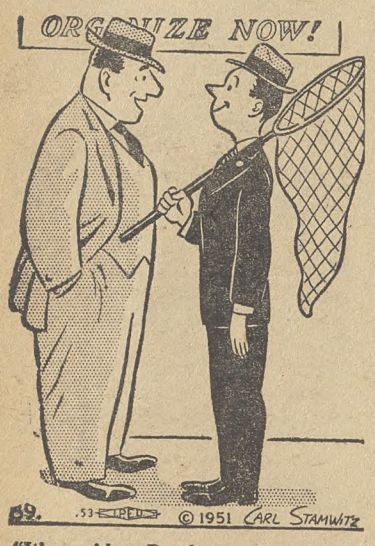
Reluctance to break a date on the links was only one of the many dodges used by H. A. Johnston, a vice president of the Belding-Hemingway Co. of Morristown, Tenn., to get out of doing business with the union.

On another occasion, Johnston postponed a scheduled meeting on the grounds that "he had only 20 minutes to catch a train," while in a third instance he promised to attend a bargaining session "if my work gets cleaned up before I sail for Europe."

NLRB Trial Examiner David London, termed these and other shenanigans "a flagrant violation of the Taft-Hartley Act." He told the company to stop stalling negotiations. "It isn't necessary to bargain day after day without interruption," he asserted, "but the stalling and dilatory manner used in this case was certainly not acting in good faith."

London declared that there "is no more subtle, yet effective manner by which an employer can foment dissatisfaction among employes than by making their bargaining representatives ineffective."

The company, a New York concern with factories in Connecticut, Virginia and Tennessee, is a manufacturer and jobber of thread and fabric.



"It's an idea, Brother — but that's not the way we organize the unorganized!"

Court Finds Old Gold Ads Are Misleading

It took seven years, but now it's official. It's not true that Old Gold Cigarettes "contain less nicotine than any of the six leading brands."

The fight between the P. Lorillard Tobacco Co. and the Federal Trade Commission has been going on for seven years. The FTC had charged the advertising was "false, misleading and deceptive" and had ordered Lorillard to cease and desist. The company had gone to court, and finally the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond, Va., on Dec. 29 denied a petition to reverse the FTC order.

Mary Anderson Life Story Due

Contracts have been signed by the Univ. of Minnesota Press for publication of the autobiography of Mary Anderson, director of the Woman's Bureau of the U. S. Dept. of Labor from shortly after its establishment until her retirement, 21 years later, in 1944.

The book, to be called "Woman at Work," has been written in collaboration with Mary N. Winslow, another pioneer leader in organized efforts for the betterment of working women.

Mary Anderson came to America as a Swedish immigrant at the age of 16. She progressed, in 30 years, through the stages of casual domestic worker, exploited factory hand, skilled shoe worker, trade unionist and organizer, to a leader of women and an important official of the Federal government. Her life story encompasses almost every movement in this country and many international projects for the improvement of women's working conditions.

UTSE Aide Hurt When Car Upsets

Richard S. Hamme, southeastern regional director of the CIO Transport Service Employes, escaped serious injuries recently when his car skidded on an icy road while he was traveling from Greensboro to Wilmington, N. C.

Despite the fact that his car turned over several times, Hamme escaped with bruises of the arms and shoulders, and cuts of the head. In a few days, Hamme was back in harness negotiating agreements for Local 71, Wilmington.

'Sugar Ray' Hits Commies And Singer Paul Robeson

Wife and Son Greet Welterweight Champion

"Sugar Ray" Robinson, world welterweight champion, returned last week from Europe, where he swung a number of strong punches at ring opponents and hung a verbal left hook on Singer Paul Robeson and the Communists.

During five weeks overseas, Robinson defeated five middleweight rivals in non-title clashes. Four of his wins were by knockouts.

At a Paris press conference, he commented on Communistic charges relating to treatement of Negroes in the U. S., "They were capitalizing on statements made by Paul Robeson, the singer. Robeson speaks for himself and not for the American Negro.

"America is the greatest land of all. She gave me every opportunity and I can say that at no time have I ever been discriminated against."

Fake Issue Used To Block Jobless Pay Standards

By IRVING FAGAN and CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

IF A STEELWORKER in Alabama is laid off, he can receive as little as $4 a week in unemployment benefits. The most he can get is $20. And the limit is 20 weeks.

But a steelworker in Illinois, working for the same corporation, and also laid off, gets a minimum of $20 a week, and a maximum of $25. And he can get it for 26 weeks. Same corporation, same rate of pay, but the Illinois worker is entitled to a maximum of $650 as a cushion until he gets work again, while the Alabaman is entitled to only $400.

BELIEVING that the United States is one country, and not a collection of independent states, Administration officials have asked Congress to revise the unemployment insurance program to set minimum nation-wide benefits, cover more workers, protect workers who move from one state to another, and improve sections dealing with fraud and disqualification.

You'd think such a move would bring cheers from everybody who is living in the twentieth century. You'd be wrong. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States opposes the measure. And on what basis? Why, on the issue of states' rights. The proposed legislation, says the Chamber with a straight face, constitutes a practical invasion of areas reserved to the states.

WHAT IS really bothering the Chamber of Commerce, and those for whom it speaks? The old, old business—it would cost the employers more. And it would mean that all the gimmicks and gadgets written by anti-labor legislatures into the various state laws to disqualify many workers wouldn't have such easy going.

The Chamber piously declares: "Forty-five state legislatures will be in session in 1951. The record of these states in recognizing, meeting and dealing with the problems of unemployment compensation to date would suggest that where the need actually exists for further revision of their program, they can be counted on to take the initiative."

Any labor man experienced in legislative work in state capitals will hoot loud and long at that statement.

WHAT THE Administration is after is a floor for rates and standards, which now vary from bad to a little better than fair.

The "states' rights" cry is very clever. What it really means is that the Chamber wants the federal government to keep its hands off. For the federal government does have one method of control over the state unemployment compensation systems.

It works like this: There is now a 3% federal tax on employers. The U. S. government excuses them from paying 90% of the tax if they also pay a state unemployment tax. So the employers actually pay 0.3% to the federal government, and up to 2.7% to the state governments.

This 0.3% now brings in $180 million a year. Every cent of this goes back to the states, and it pays for administering the unemployment offices. The administration practice must meet government standards.

UNDER THE proposed legislation, if a state unemployment compensation law does not meet the federal standard of floors and conditions, the U. S. government would not excuse the employer from 90% of the tax.

And that, and not states' rights, is what the Chamber of Commerce is really crying about. What the Chamber, and the industrialists for whom it speaks, would like is to continue to get this 90% exemption without having to conform to any federal minimum standards on unemployment compensation.

(That 2.7% state tax is the maximum. In many states, the law is so fixed that an employer with a good record of stable employment pays a much lower rate.)

AS SECY. OF Labor Tobin explained in hearings on the measure (H.R. 8059) before the House Ways and Means Committee, "any federal legislation enacted must give the states time to secure the necessary changes in state laws through the state legislatures.

"Since most of the states have biennial legislative sessions, a period of two years must be allowed before most of the amendments can take effect. Consequently, it is necessary that federal legislation be enacted now so that we can be prepared to meet any increase in unemployment when world conditions permit us to decrease our defense efforts."

All that is nothing to the Chamber of Commerce. It is strong for "states' rights."

Phone Union Wins Benefits

THE CIO Communications Workers have won a victory for their long lines department which may pay off in the future.

During the recent telephone strike long lines operators were told to cross picket lines or not report for duty at other times. The union called this a "lockout" and appealed for unemployment compensation for the workers. The Pennsylvania Unemployment Service has now ruled in their favor, but because the strike did not last long enough for them to become eligible for benefits, the workers will not collect.

CWA scored another victory when weekly raises of $4 to $6 were won by 6700 telephone workers in Northern California and Nevada. The agreement was reached after long negotiations, a vote to strike, and federal conciliation.

Ads Give Co-ops' Side On Taxes

In a positive presentation of the brief facts about the tax status of cooperatives, many cooperative organizations throughout the nation have begun distribution of a series of four newspaper advertisements, the Cooperative League of the U. S. A. has announced.

In addition to outlining cooperatives' tax payments, the series calls on all businesses to pay their fair share of taxes, to refuse to profiteer, and to produce and distribute all possible goods and services in the present crisis.

"Although the series is designed to counteract the highly emotional and erroneous advertisements being put out by the so-called National Tax Equality Association, its broader purpose is to present the true facts about cooperative taxation and the positive side of cooperatives as a part of the American businesss community," Jerry Voorhis, executive secretary of the Cooperative League, said.

Retail Food Costs Increase

RETAIL FOOD prices rose 1.2% from Nov. 28 to Dec. 15, to reach 216.3. This was an increase of 5.7% since June 15. It was 3.2% above the previous month, and 9.6% above a year ago.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics released figures on a survey of prices of 50 foods in Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Columbus, New York, Richmond, San Francisco and Washington, D. C.

Eggs increased 14.2% at a time when they usually decline. Meats, poultry and fish went up 2.1%; beef and veal went up 2.7%; poultry, 2.5%; pork, 1.7%; lamb, 0.4%.

Fats and oils went up 2.5% in the two-week period. Dairy prices rose 0.3% as butter advanced 1.7%. Fruits and vegetables declined slightly as did cereals and bakery prices. Coffee and sugar prices remained unchanged.

Largest increase since June 15 was for eggs, which went up 66.2%. Fats and oils went up 13.8%; coffee, 6.2%; dairy products. 10.7%; sugar, 6.2%; cereal and bakery products, 4.8%; meats, poultry and fish, 2.8%. Fresh fruits and vegetables dropped 9.2%, but canned vegetables went up 16.8%, dried fruits and vegetables 10.2%.

The index is based on 1935-1939 prices. What the present 216.3 index means is that it costs the housewife $2.16 today to buy what she could buy for $1 in 1935-1939.

"WHO'S HE KIDDING!"

34 Ordered Reinstated

CAROLINA MILLS, Inc., at Newton, N. C., has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to reinstate 34 workers with back pay and bargain with the CIO Textile Workers. The board ruled the company fired a disproportionate number of union members in January, 1949, when it reduced operations.

Organization work began in October, 1948, when workers appealed to TWUA for help, after each weaver was assigned 32 instead of 22 looms and the pay scale was chopped from 67.2c to 46c per 100,000 picks.

NLRB found the company not only threatened its workers when they talked of bringing the union into the plant, but that when things got slack it laid off approximately half the union members, including everybody on the organizing committee.

Business Mad At Mails

If you think you're unhappy with the lousy mail service you've been getting since the postal budget was cut, you should listen to business.

The Commerce and Industry Association of N. Y. surveyed 357 Manhattan firms and found delays of two to 10 days due to shortage of postal help. They claimed this caused millions of dollars loss in business.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer addressed a meeting of the Communications Workers of America in Washington. The theme of this meeting was the determination to go out and bring many more unorganized workers into the union. Plans also were made to resist the raiding tactics of unions which for 50 years have failed miserably to give organization to the telephone workers.

Allan Haywood

The groundwork was laid for more and more organization. The organizational staff of the National CIO will continue to render every cooperation to the CWA in its organizational campaigns.

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions opened a regional conference in Mexico City on Jan. 8. CIO delegates are in attendance along with AFL representatives. There also are delegates in attendance from all over North and South America.

Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the IUE-CIO reports that in a representation election at the Sperry Co. Plant, Jamaica, N. Y., the court showed for methods men and tool designers, IUE 118, no union 63; for reproducers, IUE 28, no union 2.

William F. Donovan, director of Dist. 28, United Steelworkers, reports two more union shop elections in plants in Cleveland, O. At the Browning Crane & Shovel Co. the workers voted 165 for a union shop to 5 against. Staff Rep. Jack Ferline handled the campaign. At Ferro Machine & Foundry, Inc., the workers voted 1703 for the union shop to 56 against. Ferline also participated in this campaign.

The crew of the S. S. President Cleveland have voted to call upon the National Maritime Union to help them fight communism. The crew of the S. S. Lurline voted unanimously to support the action taken by the crew of the S. S. President Cleveland. These boys want to maintain their organization in a democratic and true trade union manner. They are getting tired of Moscow influences and the slaves who adhere to that policy.

Stabilization Moves Indicate

Equality Of Sacrifice May Be Endangered

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE TOP leaders of organized labor and industry have been summoned to a series of important wage stabilization policy meetings this week, amid ominous indications that wage-earners might be called on to take a disproportionate share of the anti-inflation burden.

Cyrus Ching, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, called the meetings for Jan. 10, 11 and 12. He issued a set of questions which he wished the labor and industry representatives to be prepared to answer. The labor representatives invited were CIO Pres. Philip Murray, AFL Pres. William Green, Machinists Pres. A. J. Hayes, Railway Labor Executives' Association Chairman George Leighty, and Pres. John L. Lewis of the Mine Workers.

The ominous note was sounded in the year-end report of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, titled "The Economics of National Defense." The report is expected to serve as the basis for the President's message to Congress and—unless amended by pressures from elsewhere or by legislative action—to be an important policy guide in the application of wage and price controls.

If the theory and recommendations of the report become national policy, wages will be stabilized in relation not to the cost of living, but to the overall supply of consumer goods. (In other words, wage earners would not be able to "bid up" prices of scarce goods.)

Prices, in general, will be stabilized at their present levels. Wage earners' standards of living will not be allowed to rise, nor will they be allowed pay increases to compensate for tax increases. No wage increases will be allowed which would necessitate price increases.

The two main criticisms of this approach, from labor's point of view, are:

1 That it applies only to wage earners; there is no equality of sacrifice recommended, except in the tax field.

2 That without a much tougher price control law, stabilization of wages on the basis of overall supply of goods rather than on what they cost would actually have the effect of sharply reducing the workers' standard of living.

No effective price control is possible under the present law. For instance, rent control is pretty nearly a complete farce and the President does not have the authority to make it any tougher. Ceiling prices on other important cost-of-living items, when applied, can easily be made meaningless because of lack of quality standards unless the law is amended. The new Congress will not easily be persuaded to make the necessary changes.

UNDER THESE circumstances, tight control over wage increases would simply leave the worker helpless while prices soar out of sight—bid up by other, uncontrolled spending groups in the economy, such as professionals, independent businessmen and farmers, who would be free to make up for their increased share of the tax burden by charging through loopholes in the price control law, and at the same time would be able to pay the market price for the consumer goods they want.

The report, furthermore, came out strongly against automatic wage increases for increased productivity or to compensate for increases in the cost of living. It stated that such arrangements, while healthy in a normal economy, discriminate unjustly in favor of the employes working under such contracts in a defense period.

Labor representatives were busily working on statements to present to Ching's meetings as the CIO News went to press.

MEANWHILE, another development caused some consternation. The President on Jan. 3 issued an executive tightening up and centralizing the defense production agencies a move which had the effect of promoting William Harrison, chairman of the board of the International Telephone & Telegraph Co., to an even more important position in the defense set-up than he has had heretofore.

Under the new arrangement, Charles E. Wilson, of General Electric, is made policy chief, heading a new Defense Mobilization Board. Directly under him but independent of each other, are Harrison, heading the Defense Production Administration, and Alan Valentine, heading the Economic Stabilization Agency. Valentine's powers were not increased, but Harrison was given direct, policy control over the various defense subdivisions which previously had been set up on a sort of independent basis in existing agencies.

The only exception to this awarding of power to Harrison was in the manpower field. The Labor Dept., which was asked to handle defense manpower requirements, will continue to operate independently of Harrison, reporting directly to Wilson.

What would be the position of various labor advisers in the new set-up was undetermined. The National Security Resources Board, under W. Stuart Symington, where labor has considerable representation, is completely outside the new defense set-up: it reports directly to the President, and has certain powers given it by the law which set it up. The executive order stripped it of some of these powers and there were indications that it would be further shorn.

Hey, Uncle, You Forgot Something!

Carey, Reuther Appointed To NPA Advisory Committee

CIO SECY.-TREAS. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers have been named CIO members on a brand-new labor-management advisory committee to the National Production Authority.

Other labor members are AFL Pres. William Green, Pres. George Harrison of the AFL Railway Clerks, and Pres. Dan Tracy of the AFL Electrical Workers. Management members have not been named.

The joint committee was intended to give policy advice on production problems to Secy. of Commerce Charles Sawyer, operating head of the defense production effort. Since then, the new Defense Production Administration has been established by executive order, and policy decisions have been shifted to the new agency. It is presumed the new advisory group will be shifted to that agency also.

The appointment of the labor members to the new advisory group followed by a few days the naming of two labor experts as full-time, working consultants to William H. Harrison, head of the new DPA, and to Sawyer. The two are Ted Silvey, CIO, until recently executive officer of the labor division of the Economic Cooperation Administration, and Joseph Keenan, director of the AFL's Labor's League for Political Education.

It Just Isn't So, Says Bernard To AMA's Elmer

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

LIKE THE feller says, you live and learn. Old man Carter thought he had a pretty good idea of what working men and women believe, what they are for and what they are against.

And then he came upon the New Year's message from a gent named Elmer L. Henderson, M. D., of Louisville, Ky., in the trade magazine of the profession—the Journal of the American Medical Association. Elmer is president of the AMA.

Elmer said "One weak sector in medicine's front line, unfortunately, has been organized labor. Not the men and women themselves, but the officials who rule the unions . . . Among the rank and file are strong allies for medicine, and we must make it one of our 1951 resolutions that their friendship shall not be neglected." He calls this "grass roots support," and dubs it "splendid."

Elmer is confusing the profession of medicine with the gang that's running the AMA—a gang so lost to shame that it has gone to bed with the real estate lobby, and the insurance lobby, and all sorts of other special interests, to join in blocking any and all welfare measures for the people.

But there's more in Elmer's New Year's miasma. He says, "The medical profession now has the public confidence in higher degree than ever before, because it went to the people, told the truth and revealed state socialism for the universal danger it is. We can be proud of that, but we must live up to it."

OF COURSE, Elmer, you can be proud if you want to, but you ought to be ashamed. Are you proud of having defeated a man like Senator Graham in North Carolina, or Rep. Andy Biemiller in Wisconsin? Or the others the AMA helped defeat?

Are you proud of the fight you made on public housing? Are you proud of having blocked federal aid to medical education, when the shortage of doctors is not only a scandal but also a threat to the security of this nation in its hour of peril?

Do you really believe, as you say, that the $500,000 the AMA has voted "will provide a vehicle for private financing of our medical schools, and can end forever the arguments that federal funds are their only salvation?" If you can divide, Elmer, that means about $6000 apiece for the nation's medical schools.

Maybe you ought to read a piece in the January Harper's Magazine (which Carter knows has no connection with, gets no subsidy from, nor is beholden to, any segment of organized labor). Bernard DeVoto, in his "The Easy Chair" department, writes a "letter to a family doctor."

He tells his doctor, "You and Dr. Henderson are saying what is not so. Your acquiescence in his claptrap withdraws you from my respect." DeVoto says the AMA "refusal to do anything grows more reactionary as conditions grow more alarming." He says the AMA refuses to deal except "on long-obsolete terms with an increasingly alarming social situation."

(He's talking about the inadequate medical care and its increasingly high cost.)

ELMER, GET this, from DeVoto: "Like a lot of physicians, a lot of us laymen are fed to the teeth with the AMA's methods. With its unvarying misrepresentation of the efforts other countries are making to solve the problem. With its 'crusade' and its 'battle' and its vilification of the government, the public, and its own members who speak out. With its uniformly misleading attack on 'government medicine'."

Listen some more, Elmer, and remember, this is no "labor boss" speaking: "The traditional system of medical practice has burst its seams; it is now inadequate and outworn. We are going to have something different." And he adds that there is not a chance in the world that the AMA will get what it wants—sole control by the doctors. "This is a public matter," he says.

Wait, Elmer, there's more. Says DeVoto: "The AMA is not promoting public health and welfare by intimidating its members, trying to frighten laymen, lapsing into anti-Semitism, and accusing a government which has also sworn to promote the public welfare of conspiring with Communists to stamp out freedom in the United States."

Elmer, do you still think that only the "labor bosses" oppose you? Or that "the medical profession now has the public confidence in higher degree than before?"

CIO Starts Railroad Union For Non-Operating Employes

CREATION of a new CIO organization—the United Railroad Workers of America — to launch an organizing drive among non-operating employes of the nation's rail systems was announced by the CIO last week.

The new organization will launch plans for big expansion of CIO railroad workers locals, which now enjoy collective bargaining rights for about 70,000 non-operating employes on more than a score of rail lines.

These locals in the past have been attached to the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

In announcing plans for the drive, CIO Pres. Murray and Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood also revealed that the organizing campaign would be headed by Pres. John Green of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

Green has announced that he will not seek re-election at the shipyard union convention, which opens in Boston on January 22.

EUGENE ATTREED, of Hackensack, N. J., has been named vice-president of the United Railroad Workers, and Paul Monahan, of Camden, N. J., is its secretary-treasurer. Haywood and Green said that during the next few months a conference of the new organization will be held to develop rules and procedures for carrying on its activities.

Both Haywood and Green pointed out that the move to launch the organizing drive followed an appeal from a committee of leaders of the railroad workers' locals for increased help for their organizing activities.

Haywood recalled that the railroad locals had been assigned to the shipyard union during their "swaddling clothes" period, but it was now felt that the locals had sufficient strength to have their own organizing structure.

CIO railroad locals have been functioning with considerable success, under collective bargaining agreements with the Pennsylvania, Santa Fe, New York Central subsidiaries, and other lines. They represent non-operating workers—the men and women who perform the hundreds of jobs necessary to keep the trains moving.

IN MAKING the announcement Haywood and Green declared in a joint statement:

"Sustantial numbers of railroad non-operating workers have already had a chance to see the benefits won for them through collective bargaining of a CIO industrial union.

"Under the banner of the United Railroad Workers, CIO, we are hopeful of extending and improving these benefits to large numbers of unorganized non-operating railroad employes, whose conditions have trailed those of other groups of industrial workers.

"Through the United Railroad Workers' organizing drive, we hope to correct, as speedily as possible, these serious inequities suffered by a large number of workers in one of the nation's most vital industries.

"We foresee the development of a great and flourishing union, responsive to the needs of its members and thoroughly devoted to our American democratic traditions.

"It is our belief that through this organizing campaign we can achieve considerable progress for these workers, and at the same time help improve morale and stability on a considerable section of the country's transport system."

"Tch, tch, girls! Why not try a little collective bargaining?"

'We're Behind Fair Deal' Truman Informs Press

"LET'S GET this straight! This Administration had no intention to abandon any of its principles or programs. We stand behind the Fair Deal and the Democratic platform as much today as ever."

That was what Harry Truman told his press conference Jan. 11. And he told reporters they could quote him directly. Ordinarily, the President must be paraphrased.

He made the statement in response to stories that his State of the Union Message amounted to abandonment of the Fair Deal.

In the message, he had said that non-defense spending should be subjected to rigid economy but called for improvement of the labor laws and federal support for medical education and suggested that social security be broadened and that health insurance be kept in mind. Inference was that at best he'd gone back on the Fair Deal program if not buried it.

ASKED AT the press conference why he hadn't urged repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, the President declared that if improvement of the labor laws required repeal, he was for repeal. He said he hadn't put aside the civil rights program. He also said the Administration recognized "that in an emergency like the present, first things come first, and our defense programs must have top priority. There is no reason for anyone to be in doubt about this."

He said wage-price controls were on their way, including controls on food. If new legislation was required he'd ask for it, he added.

In the course of the conference, the President dwelt at some length on his power to send troops abroad. He said he would consult Congress but didn't require congressional permission to act under his Constitutional power as Commander-in-Chief.

Armour's Profit In Stratosphere

Armour & Co., Chicago, increased profits 3000 percent over 1949. For the fiscal year ended Oct. 28, 1950, its profits were $19,038,787. For the same period in 1949 the profits were $558,189.

And the tremendous leap in profits came on a relatively small increase in sales. Sales in 1949 were $1,848,280,443; in 1950 they were $1,859,827,683. The increase was only $11,547,240.

United Labor Group Asks 'Unity In Time Of Crisis'

The United Labor Policy Committee, representing the four major labor organizations, the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the International Association of Machinists, and the Railway Labor Executive Association, last week issued the following statement on President Truman's message to Congress on the State of the Union:

"We commend President Truman on the enlightened viewpoint and thoughtful leadership reflected in his State of the Union Message to the Congress.

"Organized labor in America endorses the President's warning that the threat to our democratic institutions 'is a total threat, and the danger is a common danger.' On behalf of millions of union members, the United Labor Policy Committee recognizes the need for national unity in time of crisis, and we pledge that our efforts will be directed vigorously and continuously to the welfare of all the people of this country.

"Union members, who have always recognized that America's problems and destiny are closely bound to those of all humanity, will be gratified by the President's masterly analysis of the dangers of narrow-minded isolationism. The false dogma of knifing our friends and befriending our enemies, which is the inevitable end-product of the isolationist philosophy, will be totally rejected by right-thinking Americans. There is no short cut to world peace, and stability will not be attained by adopting the appeasement policies of defeatists.

"The President's State of the Union Message charts an honorable and effective course for our United States. We urge the Congress to accept its word and spirit; and we urge all Americans to work together, in the spirit of equality of sacrifice, in order to overcome the threat of Soviet imperialism to our democratic institutions."

'The Gun That Points At Them Points At Us Also'—Truman

Highlights from President Truman's State of the Union address which he made to a joint meeting of the Senate and the House follow:

The actions you take will be watched by the whole world. These actions will measure the ability of free people, acting through their chosen representatives and their free institutions, to meet a deadly challenge to their way of life.

We can meet this challenge foolishly or wisely. We can meet it timidly or bravely, shamefully or honorably.

• • •

Indeed, the state of our nation is in great part the state of our friends and allies throughout the world. The gun that points at them points at us also.

The threat is a total threat and the danger is a common danger.

All free nations are exposed and all are in peril. Their only security lies in banding together. No one nation can find protection in a selfish search for a safe haven from the storm.

• • •

Our own national security is deeply involved with that of other free nations. While they need our support, we equally need theirs. Our national security would be gravely prejudiced if the Soviet Union were to succeed in harnessing to its war machine the resources and the manpower of the free nations on the border of its empire.

• • •

This country has a practical, realistic program of action for meeting this challenge.

First, we shall have to extend economic assistance where it can be effective . . .

Second, we shall need to continue our miliary assistance to countries which want to defend themselves . . .

As the third part of our program, we will continue to work for peaceful settlements in international disputes. We will support the United Nations and remain loyal to the great principles of international cooperation laid down in its Charter.

We are willing, as we always have been, to negotiate honorable settlements with the Soviet Union. But we will not engage in appeasement.

• • •

This kind of defense production program has two parts.

The first part is to get our defense production going as fast as possible. We have to convert plants and channel materials to defense production . . .

The second part is to increase our capacity to produce and to keep our economy strong for the long pull. We do not know how long Communist aggression will threaten the world.

• • •

The Congress will need to consider legislation, at this session, affecting all the aspects of our mobilization job. The main subjects on which legislation will be needed are:

First, appropriations for our military build-up.

Second, extension and revision of the Selection Service Act.

Third, military and economic aid to help build up the strength of the free world.

Fourth, revision and extension of the authority to expand production and to stabilize prices, wages and rents.

Fifth, improvement of our agricultural laws, to help obtain the kinds of farm products we need for the defense effort.

Sixth, improvement of our labor laws to help provide stable labor-management relations and to make sure that we have steady production in this emergency.

Seventh, housing and training of defense workers, and the full use of all our manpower resources.

Eighth, means for increasing the supply of doctors, nurses and other trained medical personnel critically needed for the defense effort.

Ninth, aid to the states to meet the most urgent needs of our elementary and secondary schools. Some of our plans will have to be deferred for the time being . . .

Tenth, a major increase in taxes to meet the cost of the defense effort.

But in a long-term defense effort like this one we cannot neglect the measures needed to maintain a strong economy and a healthy democratic society.

The Congress, therefore, should give continued attention to the measures which our country will need for the long pull. And it should act upon such legislation as promptly as circumstances permit.

To take just one example—we need to continue and complete the work of rounding out our system of social insurance. We still need to improve our protection against unemployment and old age. We still need to provide insurance against the loss of earnings through sickness, and against the high costs of modern medical care.

And above all, we must remember that the fundmentals of our strength rest upon the freedoms of our people. We must continue our efforts to achieve the full realization of our democratic ideals. We must uphold the freedom of speech and the freedom of conscience in our land. We must assure equal rights and equal opportunities to all our citizens.

As we go forward this year in the defense of freedom, let up keep clearly before us the nature of our present effort.

We are building up our strength, in concert with other free nations, to meet the danger of aggression that has been turned loose on the world. The strength of the free nations is the world's best hope of peace.

I ask the Congress for unity in these crucial days.

Make no mistake about my meaning. I do not ask, or expect, unanimity. I do not ask for an end to debate . . .

When I request unity, what I am really asking for is a sense of responsibility on the part of every member of this Congress . . .

This is our cause—peace, freedom, justice.

We will pursue this cause with determination and humility, asking Divine guidance that in all we do we may follow the will of God.

Labor To Wage Board: 'Sacrifice Must Be Equal'

THE United Labor Policy Committee told the government last week that economic stabilization must be "more than a one way street" applying to labor.

In a 20-page statement given to Cyrus Ching, director of Wage Stabilization, the committee members representing CIO, AFL, the Machinists and the Railroad Brotherhoods presented their united reaction to questions asked them separately by Ching:

If workers' wages are to be controlled, they said, so must the cost of what the workers must buy. Sacrifice must be equal. The Defense Production Act does not allow effective control of prices, and should be amended. The tax laws already have put an unfair burden on wage earners.

And even if adequate price controls and tax schedules are established, ensuing wage stabilization regulations must be: (a) flexible and fair, with the widest latitude for collective bargaining, and (b) administered by an agency empowered to make actual decisions, not just recommendations. The Taft-Hartley law should be repealed.

The statement went into great detail, but these were its main points.

Among the labor leaders, only John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, disagreed. (The mine union does not belong to the committee.) Lewis came out flatfooted against either price or wage control.

THE STATEMENT was issued in the course of a series of meetings Ching had called with both labor and industry representatives.

(The first industry spokesman was Ira Mosher, talking for the National Association of Manufacturers. He said the NAM favored wage stabilization on a regional basis—with the highest presently prevailing wage in the region serving as a ceiling which other rates might be allowed to equal but should not be allowed to surpass.)

The Labor Policy Committee directly challenged the general assumption that all wage increases are inflationary. They are not, the group said, if adequate and fair tax, savings, price and rationing programs are adopted.

The attitude was summed up by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who told the press:

"The committee is not disposed to play any part in the proceedings of the board until the government puts into effect an across-the-board anti-inflation program."

AT WAGE POLICY TALKS: Leaders of United Labor Policy Committee met with the Wage Stabilization Board last week to give the unions' views on wage programs for the emergency. Shown in huddle at start of meeting are George Harrison, AFL; Al Hayes, Machinists; Cyrus Ching, board chairman; CIO Pres. Philip Murray; George Leighty, railway brotherhoods, and UAW Pres. Walter Reuther. Ching called both labor and industry to the meeting.

AS IF TO point up the statement, and underline the difficulties surrounding the present situation, Economic Stabilizer Alan Valentine and Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle, earlier the same day, announced they had decided not to institute a 30-day price and wage freeze, after all.

DiSalle had recommended a price freeze, but after further thought, the harried stabilizer, working with a weak and inconsistent law and assembling a staff with great difficulty, decided against any such step. Their reason: a general freeze applied now would freeze all inequities, and the new agency would be swamped with appeals for which it would be unprepared, both staff-wise and policy-wise.

Meanwhile, the price stabilizer continued meeting with various industry representatives. The meat packers said they weren't having any, thank you — the answer was more meat production. The women's dress industry, on the other hand, asked for controls. If textiles are controlled now, they said, dress prices next spring can be the same as they were last spring. If not, there'll be an increase.

Here are some highlights of the lengthy statement the Labor Policy group gave Ching. (A summary of main points is given elsewhere on this page.):

"THE WAGE and salary workers of America have good reason to be alarmed over persistent agitation to control their earnings at a time when living costs are rising daily and no adequate legal restraints on prices can be imposed. They have learned from bitter experience that stabilization must be more than a one-way street . . .

"Our defense effort will not be served by any action which undermines the unparalleled stability which already exists in industrial relations. We must not create strife in the name of 'stability.' Interference with existing contracts arrived at through collective bargaining would inevitably lead to industrial unrest and thereby defeat the very goal of of wage stabilization . . .

"Justice and equity must govern the nation's course of action . . . The presently inadequate share of the national income received by wage and salary earners must not be undermined in the name of wage stabilization.

"To succeed, any wage stabilization program must be adaptable to changing conditions and needs, must provide for prompt adjustment where adjustment is needed, and must avoid the use of rigid arbitrary formulas which have no justification other than administrative convenience . . .

"(It) must offer the workers of America the assurance that full justice has not fallen victim to empty legalism—that grievances will be given a fair hearing and that genuine inequities will be quickly corrected . . .

United Labor's Views On Wage Stabilization Summarized

Three general principles were emphasized by the United Labor Policy Committee in a statement which it gave to the Wage Stabilization Board:

1 "We do not think that the submerged status and lack of authority of this board permits an effective or real opportunity to the representatives of Americans who work for wages and salaries to get their views and problems before those persons having power in the field of wage stabilization."

The board's authority is limited to acting in an advisory capacity to the Economic Stabilization Director, who, in turn, is subject to the Mobilization Director.

2 "No stabilization program will be imposed or can succeed unless an over-all system of anti-inflation controls will be simultaneously imposed—on the basis of the principle of equality of sacrifice."

3 "Wage stabilization must be supplemental to, not a substitute for, collective bargaining."

A summary of the statement follows:

An overall program to check inflation does not now exist. An anti-inflation program requires price controls which can be enforced. No enforceable price control is possible until the Defense Production Act is substantially revised by Congress.

An anti-inflation program requires other measures including the levying of adequate and equitable taxes upon corporation profits and individual incomes.

The Wage Stabilization Board has already recognized these major requirements and emphasized them in its December 17 memorandum to the Economic Stabilization Administrator.

Labor recognizes that these essential components of an over-all stabilization program are not within the control of the Wage Stabilization Board. However, the policies adopted by the Wage Board must necessarily take into account the Government's over-all anti-inflation program or lack of program.

As a practical necessity, any system of wage stabilization must recognize the time-tested practices of collective bargaining. The process of settling questions of wages, hours and working conditions directly by the parties concerned can contribute to stable and harmonious industrial relations in this emergency.

The Taft-Hartley Act is an unstabilizing factor in collective bargaining and tends to create disputes at a time when stability is needed more than ever before. In the light of our experience over the past three years, we urge that the Taft-Hartley Act be repealed.

Specific problems involved in a wage stabilization program can be met and solved if the Board's policies are flexible, realistic and fair.

Regarding these specific problems labor makes the following recommendations:

1 Inequities which exist on the date when wage stabilization starts should be recognized and allowed to be corrected. They should not be frozen into the wage structure. These inequities result from varying dates on which contracts expire, partial wage settlements, changing economic conditions in some industries, changes in the status of union organization and other factors. Adjustment of such inequities should not be based on any mathematical formula but on the realities of each situation. This can best be done by permitting the parties concerned to correct these inequities through collective bargaining.

2 Wage adjustments to compensate for increases in the cost of living should be allowed. They should not be prohibited or limited by wage stabilization policy. Such adjustments only reflect past inflation; they do not cause inflation. They will be unnecessary if and when the price line is held.

3 Provisions in collective bargaining contracts for scheduled future wage adjustments should be honored. The wage stabilization program should allow adjustments based on industrial progress and increased productivity. This will not only enable workers to maintain their relative position in the national economy but also provide an important incentive for improved labor efficiency.

4 Inequities within an industry, company, or area, or between industries or similar jobs should be corrected through collective bargaining without prejudgment by this Board. The Board should establish special industry commissions wherever appropriate to handle these and other complex problems peculiar to individual industries.

6 As in World Wars I and II, wage stabilization should permit adjustments to correct substandard wages. The nation cannot achieve maximum production if it condemns large numbers of workers and their families to substandard conditions for the duration of what is expected to be a long period of emergency. These adjustments should not be permitted to disturb existing job rate differentials nor should they be offset against increases otherwise allowable for changes in living costs or standards.

7 Health, welfare, retirement and other benefit plans are not methods of current compensation. They do not add to current consumer demand. Costs or payments in connection with such plans should not be considered as a part of the wage rate and are, therefore, not properly subject to wage controls of any type. Other provisions under the broad heading of "other economic benefits" should be similarly considered and judged on their own merits from the standpoint of equity.

Labor challenges the view that all wage increases are inherently inflationary. Wage adjustments paid to workers as their fair share of the production process are not inflationary if effective and equitable tax, savings, price and rationing control programs are adopted. The upper income groups in our population account for a vastly disproportionate share of consumer expenditures while the largest proportion of workers' incomes is spent on everyday necessities.

Labor believes that inflationary pressures should be eliminated where they actually exist. This objective cannot be accomplished simply by stabilizing wages, but it can be accomplished by an effective across-the-board anti-inflation program. Wage stabilization is but one important part of this necessary over-all program without which the national mobilization cannot succeed.

The workers of America—as citizens and trade unionists—stand ready to do their share in this emergency effort to defend our national security.

You Don't Toss Your Friends To The Wolves

Republican Isolation Program Much Like Action Of Union Which Won't Aid A Sister Union Because It's Weak

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AN EFFORT is going to be made here to discuss complicated foreign affairs in common "pork chop" language.

Let's start out by saying that you belong to a comparatively small union which is still suffering from the effects of a long, hard strike.

Because you're a bit weak—although gaining in strength—a big corporation with which you have a contract decides to get tough. It starts throwing its weight around and it's plain to you that you'll take a licking unless you get help.

You appeal to a sister union in the same town, which has a contract with the same corporation that's giving you trouble.

The president of the union says, "Sure, Joe, we'll give you all the aid we can. That outfit is beginning to get tough with us, too, and we'll both get it in the neck unless we work together.

"I'll let you know how much we can help after we hold our next meeting."

YOU FEEL a lot better about the situation. You've got a commitment that you'll get help but you don't know exactly how much.

Then the props are nearly knocked from under you. A couple of anti-administration leaders in your sister union cut loose at their next meeting.

"I think it is ridiculous to give real financial aid to this sister union of ours," one of them declares. "Those fellows recently had a bad strike and they're still weak.

"If we give them help they're likely to fold up anyhow when the pressure is on, so I think it would be better to keep our money and use it ourselves."

The other one declares, "I propose that we furnish not one dollar nor one picket to that union until it has demonstrated it's strong enough to win a strike without our help."

Both of them say during the debate that they realize both unions are fighting the same corporation but they still insist it would be best to refuse to give aid.

Well, there you have it—the present controversy between the Truman administration and the isolationist element of the Republican Party.

The administration has been doing everything it possibly can to strengthen our allies—nations which are lined up with us against the USSR "corporation."

THE TRUMAN THEORY is that all of the manpower, machine power and resources of the anti-Communist nations are needed to make us safe from Red aggression.

The administration program calls for strengthening the weaker "unions" by providing them with economic aid and arms.

The isolationists say this is the wrong approach.

They want us to make the United States—and the U. S. alone—so strong that it can take on Russia almost single-handedly (if that can be done).

They want our allies to prove they're capable of winning against the Reds before we give them help.

THE LATTER approach doesn't make sense, especially in view of the fact that our nation already is well committed to the policy of bolstering our allies.

We've spent a lot of money on the European Recovery Program, and we've gotten results.

We joined the North Atlantic Pact and hemisphere defense programs.

These things were done with the approval of a majority of the members of Congress.

So, now, the isolationism being peddled by the Hoover-Taft crowd can do nothing more than weaken our relations with our allies and make them wonder whether we might toss them to the Russian wolves.

HIGHER AND HIGHER

Many persons are still talking about inflation as if it were something that would slip up on us some day unless we do something to prevent it.

We've got inflation now. It has been with us for some time. And it's becoming steadily worse.

The cost of living has reached an all-time high, and it's going higher day by day.

There's been a lot of talk around Washington about the situation. Everybody says something's got to be done about it.

But very little is being done—and what is being done isn't effective.

Why?

The answer should be obvious to anybody who has studied the economic stabilization measure enacted by the last Congress.

The trouble with the law is that it won't stabilize our economy, no matter how well it might be administered.

In the first place, it doesn't permit the freezing of rents and food prices, which take a big chunk out of the family budget.

Then it ties wages and prices tightly together, making a wage freeze mandatory for any industry in which prices are frozen.

This latter provision is certainly unfair, because workers don't eat the strategic, basic materials on which price freezes would logically be applied first.

CONGRESS SHOULD REMEDY SITUATION

Congress has many important problems on its hands, and one of the big ones relates directly to the control of inflation and the stabilization of our economy.

Congress should face squarely up to the problem and take specific action soon.

It should take action which will make it possible to halt the increase in the cost of living without requiring any segment of our population to make an unfair sacrifice.

If there are to be controls—and obviously there must be—they should not exempt any group of people or any group of products. They should be designed so they can be administered with a minimum of difficulty and a maximum of results.

Sure, the job is a tough one.

But the big task ahead of all of us is a big, tough one. We're already in war and we're expanding our military establishment rapidly. Fighting international communism isn't a push-over.

To date there hasn't been equality of sacrifice. Profits and prices have risen more rapidly than have wages—and the trend is continuing.

This business of inflation is one which affects everybody. That means it's everybody's business. And everybody's business is the business of Congress.

Why don't you let your representatives in Washington know how you feel about the situation? You can do so by writing or telegraphing.

ACW Label Drive Pays Off

USE OF the CIO Clothing Workers union label has increased 43% since the union began its nationwide promotion campaign a year ago.

Accomplishments of the year-long drive were listed in a report by ACW Vice Pres. Charles Weinstein of Philadelphia, chairman of the Union Label Committee, to Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

The Clothing Workers have been using every modern promotional technique to convince the consuming public that a suit or overcoat bearing the union label, in every price range, is a better buy than the non-union product.

Advertising programs were used in national magazines, the daily, labor and trade press, radio and television, and field men and union consumer committees worked with local retailers. More than 1000 retail outlets in 97 communities were visited by union label representatives and committees.

Union label weeks were held in several cities. ACW representatives spoke at hundreds of union meetings, and the union's displays were exhibited at scores of union conventions and county fairs.

More than one million pieces of literature were distributed in support of the drive. The radio program, the Town Meeting of the Air, was sponsored in connection with the campaign in New York, Washington, Detroit and Los Angeles.

"The support we have been receiving from the trade unions and the community generally is heart-warming," said Potofsky.

"It was good to see that the public has responded to our campaign, not only in terms of enlightened self-interest because of the skill, quality and value found in union-made clothing, but in continued support of our own social welfare efforts in the clothing industry itself."

FTC To Be Vigilant To Save Health, Purses

The Federal Trade Commission announced on Jan. 11 that it will apply for court injunctions to prevent false advertising of foods, drugs, therapeutic devices and cosmetics not only when health is endangered, but also when the public is threatened with "irreparable and substantial financial injury."

Gifts Urged For Poor Nations

WHEN A banker urges gifts, not loans, for purposes that probably cannot be made to "pay off" to the giver, but simply involve high moral principle, that's news.

Pres. Eugene R. Black, of the Intl. Bank for Reconstruction and Development, urged just such a course of action in a Jan. 10 speech to the Bankers' Club of Chicago when he made an eloquent plea for technical aid—and the necessary capital to undertake it—for undeveloped countries.

He said he thought the government ought to make at least half a billion dollars available in grants (gifts) to the poorest nations in the world, for clearly understood and carefully planned programs of development aimed at putting the people of those countries on their feet.

ECONOMIC progress in the world in the last 150 years, he said, has really touched only a fringe of the world's population: the gap between the highest and lowest has steadily widened. He continued:

"The bulk of the people in the undeveloped countries are peasants, for most of whom the horizon is bounded by a small patch of land. And this land, as like as not, they do not even own, but work for another with poor and primitive tools.

"Or if they do own it, they are likely to be so in debt that it makes little difference. They would have little incentive to improve the land, even if they knew how or had the means; but mostly they are illiterate. If medical science has brought them benefits, they are two-edged, because every child that is saved, every old man whose life is prolonged, is another mouth to feed . . ."

FOR INSTANCE, he said, the United States uses nearly 200 times as much electric power, on a per capita basis, as India, the second most populous country in the world. We use times 100 as much steel . . . We have somewhat more land under cultivation, but, with only a tenth as many people working on it, we produce much more food.

"Much the same story can be repeated from one country to another," Black continued. "They all lack that system of public service on which must be based that great superstructure of a prosperous industrial or agricultural society."

"Why should we take the trouble and bear the additional sacrifice" to help these nations, he asked. "To this, I think there is a simple answer. We are bound to do it, because it is in our own self-interest, because it is the only action consistent with the basic principles which the Western world is striving to maintain.

"Of course there will be those who cry 'Operation Rathole' and will ask how many divisions we are going to get out of it. To this I would say that we may get no divisions. But if we do nothing, we may see an even greater multitude of divisions against us and important sources of raw materials cut off. Certainly the lessons of recent years have emphasized the truth that aggressive communism breeds on poverty, misery and hopelessness."

They Got Him To Teach Union Class

THIS IS a story about a man who became a CIO supporter despite the fact that he was not enthusiastic about the organization.

He was a minister with slightly liberal tendencies who lived in a Southern city in the early days of the CIO.

A number of organizers were badly beaten during the first membership drives, and the city administration gave strong support to opponents of the new union group.

The CIO grew despite the opposition. Eventually it established a city council.

And then began the job of getting the organization out of the public "dog house."

A GROUP OF council leaders got together one night to talk over the situation and to plan a public relations program.

"What we need," said one of them, "is some real friends who stand high in the community and have the courage to speak out in behalf of labor."

The others agreed, but they ran into difficulties when they started listing persons who might openly support the CIO.

But they finally came up with a few names and reached a decision to have council officers "work on them."

The plan was for CIO officials to talk with the men one at a time and tell them frankly that they were seeking their support.

It sounded like a simple program—but it didn't turn out to be so.

ABOUT A month later the council leaders got together again to discuss their project.

There was little progress to report.

"The men I talked to," said the council president, "were not hostile to us but they told me frankly they weren't in a position to give us any real help.

"We can expect their moral support, I think, but that's about all. Those fellows aren't really bad guys but they just can't see any reason for sticking their necks out."

And so the reports went—in all except one instance. One man reported there was a minister in town "who will give us some real support if we can get him really interested in what we're doing."

So the group decided to concentrate on the one man.

How to get the job done was a problem for which nobody provided a solution that night.

A MONTH OR two later the council decided it should launch an educational program for its delegates and other local union leaders.

Various courses of interest to unionists were planned and among them was one in political history.

None of the council officers felt capable of teaching such a course—and local high school and college instructors declined to do so.

Finally one of the persons working on the "school" said, "You fellows remember that minister we were trying to win over to our way of thinking? Well, he's quite an expert on political history. Why not ask him to teach the class?"

THE MINISTER was asked if he would handle the class and he jumped at the opportunity.

He had a big turn-out for the course, which pleased him immensely.

And he started turning up to see what the other teachers were doing. He listened attentively to discussion of the labor movement and of the program of the CIO.

After the "school" came to a close the minister went to the council president and said:

"I came to you people to teach but I learned more than I taught. And I can't see how anybody who understands labor can fail to support it."

And he was a supporter from that day on.

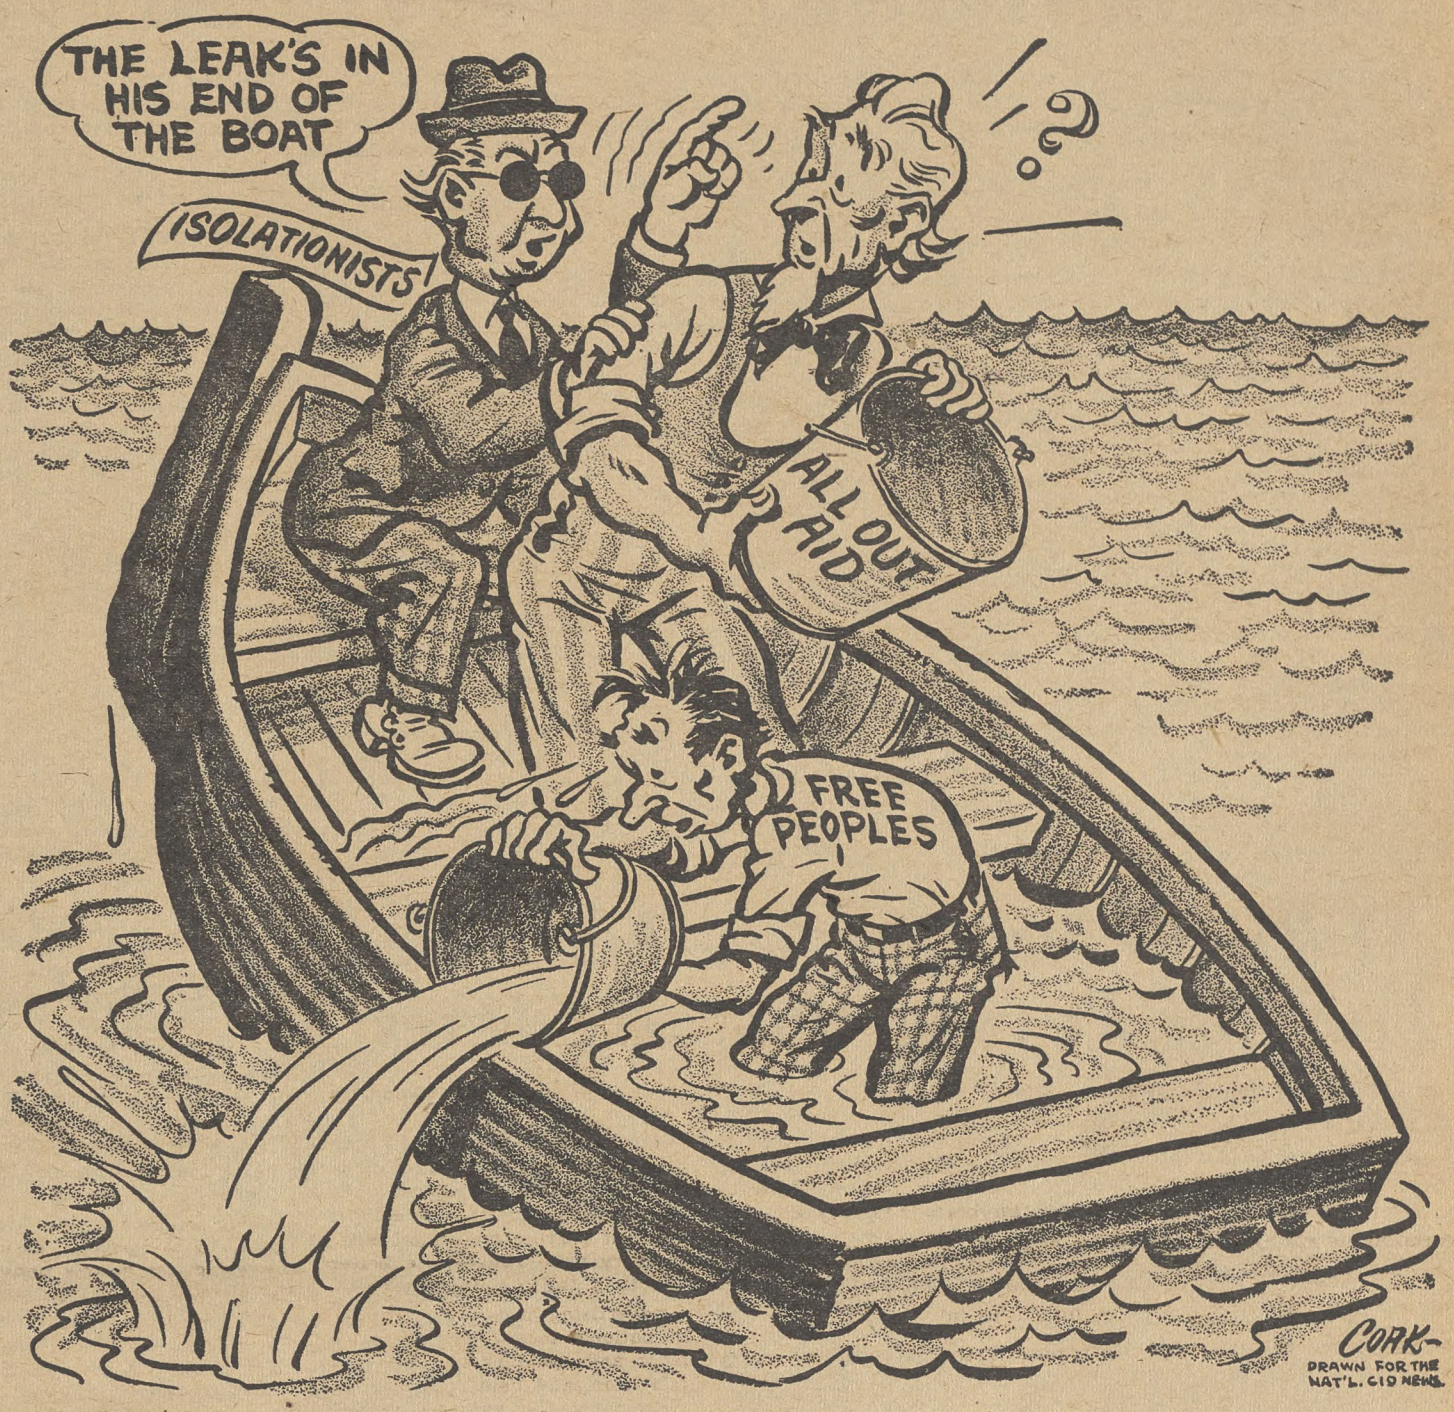
WHY SHOULD WE HELP?



Magazine Says Acheson Critics Look For Superman

"Politically minded hatchet-throwers" who are making Secy. of State Acheson their target are denounced in this article from The Lutheran, weekly news magazine of the United Lutheran Church in America:

AS MEMBERS of the new Congress trooped into Washington to take their places on Capitol Hill, a multitude of Americans were bewildered, unhappy, angry. They didn't know why the U. S. couldn't quiet down the Russians and order the Chinese to stay where they belong.

There ought to be somebody in the government smart enough to solve the world's problems. It would be comforting to have someone who knows all the answers, who can win continuous victories for the United States in dealing with opposing nations.

But there isn't anybody. Secretary of State Dean Acheson had done about as well as any man could in guiding U. S. foreign policy through dangerous channels. He had given good leadership in putting the Marshall plan into effect, negotiating the North Atlantic pact, rallying the resistance of the free nations to Soviet aggression. But he isn't Superman.

Republican Congressmen had been quick to take advantage of American discontent. This was the best chance in years to strike a hard blow at the Truman administration. In mid-December at a party conference they announced that Secretary Acheson had "lost the confidence . . . of the American people" and should be removed from office.

As the 82nd Congress opened its session, the biggest question was how much of its strength it intended to use in further efforts to undermine "confidence" in Secretary Acheson and other Truman lieutenants. The McCarthy attacks in the 81st Congress had paid off. Whether there was anybody who could measure up to Superman's size wasn't the question.

Some Congressmen seemed unconcerned about what the rest of the world might think about the sharp division in American political leadership. "In order to knife the Secretary of State," wrote New York Times Columnist Anne McCormick, "they were ready to cut the ground from under American diplomacy in the most dangerous moment in our history."

European peoples, who know they can't resist Soviet aggression without American help, don't know what to believe. They hesitate to take all-out action in arming against Communist attack, not knowing whether they can count on the U. S. to be steadfast with them. American politics seem to them emotional and unpredictable.

SECRETARY ACHESON would not be replaced, President Truman had announced. But he might be, and he could be. There are other intelligent and experienced men who could step in as Secretary of State. But no man could function effectively in the office unless he has some assurance of safety from politically minded hatchet-throwers in Washington.

By January 1951 the democratic form of government had reached a time of unusual testing. It will be proved this year whether a two-party government of free people can compete with a one-party government of slave people. To pass this test there would have to be less irresponsible party rivalry and more fair-minded devotion to the common welfare.

From coast to coast there will have to be more Americans who aren't expecting Superman to solve the nation's problems easily and inexpensively. A world crisis that has been 100 years in the making won't clear up overnight. Patience and steady nerves are good qualities for citizens to demonstrate in 1951.

Sen. Taft's Pocketbook Is Hit By Arbitrator's Ruling In Georgia

Some of the dividends Sen. Taft (R. O.) expected to get from his investment in the Noble Mfg. Co. are going instead to the 24 employes of the firm's branch at Cedartown, Ga., under a ruling in an arbitration case presented by the Northwest Georgia Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers.

The arbitrator, Maxwell Copelof, upheld the union's contention that the company breached the contract in two instances. In one it failed to provide the workers "earning possibilities" of 25% above the base rate. In the other, it unilaterally discontinued the bonus system for the labor crew.

In the first grievance, Copelof directed the company to pay the workers the difference between their actual earnings and an amount 25% above their base, or about $100 each. In the second, he directed it to reinstate the bonus system for the labor crew with retroactive lost pay, or about $120 each.

Taft has a financial interest in the firm, which has its headquarters in Cleveland, O., and until about two years ago was a member of the board of directors.

Alkali Cartel Has A Greedy Hand In Your Pocket

By IRVING FAGAN & CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

YOU'VE probably never heard of Alkasso but its existence has cost you a lot of money over the years.

That is, if you buy anything that's made by the glass industry, or the chemical and drug industry, or soaps and cleansers, water softeners, preserved wood, textiles, paper, paints, enamel, leather, or have sent your clothes to the laundry.

Or, if you buy carbonated beverages, or use any of the bicarbs that advertise they will relieve stomach ailments; or if your wife uses baking soda for any purpose.

ALKASSO is the short name for the United States Alkali Export Association, Inc., the export agency for domestic producers in the alkali industry. The alkalis are chiefly soda ash, caustic soda, baking soda and washing soda.

Until 1924, according to the U. S. government, prices "fluctuated substantially." After February 1924, according to the government, "the prices of all three principal alkalis became remarkably stable and continued so during both prosperity and depression." Which, translated, means, that you paid through the nose.

What happened in 1924? Why Alkasso and Imperial Chemical Industries (Britain) made a cartel agreement. Says the government: "Alkali prices have been characteristically rigid in the United States market since shortly before operation under the Alkasso-ICI agreements began in 1924."

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission released a report to Congress. Jan. 4. "On International Cartels In The Alkali Industry."

Who was in Alkasso at various times? Pennsylvania Salt Co., Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Dow Chemical Co., Wyandotte Chemical Corp., Solvay Process Co., Church & Dwight Co. (makers of Arm and Hammer baking soda). Says the FTC report:

"From 1935 through 1950, Alkasso's membership included all important alkali producing companies east of the Rocky Mountains, and the only withdrawals of important producers were those of the Solvay Process Co. at the end of 1941, and Wyandotte Chemicals Corp. in 1948."

The most important producers who were not members were three California manufacturers who formed their own association in 1936, cooperated closely with Alkasso through 1941, and then became inactive. When it had but eight members, Alkasso estimated it represented 96-97% of all soda ash tonnage produced in the United States.

It was a tidy deal. The world market was divided, upstart competitors were frozen out, excess consumption was dumped abroad —and the price stayed up. The big boys in the cartel raked in the dough—and you paid and paid.

IN 1944, the Dept. of Justice filed a civil complaint charging violation of the Sherman anti-trust act, and court proceedings started March 14, 1944. A decision was not handed down until Aug. 12, 1949. The court ruled for the government. The FTC report says:

"The court accordingly ordered that findings of fact be made and that a decree be entered in accordance with the opinion. Findings of fact and order, however, had not been entered at the time this report was written."

THE COURT ruled that Alkasso embarked on "a deliberate attempt to eliminate all domestic competition in the exporting of alkalies;" that "the domestic price of caustic showed remarkable stability over a large period of the conspiracy"; that "price fixing agreements are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act."

If you are one of those who believe the big boys really mean it when they speak so solemnly and lovingly of the beauties of free enterprise and competition, here is a tidbit from a 1938 memorandum from the ICI man in New York to the ICI man in London:

"Finch will be writing officially suggesting a revision of the memorandum covering the export agreement made recently on Alkalies. The omissions are really requested in order to avoid embarrassing questions which might be raised by the Federal Trade Commission should they call for a copy of the agreement when they are considering the trade code for the alkali industry."

Under the cartel agreements exclusive markets were assigned to the various parties. In each market the holders of the exclusive privilege enjoyed a monopoly protected by the mutual agreement that "each party shall use its best endeavors to prevent shipments from its exclusive market to markets exclusive to other parties." The result was to be "complete cooperation between us to avoid competition in any part of the world."

THE NATURE of the understandings between American and European producers was never reduced to formal contracts and the effects of the trade practices in domestic and foreign trade "did not become fully known until developed in the alkali case," says the FTC.

The deal was cozy. The producers raked in the dough, and you paid and paid. Free enterprise?

NLRB Reinstates Worker Fired For Not Paying 'Penalty Dues'

A WORKER who was discharged for failure to pay a dues increase of 50c a month applied to members who fail to appear at union meetings was ordered reinstated last week by the National Labor Relations Board.

A three-man majority of the board found that the 50c was actually a "fine" and hence in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits discharges for loss of union membership only when the loss results from failure to pay "periodic dues and the initiation fees uniformly required" of all members. Board Member Paul L. Styles dissented on the ground that the 50c actually was an increase in regular monthly dues.

The case involved Melvin Eck, who was discharged by the Electric Auto-Lite Co. of Toledo, O., at the behest of Local 12 of the CIO Auto Workers, under a legitimate union shop contract. The board ordered the union and the company "jointly and severally" to reimburse him for any loss of pay he may have suffered because of his discharge.

"The term 'periodic dues' does not encompass the non-attendance fine here in question," said the majority opinion, which was signed by Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members James J. Reynolds, Jr., and Abe Murdock.

"The statute specifies that the 'periodic dues' be 'uniformly required.' This we read essentially to include the requirement that such dues be charged to all members alike and that any distinctions in amount be based upon reasonable general classifications. A charge which distinguishes between individual union members who attend particular meetings and those who do not attend particular meetings, in our opinion, is not one 'uniformly' applied."

Styles contended the Taft-Hartley Act places no limitation upon a union increasing its regular monthly dues, nor does it restrict the common union practice of exonerating members from payment of financial charges.

"IN FACT," he continued, "my colleagues concede that a proper increase in dues on the part of the union and the granting of a rebate to members who attend meetings would serve as a valid defense to the discharge.

"This being so, it appears that the only thing the majority decision accomplishes is to require the union to undergo the needless burden and expenses of installing and maintaining a detailed bookkeeping system and engaging in innumerable cash transactions. Thus, by collecting the $2 before the monthly meetings and then returning the 50c to those who attended the meeting, the union would perhaps have made its purpose clearer, but the result would be the same as is now in effect."

Nine Firms Are Accused Of Auto Part Counterfeiting

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission in a complaint last week charged nine corporations and 35 individuals with selling "counterfeit" automobile ignition points and parts which have been palmed off on unsuspecting consumers as "genuine" Auto-Lite, Delco-Remy and Ford parts.

The FTC alleged that the fake parts are made by the Tungsten Contact Mfg. Co. and the Union Electrical Parts Co., both of the same address in North Bergen, N. J. Officers of both are given as Orville C. Hollopeter, Jenny V. Hayes and Saul H. Lippman.

The complaint does not charge the firms with misbranding the items, but does charge that they sell them "in bulk, unstamped and bearing no identification marks," with "full knowledge" that the buyers stamp, label, package and sell them as original Auto-Lite, Delco-Remy and Ford parts.

Respondents charged with branding, packaging and reselling the Tungsten-Union products as Auto-Lite, Delco-Remy and Ford parts include Harry Augen, Lillian Augen and Irving Scheenberger, trading as the Graphited Lubricants Co. of New York, and Charles DePerty, trading as DePerty's Ford Parts of East Orange, N. J.

According to the complaint, Graphited has also printed packages and enevlopes simulating the containers of the genuine Auto-Lite, Delco-Remy and Ford parts and sold them to other respondents for use in repackaging the phonies.

The other respondents, charged with reselling the "counterfeits" with knowledge of their misbranding or otherwise aiding and abetting the deception, are in business in communities ranging from Long Island City, N. Y., to Kansas City, Kan.

"This way the hair clippings won't go down your neck."

U. S., National Steel To Build Plants, Aided By Tax Savings

A SECOND MAJOR steel producer has announced plans to take advantage of the huge savings possible through the government's "certificates of necessity" by building a huge new plant on the eastern seaboard.

The country's fifth largest producer, the National Steel Corp., will erect a mill on a 2600-acre site stretching two miles along the Delaware River about 10 miles below Camden, N. J. While plans are not fully developed, it will probably turn out about one million tons of raw steel a year. Deepwater docks will permit plant delivery of ore from the newly developed fields in Labrador and Quebec.

The announcement followed closely the revelation of U. S. Steel that it had started construction of a $400 million plant on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware opposite Trenton, N. J., at Morrisville, Pa., which will turn out about 1.8 million tons a year. The site is about 35 miles upstream from National Steel's.

The "certificates of necessity" the government is issuing in the two projects permit the owners to write off the cost of construction as an item of depreciation for income tax purposes in five years, or at the rate of 20% a year.

This permits the companies to pay for their new facilities at a time of probably high gross income which otherwise would have to be paid as income or excess profits tax. The normal period of writing off the cost of building a new plant is 20 years, or at the rate of but 5% a year. U. S. Steel stands to save about 75% of its cost, or $300 million.

High Court OK's Two-Price Policy

The U. S. Supreme Court in a 5 to 3 decision has approved selling the same product for more than one price.

In a test case brought by Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, the court gave its approval to Standard's practice of selling to large jobbers for 1½c a gallon less than to small dealers.

It said Standard did not violate the anti-trust laws because "Congress did not seek by the Robinson-Patman Act to either abolish competition or so radically to curtail it that a seller would have no substantial right of self-defense against a price raid by a competitor."

U. S. C of C Would Slash Budget $6 Billion

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce has unveiled its program for slashing the federal budget by at least $6 billion. Where would it be cut? In housing, welfare and public assistance, public works, Veterans Administration, and farm subsidies. The latter would be cut $2 billion; the others, $1 billion each.

These cuts, said Otto A. Seyferth, C of C president, "for the most part would be effected with little hardship to anyone concerned." He said his $6 billion slash "is a minimum which would be greatly improved upon by sincere belt-tightening on the part of the government itself."

Carey Tells Ohio CIO Convention:

Taft's Policy Aids Commies As It Helped Nazis

ISOLATIONISM is communism's fifth column and those who openly advocate it are "virtual traitors," CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey told the annual convention of the Ohio CIO Council at Columbus last week.

"Isolationism is as much our enemy as the communism it serves," he declared. "Our own safety as a nation and the establishment of democracy and peace throughout the world depend on repudiation of everything that the Tafts, the Hoovers and the McCormicks stand for.

"We must, for our own salvation and the world's salvation, wipe out the poisonous illusion that we can survive without friends or that there can be peace in a world one-fifth free and four-fifths enslaved."

Carey reminded the delegates, representing every CIO international with a local in Ohio, that "there is no place in this world today — his world of the atom bomb and the hydrogen bomb— where we can hide from totalitarianism."

"Neither the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans nor the North Pole are barriers," he asserted.

CAREY SAID that if the country heeds the isolationists, "we will at best maintain in America an armed camp that will steadily degenerate into a semi-Fascist state, that will resemble more and more the dictatorship we are trying to defeat."

He said two roads are open to the United States—"the road proposed by the McCormick-Hearst-McCarthy-Taft-Hoover-Dixiecrat axis," the other "the road of fellowship with the democratic world, realizing that we are all in a state of siege, and it's a matter of all for one and one for all."

"This (isolationist) group," he said, "proposes in effect that we abandon our democratic friends throughout the world as 'unreliable'; that we hold onto the only 'reliable' fighters against communism such as Franco, Chiang Kai-chek, the Emperor of Indo-China and others of that ilk, and the we pull back to our shores and go into our storm cellars.

"BY WHATEVER name this is called, whether it is Taft's 're-examination' or Hoover's isolationism, the theory is the same. This group feels that it is hopeless to try to defend democratic Britain and France, social democratic Norway or Switzerland, or Italy. We can only fight when America itself is invaded. Otherwise, let the rest of the world go hang.

"This theory is not new. The same people who advance it now in fighting communism advanced it in 1940 when the issue was fighting Nazi-Fascism. You remember the America First group whose political leaders were the same people, the Tafts, McCormick, Hearst, Hoover, and whose big business backers supplied millions of dollars for propaganda. They had no stomach to fight for democracy. It was too expensive. Here is what your own Sen. Taft said in 1940 after France had been overrun and Britain was staggering under the blitz:

" 'I do not know what the Germans may do, and no one knows what they may do until they are freed from the present war and have an opportunity to show. When they do, we can adopt the same methods. We can take the same steps that may be necessary to meet the particular kind of blitzkrieg, if there is such a blitzkrieg, at the time we find out what it is.'

"In plain English this outstanding statement meant — 'Let the Nazis win and then if they attack us, we'll figure out what to do.'

"Isn't that exactly what Taft is saying today in the fight against Communism?

"In 1940 and 1941, when President Roosevelt was trying to get this nation to rearm, the big industrialists said we did not need to have more steel, more copper, more aluminum. They wanted business as usual and profits as usual. It was organized labor that went out and demanded that this nation mobilize to meet the Nazi challenge.

"The policy of these reactionaries, the ones who always cry 'free enterprise' and 'democracy,' was one of defeatism when it came to a showdown. They had no confidence in democracy or freedom. They were willing to throw in the sponge.

"Today, they are pursuing the same policies. While the McCarthys, Tafts, Hoovers, McCormicks, Hearsts, beat their breasts in denouncing communism in the State Dept. or on the radio and demand purges, when it comes really to fighting communism they want to throw in the sponge and retire to our storm cellars here.

"Isolationism and communism are allies today just as isolationism and fascism were allies just 10 years ago."

THE ISOLATIONISM of "this axis of defeatism," he warned, "is tied to a reactionary policy at home."

If the United States follows, instead, the road of fellowship, Carey continued, it means recognition of the fact that Europe, having gone through two devastating wars, is mortally afraid of a third.

"So instead of being impatient and dictatorial," he went on, "we work with the free people of Europe in real comradeship and understanding. We let the people of Europe and of free Asia know that we will not only share military defense with them but also the possibilities of decent living standards. We make clear that this is not a fight between the philosophies of communism and capitalism, but between democracy and dictatorship . . .

"In America, we will not only keep our freedoms but expand them. We will sacrifice in proportion to ability to do it. We will expand our industrial capacity because we have confidence that now and after this emergency there will be an unlimited market for the comforts and decencies of life.

"We will make America a showplace of democratic and civil rights because we are not afraid of the loyalty of Americans to freedom."

CAREY ALSO outlined labor's job in the crisis. "We have to make clear to the American people the two roads they can travel and the dangers if they travel the road of isolationism and reaction," he said.

"We must educate them on the real way to fight communism, with arms, with ideas, with economic aid. We must show that it is fatal to appease dictatorship in Europe and Asia—since the more concessions we feed to it, the stronger it gets and the weaker we get.

"We have to show likewise that it is fatal to feed reaction with concessions here, because the more we feed it the stronger it becomes and the weaker the forces of liberalism and democracy become.

"We have to demonstrate to all concerned that the fight against communism by this government cannot succeed if it is simply led by men from big business. There must be, in places of equality with them, leaders of American labor, directing the strategy, the policies, the operations of this vast 'Operation Freedom.' "

The delegates gave a major share of their attention to the tense international situation and joined Carey, who also is president of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, in condemning the Taft-Hoover attacks on the Truman administration. The attacks themselves the delegates branded as politically inspired and certain to "provide aid and comfort to the enemy."

"We must end the war in Washington before we can successfully combat our enemies," they said in a resolution.

They pledged the council's full strength in the mobilization effort, but insisted on equality of sacrifice. They insisted, as well, that labor be granted "active participation and real leadership in every level of our national mobilization effort."

They also undertook to put political action on a 365-day-a-year basis, describing the CIO Political Action Committee's program as "democracy in the purest form," and serving public notice that "we have just begun to fight."

CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, speaking at the convention banquet, said that "elections will come and elections will go, but the union movement will go on forever."

William Lavelle, former secretary-treasurer of the council and now assistant legislative director of the National CIO, outlined the legislative fight in Washington.

A COMPREHENSIVE state legislative program was adopted which demands extended and improved workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation; adoption of sick-benefit insurance; passage of enforceable FEPC legislation; a revamped tax setup; revised election law procedure to encourage registration and voting, and adoption of a Little Wagner Act.

Jack Kroll, national PAC director, was elected to his 10th term as president. Jacob Clayman was named to his third term as secretary-treasurer.

40-Hour Week Law Outlives Usefulness: N. Y. Biz Paper

By BRADFORD V. CARTER

For Labor Press Association

THE WAY to raise your temperature these frigid days is to read the business journals.

For instance, there's the N. Y. Journal of Commerce, staunch defender, not of things as they are, but of things as they were. In a long editorial in the Jan. 8 issue, tabbed "Labor's 'Sacrifice' ", the Journal says with a straight face:

"The requirement that time and a half be paid for hours worked beyond eight in a day and 40 in a week has been on law books for 12 years and has long since outlived its original purpose.

"That purpose was, of course, to spread the work among the unemployed of the late 1930's by imposing a financial penalty on managements that scheduled longer hours rather than take on additional workers.

"As the need for such sanctions disappeared—due in large part to the immense production needs of World War II—other rationales were found. It is now contended, for example, that the overtime penalty represents just compensation for the inconvenience of having worked more than eight hours at a stretch; that by discouraging longer work hours it ensures more leisure for the worker, and so forth."

How's your temperature so far? Wait, here it goes up another notch.

"As true as these may be," continued the Journal, "it is utterly ridiculous at this perilous stage of our affairs to support a law that has as its chief avowed purpose the discouragement of longer work hours.

"To keep it in force will be to penalize employers who are forced to bear greater labor costs as a result of fulfilling defense production requirements as well as the public, which through taxes, will have to foot the bill for the increase in defense expenditures."

Old Man Carter can just see you bust out crying about these poor employers who are "penalized."

The Journal is the same sheet that on other pages runs the figures on those fantastic profits that the employers have been amassing despite being "penalized" by having to pay an extra rate for overtime work. Maybe the feller who writes the editorials doesn't read the rest of the paper.

WHAT DOES the Journal suggest? Why, that the unions agree to a suspension of overtime pay up to 44 hours "or some other reasonable standard".

And of course, the Journal also weeps about the excess profits tax as being a terrible burden. That, according to the Journal, represents the employers' "sacrifice".

Where the Journal's editorial writers hide must be a mystery. What they read must be a mystery. Where they dreamed up the notion that the original purpose of the eight-hour day was to spread the work among the unemployed is a mystery—unless they've been reading the 1897 issue of Leslie's Illustrated Weekly.

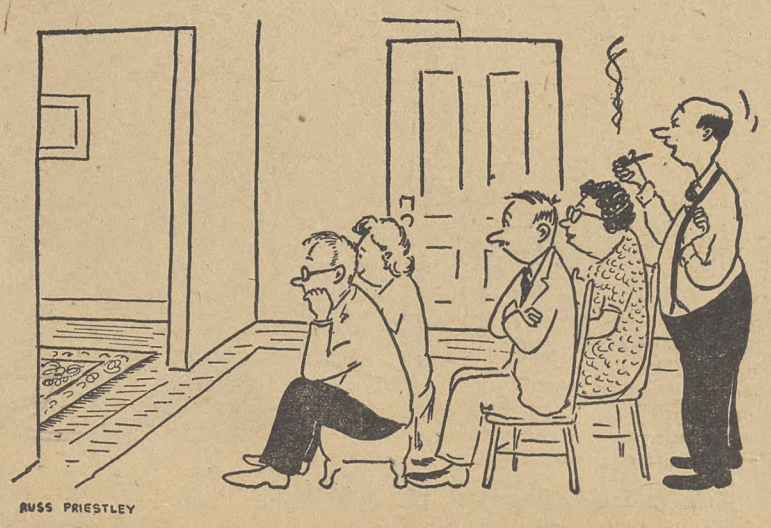
What set them off? Secy. of Labor Tobin's comment on a remark of Top Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, who said a 44-hour week would speed production. Tobin opposed lengthening the work week now.

Of course, a 44-hour week would increase production. A 48-hour week would increase it even more. But the gimmick is that the business boys want the work week lengthened without overtime pay. In other words, they want to curb takehome pay. But did you hear their shrieking about a tax on excess profits—any kind of tax, no matter how mild?

The big boys have been wailing a long time now that the cause of industrial unrest is that the workers don't understand them. The Journal of Commerce is certainly adding to the fog.

Higher Pay Urged To Hold Teachers

The teacher shortage will get rapidly worse unless salaries are raised, the National Education Association has warned. Dr. Ralph McDonald, executive secretary of NEA's commission on professional standards, told a conference that minimum pay must range from $3200 to $8000 a year to attract and hold trained teachers. He urged communities against falling back on poorly qualified temporary teachers, as they did during World War II.



". . . biggest screen in the whole neighborhood."

ECA Tour Pay-Off: French Shoes Reduced

Last spring 18 leaders of the French shoe industry came to the United States under the technical assistance program of the Economic Cooperation Administration to study production and factory methods.

It paid off. The technical manager of one firm went home, put into effect the lessons he learned and cut production costs so sharply his company was enabled to reduce the price of its shoes by 20%, or from 3000 to 2400 francs.

IT LOOKS BAD but everything was straightened out amicably. Members of the CIO Auto Workers picketing the plant of the Fairchild aviation division at Hagerstown, Md., thought the driver of the car at the right drove too close to their picket line, and stopped him to tell him about it. That's all that happened. About 5000 UAW members are on strike.

UAW Strikes Fairchild In Dispute Over Pay Raise Systems

THE CIO Auto Workers called a 100% effective strike on Jan. 8 at the aviation division of the Fairchild Aviation Corp. at Hagerstown, Md., in a dispute over how to raise wages.

The union wants its members to get their raises on an automatic progression basis within a rate range. The company wants to keep in force a merit system which was described by Paul Russo, assistant director of the UAW Aircraft Dept., as "a merit system that has no merit."

About 5000 union members walked out after all-night negotiating sessions Jan. 6 and 7 in which federal conciliators and Air Force officers participated. No meetings were held immediately thereafter, but Russo and UAW Reg. Dir. Thomas Starling said the union was ready to meet with the company at any time.

The automatic progression system has been established for some time in most UAW aviation contracts, including those covering members at North American, United, Sikorsky, Bell, Wright and Tempko plants. Although the larger firms have abandoned the merit system, Fairchild insists on sticking to it and offered the union in its place a straight 12c an hour wage increase.

UNDER THE average UAW progression plan, a worker receives an increase every four months until he reaches the top of his rate range. Then he stays there, unless there is an increase in his rate range or he is upgraded to a better job.

The company claims the union threw its proposal on the negotiating table at the last minute. Union spokesmen produced proof they had presented it in writing in October.

The strike halted production of C-119 Packets, a transport plane used by the Air Force.

Start Military Training At 18, Marshall Asks

SECY. of Defense Marshall and Assistant Secretary Anna M. Rosenberg have asked Congress to enact Universal Military Training into law.

Appearing before the Preparedness Subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Jan. 10, Mrs. Rosenberg and General Marshall spelled out their proposal in detail and said they would recommend specific legislation within a few days.

Mrs. Rosenberg indicated they had the full support of President Truman. He has long been a UMT advocate and two days earlier in his State of the Union Message he pointed out that other signatories to the Atlantic Pact had UMT systems in effect.

Before the general and the assistant secretary testified, Sen. Lyndon Johnson (D., Tex.), chairman of the subcommittee, announced the hearings were being held to find how the U. S. can "most wisely" use its "most valuable and yet most limited resource—manpower—to do the job we must now undertake."

He said the Depts. of Labor and Agriculture, the Federal Security Agency and Selective Service also would be heard. He also said specific legislative proposals would not be considered until all the facts were assembled.

GENERAL Marshall's proposals called for entrance into the armed forces of all males at the age of 18. They would serve 27 months in time of crisis, a term which would be reduced to six months by the President when international tensions slackened.

There's nothing new about putting 18-year-olds in uniform, the veteran soldier reminded the Senators. Boys of that age served in both World Wars and at the end of the second some of our finest fighting men were in the 18, 19 and 20-year-old groups.

Mrs. Rosenberg outlined the program point by point. Physically fit 18-year-olds would serve 27 months of which the first six months would be devoted to training.

The President could reduce the total service period on recommendation of the Secretary of Defense. After serving, each trained man would remain in the reserve three to six years. The President may announce a program for those unfit for military duty.

Of the 1,050,000 men reaching 18 beginning July 1, 1951, about 700,000 would be liable for induction. If physical and mental standards were lowered, another 100,000 could be taken, and the number could be increased by special health measures taken outside the Defense Dept. Actually only about 450,000 could be taken.

IN ADDITION, there would be an expanded reserve officers program and temporary UMT deferments for certain college students under procedures to be determined by a civilian board under the President. There would also be federal scholarships for deserving students, and up to 50,000 military personnel on active duty would be given college courses each year.

College students wouldn't be deferred until they'd had four months basic training and would put in their remaining time after college. There would be special deferments for students forced to lengthen their college careers because they must work their way through. LPA

Brotherhood Week Lauded

BROTHERHOOD WEEK, which is Feb. 18-25, is "a time for all of us to search our own consciences," CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in a statement prepared for distribution by the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Calling on all CIO members to take the message of Brotherhood Week seriously, Murray said:

"In our daily relations with our fellow men, too many of us are prone to let bias and bigotry guide our conduct. We oftentimes set up prejudicial standards simply because we are of a different color, or religion, or because our ancestors came from parts of the old country which we regard as foreign. This is an evil which does a disservice not alone to each other as children of God, but to the Nation . . .

"As an organization, it is the fervent hope of the Congress of Industrial Organizations to bring about an end to discrimination."

Footsteps Of Progress To Bear Mark Of Corn

The Society of Automotive Engineers believes high-test gasoline is on the way out and wants new model car engines designed to use inferior fuels.

The annual meeting of the society in Detroit warned the war will drain away premium gasoline and that less desirable gasoline will create vapor locking, tank and carburetor losses, and the need for extended warm-up periods.

13 To 25c Raise Won

Pay raises of 13 to 25c an hour have been won by 1900 members of CIO Steelworkers at the American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., Buffalo, N. Y. The new contract runs for one year.

Minn. CIO Legislative Office Opens

THE Minnesota CIO Council has opened a legislative office in the shadow of the State capitol in St. Paul and has embarked on an aggressive campaign for the liberal legislative goals set up at the council convention.

The first three projects it is tackling are state tax policy, conservation policy and administration, and state labor laws including unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation. Taxes were expected to be the most important problem confronting the Legislature, and council leaders scheduled early meetings with liberal legislators to discuss approaches.

The council's legislative program also includes teachers' tenure and minimum wage legislation, a state FEPC law, financial aid to elementary and secondary schools, the Univ. of Minnesota and state teachers' and junior colleges, and "Little Hoover Commission" recommendations for streamlining the state government.

The council's research department, headed by Robert L. Gannon, has been working out details of the program and has been preparing a number of proposed bills for introduction into the Legislature.

For the first time the Legislature will be asked to consider a major addition to Minnesota's social security laws when the CIO presents its proposed disability insurance act. If passed, this measure would provide for benefit payments to persons who are unable to work because of illness or injury not suffered on the job.

The council, represented by Secy.-Treas. Rodney C. Jacobson, Ed Donahue of the Lithographers, and Gannon, has been working with other liberal groups in drafting a proposed FEPC law.

Two Groups Warn Public Of 'Sure Cures'

TWO organizations have taken steps to protect the public against "sure cures."

The Cooperative Health Federation, made up of a number of consumer-sponsored group health and cooperative hospital plans, has appealed to the Federal Trade Commission about the matter.

The Association of Better Business Bureaus has issued a booklet on "Facts You Should Know About Health Cures."

In the appeal to the FTC, the co-op federation expressed deep concern "over certain widespread advertising campaigns presenting to the people purported properties in certain medicines whose efficiency there seems good reason to doubt."

The federation left it to the FTC to decide what action would be appropriate "on the basis of findings of fact, whatever they might be," but suggested "where there is evidence that the public is being injured, we believe the courts would approve petitions to enjoin such practices."

The booklet issued by the Better Business Bureau covered treatment offered for 47 ailments, including arthritis, cancer, diabetes, obesity and tuberculosis.

Pity The Poor Psychiatrist; Just Can't Win

THE LONGER a worker stays on the job the better his experience makes him. But the longer the man who interviewed him for the job works at his, the less able he is to do it.

The liability tag was pinned on to what usually are regarded as assets—long training and wide experience—by men who are often hired to do the psychological interviewing and attitude assessment that have grown up in modern hiring practice—industrial psychologists.

These particular industrial psychologists came from the Univ. of Wisconsin. Their conclusions were based on a series of interview experiments at the Ansul Chemical Co., Marinette, Wis., by the late Karl Wedell, former director of the UW Bureau of Industrial Psychology, and were reported by Karl U. Smith, professor of psychology and Wedell's coworker.

A group of psychologists, selected for their variety of experience at industrial interviewing and training, interviewed 200 Ansul employes to determine the degree of job satisfaction and the employe's opinion of the company.

THE LEVEL of job satisfaction was then estimated by the interviewer and compared with the result obtained from a written questionnaire and from the employe's own opinion of his degree of satisfaction at working for the company.

It was found the most experienced interviewers were those least able to arrive at an accurate assessment of the employe's satisfaction with his job and with the company, Wedell and Smith reported.

Psychologists working at the Univ. of Michigan on a fund granted by the Veterans Administration found substantially the same result in research with clinical psychologists, Smith said.

Although psychologists have not yet studied the question thoroughly, it is believed that the experienced psychologist's inability to assess attitudes comes from the fact that his long training and years of study have somehow lifted him away from the methods by which the average person thinks and arrives at attitudes and opinions, he reported.

URW Has Solution For Bombs, Parking

Bomb shelters will pay for themselves if the Government takes the suggestion of the CIO Rubber Workers.

In the January issue of its official newspaper, the union recommends the building of huge underground parking areas which can be used to dodge bombs and permit "comfortable seating accommodations should emergencies develop."

"Unquestionably precautions must be taken for the protection of our people from aerial attack, and the cost will be staggering. So why not be practical?" the newspaper asks.

It says there are now 50 million autos on the streets and more are coming. Parking space becomes more and more a problem—so does ducking the A-bomb.

"So, here is a challenge," the article concludes. "Solve two major problems simultaneously."

DELEGATION representing CIO, AFL and unaffiliated maritime unions confer with Assistant Secy. of Defense Anna M. Rosenberg on occupational deferments from the draft for workers in the industry and getting the Navy out of competition with private shipping. Left to right, Frank Pellegrini, co-director, Maritime Labor-Management Committee; Herbert L. Daggett, president of CIO Marine Engineers; Capt. Charles F. Sea Unions Tell U. S. How To Aid Merchant Marine Development

THE FUTURE of the American merchant marine has been put squarely up to top federal officials by representatives of CIO, AFL and unaffiliated unions in the maritime industry.

Two recent meetings may go a long way toward determining if the country with the greatest fleet in the world is going to continue to have a merchant marine operated as a private enterprise—or whether it is going to be, in one way or another, an adjunct of the government.

ONE WAS held jointly with Vice Admiral E. L. Cochrane, chairman of the Federal Maritime Board, and Secy. of Commerce Sawyer. At the other, the union spokesmen conferred with Assistant Secy. of Defense Anna M. Rosenberg, whose special field is manpower.

They told both meetings that draft boards are gobbling up active merchant seamen and ex-sailors—for the Army, not the Navy. And if the expansion of merchant shipping envisioned in defense plans develops, they warned, there may be a serious manpower shortage because of short-sighted draft policies.

They also said labor should sit in at the policy-making level in agencies dealing with maritime problems.

COCHRANE announced publicly that he and Sawyer agreed that seamen should be given occupational deferments. Mrs. Rosenberg also said she agreed—and added that she thought she could do something about it.

The unionists presented Cochrane and Sawyer with written copies of their views on the problems besetting the industry in expanding from a limited peacetime operation to full war strength. The two officials said they agreed wholeheartedly with the unions' stand.

Cochrane said he would implement those recommendations which were within his jurisdiction, and would use his influence on other government agencies to make the rest of the proposals effective.

One of the subjects discussed was the Military Sea Transport Service. This is operated by the armed services, but uses merchant ships that compete with private shipping companies and hires non-union crews which work under non-union conditions.

The unions think that the merchant marine, as usual, should be operated by private enterprise with the crews represented by their unions if they choose to be so represented—and without interference from any source.

COCHRANE and Sawyer indicated they agreed with this stand. Mrs. Rosenberg came right out and said she agreed. She was doubtful, however, that she could do anything about it, but the union spokesmen pointed out that the situation certainly involves manpower and that her voice probably could be raised most effectively. She agreed to raise it.

The union representatives expressed concern about what may happen if the country's mothball fleet of about 2000 ships, most of them government-owned, is put in action. In the past, the crews have always been held to private employes. But there is always a movement afoot among the military, the unions know from long experience, to put the crews into government service if not actually into the Navy—even though the profit goes to privately-owned companies.

THE UNION also warned against establishing seamen's training schools until expansion absorbs the unemployed and former seamen. The unions fear, also on the basis of experience, that such schools will be turned into instruments of anti-union propaganda.

Acting jointly at the meetings were the National Maritime Union, Marine Engineers and American Radio Association, all CIO; Seafarers, Sailors Union of the Pacific, Masters, Mates & Pilots and Radio Officers, all AFL, and the unaffiliated Marine Firemen.

March Of Dimes Deserves CIO's Support—Murray

THE 1951 March of Dimes campaign "deserves our wholehearted support," CIO Pres. Philip Murray asserted last week in asking all CIO members to contribute.

"We are well aware of the fine services rendered by your Labor Service Division and your local chapters to our members and their families who have been stricken with this terrifying disease," Murray wrote Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, which is financed largely through the March of Dimes.

In the last three years, he recalled, three severe polio epidemics have stricken more than 100,000 persons with the disease. Four out of five of them, he added, needed and received help from the foundation, which in the last 13 years has spent more than $102 million in patient care alone.

O'Connor described the 1950 polio epidemic as the second worst in the country's history. He said the National Foundation must raise at least $50 million this year to carry the costs of the unprecedented caseload.

James J. Herkenham, Jr., director of the foundation's Labor Service Division, has asked unions and their members to contribute directly to the nearest local chapter of the foundation.

4 Canadian Labor Groups Fight Inflation

OFFICERS OF Canada's four major labor organizations have been drawn together by the searing effects of rapidly increasing prices and the threat of rent decontrol. They met together recently for the first time in history to work out joint plans for a legislative campaign.

The Canadian Parliament meets late this month, and the labor groups are sponsoring well-attended meetings all over the Dominion to stir up interest in a tighter price control program and for retention of rent controls. The group of officers also announced plans for the filing of a joint economic brief with the cabinet.

A total of eleven top officers attended the unprecedented meeting which has its U. S. counterpart in the gatherings of the United Labor Policy Committee. The four groups represented were:

Canadian Congress of Labour, to which CIO unions belong; the AFL Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour, and the Dominion Legislative Committee of the Railway Transportation Brotherhoods.

Examiner Says Reinstate 34

The Ohio Oil Co., Bakersfield, Cal., must rehire 34 workers and make up any pay they have lost since Nov. 1, 1948, a trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

The complaint was brought by the CIO Oil Workers April 8, 1949, and the NLRB ruling was made Jan. 12, 1951. The complaint charged the company had refused to bargain since July 2, 1948.

The union struck Sept. 4, 1948, and charged the company tried to break the strike by offering strikers inducements to return, and that since Nov. 1, 1948, it has refused to reinstate employes who offered to return to work.

The NLRB examiner ordered the company to stop refusing to bargain or discouraging union membership or interfering with the union in any other manner. The company was also ordered to bargain with the union upon request.

D&B Index Jumps 18.1% Since June

The forerunner of higher prices at the corner grocery, the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index, increased another 9c in the week ending Jan. 9 to $7.02.

The last time it cracked $7 was Aug. 17, 1948—nearly 29 months ago—when it stood at $7.07. It was the 13th consecutive week in which the index either advanced or remained unchanged. During that period it went up a total of 54c, and since the Communist invasion of South Korea in June it has jumped a total of $1.08, or 18.1%. A year ago it stood at $5.76.

The lastest advance was scored with the help of higher prices in 15 commodities. The index is compiled by adding the wholesale prices per pound of 31 commonly used food products.

Mag Article Booms 'Lasses As Cureall

THERE'S a run on blackstrap molasses in Ottawa, capital of Canada, and health officials are having difficulty stopping it. Meanwhile, the price has been going up—and up.

What started the boom was an article in the October Reader's Digest by Gaylord Hauser, who listed blackstrap as one of five wonder foods that would smooth out your wrinkles, and add years to your life.

The article was called "Look Younger, Live Longer." Giving the boom further impetus has been a booklet entitled "Crude Molasses" by one Cyril Scott, suggesting that blackstrap was good for what ailed you.

As luck would have it, blackstrap was the only one of Hauser's wonder foods readily available to Canadians. The others, brewer's yeast, wheat germ, yogurt, and skimmed milk, were hard to obtain. Came the blackstrap boom.

TROUBLE is that most of the blackstrap shipped into Canada is animal feed unfit for human consumption, according to Lorne Ingle, of the Cooperative Press Association. Nevertheless, to the consternation of health authorities, people began gulping the stuff as a cure for everything from the common cold to cancer or just to feel a little chirpier.

Last month, a suit was launched by the government against a Toronto firm that sold molasses and Scott's booklet together, but the magistrate dismissed the case on the ground that Scott didn't recommend molasses as a cure for any specific ailment but said only that it was worth trying.

However, according to Ingle, the government has appealed the ruling and dealers have become wary of selling the Scott pamphlet and molasses as a package.

Meanwhile, government laboratories have been testing samples of blackstrap to build up a case against companies that may be selling impure foods in violation of Canadian law.

An officer of the government health department has issued a statement warning the public and pointing out that there's nothing magic about blackstrap anyway. Nothing wrong with it either he says. Nutritionally it's classed with liver, kidneys, dried beans, rolled oats, pork, eggs and peanut butter. Good—but not necessarily for what ails you. LPA

Union Shop Election Planned At Chrysler

The CIO Auto Workers began circulating union shop authorization cards among employes of the Chrysler Corp. last week as the first step toward a National Labor Relations Board election.

The union and the company agreed to a union shop in the contract they negotiated last month, provided the union complies with the Taft-Hartley Act. Norman Matthews, UAW Chrysler Dept. manager, expects the required 35,000 signatures—30% of those covered—will be obtained by Jan. 17 and that the NLRB election will be held before April 1.

Fisk Univ. President:

'Our Undemocratic Behavior Making World Vulnerable To Soviet Doctrine'

PATTERNS OF race relations are being changed profoundly by significant new forces, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk Univ., Nashville, Tenn., said Jan. 10 in a lecture at the Univ. of Chicago under the auspices of the Sidney Hillman Foundation.

His address was one of a series in memory of the late president of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Dr. Johnson said that among the new forces affecting race relations is the modification the old concept of the common law is undergoing in decisions by the U. S. Supreme Court on matters affecting minority rights. The modification he described as the creation of economic opportunity, or "freedom from want."

Another factor, he continued, "is the new and substantial importance given to color in the now inescapable inter-relationship of the entire world."

"This is the counterpart of the rejection by the peoples of Asia of the dominance of the West and western imperialism," he explained. "Over the past few years the surge of nationalism has led to the independence of most of these peoples and the establishment of new national states . . .

"Reactions to racial mistreatment have spread beyond the domestic scene and have become grave issues of foreign policy. No profession of democratic humanism is tenable in the presence of undemocratic institutions. It is my conviction that this fact in itself has given the strongest impetus to the civil rights program."

THE ISSUE of race relations has been shifted, he said, "from segmented minority struggles to the realm of universal concern—it is, in fact, an inescapable concern."

"The new and sudden leadership role of the United States," he said, "now being challenged with such sweeping force by elements of eastern society, and the somewhat apathetic acceptance of its leadership in some European countries, are making it urgent and imperative that concrete examples of our own democratic convictions be set now."

THERE IS ONLY one effective answer to the spread of Soviet ideology, Dr. Johnson declared. That is "giving a living embodiment to our democratic ideology, and in ways that can be believed by the rest of the world."

"For we are learning," he added, "the awful truth that our exhibitions of undemocratic behavior have made a large part of the world vulnerable to the Soviet doctrine."

Among "conspicuous gaps" in racial readjustments within the democratic framework of the U. S., he listed failure to end enforced racial segregation in all housing, a virtual standstill in enforcing state FEPC laws in many northern and western states, and violations of civil rgihts outside a few northern and western cities.

Many Governors Ask Stronger Labor Laws

REPORTS of inaugural addresses from across the nation indicate that governors in many states have asked their legislative bodies to pass laws beneficial to labor.

Michigan's Democratic Gov. G. Mennen Williams outlined one of the most ambitious programs. He asked the Republican-controlled Legislature for a corporation profits tax (probably 2%), an FEPC program, a seal of quality for farm products, higher unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits, and civil defense.

Williams also wants to separate the "policeman" and "conciliator" functions of the State Labor Mediation Board. Wage credits for unemployment compensation were asked for workers in military service and higher old age assistance and improved social security for state employes urged.

Gov. Forrest Smith, in his message to the 1951 Missouri Legislature, saw "an excellent opportunity to reduce unemployment compensation taxes" and increase maximum benefits to $25 a week for 24 weeks.

Massachusetts' Gov. Paul A. Dever again demanded a 75c minimum wage law to cover the thousands in the state who do not come under Federal law. He also called for passage of a state cash sickness insurance fund for workers.

IN VERMONT, Gov. Lee E. Emerson asked a law to cover occupational hazards and a change in the unemployment compensation so that an employer's rate is not changed unless a dismissed employe has worked for him a certain period of time.

The South, too, awakened to the need for a minimum wage. Gov. W. Kerr Scott told the Legislature that many workers in North Carolina get less than 50c an hour and that "healthy citizenship cannot be sustained on that kind of income."

GOV. Luther W. Youngdahl, of Minnesota, asked for a recodification of the state workmen's compensation act which hasn't been touched since 1913. He wants liberalization of portions pertaining to back injuries, occupational diseases and total disabilities. He is also supporting a drive to revise the minimum wage law to protect minors and limit hours of work for women and children.

Rhode Island's new Governor, Dennis J. Roberts, called on the smallest state's Legislature to "improve the conditions of labor in Rhode Island and strengthen the base of our economy."

His recommendations included a state 75c minimum wage law, the prohibition of restraining orders in strikes, and broadening of the state unemployment compensation program. LPA

Women Of 35 Not 'Too Old,' Says U.S. Aide

WOMEN seeking work often find they are regarded as "too old at 35," says U. S. Women's Bureau Director Frieda Miller.

Speaking at recent hearings of the New York State Joint Legislative Committee on problems of the aging, Miss Miller urged the need of studying the problems of older women workers. A summarization of her testimony follows:

The situation of the older woman looking for work is complicated by the fact that there are more older women than older men in the population, and that the number of women who need to work is increasing.

Women are less eligible than men for jobs when they are older, because they have a different work-life pattern as a rule.

A married woman may never have been employed, or may have quit her job to devote full time to her household. If in later years she tries to enter or re-enter the labor market because her husband has died, and she must support herself for this or other reasons, she faces special problems.

Industry is usually reluctant to give older women job training since their work-life expectancy is shorter, and when they are hired it is commonly at low-paying jobs. Since they have little seniority, they are the first to be released during lay-offs. When eligible for old age retirement at 65, they may have worked too few years to have accumulated benefits and be forced to continue working.

Cannady Is Named Aide To Townsend

James O. Cannady of Boston, New England regional director for the CIO Transport Service Employes, has been appointed assistant to UTSE Pres. Williard S. Townsend.

In his new post, Cannady will be responsible for negotiations and contract enforcement. He was one of the organizers of the UTSE in 1937, for 10 years was an international vice president, and first elected regional director in 1940. After service in the army from 1942 to 1946, he resumed the regional directorship and was elected president of his local.

Get Your Social Security Card!

Are you covered by Social Security for the first time, now that the law passed by Congress last year went into effect on Jan. 1?

If you are, you need a social security card. You can get it at your nearest Social Security Administration office. If there is none in your community, go to your post office and get an application blank, fill it out and mail it to the nearest SSA office. If you don't know the address, you can get it at the post office.

If you have ever worked at some time in the past in an industry covered by social security, use the same card. If you've lost it, ask for a duplicate card, with the same number. You can get it from the nearest SSA office, just as a worker covered for the first time would get his original card.

Administration Preparing Stronger Rent Control Bill

THE administration is preparing a new and stronger rent control bill, at least partially in response to the widespread feeling that consumers, particularly wage earners, cannot be expected to submit to wage controls and higher taxes without having their cost of living truly controlled as well.

Whether Congress will approve the measure is another matter. The bill as roughly drafted would do completely away with "local option" decontrol of rent, allow the Housing Expediter to recontrol wherever he deemed necessary, and allow him to fix whatever rental ceiling he thought fair—in other words, he would be allowed to roll rents way, way back.

The present unsatisfactory law allows local decontrol and makes it impossible for the federal government ever again to step into situations where this option has been exercised. It goes off the books entirely in June. And on March 31, rent control dies in all communities whose governing bodies have not voted before then to extend it to June. As of this week, approximately 950 had done so. There still were 29 cities with populations of more than 100,000, including Detroit, which had not.

THE Office of the Housing Expediter, which is allowed to reinstitute controls where it has removed them itself, last week issued the most dramatic recontrol order yet. It snapped controls back in Phelps Co., Mo., and ordered all rents rolled back to the levels existing on Sept. 1, 1949—almost 18 months ago. This was the result of rent gouges which began when Fort Leonard Wood was reactivated and servicemen's families started pouring into the area.

In Atlanta, Ga., Mayor Hartsfield, elected with labor support in a fight in which rent control was a major issue, vetoed his City Council's decontrol order. The veto was sustained.

In Los Angeles, where a long court battle finally resulted last month in decontrol, rent increases were so numerous and extravagant that City Councilman Don Allen, who had been the heart and soul of the decontrol movement issued an angry statement warning the "stupid landlords" that unless they stopped asking such "outrageous" increases, he personally would lead a movement to have the city vote its own rent control law.

A group of embarrassed landlords formed a "fair rent" committee and issued a statement much along the lines of Allen's blast. OHE has had over 500 anguished letters from tenants.

On the housing front, meanwhile, a bill was in preparation which would provide extensive government guarantees for construction of defense housing by private contractors. CIO and other organizations were opposed to the bill as drafted, but its final form was not settled. There was some indication that a housing section would be set up in the new Office of Defense Mobilization under Charles E. Wilson.

New World Group Of Newsmen To Meet

SPEARHEADED by the CIO Newspaper Guild, representatives of journalists, unions of Britain, France, Austria, Belgium, Germany and Italy will meet in Brussels, Belgium, Jan. 26-27 to discuss possible formation of a new, anti-communist international of the newsmen's unions.

Representatives of the Scandinavian unions also are expected to attend, and other nations will be present if arrangements can be made.

There has been no functioning international of newspaper unions since all the anti-communist groups withdrew, over a year ago, from the Intl. Organization of Journalists, which had been set up in 1945 but had fallen under the domination of the Soviet and satellite unions.

The Newspaper Guild, largest of the anti-communist news unions, will be represented by its president, Harry Martin. He recently represented the CIO at a six-man meeting called to draw up the agenda for the large conference of white collar groups which will be held in Brussels April 18-21.

Both meetings will be held under the auspices of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Ariz.-Imperial Valley Poll January 31

THE SECOND round in the fight between the CIO and the Communists for collective bargaining rights for far western packingshed workers will be fought Jan. 31 in some three-score locations in the Imperial Valley of California and the Yuma region of Arizona.

On that date the National Labor Relations Board will conduct an election to permit about 3300 fruit and vegetable "tramps" to decide if they want to be represented by Local 78, of the CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, or Local 78, of the Communist-dominated Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers.

The FTA was expelled from the CIO nearly a year ago because of its Communist leadership. Since then, rank-and-file workers in the industry have been building a new union so they could stay within the CIO. They won a resounding victory in the first contest with the FTA, chalking up an undisputed win in an NLRB election last October among some 3000 fruit and vegetable packingshed workers in the Salinas-Watsonville, Cal., area.

The Imperial Valley-Yuma region election date was set by Norman Greer, NLRB field examiner, after hearings in Los Angeles.

About 1000 additional workers employed in 23 other sheds may be excluded from the election because of the failure of the FTA to agree that they be covered. The question arose when it was discovered that the names of the sheds were not included on a list appended to the 1950 contract between the FTA and the Growers-Shippers Association.

The CIO claimed they were traditionally a portion of the bargaining unit, and the fact that the names did not appear on the list was accidental. Spokesmen for the association were willing to include them, but FTA representatives refused to agree, saying they wanted to take the matter "under advisement."

Utility Union Takes Cal. Strike Vote

THE CIO Utility Workers are taking a strike vote against two California firms under overlapping managements which between them control the water supplies of 17 communities.

The vote followed a stalemate in negotiations for wage increases with the San Jose Water Works and the California Water Service Co. According to Harold Doyle, UWUA board member on the scene, the companies have pending petitions for big rate increases, but "their wage offer to their workers wouldn't even pay one month's water bill."

Present wages, which average $1.50 an hour, have not been increased since an arbitration award in Jan., 1949, he said. The companies' offer, in three installments, would average less than $4 a month, he added.

THE SAN JOSE Water Works serves San Jose, Saratoga and Los Gatos. The other company serves Concord, Chico, Marysville, Oroville, Petaluma, San Mateo, South San Francisco, Stockton, Bakersfield, Visalia, Hanford, East Los Angeles, Redondo Beach and Hermosa Beach.

After the union negotiating committee rejected the management's proposal as "completely unsatisfactory and totally unrealistic." Joseph Fisher, national president of the union, condemned the companies for their "callous indifference to the plight of their employes in the present period of runaway prices." The union is seeking 8c an hour for improved living standards and 17c to meet higher living costs.

Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO regional director, announced that the Utility Workers have the full support of the CIO in their bargaining deadlock.

N. Y. State CIO Lauds Dewey's Foreign Policy

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, whose re-election the CIO opposed, was praised by the N. Y. State CIO Council for his stand on foreign policy.

The 30-man executive board, in a resolution on international affairs, praised Dewey, John Foster Dulles and Sen. Morse (R., Ore.) as "exemplifying forces in the Republican party which place the interests of the nation above partisan interests."

Louis Hollander, state CIO president, said Dewey's Dec. 14 speech before the N. Y. County Bar Association, was "a forthright speech on the international situation which deserves credit. Now that so many are trying to bring us back to isolationism—Kennedy of the Democrats and Hoover in the Republican Party—it is encouraging that the Governor has come out with a forthright and statesmanlike speech."

Lorain, O., Journal Appeals Monopoly Writ To High Court

The Lorain, O., Journal has appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court against an injunction directing it not to discriminate against advertisers who patronize a competing radio station.

The injunction was handed down by Federal Judge Emerich B. Freed. It ordered the newspaper to print his findings once a week for 25 weeks and to notify its employes in writing that advertisers using Radio Station WEOL were to be sold space in the Journal. He ruled the Journal guilty of violating the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by refusing to open its columns to advertisers using the competing radio station.

Two Hospitals Can't Open: No Doctors

Two new hospitals for veterans, one at Clarksburg and another at Beckley, both in West Virginia, are ready for patients, but can't open—because there are no doctors.

"It looks like as though we will have to remain closed to patients for some time," said C. F. Heard, assistant manager of the Clarksburg hospital. He said each hospital needs at least 12 surgeons and doctors to begin operations So far, one doctor has been obtained for Clarksburg.

The American Medical Association has blocked federal efforts to increase the number of doctors.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer, along with Pres. Murray and other CIO officials, attended a meeting of the Wage Stabilization Board in Washington, D. C., where the case for the CIO was presented. The CIO has maintained the position that Labor should be fully represented on all top-level committees that initiate top-level policy concerning those things that effect and concern Labor. Our CIO councils, regional directors, representatives and international unions will be called upon to participate and cooperate in such a program.

Spirit Of Unity Prevails As Mexican Parley Opens

BANDS blared and drums rolled. Posters shouted the news in big black and red letters. Some 5000 persons crowded into the big hall in Mexico City—where the most important inter-American labor congress in history was opening.

The welcome—to delegates from almost every non-Communist labor movement in Latin America, the U. S. and Canada—was voiced by President Aleman of Mexico.

"We are making history here," the chairman told the crowd.

So, with a tremendous burst of enthusiasm, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions got down to the business of building a permanent, democratic-minded union organization for the western hemisphere.

Present in the beautiful Palace of Fine Art in Mexico City were nine delegates from the CIO, headed by Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee. The AFL delegation was led by Secy.-Treas. George Meany. The United Mine Workers, unaffiliated, sent four delegates.

THE SPIRIT of unity was strongly emphasized in the opening remarks of speakers from every section of the two continents.

Said Potofsky, on behalf of the CIO: "We take our places in these ranks determined to do all we can to make this organization a shining example of international labor cooperation."

Similar views came from Meany, from Henry Middleton of the British Honduran Workers Union, and from other speakers.

The conference and its leading figures came in—as expected—for a heavy dose of hostile propaganda from the Latin American Communist press. Potofsky received the standard Communist brand of "imperialist" while the ICFTU itself was described by the Kremlin voices as a "foreign tool."

J. H. Oldenbroek, general secretary of the ICFTU, who had flown to Mexico for the meeting, was asked by reporters about the Communist charges.

"Imperialism?" he said. "Those fellows have a way of reading their own conduct and ideas into the minds and actions of others."

He added that the ICFTU, unlike Communist-controlled union groups, "gets its money from the trade union movement, not from any political group."

PURPOSE of the new regional confederation will be to give all the unions of North, Central and South America a self-help organization, to aid in the progress of sound trade union development throughout the entire American area.

The new ICFTU regional group has more widespread representation from labor unions in the various American nations than any previous federation in the hemisphere.

MEMBERS of the CIO delegation included Potofsky; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers; Vice-Pres. Martin Kyne of the Retail Workers; Secy.-Treas. William Pollock of the Textile Workers; Secy.-Treas. Lewis Clark of the Packinghouse Workers; and Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin-American Committee.

A major problem before the conference was the effort of the Peron-controlled Argentine unions to gain admission to the session as official delegates.

The question produced a sharp five-hour debate that ended in defeat of the move. During the debate both Potofsky and Meany stressed the need of the conference to steer clear of totalitarianism of any kind.

The move to bring the Argentine delegation into the framework of the ICFTU was spearheaded by Luis Morones, head of the Mexican textile workers, and it was supported by Fidel Velasquez, head of the Mexican Confederation of Workers (Spanish initials: CTM).

In the final vote, only the Mexican group supported the Argentine delegation. Afterwards, Velasquez, who had been serving as chairman of the conference, resigned his post in protest—but at the same time promised enduring "friendship and hospitality."

Pointing out that the CIO is opposed to dictatorships of both the left and right, Potofsky declared:

"We firmly believe in unity, but we are not ready to compromise on basic principles. The acceptance of a labor movement from a corporate state is a compromise of our principles.

"We are for unity, but not for unity with totalitarianism."

AT THE opening session of the confab, the CIO spokesman predicted that the new inter-American labor organization is "of historic significance" because it will "develop our common efforts to work together for the primary benefit of the peoples of our hemisphere."

"For many years," Potofsky said, "we in the CIO have been concerned by the repression and the injustice in many of our sister nations. At every opportunity, we have used our good offices and our influence to bring about policies and programs for the aid and assistance of our brothers in Latin America . . .

"The times call for the free trade unions of the world to stand together as never before in the history of the world. We must stand united to fight for peace, for bread, for security for all the peoples of the Americas.

"Together, let us march in unity toward these objectives."

Woman Delegate Doubles In Brass

Only woman delegate at the Inter-American Labor Conference was Mrs. Irene Iglesies of Mexico City, a make-up artist and member of the Mexican motion picture union.

As a member of the reception committee, Mrs. Iglesies met many incoming labor officials at the train depot and airport. She speaks both English and Spanish fluently. She also acted as a translator in committee sessions.

In this she was helped by her son, John, a U. S. citizen who served in the Marine Corps in World War II.

Discharged UPWA Member Gets $1200

The Pangburn Co. of Ft. Worth, Tex., must pay Aleta Ryno $1200 as part of a settlement with the CIO Packinghouse Workers, approved by the National Labor Relations Board, representing what she would have normally earned from the date of her discharge to the date of an offer of reinstatement.

She refused the offer. The NLRB also ordered the firm to stop refusing to bargain, stop discouraging membership in the union or interfering with its employes in any other manner, and ordered the firm to bargain with the union upon request.

Bill Would Cut Fetter On Jobless Payments

REP. DINGELL (D. Mich.), liberal member of the House Ways and Means Committee, introduced a bill Jan. 8 to repeal the notorious Knowland amendment to the Social Security Act.

The amendment was moved on the floor of the Senate by Sen. Knowland (R. Cal.), during debate on social security revisions last year. It was passed without public hearings and with only 10 minutes of discussion.

Its effect is to prevent the federal government from requiring that the states meet minimum standards for unemployment compensation eligibility as a condition of receiving U. S. funds. This means that where a worker is denied jobless insurance, payments may be withheld if the state administration desires until the issue is decided by the highest court in the state.

"The effect of this amendment," Dingell pointed out, "is directly contrary to the intent of Congress when the unemployment compensation insurance program was established.

"Congress deliberately established administrative machinery which would be available to the worker so that he might secure quick, efficient, informal and inexpensive determinations in cases where benefit payments were denied.

"The sponsors of this legislation intended to deny the workers this administrative remedy and force them to go through the long, involved and expensive process of appealing to the highest court in their state for the determination of their claims. This the Knowland amendment very effectively does, since it delays the application of the basic federal labor standards which are set forth in the law until the highest court in a state has passed on the denial of benefits to the worker.

"Workers either cannot or will not press their claims through the legalistic maze of court proceedings. This means that the federal standards which guarantee that the worker get his benefits when he refuses to take struck work or a job at sub-standard labor conditions, or where he refuses to sign a yellow dog contract to get a job, are absolutely nullified.

"ON JAN. 2, 1951, the Subcommittee on Unemployment Insurance of the Committe on Ways and Means submitted a unanimous report in which it recommended, among other things, that the problems raised by the Knowland amendment be studied by a subcommittee, The report states:

"'A proper treatment of these problems requires a full consideration of the administrative relationships between federal and state governments occasioned by the existence of federally required standards in state laws. We believe that a few members could be more effective in trying to reconcile differing viewpoints and work out a mutually acceptable provision.'

"Pending this study, this hysterical piece of legislation should be promptly repealed. I intend to bend every effort to see that this is done."

Unions Protest To UN

FOUR AMERICAN labor leaders last week accused the United Nations' Dept. of Public Information of issuing releases favoring the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions at the expense of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The protests were filed in identical letters to UN Assistant Secy.-Gen. Benjamin A. Cohen by Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO International and Latin American Committees; Michael Ross, secretary of the CIO International Committee; Matthew Woll, AFL vice president, and David Dubinsky, president of the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers. Miss Toni Sender, ICFTU representative at Lake Success, also protested.

The five complained of a Dec. 13 UN press release which dealt with a WFTU statement denouncing rearmament by democratic nations and ignored a suggestion for international price control made at the same time by the ICFTU.

They also complained that an earlier release made no mention of an ICFTU plan for relief and rehabilitation in Korea, but reported a denunciation of UN policy in Korea by the WFTU.

The ICFTU, to which CIO and AFL belong, was established by the labor movements of the world's free nations when it became apparent that the WFTU was irretrievably controlled by Communist. Both have consultative status with the UN.

The letters demanded an investigation. Cohen later said he made the investigation and maintained that the charges were unfounded.

Recreation Unit Lauds Akron CIO Leader

Leo Dugan, executive secretary of the Akron (O.) CIO Council, was presented with a plaque last week by the Akron Recreation Commission for "services rendered to the City of Akron in aiding and furthering the recreation program."

Dugan is the first union member to be honored by the recreation commission, which voted him the distinction because of his work as co-chairman of a campaign to increase the recreation tax levy at primary elections in May, 1950.

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY 22, 1951 82 No. 4

INTERNATIONAL CONFAB: Discussion was in order at Mexico City when unions from two dozen American countries formed new inter-American organization under auspices of Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. In huddle about plans are (left to right): Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers, who headed CIO delegation; Secy-Treas. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Vincent Tewson, secretary of British Trades Union Congress, and Secy.-Treas. George Meany, AFL. The new organization takes in about 17 million workers, is the first such group established in this hemisphere. See Page 8.

NMU Begins Drive To Recruit West Coast Cooks, Stewards

THE CIO Maritime Union has opened an official, full-scale organizing drive to recruit into the 45,000-member NMU the 7000-odd rank and filers in the Marine Cooks & Stewards, expelled from the CIO last August for following the Communist party line. MCS membership is concentrated on the West Coast.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran made the announcement after conferring on the West Coast with two of his own vice presidents, the four West Coast CIO regional directors, and leaders of the outspoken right-wing faction in the MCS.

The move was decided upon after Curran and the NMU had received appeals from "at least 1000" MCS members, asking admission to NMU and requesting that NMU send in organizers.

Hugh Bryson, MCS president, immediately challenged Curran to take over the MCS and said the right-wingers represented only "a small fraction" of MCS membership. Pickets appeared outside the San Francisco office where Curran and the other CIO officials were conferring, carrying signs asking "Joe Curran and his goon squads" to go home, and stating that "We will not tolerate jurisdictional warfare on the waterfronts of the Pacific Coast."

THE MCS officialdom, described by Curran as "a group of Communist Party ward heelers and schemers," was expected to start rumor campaigns at once and possibly take more direct action, but Curran said the NMU and its organizers—the latter group mostly recruited from MCS ranks—were ready for whatever might develop.

(Trouble for the NMU organizers came from another source as well. Harry Lundeberg, president of the AFL Sailors' Union of the Pacific, announced that his union would try to take over the stewards. This frankly came as a shock and surprise to Curran's supporters, who had announced confidently that they expected no interference from Lundeberg. Curran's representatives called Lundeberg's position "hard to understand," and said in some bitterness that the SUP interference would, in effect, give support to Communist elements.)

The first piece of organizing literature issued by NMU hit one of the most popular—and untrue—rumors right on the nose.

"THE COMMUNISTS will try to tell you that NMU wants to take over your jobs and give them to the East Coast men," the brochure said. "The fact is that a strong organization for members of the Stewards Dept. on both the East Coast and the West Coast will provide greater security for every one of us. It will break down the ability of the employers to play one seaman against another in collective bargaining contracts."

The NMU set forth a six-point program on which organizing and the battle for recognition and contracts would be based, calling it "the pledge and the promise of the NMU, written for all to see." The points were:

1. Every Steward Dept. member now sailing West Coast vessels should join the NMU.

2. Members should remain active aboard their vessels and help organize their shipmates, until recognition has been gained and contracts have been negotiated.

3. When the agreements have been signed, every former member of the MCS will be entitled to equal shipping rights on all vessels on both coasts.

4. The members will be given full membership privileges.

5. Stewards will be admitted to membership if they have a record of active sailing for six months in the last two years.

"We want no fake seamen in our ranks," the brochure explained, "for we recognize the known policy of the Communist Party to pack trade unions with non-active members."

6. All Stewards Dept. members will be given recognition for the period of time they were full members of the MCS.

"There are no strings attached," Curran said, "there are no secret deals; there are no reservations . . . If you believe the horror stories the Communists will concoct, you will be hurting yourself—and you will be playing right into the hands of men who want to keep you under their political thumbs . . . It will be an historic campaign, to bring back democracy to the thousands of Steward Dept. members on the West Coast, who so long have seen their contract gains endangered by the political plots and conspiracies of the Communist Party."

PAC Workshop Calls For Greater Effort

MORE political action by CIO unions can help speed the United States to victory over totalitarianism and a period of lasting peace, more than 60 CIO Political Action Committee representatives agreed at a workshop conference in St. Louis last week,.

"We must export ideas and actions as well as the weapons of war," PAC Director Jack Kroll told the conference, "and it is up to us to produce the democratic ideas and elect the men who will carry them out."

Called to review the work of the past year and to examine the problems ahead, the conference was attended by PAC representatives of international unions, state PAC chairman, and local and state PAC workers.

Discussion covered methods of ward and precinct organization, collection of voluntary PAC contributions, presentation of issues, participation by CIO members in politics, state legislative problems, and relations between PAC and other organizations.

Opening the conference, Kroll noted that foreign relations have now become a matter for public concern of equal rank with domestic problems.

"Diplomacy is no longer a matter of negotiations between diplomats," he declared. "It has become a matter of propaganda and and popular movements and the people of the United States are now in charge of the conduct of our international affairs."

IF, HE SAID, Congress would pass an FEPC measure at the same time it appropriated several billions of dollars for armaments, or if it would repeal the Taft-Hartley Act while setting up a mobilization program, we would impress the working people of other nations beyond measure.

The picture of the United States which the Russians are trying to create in Europe and Asia would be effectively destroyed by such actions, Kroll said.

Most of the discussion at the two day affair centered on how-to-do-it, with PAC workers from all over the country relating their experiences and their conclusions.

Same Old Price Story

RETAIL FOOD prices continued their upward surge to a new record high between Dec., 15, 1950, and Jan. 2, 1951, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The rise of 1.2% in that period brought the new level 1% higher than the previous record breaker of July 15, 1948.

The BLS report, based on a survey of the prices of 50 foods in eight cities, said the retail food price index on Jan. 2 reached 218.9, which was 6.9% higher than the pre-Korean war level.

Fats and oils topped the increases, showing a 4.7% rise during the survey period, with shortening up 7%, lard 5½% margarine 6% and salad dressing 1%.

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index meanwhile rose 2c to $7.04, the highest level in more than 28 months.

The index for the week ending Jan. 16 compared with $7.02 the preceding week and $5.75 a year ago It now stands at its highest level since it reached $7.07 on Aug. 17, 1948.

While it now is 32 cents below the all-time high of $7.36, registered July 13, 1948, it is 92c above the 1949 high of $6.12, hit on Jan. 4.

In New York, the National Industrial Conference Board reported that consumer prices reached an all-time high in December. During that month, the board said, consumer prices rose to 1.2% above the previous record high set in July and Aug., 1948.

The board also noted that prices were up for the ninth time in the past 10 months, and had pushed its index for December to 168.1% of the Jan., 1939, base of 100.

Wage And Price Freezes Rumored Nearer

RUMORS OF price and wage freezes, of manpower programs, and of new faces in high places in the mobilization effort filled the Washington atmosphere last week.

Prospects for drastic action on prices and wage ceilings developed after a speech by Charles E. Wilson, former General Electric president who now is the government's Director of Defense Mobilization.

Admitting that "voluntary" price controls will not work, Wilson talked of the need for "speed and forthrightness" in handling the country's economic problems.

Whatever action Wilson may take—and he has received a wide delegation of power from President Truman for the mobilization job—he cannot close the loopholes in the anti-inflation provisions of the Defense Production Act.

That law in effect forbids any effective controls over food prices—a major item in the average household budget—and provides a freeze on wages for workers producing any product on which selective price controls are placed.

"Whatever the causes for delay up to now, we must proceed with courage, speed and forthrightness to adopt the controls which will insure stability and fairness in our civilian economy," Wilson said in his speech, which was delivered in Philadelphia.

THE EFFECT of any blanket order for wage stabilization cannot easily be guessed. In the Washington defense set-up, the Wage Stabilization Board—headed by Cyrus Ching—reports to the Economic Stabilization Administration, headed by Allen Valentine. Valentine, in turn, reports to Wilson.

The Wage Board, at least until the middle of last week, had received no information—official or otherwise—of an impending wage freeze or of plans for an immediate stabilization program.

During the past two weeks, it has been meeting with labor and management for an exchange of views on the wage problem—admittedly one of the most complicated of the mobilization program.

The United Labor Policy Committee—speaking for CIO, AFL, the railway brotherhoods and the Machinists—told the board it could not favor wage stabilization so long as controls are either nonexistent or weak on prices, excess profits, rents and other elements of the country's economy.

ONE STORY—published in the Nation magazine nearly a month ago, and never denied—reported that Valentine had drafted an order to nullify the cost-of-living and production efficiency increases of contracts such as those won by the CIO Auto Workers and covering most of the industry.

When Valentine told the Wage Board about his plans, just an hour before his order was to be made public, the reaction was so sharp that he put the draft in his pocket and forgot about it, according to the story.

Since the appointment of Wilson, Valentine's future had been in doubt. Wilson last week announced that Eric Johnston will soon join his staff. Johnston, a liberal businessman who once headed the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, has shown considerable understanding of workers' problems in his speeches and articles.

Soon after Johnston's appointment, Valentine resigned.

Manpower problems — the use of the nation's working force—were meanwhile receiving President Truman's attention. A memorandum to government agencies gives the broad outlines of a "national manpower mobilization policy."

That policy is designed, the President said, to get the service of each person in the type of job in which "he can contribute most to the mobilization program."

The document emphasized that programs for hiring, placing, training and using persons in the civilian labor force "will be based primarily upon voluntary measures."

"Government manpower controls will be used when and to the extent needed to assure successful execution of the mobilization program," the message said.

Such controls, he added, would be used (1) to restrict "indiscriminate labor turnover"—job-switching—through control of separations; (2) to place limits on number of employes in any one enterprise; (3) to control hiring by employers, and (4) to get full employment of women, handicapped workers, and members of minority groups.

THE PRESIDENT instructed government agencies that production programs should, so far as possible, be set up to take advantage of existing working forces.

The President also called for government agencies to seek "the full understanding and assistance" of labor organizations, management groups and other professional, civic and community organizations in working out their programs.

Largest Store Urges Controls

R. H. Macy & Co. — the world's largest store — is so alarmed by the current price-supply situation it bought a full-page ad in the New York papers Jan 18, headed "Why are you buying so much, New York?" and calling for immediate across-the-board controls on "prices, on farm products, on wages, on profits."

"For the purpose and effect of these controls," Macy's declared, "is not to deprive us of what we need, but to insure all of us, in any emergency, that we'll get the things we need at prices we can afford to pay."

The balance of the ad took New Yorkers to task for a 25% upturn in department store buying. Macy's labelled this "fear-buying" and said: "This is making business too good—for no good can come of it."

U. S. Seamen's Hours Good Enough For Reds

The Communist-led World Federation of Trade Unions tried to pick a fight the other day by telling European seamen to demand a 40-hour week while insisting on an end to the war in Korea.

Seamen were told to campaign for the same meals as ships' officers eat, and for steward service in the mess hall, plus the 40-hour week both at sea and in port with no reduction in pay. In effect, the Commies were asking for what seamen call "American conditions" which prevail only under the American flag.

Fair Deal Comes To Life In Truman's Budget Message

PRESIDENT Truman sent to Congress last week a budget which was, in his own words, "a budget for our national security in a period of grave danger."

It called for the breath-taking expenditure, during the fiscal year begining next July 1, of $71,594,000,000. The largest budget ever proposed in peacetime, it is also the largest in the country's history save for those during the three war years.

It may be larger, the President warned, when the cost of the arms and armaments the nation is buying to bolster itself against Soviet aggression—constantly going higher because of increasing prices—is all toted up.

The President estimated receipts during the fiscal year will be $55,138,000,000, or $16,456,000,000 less than he figures the country will spend.

"All this time," he said, "sound public and fiscal policy require that we balance the budget. I shall shortly transmit to the Congress recommendations for new revenue legislation."

That means higher taxes, of which a large proportion will come out of the pay envelopes of workers and other wage earners.

BIGGEST ITEM in the budget was for military services, for which the President asked $41,421,000,000, compared to $20,994,000,000 estimated for the present fiscal year. Second largest category was $7,461,000,000 for international security, compared to $4,726,000,000, this year.

For all major items of national security, the total was $52,510,000,000.

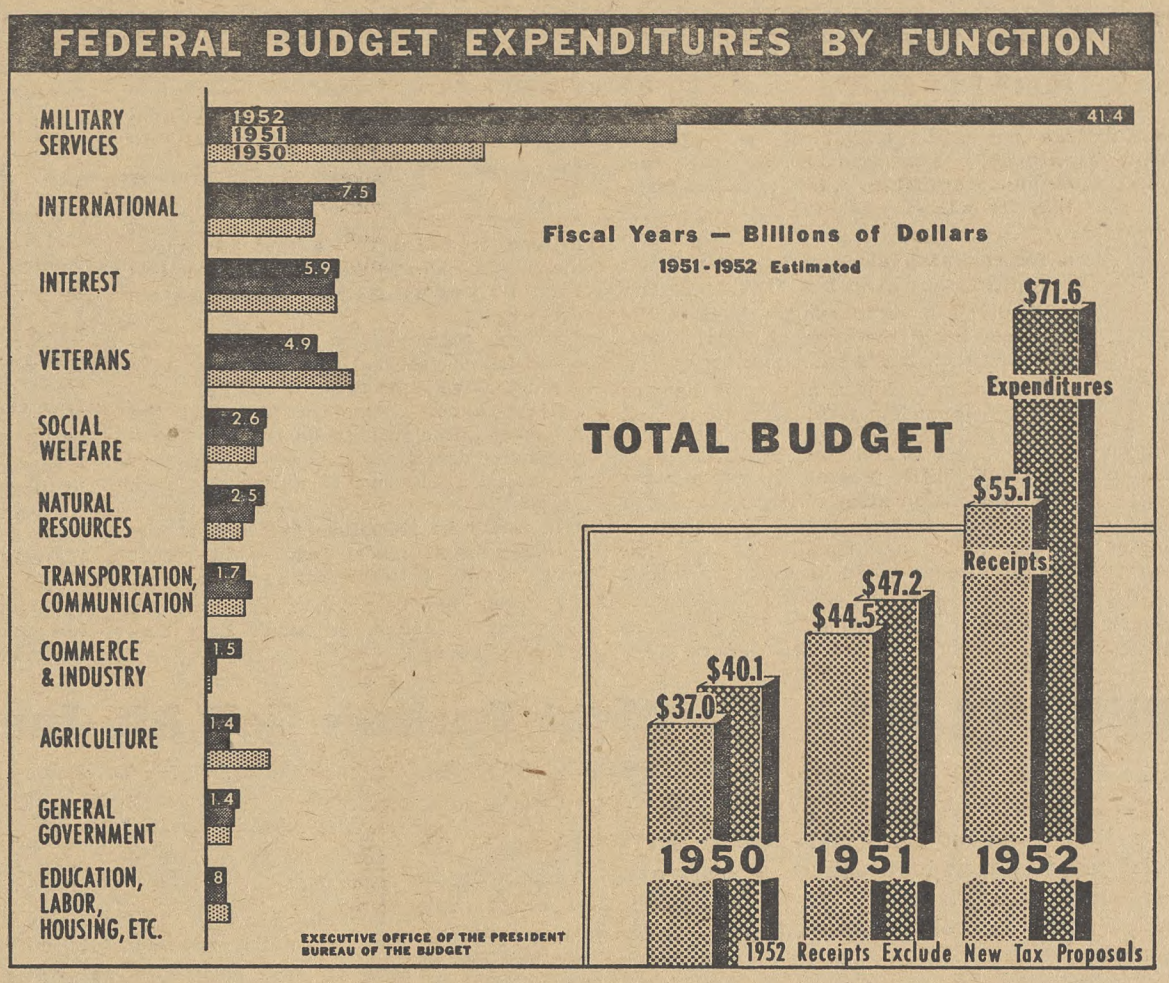
That left $19,084,000,000 for all the other manifold costs of government. The outraged howls of the Dixiegop economy block in Congress shook the flag that flies over the Capitol, even though the amount proposed compared favorably with $20,166,000,000 for this year.

There was considerable suspicion—and pretty obvious ground for it—that they were inspired not so much by economy as by the fact that the President spelled out his Fair Deal program all over again after playing it down in his State of the Union message.

The President went down the line with recommendations for the things liberals had feared, and the reactionary Republican-Dixiecrat combine in Congress had hoped, he had put aside until after the emergency.

Among other things, he said in his message:

"To produce wisely for defense, we must use wisely all our labor resources. Even less than in other times can we afford to discriminate in employment against the millions of workers in our labor force who are members of minority groups.



"Following the federal experience with a committee on Fair Employment Practice in World War II, eight states and a number of cities established successful regulatory commissions to deal with employment practices.

"I again recommend that the Congress enact legislation to establish a Federal Fair Employment Practice Commission to prevent discrimination in interstate industries."

THE PRESIDENT indicated his proposal was more than empty words at a pre-release press conference on the budget message. He was asked if he intended to "do anything about" that part dealing with an FEPC and he replied that of course, he was going to do something about it. He didn't make a practice of talking through his hat, he added.

On national health insurance, against which the American Medical Association has been waging a fervid campaign of opposition, the President said:

"We need to fill important gaps in our social insurance system by protection on a prepaid basis against the costs of medical care and the loss of family income in cases of disability. These measures will help to provide that material security which is essential to a vigorous democracy and a highly productive labor force . . .

"Receipts and expenditures under the proposed medical care insurance program would be handled through a trust account, paralleling the procedures for old-age and survivors insurance. A period of preparation will be required to set up the health insurance system. I am proposing that in the meantime a small payroll tax of one-fourth of 1% each on employes and employers be levied to provide for initial expense."

The President likewise called for higher unemployment compensation payments, saying:

"IN THIS HIGH employment period, we should take steps to to bring the self-supporting unemployment insurance system up-to-date. After the Congress enacts improved federal standards, time will be required for the states to bring their laws into conformity.

"Recommendations are now before the Congress to raise benefits, which now average less than a third of previously earned weekly wages, and to extend coverage, which has not kept up with that of other social insurance programs.

"The revision of unemployment insurance should also repeal last year's amendment which places a premium on court litigation as a means of determining claims for benefits."

On social security, he said:

"The Congress clearly decided that social insurance, rather than public assistance, is to be the primary vehicle for providing social security in this country. This accords fully with our American tradition of self reliance. In the future, the great majority of American families will obtain, through their own and their employers' contributions, a considerable degree of insurance protection against poverty arising from the old age or death of the wage earner.

"In spite of these far-reaching improvements, however, the nation's social insurance program still does not measure up to the full needs or aspirations of the American people; nor has it by any means achieved the scope of protection that our economy can afford and should give. . . .

"Our aim should be to establish for all employed people a minimum protection that each person takes with him wherever he works. Pension and insurance plans for special groups should supplement social security benefits, as industry pensions already do for several million workers."

He also urged Congress to approve the Brannan farm plan, without specifically identifying it, by asking approval for its "heart," direct payments to farmers in place of market price supports through government purchases.

In addition, he asked $300 million for grants to states for the operating expenses of elementary and secondary schools; $25 million for scholarships, etc., to get more doctors, dentists and nurses, and $5 million to strengthen local health services.

ON HOUSING, he proposed to continue aid in building housing and community facilities, but suggested 850,000 units annually instead of the 1.35 million units aided in the last year.

He came out flatly for rent control, saying:

"The developments in our defense program clearly require a further extension of rent control. Excessive rent increases will inevitably occur in many decontrolled communities where military installations are reopened or defense production expanded.

"The Congress has already recognized the changed situation by providing a temporary extension of controls beyond Dec. 31, 1950, for all cases where communities have not taken affirmative decontrol action. I am recommending a further extension of rent control authority with provision for recontrol where necessary to protect tenants in defense areas against exorbitant rent increases."

The President also called for price and wage control legislation.

Abramson Is Renamed CARE Vice President

Irving Abramson, national chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, has been elected for his sixth consecutive term as vice president of CARE.

Abramson has represented the CSC on CARE's board of directors since the founding in 1945 of the non-profit, government-approved cooperative relief agency. Alternate representative of the CIO on CARE's board is Leo Perlis, CSC executive director.

CIO Urges T-H Repeal To Aid Unity

THE CIO has asked Congress once again to repeal the Taft-Hartley Law, stating flatly that in times of national crisis, full production is essential, and that full production cannot flourish in the Taft-Hartley atmosphere.

General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg set forth the CIO views in identical letters to Chairman Murray (D. Mont.), of the Senate Labor Committee, and Chairman Barden (D. N. C.), of the House Labor Committee.

Here is what Goldberg said, in part:

"Organized labor in America is fully aware of the grave situation confronting our nation. We are deeply conscious of the threat to our free institutions arising from Communist aggression . . .

"Our greatest weapon in this crucial struggle against Soviet imperialism is our productive power. Our objective must be maximum production. This is necessary if we are to meet the needs of our rapidly expanding military forces and at the same time provide for essential civilian requirements . . .

"If maximum production is to be assured, sound labor law which promotes labor-management stability is absolutely necessary . . .

"IN A RELATIVELY 'normal period' the Taft-Hartley Act has demonstrated its unworkability. During an 'emergency' calling for all-out cooperation by labor, the nation simply cannot afford a statute based on anti-labor bias . . .

"The CIO believes that the Congress can make a major contribution to the national interest in the present crisis by wiping the slate clean and repealing the Taft-Hartley Act. In its place the Congress should enact a fair and equitable labor-management relations statute based upon the Wagner Act principle of encouraging collective bargaining and thereby promoting industrial peace . . .

"The President of the United States, in his recent message to the Congress on the State of the Union, has appealed for national unity among all segments of the population. Fundamental to national unity is, of course, unity between labor and management which, along with the farmers, make up our great productive team. Labor-management unity can best be achieved by prompt repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"The removal of this impediment to industrial stability will provide the climate for labor-management cooperation so necessary for maximum production, which the nation has the right to expect from labor and management in this emergency."

They Get Second-Class Treatment

Dark-Skinned Visitors From Abroad Resent United States' Racial Discrimination And Segregation Practices

By ALLAN L. SWIM

HE STOOD before a large crowd in one of the big governmental auditoriums in Washington and spoke in a soft Georgia accent.

His audience was made up largely of representatives of big corporations who had come to the capital for an off-the-record briefing on world affairs.

He talked in detail about our difficulties in the Orient and his audience listened attentively—because he holds a high post and is regarded as an authority on the Far East.

At the end of his prepared speech he paused briefly, made reference to his Southern accent and then declared:

"The treatment we accord minority groups in this country has created one of our really big problems in the Far East!"

The government official then told the story of what often happens to people with dark skins who pass through Washington on their way to the United Nations in New York.

"A plane lands at National Airport and the passengers alight," he said. "Those with light skins can go into the main dining room, if they want to, to get something to eat.

"Those with dark skins are herded into a hangar-like affair, where they can get sandwiches but little more."

He didn't have to explain further. His audience knew the type of international relations such treatment builds.

The audience knew, also, that he was pointing up an important domestic as well as foreign affairs problem.

WHEN THE present Congress went into session many observers predicted freely that emphasis would be placed on foreign affairs and mobilization and that domestic issues would have to take a back seat.

They listed civil rights legislation as being among the "back seat" issues.

Thus the observers—including top columnists and radio commentators—failed to recognize the international importance of our nation's treatment of minority groups.

VISITORS FROM abroad — particularly those from the Far East—seldom make the same error. That's because they have learned from experience that our racial discrimination and segregation practices have lost us many potential supporters overseas.

Few of these visitors are willing to accept the excuse that "those things take time; they can't be done overnight."

They cannot accept the idea that the nation which claims to be the No 1 proponent of democracy continues to tolerate second-class citizenship among its own people.

It would be ridiculous to say that our country hasn't made progress in recent years toward better racial understanding.

Progress has been made, but it hasn't been rapid enough. It hasn't been far-reaching enough.

And now there's an added reason—and a good one—for speeding up the trend.

Despite this, there is an inclination on the part of many members of Congress to set the matter aside until some later date—until the "pressing matters at hand are out of the way."

It is not being argued here that civil rights legislation should be put at the very top of Congress' agenda. Our argument is that such legislation should not be pigeonholed for "the duration."

The United States is facing a ruthless enemy. It is stepping up its preparedness. It is mobilizing men and making weapons.

ALL OF US are being called on to make sacrifices—to pay more taxes, to serve in the armed services, to do without things we want.

We are clearly preparing for the possibility of a major "fighting" war.

And yet we fail to take advantage of our opportunity to strike a telling blow in the ideological war by broadening and expanding civil rights.

Chances are you don't play the stock market or live off your dividends and bond coupons.

Nevertheless, you may profit a little from an occasional reading of the business and financial pages of your local daily paper. For what the business community tells the public on Page One is often drastically different from the business shoptalk in the obscure columns of page twenty-eight.

The business pages made interesting reading the day after President Truman announced the new U. S. budget of $71½ billions—and the proposed tax rise of $16½ billions.

If you'd relied on the Page One reporting—for the last few years—you might expect that business would be blue at the prospects of higher government spending and higher taxes. In fact, you might have expected that the New York Stock Exchange would have just about turned turtle.

Not a bit of it. On the day of the President's announcement, the stock market went up—and it's been going up ever since.

As a New York Times writer reported the story on page 28, "the market encountered pressure only at infrequent intervals, the inflationary psychology outbalancing any attempt to make even more money in the months ahead." That simply means the speculators think they'll make more money by holding on than by cashing in their chips now.

Speculators and upper-income investors have been doing very well. A $25,000 investment in U. S. Steel stock last year is worth $46,000 now. During the same time, the value of other stocks—General Electric or General Motors, for example—has jumped about 25%. It's easy for the rich to get richer.

But it is difficult to understand, on any moral or patriotic grounds, why the men of property are so opposed to effective price controls or excess profits taxes, or a general program of equality of sacrifice on the home front.

Too many of them—and their spokesmen in the 82nd Congress—seem to regard heavy profits and stock market speculation as some form of divine right. At the same time, they regard every wage increase of a few pennies an hour as a national calamity.

It's about time for an end to that double standard of economic morality—one set of rules for the wealthy few and another for the great number of wage earners.

Congress can do something about it quickly—by closing the loopholes in the present inflation law, by adopting a far better tax program, by insuring equality of sacrifice for the duration.

BELOW THE RIO GRANDE

There's encouraging union news down south of the border. We're referring to the new inter-American union organization created by Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Both CIO and AFL played an active part in helping to set up this new organization, which will be devoted to building union strength and helping the democratic forces in the various Latin American countries.

In too many sections of Latin America, those twin scourges of poverty and dictatorship have taken their toll of life and liberty. And too many U. S. citizens, reading black headlines about crises in Europe and Asia, forget that we have an important job in promoting a really effective Good Neighbor Policy below the Rio Grande.

The new ICFTU organization is a strong step in the right direction. We hail its creation and pledge it our full support.

Meat Packers Tell All--Inadvertently

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

THE PACKERS gave the show away in testifying in Washington the other day against price controls on meat. Prices are high not because of any shortage, not because of the unions' "exorbitant demands," as the packers love to argue during negotiations, but for one simple reason—the customers have the money to spend.

In other words, the packers charge what they think the traffic will bear. It's as simple as that.

They would like to "stabilize" meat prices and they have a program. That's simple too: "Disposable income levels must be kept down." That's a fancy way of urging the government to increase taxes enough so that you can't afford to buy as much meat as you did before. When enough people are taxed heavily enough so they are priced out of the meat market, meat prices will come down.

THE TESTIMONY came from the American Meat Institute, the National Independent Meat Packers Association and the Western States Meat Packers Association. Their full program to hold meat prices down without rationing or price controls was: Disposable income must be kept down; supplies of alternative goods and services must be kept up, or, supplies of meat available for purchase increased, or a combination of all three.

Note that "keeping disposable income levels down" (higher taxes on individuals) was the first point. But in the press release they put out after the hearing, point No. 1 suddenly became "increase the supplies of meat available for purchase." What smart publicity lad decided that sounded better?

The packers said frankly that the first of "three primary forces" that dictate the price of meat is "the amount of money people have available to spend." Second is the amount "they choose to spend for meat," and only third is the available meat supply. But they were hypocritical on the cry for controls.

"We are told," said their spokesman, "that there is immense pressure for price control. We do not know as to that, but we would be surprised if there were any spontaneous pressure for the simple reason that the meat price situation is not as critical as it has been made to appear."

THEY ADMITTED that beef production is at "almost unprecedented levels" and that future prospects are even better, so there's no scarcity or possibility of scarcity. Meat prices, they pointed out, have gone up "only 157%" since 1926. (All commodities have gone up 76%, and all foods as a whole, 82%.)

What's the best they can do? Well, if the government will not let workers' income rise more than 10% over the next two years, and not more than 20% over the next three to five years (that is, if the government holds down wages and hikes income taxes on individuals) the packers "will be able by increased output to hold meat prices near present levels." Notice, please, "near present levels." Why only "near"? Because, said the packers, "it is hard to see anything to suggest that meat prices are alarmingly high or sufficiently out of line, either with the prices of other goods and services or with the buying power of people."

Present at the hearings were representatives of many groups, including Swift, Wilson and Armour, and the American Farm Bureau Federation.

The other day Armour reported its profits (after taxes) for 1950. The increase over 1949 was—3000%.

Press Gag Try Hit By Editor

A Wisconsin editor has called on other editors to meet the challenge to the nation's papers made by Sen. Joseph McCarthy, (R. Wis.).

William T. Evjue, editor of the Madison Capital Times, writing to Clifford Ferris, Rhinelander, Wis., president of the Inland Press Association, charged McCarthy is trying to silence Drew Pearson, columnist and radio commentator. Wrote Evjue:

"From behind his Senatorial immunity, McCarthy has made irresponsible charges to discredit a newspaperman with whose views he disagrees and has bluntly demanded that this man be silenced.

"If the organized representatives of the newspaper profession do not challenge this assault, we face the situation in which any unscrupulous politician may, by abusing the authority and power given him, silence the free expression of newspapermen."

CIO Solons Propose Consumers' Counsel

A bill to authorize the governor of Rhode Island to appoint a consumers' counsel at $8000 a year has been introduced by State Reps. John Lewis and Raymond Petrarca, both CIO members of the Legislature.

The counsel would "represent consumers at any proceedings before federal, state or municipal agencies whenever the Governor shall deem the public interest may be affected."

The 'Strikebreakers' Did Not Break Strike

THERE ARE still some of them around—those lawyers who tell employers, "Don't settle with the union; I'll show you how to break a strike."

One of them appeared on the scene in the South a few years ago and learned that attempted strikebreaking can have unexpected—and unpleasant—results.

He recruited a "busting" crew. He told them what was to be done.

His plan flopped. The company settled with the union—and the lawyer lost a client.

Here's what happened:

FAILING to negotiate what it considered to be a good contract, a CIO union voted to go on strike.

Still the company didn't budge. The strike began and production at the plant came to a standstill.

At this point the company asked its attorney, who had an anti-union reputation, what it should do next.

He advised against settling the strike and said that he not only would break the strike but the union as well.

He was given the "go" sign—and within a short time was on the hunt for strikebreakers.

Meantime the union learned what was going on and got set to meet the situation.

First step was for the officers to inform the strikers, who made it plain they would resist a strikebreaking attempt.

THEN THE UNION got in touch with a local newspaper and explained what was in the wind.

"We thought you might like to send out a photographer to get some pictures of the company's strikebreaking attempt," a CIO man said.

He was told that a photographer would be on hand and that the pictures would be carried in the paper.

This information was relayed to the strikers, who seemed pleased by the idea.

Finally everything was set for resisting the strikebreaking attempt, and—as might have been expected—there was considerable tenseness in the air.

THE MORNING for the "big push" arrived—and it was a bitter, cold morning of the type which makes pickets wish they were inside.

It was still dark when the strikers began assembling outside the plant. Before long there were nearly 200 on hand.

They received final instruction and took their posts.

Across the field came the would-be strikebreakers, led by the anti-union attorney.

The pickets relaxed. Some of them smiled. Others laughed.

The "rough crew" they had expected to meet consisted of eight elderly women who had been known in the plant as "union haters."

These were told it would be inadvisable to go through the picket line.

The photographer was busy with his camera. He kept shooting pictures as the "strikebreakers" and their leader turned away and trudged back across a nearby field.

The pictures appeared in the newspapers.

The lawyer appeared before company officials—and before long he was minus a client.

And before much more time had passed, the company and union got together and agreed on a contract which ended the strike.

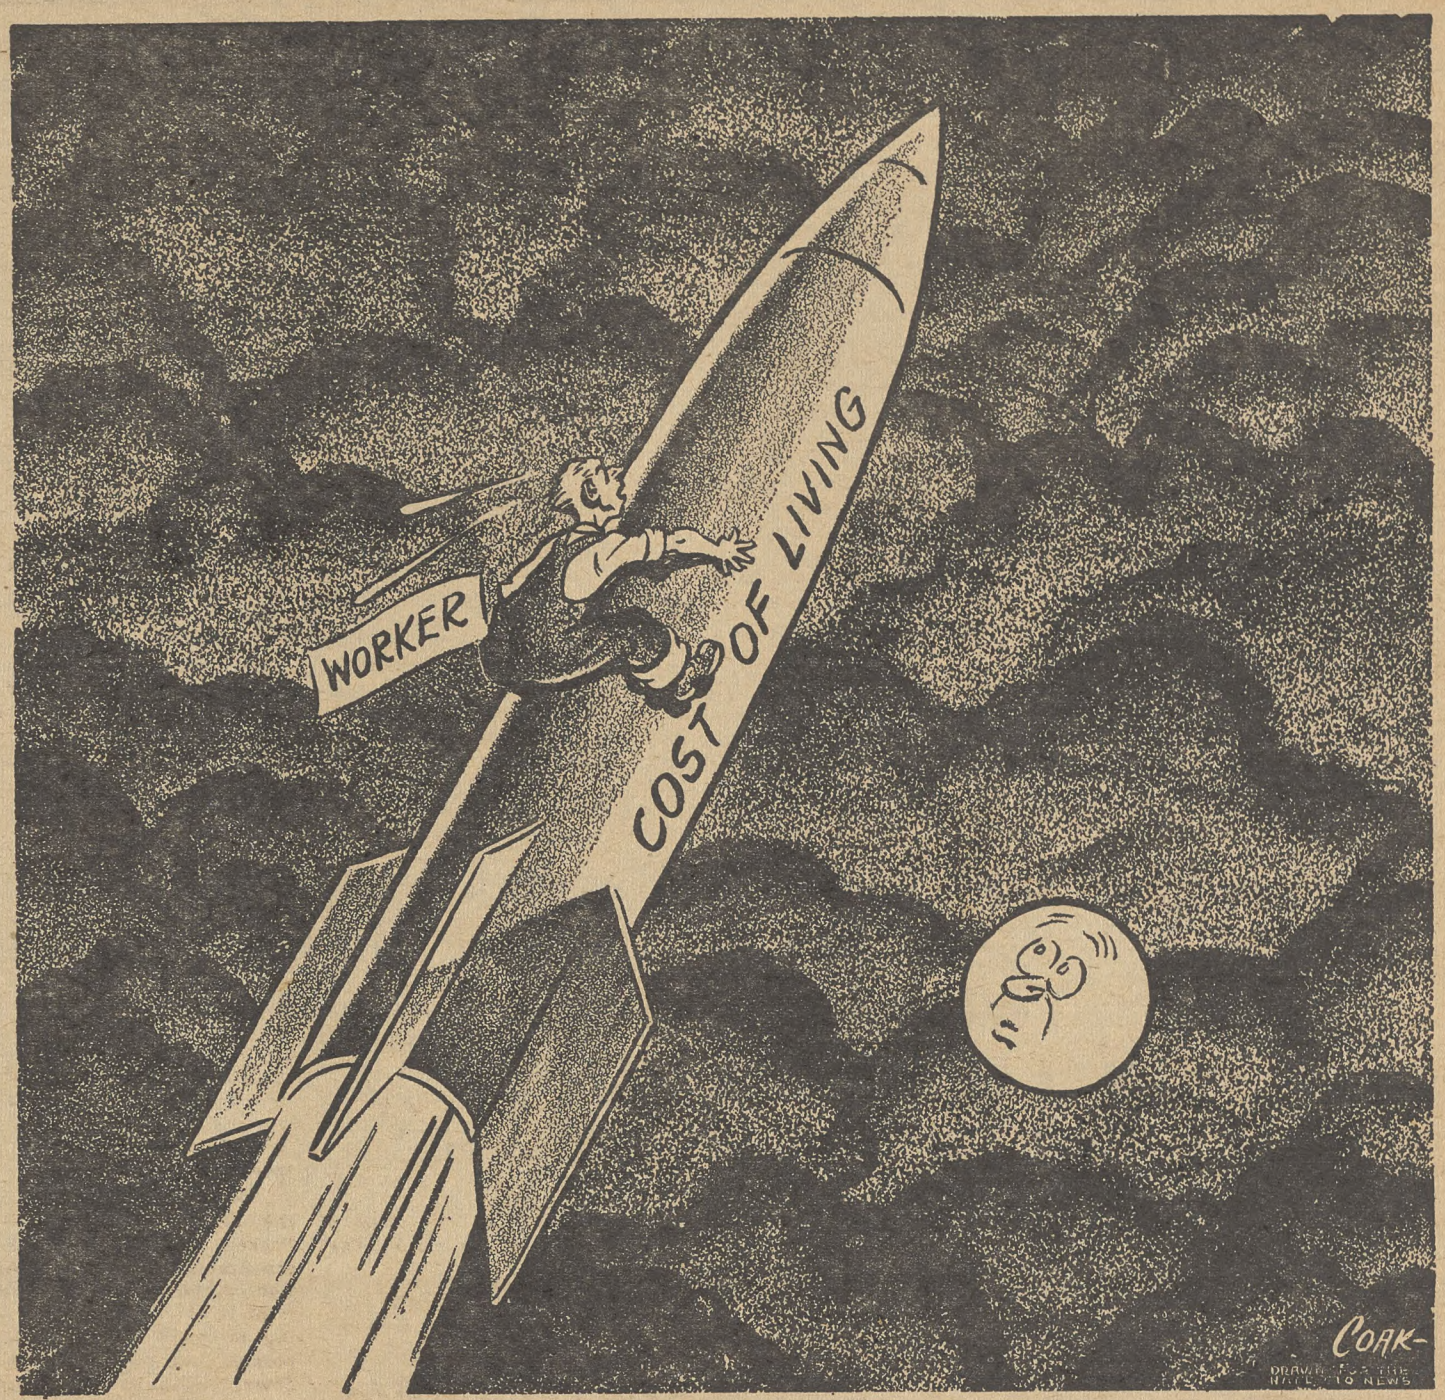
MISGUIDED MISSILE!



Los Angeles Editor Lauds ECA Fight On Reds

The following editorial by Manchester Boddy, editor and publisher of the Los Angeles Daily News, is being distributed by the labor information office of the Economic Cooperation Administration. In it the role that ECA has played in turning back the Communist tide in Europe is quoted with approval:

IN THE spring of 1947 I returned from several months' study in Central Europe with a trunk full of documents and observations proving that Red Russia expected to use organized labor as its main force in bringing all of Europe under Communist domination.

Some day, I hope, the inside story of how the Kremlin organized that great drive will be written. Then, and not before, will the American pubic learn that the decisive battle of the cold war in Europe was won for our side by organized labor—and not entirely by the Marshall plan and the architects who put the Atlantic pact together.

It must not be forgotten that Russia had all of the advantage in the early days of the fight for control of organized labor in Europe.

Communism lost that fight, and every well-balanced American can take a deal of pride in the recent report by Harry Martin, president of the American Newspaper Guild and labor information director of ECA, on the part organized labor played in this struggle.

AMONG other things, he told a Commonwealth Club of California audience:

In Europe it was from the free trade unions that the earliest and strongest support for the United Nations action on Korea came. While other segments of European society debated, the unions rushed to our side.

The Norwegian labor movement issued a pamphlet totaling 500,000 copies called "War in Korea." Because of the swift action of the Norwegian labor movement, the Norwegian people were quickly informed on what had happened in Korea, a far-off country of which they knew little, but whose danger was also their own.

—Danish Communists attempted to interfere with the unloading of arms-aid. But it was a phony strike, a political strike, a treasonable strike. Leaders of the Danish unions promised it would not take place. The shipments were unloaded.

—When Western Europe joined with the United States in the Atlantic pact and the flow of arms began to move to our pact allies, the Cocos—as they are sometimes called in France—grew desperate. They called for a mass movement of European workers in protest against rearmament. Violence broke out along the waterfronts all over Europe.

—But the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions exposed the program for what it was, a vicious campaign of treason carefully calculated to destroy Europe's chance to resist aggression. The great federations of transport workers, of dock workers and of seamen took the cue and struck back.

—Today, with a few notable exceptions, the much-needed weapons of defense are being unloaded in major ports of every European democracy.

—Just last month Austrian Communists, at first obviously encouraged by the Russians, had made plans for a coup to begin with a general strike and to culminate in open revolt and the seizure of the government. There was much dissatisfaction among workers of all political persuasions with the new wage-price policy. So a general strike was called and the Reds mobilized for action.

—But the Austrian Federation of Trade Unions had been the major force responsible for keeping the total Communist vote down to barely 5 per cent of the ballots cast. Its leaders then called conferences of the shop stewards in every factory in Austria—even in the Russian-occupied zone—on the day before the strike.

—Down the line went the word: the general strike is a phony, a trick to overthrow our government, and it must not succeed. The story of the next four or five days is essentially that of courageous and unarmed union members fighting with their bare fists, and with the sweat of their brows in the factories, against the well-trained and well-armed action squads of the Communists.

THERE are two countries in free Europe where the Communist trade unions still hold a substantial edge over their unshackled opponents: France and Italy. Much has to be done before the Communist influence in these countries is wiped out. The workers there must have decent standards of living and a fair share of the fruits of recovery.

—In the countries where the unions are strong and free, the European Recovery Program is enjoying a genuine success; while in the countries where the unions are weak or are in the hands of the Communists, the recovery program has encountered its most discouraging problems.

—It is my firm conviction that these problems will be solved as free labor grows strong enough in France and Italy to make its voice heard and its influence felt.—M. B.

States Study Revisions In Compensation

REVISION of workmen's compensation laws is being pushed in many state legislatures. In New York, for example, recommended changes range from covering injury to typists to free eyeglass replacement.

John W. Bonner, Democratic Governor of Montana, has asked liberalization of the State's workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance laws "in light of the high cost of living." He also wants a "second injury" law to encourage employment of physically handicapped.

Gov. Elbert N. Carvel, Delaware Democrat, wants increased unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits, and a law "to provide for collective bargaining in labor relations cases not falling within the jurisdiction of federal laws." He also recommended a State minimum wage law.

Vermont's Dept. of Industrial Relations urges the broadening of the workmen's compensation law and additional legislation to regulate operation of boilers and elevators. Proposed changes in the compensation act would provide a fund for payment of medical, hospital and compensation benefits for State employes injured while working for the State. The department wants full medical coverage for all workers and the coverage of domestic employes.

NEW JERSEY'S Republican Governor, Alfred E. Driscoll, asked for better procedure to speed disposition of claims in the State's Workmen's Compensation Division. He also suggested unemployment compensation and temporary disability benefits above the present maximum of $26 a week for 26 weeks. Driscoll's other recommendations included enactment of a State labor relations law, strengthening of the minimum wage act, and equal pay for women.

Preservation of the "status quo" in labor-management relations was requested by Gov. Earl Warren in California, but he told the Legislature that workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance should be re-examined "to determine whether these systems are fully serving the humanitarian purposes for which they were established." He also wants agricultural workers included in California's unemployment insurance system. Warren says coverage should begin at once "without waiting for federal action on the whole problem."

Rhode Island and Massachusetts have recognized two forms of discrimination other than racial or religious. Rhode Island's House of Representatives has passed a bill making it illegal for an employer to refuse to hire a man due to be called into the armed forces, and Massachusetts has made it illegal to refuse a man between 45 and 65 a job because of age. LPA

Bonine Re-appointed

State Sen. G. Elwood Bonine of Michigan, co-author of the anti-labor Bonine-Tripp Act, has been reappointed chairman of the Senate Labor Committee by Lieut.-Gov. William C. Vandenberg, a Republican.

The Bonine-Tripp Act requires that a union submit to a vote conducted by the state before it can lawfully go on strike.

CSC Calls On CIO Affiliates To Make Civil Defense Plans

ALL CIO affiliates were called upon last week by the CIO Community Services Committee to develop broad-scale civil defense programs for their members.

The committee at the same time urged local unions to seek "full and effective representation" on state and city civil defense advisory councils, commissions and committees, and recommended that local committees change their names to "CIO Community Services and Civil Defense Committees."

The proposals went out over the signatures of Irving Abramson, CIO-CSC chairman, and Leo Perlis, director.

TO DEVELOP full labor participation in civil defense plans and programs, the national committee urged state and city CIO councils to arrange meetings with governors and mayors, and to seek the appointment of "effective CIO representatives" to planning bodies.

It recommended that city CIO councils arrange meetings with heads of key civil defense agencies—public and voluntary—to discuss plans and seek methods for increasing their effectiveness. It also advocated close relationships with the local Red Cross, councils of social agencies, community referral services, departments of public welfare, etc., for the same purpose.

"It is obviously of the greatest importance, in the light of the interest of the membership and practical considerations affecting the welfare of the entire community, that organized labor be fully and effectively represented on the central Civil Defense Advisory Council and such other subcouncils or committees as may be established to plan civil defense activities," the CIO memorandum to affiliated unions declared.

"Organized labor represents the largest functioning voluntary organization within many communities, and is especially important in the critical production areas . . ."

THE National CIO committee recommended that the union counselling program—which in the past has been used to assist members on matters of welfare, health, unemployment relief, etc.—be adapted to include training for civil defense programs on a community-wide basis.

In places of employment, the committee advised that steps be taken to create "labor-management committees on civilian defense affairs."

Such committees could consider intra-plant planning for blood donor programs, civil defense education, training of shop stewards for plant or plant-area wardens, and general plant protection.

Faith In NLRB Gone, Fired TWUAer Says

J. R. COLLINS, a former worker at the Riverside Textile mill in Augusta, Ga., and a member of the CIO Textile Workers, used to believe the National Labor Relations Board was an agency which would protect the rights of a working man. Now he has lost faith in it.

Collins, a Negro who was fired, replied to a letter from a TWUA official who said he was going to Augusta to take statements from discharged workers.

"I have reached the point where I have lost faith in the board," Collins wrote. "They already have enough statements on file to shut down the mill until they sign a contract and pay me and the others who were fired. That mill has carried on unfair labor activity. Nobody, as far as I know, has any confidence in the board."

Collins said, "for the NLRB to let the company get away with the way they treated me, who has never been fired and who has a straight 15-year record on the job, makes me feel like it's Frank Constangy's (a notorious anti-union attorney who represented the company) board and not the government.

"So far as I am concerned, I am giving no more statements, for I could not say anything more than I have said."

TWUA filed charges of refusal to bargain against Riverside more than six months ago. At the time, the NLRB refused to investigate. Recently it reversed its position.

'Happy Birthday' Means Something Now

The right of workers to enjoy their birthdays as paid holidays was won by 500 members of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, at the Electric Machinery Manufacturing Co. in Minneapolis, Minn.

A week-old strike was settled when the company agreed to a 6c hourly raise to bring wages in line with the national pattern, and a seventh paid holiday to come on the employe's birthday.

Marshall Gets Labor's Pledge To Aid Fight On Aggression

ORGANIZED labor's support of the country's struggle against Soviet imperialism was renewed recently at a meeting of the United Labor Policy Committee with Secy. of Defense George C. Marshall, Assistant Secy. Anna Rosenberg and other department officials.

The meeting was called for an informal and general interchange of views about problems arising from the national emergency.

The union group recalled to the Defense Dept. officials that a large proportion of the men in the armed services are drawn from the ranks of wage earners and their families, and said that union members are acutely conscious of the need for rapid development of both military and industrial strength. Marshall's constructive policies won their praise.

"No group has more at stake in our efforts to keep freedom strong in the world than the working men and women of this country," Marshall told the unionists.

"The survival of free labor organizations and all other democratic institutions depends on our success in checking the growth of police states and communist plans of aggression.

"It is gratifying to me to have your pledge of cooperation in our efforts to increase the strength and effectiveness of our armed forces. It is my desire to keep you fully informed as to the policies we are following and to cooperate in making certain that our policies do not cause more dislocation of the civilian economy than is inescapable in the gigantic effort that is so plainly necessary. We shall need the understanding and support of all elements of our population in carrying through the task successfully."

The United Labor Policy Committee is composed of representatives from the CIO, AFL, Machinists and Railway Labor Executives Association.

Seek Data On Hapgood Life

Mrs. Mary Donovan Hapgood, wife of Powers Hapgood, former CIO regional director in Indiana who died Feb. 4, 1949, asks that anyone having letters or material of value in preparing a biography of her husband send them to Cecil Byrd, associate director of libraries, Univ. of Indiana, Bloomington, Ind.

Hapgood was associated with the outstanding movements for the defense of civil liberties and the rights of workers for more than a quarter of a century. He was one of the CIO's best known leaders from the time the organization was formed until his death. He took an active part in the big rubber, steel, and auto strikes of the 1930s, and as director of the CIO's Shoe Workers Organizing Committee in 1937. He led a strike against 19 shoe factories in Lewiston, Me. With six other unionists, he was later sentenced to six months in jail for his strike activities.

Woodworkers Vote To Fight For Pay Boosts

THE CIO Woodworkers Northwest Regional Negotiating Committee, meeting in Portland, Ore., Jan. 13-14, representing nine district councils, voted to concentrate on a wage boost for 50,000 lumber workers in the five Northwestern states in 1951.

The 250 delegates heard Pres. J. E. Fadling declare that "wages are of primary importance, so we won't be caught at a sub-standard of living conditions at a time when prices have so rapidly increased."

He pointed out that last year the Woodworkers had forged health and welfare benefits into most contracts, plus a wage boost averaging only 7½c an hour. This year the emphasis will be on wages, he said.

Fadling declared the IWA research department had found that while labor gains in the industry increased 73% between 1942 and 1950, lumber prices rose at least 140%.

Labor costs were 45.3% of lumber prices in 1942, but by 1950 they dropped to 32.6% and are lower now, he said.

The conference did not specify what wage proposals will be made when present contracts expire Apr. 1, but indicated the union will ask for three additional holidays, making a total of six, and stronger vacation clauses.

TWUA Asks 12% Hike In Cotton Mills

THE CIO Textile Workers will ask for an immediate 12% wage increase and establishment of a minimum uniform wage scale for 180,000 cotton-rayon textile workers covered by TWUA contracts in all part of the country.

This decision was made at a TWUA policy committee conference at Danville, Va., on January 13. Mariano S. Bishop, director of the union's cotton-rayon division, said TWUA seeks to establish the principle that uniform wages should be paid to textile workers irrespective of geographical location of plants.

The policy committee was elected at TWUA's national cotton-rayon wage conference in Washington last month, but the conference did not decide the actual amount of the pay demands.

Bishop said the proposed wage schedule would establish a minimum hourly wage of $1.91½. In addition to the immediate wage increase, the union will ask for a quarterly cost of living adjustment and a 7% annual wage improvement in a two-year contract. He said the annual improvement factor and the cost of living adjustment are now included in a number of TWUA contracts in the northern section of the industry. The four hundred cotton-rayon employers also will be asked to provide minimum pensions of $100 monthly to all workers with 25 years' service who reach 65 years of age.

The proposals will be submitted when the northern mill contracts expire March 15. The southern mill pacts do not expire until next summer, but may be reopened for wages on March 15.

CIO's Baby, GCEOC, Is Busting Out All Over U.S.A.

By ELIZ. SHOEMAKER

LESS THAN a year ago an organizing committee for government workers was officially named by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and launched from the office of Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization.

Jurisdiction of the committee, one of the largest in CIO, included not only the far-reaching federal government, but every state, county and municipal government as well. For good measure it took in quasi-public institutions and agencies depending in part on public funds.

In April 1950, that jurisdiction included well over six million workers—one of every eight people employed in the United States and its territories.

Today, with government expanding more rapidly under pressure of a hot cold war, the organization's potential membership is shooting into astronomical figures.

But the new CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee is growing fast, too. Government may have had a couple of hundred years head start, but GCEOC is making up for lost time now.

In the 10 months of its operation, it has chartered 200 local unions with a total membership of more than 50,000.

In CIO organizing circles, such progress under the relative handicaps imposed by the loose set-up of an organizing committee is considered unique. And it has given the lie to the old adage that government workers are virtually impossible to organize.

GCEOC'S head man is Chairman Anthony J. Federoff, veteran of organizing campaigns in auto, textile and steel, John L. Yancey, on leave from his post as vice-president of the CIO Transport Service Workers, is assistant chairman.

The man who controls the purse-strings and directs operations from the national office in Washington is Milton Murray, former president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, who has assisted Haywood an a number of organizing campaigns.

Murray could be called a white-collar man with a meat-and-potatoes approach to organizing problems. And most of GCEOC's problems have been tackled successfully from his desk in Washington.

Biggest and most consistent problem has been a self-imposed restriction of space and staff while the committee has been getting on its feet financially. Murray, with approval of Haywood and Federoff, has insisted on running in the black because he "could sleep easier"—when he got a chance to sleep at all. But he admits the toughest job he ever had was turning down a deluge of requests for organizers and services he just couldn't provide during the first few months of operation.

During that formative period Murray carried on with a capsule-size staff in a small office in National CIO headquarters. Dick Shoemaker, former organizer for the CIO Government Workers Union, helped shoulder the burdens of the burgeoning organizing committee in the role of jack-of-all-trades.

Now, from GCEOC's modest but adequate offices in downtown Washington, taken over last September, the national organization is providing services held up for months past.

Murray is able to get out into the field to discuss current problems with growing locals. Shoemaker, nominally legislative representative for the past 10 months, is putting full time into the business of lobbying for GCEOC bills. Education-research and publicity departments have been established, and a full time organizer covers the District of Columbia.

And this month saw the launching of Service, long-awaited monthly publication dedicated "to the interests of all the workers employed by their fellow citizens."

MARCH 1 will mark the first anniversary of the sprouting organizing committee, and the staff feels it will really have cause for celebration.

As of today, GCEOC has local unions spread from coast to coast and as far south as the Panama Canal Zone, where local-rate, non-citizen employes of Uncle Sam have a local of several thousand members.

The bulk of the membership, however, lies in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia and Michigan. Minnesota is fast becoming a runner-up with a crop of 16 lusty locals on the Iron Range alone, and Twin City groups beginning to come in. Most Minnesota members once belonged to the Communist-dominated Public Workers, as did a fat percentage of GCEOC members throughout the country.

Like other CIO organizing committees, the initial task of GCEOC was to gather in and service thousands of members who quit the Commie union in disgust and were anxious to return to CIO as soon as a vehicle was provided for organization.

In the government jurisdiction, one of the first groups to return was the membership of the Government Workers Union who left UPW in 1948, affiliated with the CIO Shipbuilders and carried on its own organizing campaign. The nucleus was Washington Federal employes, chartered last March as Local 1. Civic employes in New York, many independent groups affiliated with local industrial union councils, and others were ready to come into GCEOC the day it came into being.

GCEOC discovered during the the past 10 months, however, that government workers most anxious to organize on an industrial basis are in the jurisdiction of municipal governments and quasi-public organizations, and are mostly "blue-collar" workers.

"IT ISN'T that the white-collar workers don't need to organize — their pay-checks have shrunk just like the other workers," observed Federoff. "But most of them aren't yet willing to shed the so-called dignity of professional standing for the other kind of dignity won by organization. They're just beginning to find out how to win better working conditions and raises that will bring them up to the standards industrial unions have already won."

More than half the 50,000 GCEOC membership represents municipal sanitation, street railway, school, hospital, fire and water departments.

In New York City, formerly a UPW stronghold, GCEOC has broken the back of the now-independent union and recently formed a GCEOC joint board to coordinate organizing acitvities among a wide range of municipal groups. These include the Board of Education, Dept. of Marine and Aviation, several welfare agencies and a variety of quasi-public institutions such as the Museum of Natural History.

One of New York's largest locals, however, is in the Post Office Dept., where GCEOC represents more than 1000 employes. And a recently-chartered organization of state technical employes has an established membership of more than 2000.

IN OHIO most GCEOC members are municipal workers, while in West Virginia, they are almost entirely state employes under the Highway and Liquor Control Commissions.

In Pennsylvania, too, the membership is largely made up of municipal employes representing school custodians, hospital, library and even cemetery workers. The Pittsburgh area is the most strongly organized for GCEOC.

In Illinois the membership lies mainly in the State Dept. of Labor, the Universities of Illinois and Chicago, and the Chicago Public Library.

Michigan's members are largely municipal employes. Its largest local is a transport maintenance group in Detroit that has organized its 1913-man shop 100%. Other locals in Detroit — center of GCEOC membership in Michigan —represent the city's Institute of Art, Board of Education and Jewish Welfare Agency.

It's a varied lot, but GCEOC officials believe that in this amazingly wide range of workers lies the real strength of the organization.

"We have a tremendous leadership potential in our organization," Murray declared. "The Southern locals I visited, for example, are mostly new groups who have had absolutely no previous union experience. Yet with a little help from the national office they are standing on their own feet and doing an effective organizing job."

But although Murray is pleased, he is not surprised. His faith in GCEOC is strong, and he shares with Federoff and Yancey the conviction that another few months will bring membership to the 100,000 goal set for a constitutional convention.

"When our members do almost everything," he says, "then obviously GCEOC has the most talent in the CIO!"

FEDERAL PRISON guards formed their own council within GCEOC at a meeting in Atlanta, Ga., attended by delegates from five of Uncle Sam's sturdiest bastilles. Here George Leist, of Local 1221, Chillicothe, O., speaks off the cuff at a banquet during the session.

Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; Secy.-Treas. William Pollock, Textile Workers. Other CIO delegates, not shown here, were Pres. Jacob Potofsky, Clothing Workers, and Secy.-Treas. Lewis Clark, Packinghouse Workers. Schwarz will be assistant secretary of the new group and will head up its work on economic and social problems.

Free Western Hemisphere Trade Unions Unite

By BOB SENSER

Six tired-looking delegates stood huddled together in the hotel lobby. We've got to be successful," one of them said. "We've got to set up an organization."

The others nodded, and one said: "Wouldn't the Commies and Fascists have a belly-laugh if we failed!"

* * *

In a conference room a tall Latin American asked for the floor. "Gentlemen," he pleaded in Spanish, "we can't let our people down back home. They need an organization like this. We've got to come out of here with one."

* * *

THE JOB was hard, but a new hemisphere-wide labor organization was built up at a meeting in Mexico City Jan. 8-12. It was named the Inter-American Regional Workers Organization (OIRT, for its Spanish initials) of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

After it was all over, Jacob S. Potofsky, head of the eight-man CIO delegation, called the OIRT a "magnificent temple of labor power." The new house of Western Hemisphere labor takes in about 17 million workers in 20 nations. And the doors are open for many more to come in.

But for a while during the five-day conference, obstacles seemed tremendous. Both pro-Communists and pro-Fascists in Latin America were anxious to see it wrecked. They were sorely disappointed, thanks to the teamwork of 200 leaders of democratic trade unions of North, Central and South America.

J. H. OLDENBROEK, secretary-general of the ICFTU, who attended the sessions, hailed the conference's work as a major accomplishment for the peoples of the American hemisphere.

He said the new ICFTU regional set-up "will be of incalculable strength" in the fight against dictatorships. Trade union movements throughout the Americas, he added, are "determined to exterminate totalitarian influence—whether Stalinist, Peronist or Falangist." Oldenbroek was accompanied by John Brophy, former director of CIO Councils and now ICFTU representative at the United Nations.

CIO delegates agreed with Oldenbroek that a major step had been taken to unite the unions of the hemisphere, and that the body's accomplishments during the next few years would be of major importance.

They also reported that the CIO's reputation—as an organization devoted to democratic principles and unwilling to compromise with either communist or fascist ideologies—had been tremendously enhanced during the Mexico City conference.

A VETERAN Peruvian labor leader, Arturo Sabrosa, was elected president. A Cuban, Francisco Aguirre, got the job of full-time general secretary. OIRT headquarters will be in Havana, Cuba.

Potofsky, president of the Clothing Workers, who heads the CIO committees on international affairs and on Latin America, was elected to OIRT's nine-man executive committee. His deputy for this post is Pat Conroy, secretary treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labour.

Elected to the 31-man regional council were Potofsky, Conroy, and David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers. CIO deputies for these posts are Martin Kyne, of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store union; George Burt of the Auto Workers (Canada), and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers.

(Other U. S. leaders named to both the executive and the regional council were Pres. John L. Lewis of the Mine Workers, and Secy.-Treas. George Meany of the AFL.)

THE CONFERENCE did more than erect a structure. It also breathed spirit into OIRT by adopting a 900-word resolution presented by the CIO.

"The battle now joined between enslavement and freedom will not be won on any one front," the resolution proclaimed.

"It will not, it can not be won by guns alone. It can be won only by the marshalling of every legitimate weapon in the hands, the hearts, and the minds of free people everywhere."

Then, continuing in its manifesto-like style, it said:

"We of the free and democratic trade union movement must nail our colors to the masthead for all to see. We are the vanguard of the rights and dignity of men everywhere.

"We must launch our campaign in a positive way to bring bread, freedom, hope, and life to men everywhere, in all nations and to all races. We must win the war, not only against tyranny, but against its main causes—poverty and injustice—no matter where they raise their heads . . .

"Make this hemisphere and the world all good neighbors by a permanent program of help and support of every kind for the weak and hapless . . . Let those who have come to the aid of those who have not. Let both strengthen each other with a common bond and a common purpose.

"Let the strong give of their treasure; let the strong give their investments, their mechanical help, and above all their moral help."

The resolution went over big with the Latin Americans. Five of them told McDonald they liked it so much they wanted a CIO man to autograph it.

THERE WAS no known Communist or fellow-traveler active at the conference, and so the reds could not bring any direct disruption to bear on the historic meeting. Local pro-Communists tried to create distrust among the delegates by articles in their daily newspaper, El Popular.

But what really concerned the whole congress and complicated its work—OIRT's founding—were the pro-Argentine maneuverings by some Mexican union leaders.

Weeks before, ICFTU leaders and many of the conference participants had agreed that, since the Argentine unions are not free and are not members of the ICFTU, there was no place for them at the conference. Meany likened the Argentine labor movement to "Hitler's labor front and the so-called trade unions of Soviet Russia."

The issue exploded on the floor on the fourth day, after smoldering for two days in the rules committee. The man who brought flame and fuse together was the conference chairman himself, Fidel Velasquez, head of the 1,250,000-member Mexican Confederation of Labor (CTM).

Velasquez praised the Peron-controlled unions—the CGT—as a "glorious institution." He said that, because conference leaders had rebuffed his wishes on Argentina, he would resign—but only if the conference itself approved, that is, if it insisted on keeping the Argentinians out.

With the Argentina vote still pending, Potofsky took the mike.

"Gentlemen," he pleaded, "this congress is the hope of the workers on this hemisphere. Let's start it off right. Let's not pussyfoot. Let's not compromise on matters of principle . . .

"This congress will commit a great crime if we give recognition to a totalitarian government and a labor movement controlled by it. Admit Argentina to this congress? I say no, no, a thousand times no."

A Cuban delegate got up to explain that any CGT delegation to the meeting would serve only as "publicity agents for Dictator Peron."

THEN THE Mexico group moved that the Argentine leaders be admitted as fraternal delegates, with "no judgment as to the Argentina regime" attached to the admission.

An exiled Argentine unionist who came as a delegate representing non-Peronist labor in Argentina, Candido Gregorio, took the floor to speak against the resolution.

"It is impossible," he said, "to make a distinction between the CGT and the Argentine government, as the Mexican resolution does . . . The Argentine government, through its labor branch, is oppressing the working classes of Argentina."

After Gregorio finished, delegates shouted, "Question, question," and Velasquez finally called for a show of hands. Only the Mexican delegation voted for the Peronist delegation.

The next morning, on the fifth day of the meeting the Mexican Confederation of Labor formally withdrew from the conference and from the ICFTU. The other Mexican organization, the 300,000-member National Proletarian Confederation, stayed in.

One of the final speeches will probably echo longest in the ears of the Latin American delegates. It was the talk delivered by McDonald as the meeting was near adjournment.

In the last paragraph of the speech, McDonald switched from English to Spanish.

"Amigos," he began, and went on in the language of most of the delegates:

"The cause to which we have dedicated ourselves in this conference is a noble one. Translated into spiritual terms, we are our brother's keeper. We seek the brotherhood of mankind. We want peace on earth, and justice for all.

"Let us join hands and work for these lofty ideals without friction and politics, with self-sacrifice and humility."

U. S. Unionists Get Top Staff Posts

Both CIO and AFL are represented with top staff posts in the new ICFTU inter-American organization.

Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee, will be assistant secretary of the new group and will head up its work on economic and social problems. Serafino Romauldi, of the AFL, will hold a similar title and will be in charge of the group's publicity and education work.

Headquarters will be at Havana, Cuba. It is expected the two officials will divide their time between Havana and the U. S.

Home Comforts Far Surpassed

Most of the Inter-American labor conference meetings were held in Mexico City's ultra-modern 12-story Social Security Building.

Among the modern features of this government structure are indirect lighting, solid windows acting as outside walls of each floor, huge Venetian blinds, and a nursery to take care of the children of the government workers during working hours.

The Mexican Social Security Dept. offered the conference many services beyond just hall space. The services ranged from translators to free refreshments.

Oldenbroek:

In Washington, He's Optimistic

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

AN international "salesman" for the cause of democratic labor visited Washington last week and gave the nation's capital a generous dose of optimism about the future of free trade unionism throughout the world.

The "salesman" is J. H. Oldenbroek, secretary general of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions—to which both CIO and AFL are affiliated.

Working on a characteristically busy schedule, Oldenbroek stopped off en route from Mexico City to New York and on to Brussels, Belgium—where ICFTU headquarters are located.

During his brief visit, Oldenbroek met the press; conferred with CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL leaders; and paid a visit to President Truman at the White House to describe the ICFTU's American hemisphere meeting, which had just adjourned at Mexico City.

In his interview with Washington reporters, Oldenbroek's comments touched on a variety of subjects—from the state of unionism in Iceland and the Falkland Islands, to ICFTU plans for activity in Asia, to European labor's reaction to the new democratic armed force being built by Gen. Ike Eisenhower.

Some of Oldenbroek's observations:

Europe: "Our will in Europe to fight barbaric dictatorship is as strong as it was once when the Nazis were on the march, and our faith in democracy is undeviating.

"We welcome Gen. Eisenhower and support his mission.

"We believe that this mission paradoxically has already strengthened the democratic forces in their search for peace and freedom."

Latin America: The new ICFTU inter-American organization, "as anti-fascist as it is anti-communist, will be of incalculable strength in combatting powerfully organized totalitarian forces in this hemisphere, and particularly in the other American Republics."

Asia: "To strengthen democracy in Asia, we must wipe out starvation and disease and illiteracy, and we must do this by working through the democratic forces in Asia."

Oldenbroek's discussion of ICFTU plans for the coming year made clear that much of its activity will be centered on colonial or under-developed areas of the world, where poverty and unrest are feeding on each other.

PLANS FOR an Asiatic regional ICFTU meeting—much like the recent inter-American organization—will be worked over at a conference of Asiatic union leaders at Karachi, Pakistan, during May.

"We are already functioning in that embattled area," Oldenbroek reminded reporters. "There, where an Asiatic iron curtain threatens the free peoples, our fight is not only against Soviet infiltration, but against the poverty of the Asiatic masses."

Why is the ICFTU pushing so hard to build regional organizations in all parts of the world?

"It's just not possible to run a world labor organization from one center," Oldenbroek points out. "And it's desirable to give different parts of the world a chance to meet together and apply themselves to regional problems.

"What usually happens in a world organization is that people in the countries near the headquarters take an active part, and tend to run the whole show, while those farther away become less interested.

"Also, labor organizations in the small countries can't afford to send delegates to international meetings. But they can get to regional conferences closer to home."

AFTER ALL, Oldenbroek reminded the Washington reporters, "some of those smaller labor movements have done a pretty good job, you know."

"For instance, the latest union groups to join the ICFTU are from Iceland and the Falkland Island," he added.

(Iceland has a population of about 100,000; the Falkland Islands, a British possession some 300 miles east of the southern tip of South America have a population of about 2500.)

"Both of these labor movements have organized about 95% of all eligibles," Oldenbroek said, with a grin. "I wonder how many unions in larger countries can match that ratio?"

WHITE HOUSE VISIT: Pres. Truman and Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions (seated) were in high good humor when ICFTU and U. S. union heads visited the White House last week. Also present, and smiling: Averell Harriman, White House advisor on foreign affairs; Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin; Asst. Secy. of Labor Philip Kaiser; Sec. Vincent Tewson, of British Trades Union Congress; AFL Pres. William Green; Chairman Jacob Potofsky, of CIO International Committee.

ICFTU Turns New 'Spotlight' On Life Behind Iron Curtain

THE INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the worldwide organization of free labor in the democratic nations, is now telling its new members how the other half lives—the half behind the Iron Curtain.

It has just issued the first edition of a new monthly mimeographed publication, the ICFTU Spotlight, which gives, as its masthead proclaims, "uncensored news from the dictatorship countries."

The first issue reveals some interesting sidelights on life under the iron rule of Soviet conquerors.

One article describes how a new crime has been added to the criminal codes of Eastern Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Rumania. As set forth in the new Polish law, which is typical of all and differs from the others only in minor phrases, it reads:

"Art. 1—Any person . . . who conducts war propaganda, is committing a crime against peace and is liable to imprisonment for a term of up to 15 years.

"Art. 2—A crime against peace is committed by any person who instigates or calls for war, who spreads propaganda for the purpose of fomenting war, who opposes the movement in defense of peace or slanders it . . ."

Passage of this law in the Russian satellite countries began last fall, just after the "Peace" Congress organized by the Cominformled World Peace Committee met in Warsaw. The Spotlight adds:

"It is clear that the immediate purpose of these laws is to spread further terror in the countries of Communist dictatorship. Behind the Iron Curtain the choice will now be: 'Sign the Stockholm Peace Appeal, or . . . 15 years' hard labour.'"

When Wronger Guesses Are Made Sen. Taft'll Make 'Em

By IRVING FAGAN & CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

THERE ARE many views of foreign policy these days, and Sen. Taft (R. O.) has managed to espouse most of them. About the only ones he's overlooked are those bespeaking cooperation at home and abroad in the face of grim danger.

Of course, what Mr. Republican is saying—and saying at great length to anybody who'll listen—is "I am an isolationist." Fact is, he's an unreconstructed isolationist who always finds something objectionable in any proposal that calls for international cooperation. So is ex-President Hoover, who also has managed to offend the free world while, like Taft, he drew applause from Moscow.

Taft has a perfect right to keep on trying to be a prophet in international affairs. If he wants to say that, so far as he can see, Joe Stalin hasn't any evil intentions toward Western Europe, not to mention the U. S., you can't gag him. But before you take his opinion for a fact you ought to review his record as a soothsayer.

If that record shows anything, it shows that prophecy isn't Taft's field. He's like a big kid in a Class D league who has a nice swing but can't hit the curve ball. Events have a way of curve-balling Taft and making him look pretty silly. Look at the record yourself.

On Jan. 22, 1939, Taft said: "There is no reason to believe that Germany and Italy could defeat England and France in a protracted war."

A year and a half later France had been crushed and England was hanging on by her fingernails with the help of a handful of Spitfires.

On Nov. 14, 1940, Taft said: "The day of large armies is waning."

Within a short time the U. S. alone was to put 11 million men in uniform.

On Feb. 16, 1941, Taft said: "It is simply fantastic to suppose that there is any danger of an attack on the United States by Japan."

A year later, the Japanese had knocked out the fleet at Pearl Harbor, were cleaning up in the Philippines and were spreading through the Pacific islands and Malaya.

On Aug. 1, 1941, Taft said: "My opinion is that the situation looks infinitely safer. I cannot understand the statement that the situation is more perilous than it was a year ago."

Four months later the Japanese struck Pearl Harbor and the Philippines.

On May 6, 1944, Taft said: "It will be many years before any nation can convince itself that it can defy and conquer the world."

The Soviet Union and now Red China have repeatedly defied the world.

On Sept. 25, 1947, Taft said: "I have not believed that Russia intends or desires conquest by force of arms of additional territory. I have not felt—for the present at least—that Russia desires a fighting war or would give serious consideration to it."

On March 14, 1949, Taft said: "I have no knowledge of any Russian intention for military aggression."

On Sept. 5, 1949, Taft said: "From what they tell me there is not much evidence that the Russians contemplate military aggression. I believe that the Russian threat will recede."

On June 28, 1950, Taft said: "The attack on Korea should have been foreseen by the administration."

There's the record. To our mind, the trouble with Taft is that his world is static. The forces of history escape him completely, perhaps because his head is buried in the sand.

Now we don't want to excoriate Taft for having been an isolationist 10 years ago. If truth be told, before Pearl Harbor one of the authors of this column opposed entry into World War II on what he considered thoroughly liberal grounds. He had a lot of liberal friends who held the same position, which was quite different from Taft's since it was based on a world view that embraced some of the elements of the Marshall Plan and Point Four, both of which Taft opposes. The other author of the column supported strong action in 1940.

The real case against Taft and his diehard Republican cronies in the Senate is that they are playing politics with the gravest crisis in history. The capers of the Tafts, Wherrys, McCarthys, Hickenloopers and Capeharts smack more of irresponsibility than of statesmanship.

The baseless assaults on Dean Acheson—especially the one on the eve of the Secy. of State's departure for delicate negotiations in Brussels—could only fill Europeans with fear that they would be left in the lurch. The scarcely veiled implications that Gen. Eisenhower has somehow betrayed the Republican party by agreeing to serve his nation and the Western world in a back-breaking job must make citizens of London, Paris, and Oslo wonder what the U. S. is up to.

Actually the Tafts, the Wherrys and the Capeharts are seizing upon the dismay over Korea and the sorrows of those who have lost sons in that far-off peninsula to embarrass the President of the United States. They are willing to rock the boat when the most precise navigation is required, if their action will win a vote or two next year. What happens after that doesn't seem to bother them.

Meanwhile, Taft keeps right on predicting the future. Here's one of the latest:

There is "no conclusive evidence" that the Russians have any designs on the nations of Western Europe.

Presumably Europeans already feel better. Or perhaps they don't want their evidence too conclusive.

Uncle Sam A Piker In Social Security Spending

THE RICHEST country in the world spends a smaller proportion of its income on social security than many much poorer nations.

A survey of comparative financial costs of governmental social security programs in 11 representative foreign countries reveals that while 3.4% of the national income on the average was spent for such purposes, the United States fell far below with a 1.4% average.

The study was issued recently by the Research Council for Economic Security, a non-profit, educational organization devoted solely to investigation of problems in the field of social and economic security. Headquarters are at 111 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.

The council's survey showed that the average proportion of the national budget devoted to social security in the representative foreign countries studied is 15.5%. Again the United States falls far below this average, with 8.1%.

According to the council's analysis, here is the way the countries studied lined up as to percentage of the national budget spent for social security:

Less than 10%: Mexico, United States, Norway.

10—14%: Australia, Chile, Belgium.

15—19%: Great Britain, Canada, Switzerland.

25% and over: Denmark, Sweden, France.

Foreign social security systems developed rapidly from 1939 to 1949 and the trend appears to be continuing, the council notes.

"A depression, a war, an aging population—each brings in its path a stream of pressures for expanded social security protection from central government; protection inadequately provided, or not at all, by business, the community, or the individual himself.

"The feelings of insecurity which are so intense in a depression are remembered long after. The social, economic, and political trends of public opinion are compellingly influenced by the sight of aged people whose services are less and less utilized by society, personal experience with economically catastrophic effects of illness, the spectacle or threat of lifetime savings disappearing in times of inflation.

"Periods of war and depression heighten the desire for measures which will guarantee greater personal and group protection. These demands find expression in numerous forms of economic, social and political action and focus attention upon the many ramifications of the problem."

THE STUDY showed that 17.7% is the average proportion of the national income spent by central governments for all of functions and services. The countries spending more than the average are Great Britain, France, Belgium, Australia, Norway and the United States, while those spending below the average are Sweden, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Mexico and Switzerland.

"The above-average countries are, in the main, either highly industrialized or have adopted socialistic programs as part of their economy," states the study. "Huge expenditures, still attributable to World War II, also account for their proportionately large budgets."

The legacy left by the war brought in varying degree to the different countries such problems as disruption of international trade; decline of purchasing power; heavy national debt; subsidsies for agriculture to produce essential food supplies; grants to industry to replace obsolete machinery and equipment; the reconstruction of homes, factories, roads, and schools; the loss of markets, and heavy military expenditures.

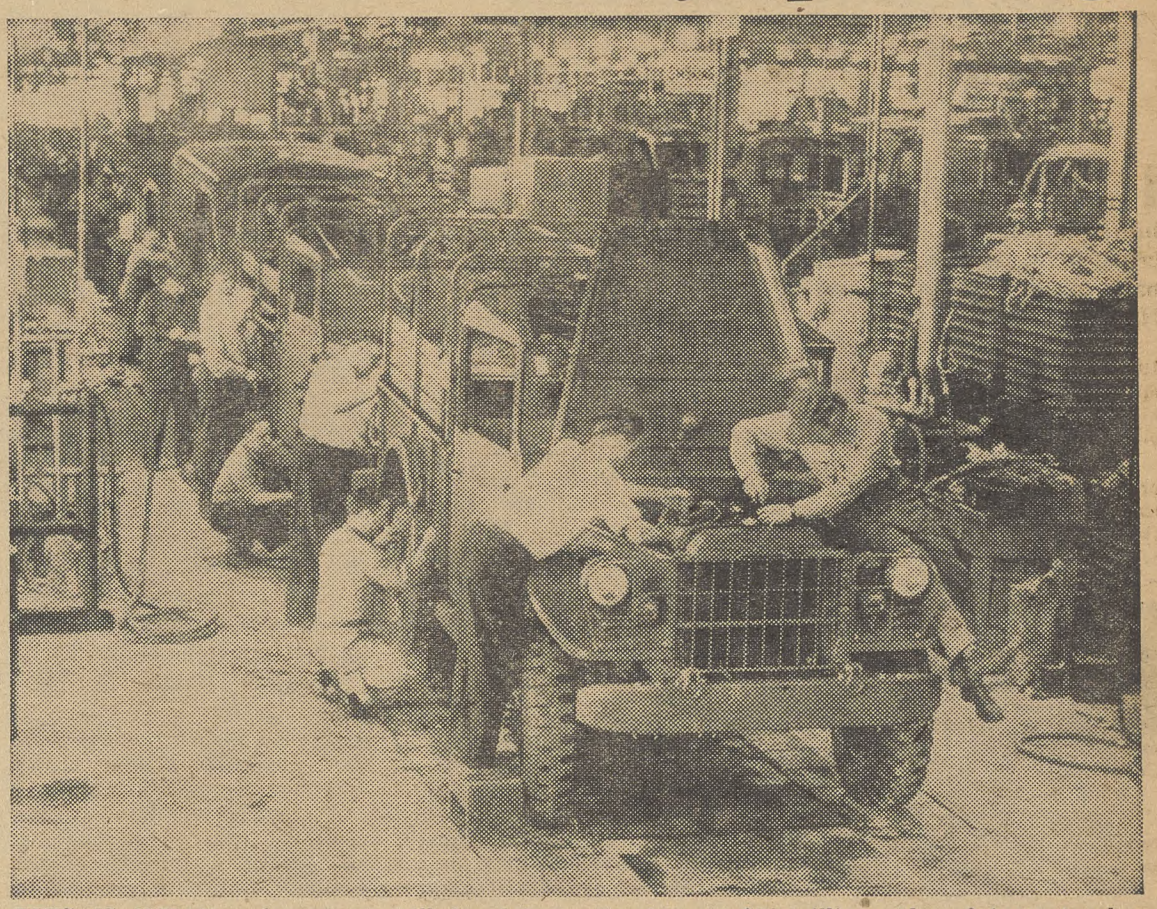
"Great Britain, whose national budget is almost 32% of its national income, and France, whose national budget is slightly over 30% of its national income, both reveal such costs," states the report.

"But more so, their budgets mirror the immense outlay for all social services and other reforms such as extensive housing programs and nationalization of industry, which are important points in their political and economic programs."

The council's study concludes that "when economic conditions are stable, the social security system usually is moderate and with no special emphasis on any particular program. When they are unstable, there is likely to be disproportionate development of certain programs and a deviation from the original purposes."

Railroad Retirement Payments Untaxable

Retirement and survivor benefits received under the Railroad Retirement Act are not subject to income taxes, the Railroad Retirement Board reminded recipients last week. The income tax return form (Form 1040) lists them as among income which should not be reported.



THIS IS WHAT a lot of us will be doing before long: Members of CIO Auto Workers at Chrysler plant no longer work on civilian cars, instead are shown here on new job of turning out $92 million order of Army trucks. One lone civilian truck (third from end of line) is just managing to make the market. You might call it re-reconversion.

Demand Widespread Purge, But Only 294 Ruled Disloyal

SO THE GOVERNMENT was just honeycombed with enemies of the Republic, shrieked the 113% Americans, demanding probes and purges. Now the returns are in. The score:

Out of the 2 million federal employes working when the President's loyalty program began four years ago and the thousands hired since, the total number fired for disloyalty is 294.

The Loyalty Board reported Jan. 16 that the various federal loyalty boards checked 13,842 cases, and found 522 "disloyal." Of this group, 294 were fired, 186 won their jobs back on appeal, and 42 cases are still awaiting decisions; 2872 quit while under investigation. Thus, the total, in four years, of those who were fired or quit, is 3166.

Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath said at a Jackson Day dinner in Springfield, Mo.:

"We have the Communist fifth column well under control," and added, "Mr. J. Edgar Hoover (head of the FBI) and I are determined that there will be no gestapo witch hunts—that basic civil rights of the individual will be securely protected and defended as guaranteed by the fundamental law of the land. The free America that we have inherited must be handed down in like manner to the future generations."

A bill to bar Communists from getting unemployment compensation benefits was introduced in the New Jersey Legislature.

Ewing Cites Freedom Peril

Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, warned Jan. 16 that we must not sacrifice our liberties to the cry of "mobilization" and become like the totalitarian states we detest.

Addressing the 10th anniversary celebration of the revival of the Philadelphia Junto, an adult education group founded by Benjamin Franklin, Ewing said the big job of adult education is "to make us better and more useful citizens in a democratic society which depends, in the last analysis, solely on its citizens."

"One of our greatest perils," he said, "is that in a time of mobilization we try to go too far and, in the name of unity or patriotism, insist that only one view may prevail—that everyone who voices an unorthodox opinion is subversive. When an honest, but differing opinion of a minority group is throttled, we are endangering our American ideal of the pursuit of the truth. If totalitarians succeed in making us, by our own fears, become a totalitarian state, our battle is lost."

Ewing suggested that we mobilize for education with the same spirit that we mobilize for war. "The possibilities of a fully educated citizenry are beyond imagination," he said.

Discharged Security 'Risk' Rejects Aid Of Communists

James Schuetz, Greater Buffalo (N.Y.) Industrial Council delegate and education director of CIO Auto Workers Local 501, owns up to being a "rugged individualist" in that he finds fault with Democrats and Republicans alike.

But he wants no help from the Communist Party.

Schuetz, who is also secretary of the Erie County Socialist Party, repudiated recent attempts of the party liners to use his discharge by the Bell Aircraft Corp. for their own ends.

The company fired him because he allegedly "lacks the integrity to work or have access to classified contracts." In other words, he was a poor security risk.

His discharge differed from other "security" discharges at the plant in that he was not accused of belonging to a Communist-front organization. The circumstances of his firing had been reported in the Daily Worker, Communist Party organ.

In turning down the offer of aid from the Reds, Schuetz said: "I am not interested in the support, direct or indirect, of people who represent those regimes whose fundamental tenet of justice is based on the philosophy that a man is guilty until he proves himself innocent.

"Fortunately for Americans, that philosophy is not part of the American way of life despite the occasional injustices such as occurred in my case . . . If I were a citizen of Soviet Russia, I could not face the future with such confidence."

Preparations are being made to appeal Schuetz' firing to the Industrial Employment Review Board, the agency which handles such cases.

The story was carried on the front page of the Union Leader, official publication of the Greater Buffalo CIO Industrial Union Council.

'Union-Busters' Paradise' Just Ain't What It Used To Be

Gadsden, Ala., used to be a union-busters' paradise.

Ten years ago, CIO organizers were beaten up and driven out of the city, but today the attitude of the community has changed completely.

As a result of the educational work done by several CIO unions, it has become almost impossible to recruit scabs, as the management of the Sauquoit Yarn Mill discovered recently.

A strike was called at the mill by the CIO Textile Workers more than three months ago as a result of the employer's refusal to bargain. Not a single worker has deserted the strike and the company has been unable to recruit strike breakers to operate the plant, according to Julius Fry, TWUA Alabama director.

"During the past 10 years the labor movement in Gadsden has been able to build up such solid and intelligent support among the citizens of the community that strike-breaking is just not done around here," Fry declared.

"Elsewhere, of course, at the end of three months we most certainly would have had some deserters and we would have been forced to exercise vigilance to combat the employer's tactics.

"In Gadsden, however, the Coosa-Thatcher chain, which operates the yarn mill, just cannot get anywhere on the moves it has made to undermine morale or divide the strikers."

The union is asking that Coosa-Thatcher pay its employes the same collateral benefits which all other unionized textile concerns in the South have won in recent contracts.

New Florida CIO Holds Convention

By RICHARD CONN

IN MARCH, 1948, the Florida CIO Council, for months in its death throes, its function crippled by Communist domination, was dissolved by the National CIO.

In Tampa on January 13 and 14, 1951, a revitalized Florida Council, free from Communist intrigue, held its first constitutional convention.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, presented the charter to the new council at a session of the convention, which met in the Chamber of Commerce Auditorium.

He said that the charter was revoked because the old council no longer represented most of the CIO unions, which had withdrawn because "the American working man is not going to be run by Communists.

"Build your faith around your CIO unions—with that faith you can literally move mountains," he said.

John V. Riffe, director of the CIO Organizing Committee lauded CIO's progress in the past few months in Florida under the director of William J. Smith, CIO's Florida regional director.

"The purpose of this convention," said Riffe, "is to organize the unorganized and to draw together the local unions in this state by forming a far-sighted and representative industrial union council."

Riffe also admonished the delegates to make the resolutions adopted by the convention "a living thing. It is the duty of local union officers to see that they are carried through."

THE CONVENTION passed a number of resolutions including one endorsing the work of the Citizens Retirement Committee for Florida.

Other resolutions:

Recommended that an all-out CIO organizing campaign be conducted in the state;

Urged every CIO local to carry on extensive PAC activity.

Roy Armstrong, Florida director of the Communications Workers, was elected president by acclamation, and James W. Short of Local 186, Brewery Workers, Tampa, was chosen secretary-treasurer.

Milwaukee CIO Pickets Foil Latest Trick Of Housing Foes

THE Milwaukee CIO went on the picket line last week—in quick, effective protest against a startling move by the city's landlords.

It was the day when Milwaukee property owners were supposed to go down to City Hall to pay their annual property taxes. Four members of the Property Owners' Association posted themselves right inside the tax collector's office and started trying to collect signatures to a petition to force a referendum on public low-rent housing for Milwaukee.

(The referendum question proposed by the landlords is the typical weasel-worded one under which the voters will have to vote "No" if they are for public housing and "Yes" if they are against it.)

The CIO picket line was quickly formed after a CIO member went down to pay his taxes. He phoned the Council office, in high indignation. About 10 officers of the CIO Council hastily made picket signs saying "This petition is misleading—don't sign it!" The CIO men marched in to the collector's office and started circling around the signature-seekers.

The resulting confusion caused Mayor Frank Zeidler to ask the building superintendent to have both groups removed from the building.

"We'll leave when they do," the CIO pickets said. The real estate lobbyists didn't want to leave. Finally, police came and escorted the landlord group out, with the CIO pickets cheering them on.

"We'll be here every time you show up," the pickets assured the lobbyists.

Won't Scab—So He's Fired

Lawrence G. Weiss, one of the East Coast's best labor reporters, has been fired by the Boston Herald-Traveler for refusing to operate a teletype to send edited stories from his city room to the newspaper's radio station.

A former Neiman fellow, Weiss insisted it was a reporter's job to "gather, edit or write" news and not to rob a telegrapher of a job by sending news to others than his own newspaper. The Herald-Traveler refused to give severance pay and the CIO Boston Newspaper Guild is suing for breach of contract.

It Makes A Man Stop And Think

WHAT'S wrong, in these times of "manpower shortage" and "booming employment," when 245 people over 45 years old apply for one job paying $34 a week?

Nobody knows.

But that's what happened when a New York employer put a two-line classified ad in the paper, saying: "Messenger, 40-hr., 5-day, $34, steady. Prefer retired man between 45-65." He got 245 written answers in three days.

Forty-five is not old. But after reading through the applications, the businessman said: "I think these people are scared to death that inflation and taxes are going to take the meat right off their tables. Either that or they've tried retirement for a few years and found it unbearable . . . It's almost terrifying."

See 'Em, Hear 'Em Plan Proposed For House

The "folks back home" may get a chance to see as well as hear how their representatives in Congress go into action if a resolution introduced in the House by Rep. Javits (R. N.Y.) becomes law.

The proposed amendment, to Rule XXV would provide for the televising and broadcasting of actual House sessions.

Javits said he got the idea from the "extremely successful" television coverage of the debates of the Security Council and General Assembly of the United Nations at their current sessions.

Conn. Council Pledges All-Out Aid In Defense

DELEGATES to the 13th annual Connecticut CIO Industrial Union Council convention, held in Bridgeport Jan. 13-14, pledged the "fullest possible support" to the government in mobilizing a victorious defense against communism at home and abroad.

Former Gov. Chester Bowles (D.) told the convention that conditions existing in the world "make it easy for communism to dig its roots."

"Two-thirds of all the people in the world will go to bed hungry tonight," Bowles said. "More than half of them cannot read or write. All over the world the average human being has never known anything but insecurity and hunger, famine and fear. That's a world in which communism grows. That's the kind of a world that represents a challenge to what you and I believe."

Council Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff stressed in his report the fact that during the last election, organized labor in the State achieved the best political results in the nation. He pointed out that the vote was the largest in any off-year election and that for the first time in Connecticut's history, several Democrats were elected to Congress in an off-year. They were U. S. Sens. Brien McMahon and William Benton and Reps. A. A. Ribicoff and John McGuire. All were supported by labor on the basis of their records.

Sviridoff paid tribute to the outstanding political action effectiveness of the United Labor Committee of Connecticut, consisting of the CIO, AFL and the Machinists, during the last election.

Gov. John Davis Lodge (R.) promised to fulfill the pledges of the State Republican platform and seek further liberalization of labor laws. He said that although civilian defense and mobilization must be major concerns of his administration, he believed labor legislation should be advanced too.

HE SPECIFICALLY cited to the convention legislation which would improve unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, off-the-job disability insurance and anti-discrimination measures. Of the last he said: "I say that men who are good enough to die for their country are good enough to enjoy equal treatment under our laws."

Ribicoff, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, made a strong address on foreign policy. He attacked the isolationism of Sen. Taft (R. O.), former President Hoover, and Joseph Kennedy.

"If we got out of Asia and Europe," he said, "two billion people would have only one place to go and the productive capacity of these countries would be in the hands of Russia."

THE CONVENTION passed resolutions opposing a Federal sales tax; condemning a petition of the Southern New England Telephone Co. for an increase in rates; advocating assistance of all CIO unions in the state in the organization of the underpaid employes of hospitals; proposing conservation and regional development of power and natural resources, and pledging support of resolutions adopted by the 12th annual CIO convention.

Other resolutions were adopted on segregation in public housing, apprentice training and repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

Sviridoff was reelected without opposition to his fourth term. Also reelected without opposition was Secy.-Treas. John J. Driscoll, who has held that position since the founding of the Council.

The convention by a constitutional amendment created a new office, that of assistant president. Daniel J. Gallagher, for many years a member of the council's executive board and Connecticut director for the Textile Workers, was elected. He was unopposed.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer attended the first convention of the reorganized Florida State Industrial Union Council in Tampa on Jan. 13 and 14, and addressed the delegates. The original charter had been revoked some three years ago because the Cominform attempted to use the council as a springboard for its vicious, undemocratic propaganda.

Allan Haywood

CIO Reg. Dir. William Smith has done a good job in organizing the various groups into another Council. There were some 150 delegates in attendance, a large part of whom were members of the Communications Workers of America-CIO.

The delegates adopted the full entire CIO program. A representative of the Governor spoke to the delegates and told of proposals of developing places for retired workers to live and settle in. The CIO program called for intensifying its organizational activity in the state, and bring more and more members into the CIO.

Roy Armstrong, of CWA-CIO, was elected president, and James W. Short, of the Brewery Workers, was elected secretary-treasurer of the council. Congratulations.

The writer, along with CIO Organizing Committee Secy.-Treas. Oral Garrison, journeyed to Birmingham, Ala., to address an Organizing Committee staff meeting, and later addressed a meeting of local officers in the Birmingham area.

He called upon the organizing staff and the local officers to intensify their organizational activity. They responded enthusiastically and pledged their complete and full support in rendering every aid possible. John Riffe, director of the Organizing Committee, also spoke to these groups. Brother Riffe and his staff have done a wonderful job in bringing the CIO to the workers of the South, and through their efforts more and more workers are coming into the fold of the CIO.

The writer will return to Washington and from there will journey to Boston, Mass., to attend the convention of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, Intl. Woodworkers of America, reports that in a representation election at Snively Groves, Inc., Waycross, Ga., the workers voted in favor of the IWA-CIO by 77 to 25 for no union. In a union shop election at the Mt. June Forest Products Co., Springfield, Ore., the workers voted for the union shop 38 to 14.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the Certified Chrome Co., Los Angeles, Calif., the workers voted in favor of the United Furniture Workers-CIO by 67 to 54 for an independent union.

DeShetler reports union shop election victories for USA-CIO at the following plants: Consolidated Western Steel Co., Maywood, Calif., 1158 for, 310 against; Western Pipe and Steel, Los Angeles, won by 91%.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports the following United Steelworker union shop victories: Chicago Freight and Car Co., Pueblo, Colo., 59 for, 2 against; Ramapole Ajax Co., Pueblo, 61 for, 2 against. Supervision of the above good work was handled by Sub-District Dir. Michael Soldreu and Intl. Rep. Dewey Blakely. Employes of William Ainesworth and Sons, Inc., Denver, Colo., also voted for the union shop by an overwhelming majority. This campaign was handled by Intl. Rep. Frank Richmond.

Dist. Dir. Charles Ford, USA-CIO, reports an election victory at the West Moreland Metal Mfg. Co., Philadelphia, Pa., by a vote of 201 for USA, 22 against.

The Newspaper Guild of New York, Local No. 3, gained another overwhelming victory in a union security election when members of the Morning Telegraph Unit of the Guild voted 60 to 1 in favor of the union shop provision.

British Miners Get Pay Increase

Britain's coal miners are getting pay increases and better working conditions. The National Coal Board has agreed to raise the pay of surface miners 70c a week, or 4.7%, to $15.40, and that of underground miners 98c a week, or 5.8%, to $17.78.

(The 350,000 soft coal miners in the United States average $15 a day. The 80,000 in the anthracite fields average $14.50 a day. Negotiations for higher pay and more benefits are due to open soon.)

Last year, of a total mine force of 708,000 men, 21,000 left for other jobs. The resulting shortage has forced the importation of American coal. Recently, in response to a plea by Prime Minister Attlee for more production, the miners promised to turn out 3 million extra tons by May 1. Production since the holidays has been low, however, because of an influenza epidemic.

HST Asks House Revise Rules On Vote Districts

PRESIDENT TRUMAN on Jan. 9 quietly cast a political bombshell into the House. In a special message, he suggested that Congress draw up new and tougher rules about the size of Congressional districts, restoring some that were in effect from 1911 to 1929 and adding a couple more.

This is the year when the state legislatures are faced with doing something about the number of Congressmen that are elected to the House in 1952. Seven states gain seats, six lose them, and the rest can—if they like—shift all the districts around within their state boundaries.

It's an important year, therefore, for obvious reasons.

Under the Constitution, the states are responsible for how the districts are apportioned, but Congress can lay out the ground-rules.

The present rules, drawn up in 1929 by a Republican Congress, are vague indeed. About the only requirement of any importance is that the total number of Representatives cannot exceed 435. The Clerk of the House takes the decennial census results, and certifies to the Governor of each state the number of House members to which the state is entitled. Period.

Concealed in the dry-as-dust wording of the President's message lies the clear conviction—shared by CIO — that representative government is being hurt because the legislatures, since 1929, have not done enough to reflect population changes accurately.

For instance: "Over the years, widespread discrepancies have grown up between the populations of the various Congressional districts. While some variation is inevitable, the extreme differences that now exist can and should be corrected.

"For example, there is one state in which, according to the 1950 census, the smallest district has a population of under 175,000 and the largest district has a population exceeding 900,000." (Note: This is Ohio. The large district is that of Rep. Bolton (R.), in and around Cleveland.)

"In many states, there are differences of two or three hundred thousand people," the President continued, "between the smallest and the largest existing districts in the state.

"While about half of the Congressional districts throughout the country are between 300,000 and 400,000 in population, there are some fifty districts with a population of 250,000 or less, and, at the other extreme, some fifty districts with a population of 450,000 or over.

"Furthermore, as population has increased, several States have added Congressmen-at-large instead of redistricting as they should."

THE PRESIDENT added: "Such defects in our system of Congressional districts obstruct the effective operation of the democratic principles on which our Government rests. It is fundamental to the whole structure of the Constitution that all citizens have equal representation, so far as practicable, in the House of Representatives.

"This basic principle is not carried out unless Congressional districts are drawn up to reflect population changes."

The message went on to point out that from 1842 to 1911, Congress required each state having more than one representative to divide itself into single-member districts, and so did not permit Congressmen-at-large. (Congressmen-at-large campaign and are elected on a state-wide basis, giving rise to the curious situation of Representatives in the House who are elected in the same manner as Senators but without their power.)

Furthermore, the President said, the statutes passed from 1911 to 1929 used to provide that there should be no "gerrymandering."

(The President did not use this word, which means setting up districts along political, not population or geographical, lines—but that's what he meant. His actual wording was: "Representatives should be elected by districts composed of contiguous and compact territory containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants.")

Truman called on Congress, therefore, to set up new standards for the state legislatures to follow, and—a pioneer note—to see to it, by requiring reports, that the states actually followed them.

Congressional reaction to the proposal was not loud, but it was intense. It requires very little imagination to understand why. The state legislatures—all but four of them—meet this year and if the new ground-rules are established, it must be done soon.

The states which will lose representatives are: Arkansas (1 seat), Illinois (1), Kentucky (1), Mississippi (1), Missouri (2), New York (2), Oklahoma (2), Pennsylvania (3), and Tennessee (1).

The gainers are: California (7 seats), Florida (2), Maryland (1), Michigan (1), Texas (1), Virginia (1), and Washington (1).

NLRB Aids Fired Iceman To Laugh Last

The Royal Palm Ice Co., of West Palm Beach, Fla., thought it had an airtight case in its firing of W. H. Rose until the National Labor Relations Board went to work on it.

Rose, a platform man, was sacked three days after Local 257 of the CIO Transport Workers lost an election at the ice plant. The company said Rose: (1) overstayed his vacation period; (2) was a temporary worker; (3) made trouble; (4) gave drivers too much ice; (5) gypped the cash register; (6) called the plant manager "an uncomplimentary epithet."

The NLRB investigation showed: (1) Rose didn't overstay his vacation; (2) two years was too long for a "temporary" worker; (3) the "trouble" consisted of asking others to join the union; (4) maybe the missing ice melted; (5) the same cash register was used by at least three other workers; (6) the plant manager didn't get around to complaining for a month and a half—after Rose started the union drive.

All this amounted to "discrimination," according to a three-man NLRB panel which ordered the rehiring of Rose with back pay and told the company not to interfere with future organizing attempts by the union.

GOP Senators Move To Enact FEPC Measure

FACED WITH the possibility of a presidential order for a World War II type of limited Fair Employment Practices Commission, Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) and 11 other Republican Senators last week moved to enact an FEPC measure which would prevent discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color or ancestry.

This was far more Republican names than have previously appeared on a bill of this kind. Among them were those of several Senators not previously identified as FEPC advocates.

In the last Congress, four Democrats and four Republicans were listed as supporting the same legislation sponsored by Ives, but it was a wholly Democratic bill that was acted on by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and blocked in the Senate.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), who will introduce a similar Democratic bill, said he "welcomed" Ives' action, but indicated his main emphasis is on "what is more possible—an executive order to set up a Fair Employment Practices Commission."

AT&T Did Lot Better Than Employes In 1950

LAST YEAR did you make $121 million more than you made in 1949, after all taxes were deducted?

If you did, you're as good an operator as the world's biggest monopoly, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which showed a total net profit of $351,161,644 for the 12-month period ending Nov. 30, 1950. This compares with a net of $230,696,265 during the preceding 12 months.

The average number of shares outstanding during the 1950 period was 27,203,930, and earnings per share amounted to $12.44 although the company continued to pay out only its normal $9 dividend rate, the same figure it has been paying out for the past 28 years. The extra $3.44 went into surplus.

THE COMPANY surprised no one by claiming 1950 a "successful year" for a number of reasons. Listed as beneficaries were customers, stockholders and employes.

The employes have plenty of reasons to contest the claim. The year 1950 was marked by almost constant labor-management friction, brought on by the company's refusal to grant reasonable wage increases.

The corporation financial report claims that quarterly dividend checks will be mailed to 200,000 stockholders who are employes. The average number of shares owned by the rank and file employe stockholder, from all indications, is in the one-to-five ownership bracket.

Bell was only one of a number of firms which reported recently that they did a lot better in 1950 than in 1949.

The Dow Chemical Co., for instance, said its take was $20,143,810, compared to $15,133,416 the year before. The West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. reported it went up from $9,015,000 in 1949 to $12,262,000 last year.

NAACP Aide Fights Army Bias In Korea

THURGOOD Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has been cleared to go to Japan to undertake the defense of 36 Negro enlisted men and officers accused of retreating against orders and convicted by a court-martial.

Marshall left for Tokyo Jan. 11 after nearly a month of effort to get clearance. He was refused admission by General Douglas MacArthur, but a direct appeal to MacArthur by NAACP Exec. Sec. Walter White resulted in clearance.

The accused men, members of the 24th Infantry, believe they were victims of an attempt at mass disciplinary action against Negro troops during the almost daily retreats in the early part of the Korean war. They claim that no similar action was taken against white troops who also retreated. They appealed to the NAACP for assistance.

MARSHALL said he will make a thorough on-the-spot investigation, spending about a month in Japan, and will then return to the U. S. and make a cross-country tour reporting his findings.

Meanwhile, NAACP asked for a guarantee of non-discrimination on the civil defense front. Clarence Mitchell, the association's Washington director, told the Senate Armed Services Committee that the NAACP objected strongly to the appointment of Millard F. Caldwell, former governor of Florida, to be civil defense chief, because of his "prejudice against colored people."

Mitchell said Caldwell might very well make "capricious decisions based on race" in his highly important job. He asked the committee:

"How can a man who is opposed to the voting rights of Florida colored citizens whom he has seen and lived with, protect the lives and property of colored citizens in Ohio, Minnesota or New York, whom he has not seen or lived with?"

THE NEW Jersey CIO Political Action Committee last week released a 75-page analysis of the PAC work and results in the 1950 elections, and found:

—That there definitely is a "labor vote," which can be turned out, but only by block and precinct work. (Endorsement and advertising are not enough.)

—That the Democratic Party or any other that wants the support of the people generally must adopt a fighting liberal platform. "Upper-income groups will not vote Democratic, regardless of appeal, but the size of the labor and low-income vote (which determines whether or not the Democrats win) depends on the appeal of the Democratic candidate and his platform."

—That there is an important liberal vote in the suburbs, which must not be "written off" because suburban voters by and large are conservative. ("The entire increase in the Democratic vote in the 11th district, for instance, in 1950, came in the suburbs, manned for the first time by PAC.")

—That in spite of PAC's best efforts, the highest percentage of the registered vote in 1950 was cast in the upper-income wards. The labor wards (those with a concentration of union membership) were second highest; the low-income wards third.

—That from 1948 to 1950, generally speaking, Democratic Congressional candidates in each city made their best improvement in the labor wards.

—That on the average, PAC brought out 76.7% of the registered CIO members and voters . . . a voting turnout more than 15% above the average for all other voters.

—But that on the other hand, in spite of heroic efforts, CIO members still are under-registered: 36.9% are not registered, compared with 29.7% not registered in the adult population in general.

The report, which was made public by Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council, commented that in New Jersey, the five incumbent Democrats elected for the first time in 1948 all retained their seats, and that in three other districts where PAC was active, Republican incumbents won by their narrowest margins in a decade.

Ask Probe Of Voters' Apathy

REP. J. JAVITS (R. N.Y.) thinks Congress — which was recently re-elected—ought to investigate why more people don't vote. He's introducing a resolution to that effect.

The figures he cites to prove his point are serious indeed—and they're official. Here they are:

In the 1950 off-year elections, only 60.5% of those who were registered actually voted; and only 43.7% of those who were of voting age expressed their opinion at the polls. In other words, our present Congress actually represents less than half of the total number of adults in the nation.

Javits, who introduced a similar resolution last year and didn't get anywhere with it, also released an analysis of about 600 replies to an article which appeared last fall in "This Week." The sample is far too small to be representative, but the replies are interesting. The question was: "Why Don't You Always Vote?"

The answers: Lack of reliable information on candidates—37%. Voter has too little choice between candidates—25%. Voting is too difficult—14%. Legal restrictions (poll tax, residence requirements etc.)—12%. Political corruption — 7%. Miscellaneous (didn't want to give their age to the registrar, etc.)—5%.

Among the 14% who said voting was too difficult, many gave examples. A New York woman said she had to spend a full hour in order to register. Others complained the ballot was too long and complicated. One California voter sent a sample ballot with sample literature, all in fine print, which would require an hour to digest.

The suggested solutions didn't prove much, but interestingly enough 21% said there should be a law making voting compulsory or else giving a small tax exemption to voters.

Peron Fires 1000 Strikers

Another story which makes American trade unionists name Dictator Peron as the man they would most enjoy throwing rocks at came out of Argentina last week.

The Argentine government fired 1000 striking railway employes when they refused to return to work. Then he drafted them into the Army. The strike, officially called by the Railway Workers Union, was a renewal of walkouts for higher wages and union security that started last November and December.

Auto Workers Sign New Hudson Pact

The CIO Auto Workers and the Hudson Motor Co. announced agreement last week on a new five-year contract with a cost-of-living clause for 23,000 workers.

The contract, which must be approved by the UAW workers, is identical to the union's agreements with Ford, General Motors and Chrysler. It carries an immediate 1c an hour increase to bring wages in line with those at the other companies, which went up that amount last month. Negotiations for a similar contract are being carried on with Willys-Overland, only major company still without a cost-of-living agreement.

Palm Beach Firm Warned On Lying

Goodall-Sanford, Inc., of Sanford, Me., makers of the popular Palm Beach fabrics, and its sales subsidiary, Goodall Fabrics, Inc., of New York, were ordered by the Federal Trade Commission last week to stop misbranding their woolen fabrics.

The companies agreed to a stipulation that some of the fabrics they sold were incorrectly labelled as to fibre content, others bore no labels showing the fibre content, and some shipments of wool waste did not carry the name or registered identification number of either company. The FTC ruled the practices violated the Wool Products Labeling Act and the FTC Act. The companies agreed to conform.

How To Save Headaches When Uncle Sam Points

REMEMBER that sunny day you left the Army? The last words you heard as you ran were the fond farewell of the top-kick. "You'll be back," he said. "You'll be back."

For many that prediction is now coming true. If you're one of those called up in the reserves—or if you're going into the armed forces for the first time—there are a number of things you should take care of before you leave. One company has published a list of such things. A check of each item on the list can save you a mess of trouble later on:

POWER OF ATTORNEY: To handle your affairs while you are away, you ought to give your wife, or your father, or your mother, a power of attorney.

PAPERS: Get all your valuable papers in one safe place—a safe deposit vault, if they are that valuable, or at least get them together in a tin box which you can turn over to your wife (and go through the papers with her, so she knows what's there).

WILLS: Prepare a will.

DEBTS: Make some provision about your debts while your are in service.

LIFE INSURANCE: Get your life insurance in order. Be sure you have designated the beneficiaries you want. Do you want the insurance paid lump-sum or in installments? Make arrangements to have your premiums paid. You want to change your insurance by reducing the cost without reducing the coverage.

LEASES: If you are renting, make some arrangement about your lease, to continue it or to get out of it. If you give proper notice, you have no liability under your lease after you enter the service.

FIRE INSURANCE: If you have fire and personal property insurance, make arrangements about cancelling the policies if you don't need them any more, or to pay the premiums when the premiums come due. If you cancel, you are due a refund.

CAR: Transfer the title of your car to whoever is going to use it. Same with your auto insurance. If your wife is going to drive, and she is going to drive a lot less than you, chances are you can get a refund on your insurance. And if you sell the car, you are entitled to a refund.

ADDRESS: Leave your address with someone besides your wife. In many cases, your union local is a good place.

VALUABLES: List everything of value you own, including all life insurance policies and all the benefits you are entitled to, and turn over the list to your wife or father.

INSTRUCTIONS: You ought to leave a list of instructions of all the things that have to be done with your wife or father: premiums to be paid, payments to made, where to go in case this or that comes up.

HEALTH INSURANCE: If you are covered by a health insurance program (Blue Cross or some other) see what can be done to continue coverage for your wife and children. If you make the proper arrangements now, you will save yourself sweating out a crisis at a time when you are far from home and not able to do anything about it.

HOME: If you are buying your home, find out what your rights are under your mortgage, and make some provision to keep up the payments or to defer them.

LAST WORD: If you have any feeling about how or where you want to be buried, in case that is necessary, leave instructions with your family.

DRAFT BOARD: If you are under 26 and you are called up in the reserves or National Guard, be sure to notify your draft board.

APPRENTICE: If you are an apprentice notify your local union secretary. If your local has a joint apprenticeship committee, notify the committee. If you are a veteran getting your training under the GI Bill or Public Law 16, be sure and notify the Veterans Administration office in your home town.

VOTE: If your state has absentee ballots, arrange to get them while you are away.

MAIL: If you want mail forwarded, send the post office a change-of-address card.

TAXES: Pay your property and income taxes.

CREDIT: Be sure you make some arrangement so that your family can borrow money in case of an emergency. If there is a credit union available, it is probably the best place.

BANK ACCOUNT: Make your bank account a joint account with your wife, with survivor rights.

OTHER POSSIBILITIES: There may be some things coming to you that you don't know about. Check with your local union on the following questions: who gets military leave; bonuses; vacation pay; insurance; service life insurance pensions; leave of absence on return; and miscellaneous benefits

Memphis Steel Local Gives To PAC 100%

If every CIO local union in the country follows the example of the Steelworkers Local 4455 in Memphis, Tenn., during 1951, PAC wont have to worry about finances.

Every member of Local 4455, —employed by Layne & Bowler —has already contributed to PAC for 1951. The workers were formerly members of an AFL union and are working under their first CIO contract, which was signed late in 1950.

The contributions were paid out of retroactive wage increases ranging from 15c to 22c an hour.

Murray To Join Red Cross Board

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Secy.-Treas. George Meany will become members of the governing body of the American National Red Cross at the ARC convention in June, Red Cross Pres. E. Roland Harriman has announced.

The Board of Governors authorized their election recently and both consented to serve, Harriman said.

Harriman added that Murray and Meany are persons "whose broad knowledge and experience will be of great value to the Board of Governors since that body is composed of men and women who reside in all parts of the country and who bring to its deliberations the points of view of all segments of the American people."

Truman Names Unit To Strike Balance On 'Security, Freedom'

A COMMISSION on Internal Security and Individual Rights, charged with seeking "the balance that can be struck between security and freedom," was established Jan. 23 by President Truman in an executive order.

To its chairmanship he called out of retirement Admiral Chester W. Nimitz. Later he named eight other distinguished citizens, chosen on a non-partisan basis, as members.

Basically, the committee will study the problem of how the country can guard its internal security and maintain, at the same time, the freedoms of its citizens. It must, in the words of the President's order, determine how "a free people can protect their society from subversive attack without at the same time destroying their own liberties."

The group will have a wide field of study. In one of the more important phases of its work it will examine the "effectiveness and fairness of the government's loyalty and security programs."

It will also consider laws having to do with loyalty and security — including the Internal Security (McCarran) Act passed last summer by congress after the President had vetoed it as unworkable and hysterical. In addition, it is expected to examine the loyalty programs of states, municipalities and private bodies.

The President directed the committee to make a report in a year, with interim reports in the meantime. It will have access to restricted information, which it was instructed to safeguard with care.

"I consider the task of the committee to be of extraordinary importance," said the President.

"The world is in the midst of a struggle between freedom and tyranny. The United States is one of the leaders of the free world—not just because we are powerful in material things, but because we have preserved and expanded the freedom of our people."

HE URGED that all citizens approach the problem in a serious and fair-minded way.

"We must not let our differences about how to solve these problems degenerate into partisan controversies," he said.

"We must continue to protect our security within the framework of our historic liberties, and without thought of partisan advantage or political gain."

McCarthy Gets His 1949 Tax Bill

Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), who said two weeks ago that "no one is getting me on taxes, though they certainly have tried," has been proved wrong again.

He's been ordered to pay $138.97 on his 1949 income by Feb. 23. He reported $17,120 income in 1949, which he offset by losses on sale of stocks and bonds, payment of interest to banks, finance companies and individuals, including relatives. State tax auditors reported he owed taxes on $5821.63 "not previously reported and on deductions disallowed."

"I guess it's really serious with those two—yesterday they swapped union buttons."

Food Prices Can Go Higher In Spite Of Freeze Order

AN OVER-ALL freeze of wages and prices was poised over the country as this edition of the CIO News went to press. It was expected to be handed down momentarily.

The proposed order, with some of its details missing, was approved Jan. 25 by the Defense Mobilization Board, headed by Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson. At that time its formal announcement was said to be a matter of hours, but disagreement over the missing details held it up.

Washington literally bubbled over with rumors regarding the freeze. Out of the confusion, however, it appeared certain that separate orders covering prices and wages would be issued by Economic Stabilization Administrator Eric Johnston.

On the afternoon of the following day, Johnston testified before the Joint Congressional Economic Committee that simultaneous orders would be made public "soon."

Policy decisions had been made, he said, and the only thing holding them up was "legal details." He said that no ration was contemplated at this time.

"I think we will have to stabilize all prices to begin with," he continued, indicating some of them may be unfrozen later.

Controls of both wages and prices are essential at the present, he claimed, "but should not have to be for long if other necessary action is taken to stabilize the dollar."

IT WAS understood that policy on specific details would be established later by the Price Control Administration, under Administrator Michael DiSalle, in the case of prices, and by the Wage Stabilization Board, headed by Chairman Cyrus W. Ching, in the case of wages and salaries.

CIO economists pointed out that about 50% of the foods ordinarily bought by the worker and his family are now selling below parity. This means that they can rise to parity before ceilings can be imposed on them, under the wording of the Defense Production Act.

Among them are poultry, eggs, vegetables and fresh fruits. They can still go up an average of 5% to 6% before reaching parity. If they do this, the increase in the over-all cost of living would be about 2.5%.

Consumers' Price Index Reaches New High Point

The consumers' price index of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics jumped in the 30-day period ending Dec. 15 to a new high point for the second consecutive month, the BLS reported Jan. 25.

Spearheaded by a 2.8% rise in retail food prices, it jumped 1.6% to 178.4, the largest one-month increase since September, 1947. The previous high was established on Nov. 15, when it soared to 175.6 by virture of an increase of one-half of one percent in the preceding month.

The December figure is 4.8% above the pre-Korean level in June, 1950, and 6.5% higher than a year ago. The food index stood at 215.4, and in the period between Dec. 15 and Jan. 2 increased an additional 1.2%.

The wage order was expected temporarily to put a halt to all increases in pay. The Wage Stabilization Board would quickly determine a policy, after the order was handed down, under which wage boosts would be authorized. There was considerable talk in Washington last week that increases of 10% above the levels of early 1950 would be permitted, with further increases to offset the jump in the cost of living. It was not at all clear at press time, however, that this would be the ultimate policy.

The Wage Stabilization Board also was reported unable to agree on a policy regarding disputes—whether, in fact, the board would handle them at all.

DiSalle and his aides had already begun the staggering task of determining prices for the millions of articles that flow in commerce. These were expected to be tight at first, then gradually released to ease the inequities that develop.

HOW WELL price controls would work was a matter of speculation. In the ranks of organized labor the speculation was pretty skeptical, because of its distrust of the Defense Mobilization Act and its firm conviction that it is unworkable, unclear and confusing.

The United Labor Policy Committee, representing CIO, AFL, Railroad unions and the Machinists, has stressed the loop-holes in the law that permit food prices to rise, the Act's failure to control speculation in basic commodities, and the provisions which prevent the Price Administrator from requiring manufacturers to maintain their quality standards and to hold them to certain proportions of productions at different price levels.

THE LAST set of loop-holes was cut into the act by members of Congress sympathetic to manufacturers who screamed they had suffered under the Price Control Act of World War II.

Under that legislation a shirt manufacturer, for instance, who put 50% of his production into $3 shirts, and 25% each into $4 and $5 shirts, was required to maintain that ratio of production and also to maintain his quality standards. Under the new law, the manufacturer can stop making $3 shirts entirely, if he wishes, turn out nothing but $4 shirts, and still be within the law. Nor does he have to stick to his previous quality standards.

Organized labor has made it clear, in airing its objections to the Defense Prodction Act, that it is not opposed to economic controls. But it insists that they be applied equally, and that the workers and small business men not be forced to shoulder an undue share of the burden.

DiSalle and Ching also appeared during the week before the Joint Congressional Economic Committee. The former merely told the committee he had submitted a price control program to Johnston. Ching spoke mostly in generalities and refused to be jockeyed into taking a position on any of the knottier phases of wage stabilization.

The Wage Stabilization Board is composed of representatives of labor, management and the public. CIO representative is Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers.

Two Fined $1100 For Flaunting NLRB Order

TWO PHILADELPHIA, Pa., corporation officers have been fined a total of $1100 in the first case of criminal contempt of a court order enforcing a ruling of the National Labor Relations Board.

A. S. Levin, president of the Star Metal Mfg. Co., was fined $1000 and his son-in-law, Jerome P. Heilwell, vice-president, $100. The company must pay court costs.

The officers admitted being guilty of both criminal and civil contempt and asked for leniency, a far different attitude than they took toward the organizing efforts of Local 14, AFL Office Employes Union.

After an organizing drive, Local 14 was certified as bargaining agent for Star's clerical employes by the NLRB in July, 1948. After two fruitless months, the union filed refusal-to-bargain charges against the company, under the Taft-Hartley Act. An NLRB trial examiner found the company guilty in January, 1949, and the full NLRB confirmed his opinion the next month and directed the company to bargain with the union.

Four months later NLRB got a court order to enforce its stand. In August, 1949, the company still refused to meet the union until NLRB stepped in and said it would initiate contempt proceedings unless a meeting was held.

THIS MEETING was Aug. 3. The company refused union proposals, said it would have some of its own by Dec. 6, four months later. Actually it submitted the counter-proposals in March, 1950.

There was a two-week strike by the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at the plant during this period and Levin claimed the strike, plus the Korean war, put him in a bad financial position and were "extenuating circumstances" which kept him from dealing with the AFL Office Employes' Union.

In July, 1950, 13 months after the court order, a mutual agreement was reached, but Levin kept refusing a meeting to sign, although the NLRB's attorney said it was "just a question of taking out a pen and signing a paper." The contract was finally signed in Dec., 1950, less than a month before the two officers were hauled before the court and fined, and almost 2½ years after the union was certified.

Circuit Judges Maris and Hastie and Chief Judge Biggs of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit heard the case.

The judges said they considered the actions of Levin and Heilwell "deliberate flouting of the law."

Business Seeks To Abolish 40-Hour Week

Present International Crisis Used As Excuse By Those Who Have Been Reaping Huge Profits As Result Of Mobilization

By ALLAN L. SWIM

SOMETIMES it appears that the greed of Big Business knows no bounds—not even in times of great national stress.

A person doesn't go into business just for fun—and an economy such as ours can't function unless there's a profit for owners and investors.

But certainly the right to operate business enterprises should carry along with it a responsibility for fair treatment to employes and customers.

Unless there is such a responsibility—and it is carried out—our system will inevitably end up on the rocks and be replaced by something different—perhaps by some form of socialism.

Business and industrial leaders should know this better than anybody else—but the actions of many of them in recent months indicate they don't give a hang.

Let's start with the beginning of the Korean war to get a picture of what has been happening to our economy.

Although there were no shortages of consumer goods at the beginning of the conflict, prices started shooting upward. They've been at it ever since.

Prices of strategic mobilization materials have skyrocketed in many instances.

IT BECAME OBVIOUS months ago that our country was headed for serious inflation unless Congress acted promptly and wisely.

Congress acted—but not wisely.

Largely because of the influence of Big Business, a majority of our lawmakers passed an "economic stabilization act" which could not possibly stabilize our economy with any degree of fairness to all the people.

One big loophole was provided by the section of the law which make it impossible to freeze food prices.

DURING THE SUMMER and fall profits mounted rapidly and so did the need for more money with which to finance our mobilization drive.

There clearly was a need for a workable excess profits tax—a tax which would prevent war profiteering.

Big Business and its organizations immediately set up a hue and cry against such a levy. (Despite this, an excess profits tax was imposed.)

And right now segments of Big Business are planning to move in quickly when new tax legislation comes up—move in and try to shift an unfair portion of the load to the nation's wage earners.

And, on top of this, big industries are now building or planning to build huge plants, the cost of which will be "written off" in five years through a special tax "dispensation" plan.

Now comes to light a new campaign designed to hit wage earners where it will hurt most—in the paycheck.

In the name of patriotism, these advocates are trying to do away with the payment of overtime after 40 hours.

IN THE LIGHT OF World War II experience the idea is ridiculous. All—or nearly all—of our national leaders agreed early in the last war that the 40-hour week shouldn't be disturbed.

For the most part, the business trade associations went along with the idea.

There might come a time when Big Business could justify such a campaign but it won't arrive until Big Business has made sacrifices at least equal to those made by wage earners.

And the way things have been going it appears that such an event is a long way off.

IT WON'T WORK!

In times of war and mobilization there is always a group which advocates that labor be conscripted.

There is such a group in the present crisis and its members have been talking quietly about the time "when it will be necessary to draft workers just like we draft soldiers."

The question of whether this should be done isn't being debated openly in Washington yet but some agency officials are saying—foolishly—that it may have to be considered "before too long."

Usually they put the matter in a somewhat different light. When asked about it. they explain that "the time for such a thing hasn't arrived yet."

It's true that the time hasn't arrived yet—and if we're smart it never will arrive.

There are two things which should be demonstrated clearly before serious consideration is even given to a labor draft.

The first is that conscript labor could and would produce more than free labor.

The other is that our situation had become so serious that everybody and everything would have to be drafted for government service.

There is nothing in the history of our nation or any other nation to indicate forced labor can outproduce free labor—and those who best know American workers are convinced labor conscription simply will not work.

And it's certain that the average American would rebel at the idea of being assigned to a job with a private employer who could profit from his work.

THIS IS NOT INCONSISTENT

An argument such as the one advanced here often causes people to ask, "How can labor be so inconsistent? In one breath you demand control of prices and in the next you demand that there be no control over labor."

There is no inconsistency about it. Labor would have welcomed voluntary price control if it would have worked. Past events had shown clearly it wouldn't work.

And past events have indicated clearly that a labor draft won't work, either.

Instead of spending a lot of time talking about labor conscription it would be much better to talk about methods of aiding free workers in achieving the tremendous production our nation will need.

Housing will soon become a major problem in some defense production areas unless the government steps in quickly with a real building program. Men and women can't work if they have no place to live.

Another thing that may retard production—unless the right kind of action is taken—is the lack of provisions for transporting workers from one part of the country to another.

And if things get really tight it will become necessary to build nurseries and nursery schools in certain areas if we intend to take fullest advantage of our trained womanpower.

The reactionaries probably will say these are "socialistic proposals." They are not—but the idea of a labor draft certainly is as totalitarian as anything Russia has done to its labor forces.

Norway Believes In Democracies

COPIES of a pamphlet published by the Norwegian Labor Party show how the sturdy citizens of that bulwark of democracy, located but minutes by bomber from Russia, look at the disordered situation in which the world finds itself.

It also demonstrates the faith of the Norwegians in cooperation, their confidence that a strong front of the democratic nations, working together in the economic and military fields, will bring about an enduring and prosperous peace.

The pamphlet is printed in colors and has many maps, drawings and graphically presented charts. It is entitled "These Facts Mean Peace," which gives a clue to its contents. It has a short foreword:

"A totalitarian aggressor attacks—
"When—
"the democratic nations are confused and divided within
"the democratic countries weak and unprepared
"the democratic countries are isolated and hesitating"
"A totalitarian aggressor fears to attack—
"When—
"the free nations have the will to resist
"the democratic countries are strong and well prepared
"the democratic countries are united for their common defense."

It points out that the "defense of peace can never be a surrender to force," and that with a single stroke "the aggressive war in Korea put an end to all illusions about the Kremlin's will to co-operate in peace."

The Communist 'peace offensive,' which was started by the Soviet general staff while the attack was being prepared, was brought into full light of day when the first North Korean troops rode across the South Korean border in Russian tanks," it continues.

"Everyone who will and can see is today aware of the impending danger represented by the gigantic Soviet war machine . . .

"THE MUNICH appeasement will remain in history as a monument commemorating the betrayal of small nations.

"The United Nations action in Korea will mark the beginning of a period in history in which free nations stand together in solidarity and refused to submit before threats of aggression and slavery."

The pamphlet says that the resources of the democracies are far greater than those of the Soviet Union, and that "a modern war is won in the factories." The outrage of Korea compelled them to recognize their military weakness, it continued, and to overcome it.

"However senseless it may seem," it continues, "there is no choice if the democratic nations are to avoid war and the loss of freedom: a greater part of their resources must be deployed for the reconstruction of an effective defense.

The democracies have learned that the dictators respect nothing but strength, that weakness invites them to attack. As soon as the war of aggression in Korea was under way, one democratic country after another decided to increase its defense budget. Norway was one of them. At the same time, the United States promised to grant military aid of $4 billion to Western Europe in 1951. The Committee of Deputies of the Atlantic Pact organization at once went to work to co-ordinate the European defense front.

"The free nations must make an effort to secure their peace and freedom. Meanwhile they get a breathing space through their atomic superiority. It was not without reason that the Cominform 'peace campaign' was directed against the only weapon totally dominated by the Western world . . .

" . . . The free nations must stand together. The free nations must now build up their military preparedness, in order that they may live and work without the fear that weakness generates. And until the totalitarian world agrees to settle international disputes by peaceful means, until it agrees to general disarmament of all weapons, the democracies have only two alternatives: to increase their preparedness or to surrender unconditionally."

THE FREE Nations, says the pamphlet, "will not be divided and dispersed into tempting morsels for the agressor to swallow." More and more they are swinging to collective living and acting—the Benelux, Organization for European Economic Cooperation, the Schuman Plan, the Council of Europe, the Western Union and the 12-nation North Atlantic Pact. Each of these is discussed briefly under the general heading, "Peace Through Strength."

The pamphlet concludes with a graphic presentation of the comparative resources, broken down into categories, of the Soviet Union, Western Europe and the United States and Canada.

One Strike Can't Void Association Contract

An employer in an association-wide bargaining agreement can't cancel a union agreement because employes of another association member go out on strike, the NLRB has ruled.

Southwestern Wholesale Grocery Co. at Tuscon, Ariz., announced July 18, 1950 it would operate "non-union" after a local of the AFL Teamsters went on strike against James A. Dick Co. A three-man NLRB panel ruled "that after the collapse of joint negotiations, a union may properly seek to enter into separate negotiations." It ordered Southwestern to bargain with the union.

Argument Expected But Soldier Agreed

IT'S A LONG way from the heart of Texas to the 38th parallel in Korea, but Joe, a young soldier, made it all in one piece.

It's much farther back when you're not all in one piece, but Joe made the trip.

He recently was sent to a hospital in the Washington, D. C., area and after recovering partially from his wounds decided he should see the nation's capital.

He hobbled on his crutches and one leg to the edge of a highway leading into Washington and started thumbing.

A passing CIO representative picked him up and took him to town—and on the way Joe told his story.

JOE SAID HE was born and reared in a small town in Texas and hadn't "gotten around much" until he was drafted into the Army.

Army life in this country wasn't so bad but things got tough soon after he landed in Korea.

His outfit moved slowly up the peninsula and finally crossed into North Korea —and then Joe "got it."

The medics did the best they could but they couldn't save one of his legs. He didn't blame the doctors, only the "gooks."

Before long Joe was on his way to Japan and then he was sent back to this country.

But Joe, speaking with a deep Texas drawl, didn't want to talk about the war.

He wanted to talk about what Joe was going to do in the future.

THE CIO representative, who served in the Army in World War II, tried to cheer Joe up.

"I know how a guy must feel when he loses a leg," he said, "but that doesn't mean the end of everything.

"There are a lot of fellows with only one leg who have been able to hold down good jobs."

They talked along this line for a while and Joe expressed interest in getting some special training that would help him after he returned to work.

The CIO man said there were many places where such training could be secured. He gave Joe the names of some organizations which might help him.

SOON THE conversation began switching from one subject to another—and the CIO man kept the soldier talking by asking questions.

Joe said he liked Texas awfully well but didn't intend to go back.

"My folks are dead and I don't have any brothers and sisters," he said. "I think I'd like to see some more of the country and then settle down in the North or East—if I can find a job."

Joe was asked about Texas. He told about his neighbors and the customs of the area which were different from those of other places he had been.

He liked the people—"awfully friendly folks"—but he just didn't want to go back home. Maybe it was because he was crippled.

UP TO THIS point there had been no disagreement between Joe and the CIO man—so the latter decided he'd find out if he could rouse the ire of the soldier. He wanted to learn if there was any fire left in the lad.

He switched the conversation back to Korea and then quickly to American race problems.

"Joe, I've been doing a lot of thinking about that war over in the Far East," he said, "and I've reached one conclusion that may sound unusual.

"I'll bet you that if we'd done away with racial segregation last year it would have done you more good over there than if you'd had a couple of more divisions."

Joe, without hesitation, declared, "Mister, nobody ever said anything with more truth to it!" A.L.S.

Lawyers In Congress Outnumber All Other Professions

MANY A GOOD union member will tell you that the trouble with contract negotiations is lawyers, and some unions deliberately bar lawyers when they go to the mat with the boss.

Maybe that's the trouble with Congress —too many lawyers. To be exact, there are 243 in the House, and 61 in the Senate. That's a little more than half the House, and two-thirds of the Senate. Two of the eight women in the House, Reva Beck Bosone (D. Utah) and Ruth Thompson (R. Mich.), were judges. Many Senators are former judges and mayors.

And of course, most of them are professional politicians. According to a compilation of the 82nd Congress by Congressional Quarterly, three-fourths of the members of the House and all but five Senators have held other public office. There are 27 ex-governors and 30 ex-congressmen in the Senate.

The age range is 27 to 87, with the Senators averaging 56 and the Representatives 52. Youngest is freshman Rep. Patrick J. Hillings (R. Cal.) who is 27. Oldest is Rep. Robert L. Doughton (D. N.C.) who is 87. Five others are over 80. Youngest Senator is Russell Long (D. La.) who is 32. Oldest is Sen. Theodore Green, who is 83. Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D. Tenn.) is 81.

THERE ARE 14 Senators between 70 and 80, and 17 between 60 and 69. There are 41 between 50 and 59. There are only four under 40. They are Long, Nixon (R. Cal.), Smathers (D. Fla.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.).

A few of the congressmen come from the ranks of organized labor. Reps. Shelly (D. Cal.), Leonard Irving (D. Mo.), Roy Weir (D. Minn.) and George M. Rhodes (D. Pa.) were AFL officials. John E. Fogarty (D. R.I.) was president of the Providence Bricklayers Union.

Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R. Utah), on the other hand, is an ex-president of the National Association of Manufacturers. Manufacturers of name-brand products include Rep. Thurmond Chatham (D. N.C.) (blankets) and Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) (electrical appliances).

There are several former ministers in the House, including Adam C. Powell, Jr., (D. N.Y.) and Charles A. Eaton (R. N.J.). There are 70 teachers and professors in the House; 12 in the Senate. The House has eight doctors and dentists; the Senate one dentist. Many congressmen are farmers.

A majority in both houses are veterans, many with amazing war records.

If you wanted to name the average Congressman, he would probably be Smith or Jones. There are four Smiths in the House and three in the Senate; four Joneses in the House; and four Johnsons [if you count Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D. S.C.)].

REP. ADOLPH J. Sabath (D. Ill.) set a record Dec. 28 for continuous service in Congress. The 84-year-old dean of the House, with almost 44 years to his credit, surpassed the previous record of former Sen. Morrill of Vermont, who died in 1898.

The Illinois Congressman, because of his high seniority, holds the chairmanship of the powerful Rules Committee, which has an important voice in deciding the order in which legislation goes to the House floor. But his is a lone voice, for the familiar Dixiecrat-Republican coalition commands a majority of the committee.

Seniority is very important in Congress. Congressmen are ranked in their committees according to seniority. The senior member of the majority party is automatically chairman. The others sit in order of their rank, and frequently are given a chance to ask questions or express their views only in order of seniority. LPA

Savants View TV For Week, Find Educational Value Low

A man who doesn't like detective stories or westerns can take a pretty dim view of television.

Take Prof. Donald C. Horton of the Univ. of Chicago, for example. Horton, along with Dr. Dallas Smythe of the Univ. of Illinois, conducted a week-long survey of shows on New York's seven TV stations for the National Association of Educational Broadcasters.

They found more than half the shows were alleged "drama," whodunits, and thataways and that one out of every eight shows was aimed directly at kids. They took the trouble to gather all this information to press their case before the Federal Communications Commission for allotment of 25% of all TV channels for educational purposes.

Less than 1% of the total broadcast time was given to instructional type programs for children and the only genuine educational program during the week was a half-hour science program from Johns Hopkins Univ.

Carey's Castigation Of Isolationists Gets Favorable Comment

CIO SECY.-Treas. James B. Carey's recent attack on isolationism as communism's fifth column has attracted widespread comment—most of it favorable.

The speech was delivered early this month at the convention of the Ohio CIO Council at Columbus. Carey branded isolationists "virtual traitors," demonstrated the weakness of their position, and called upon organized labor to educate all Americans "on the real way to fight communism, with arms, with ideas, with economic aid."

Messages of approval were received by Carey, who also is president of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, not only from CIO leaders, but from AFL spokesmen, members of Congress and others in all walks of life. Some of the other comment was less favorable.

A sampling of statements made by those outside the CIO who read or heard the speech follows:

Rep. Blatnik (D. Minn.): "Agree that the isolationist position lacks validity. However, there is a rising tide of isolationism at the grass roots. It is for this reason that some effort is needed to re-sell the American people."

Rep. Price (D. Ill.): "I assure you I am in accord with your views."

Rep. Kelley (D. Pa.): "Enjoyed reading your views, especially your statements on pages 4 and 5." (Pages 4 and 5 of the address include this remark: "Wittingly or unwittingly, the Tafts and the Hoovers ars as much in partnership with Joseph Stalin today as they were with Hitler and Mussolini a decade ago.")

Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.): "Let me thank you for enclosing a copy of your address."

Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.): "Taken as a whole, may I say that I find your statements cogent and sound." But, he had a few criticisms. "I believe that your statement that the 'Taft-Hoover-McCormick axis serves the Kremlin' is all too true, but I also believe that it is of the greatest importance to be extremely careful to make it clear beyond peradventure that the main fault of this group is stupidity and not an evil intent to hand the free world to Joe Stalin and Co."

Rep. Bailey (D. W. Va.): "I readily agree with your opinion that it is time we put a stop to the growing tide of isolationism for it is, as you say, Communism's fifth column in America."

Ancil B. Payne, executive assistant to Rep. Mitchell (D. Wash.): "It is high time a few of the facts which you cite are made known to the public."

W. J. Dougherty, information director, Dept. of the Interior: "I think it is a fine statement and I am sure that, as a result of the alertness and the vigor of such organizations as the CIO and the inherent good sense of the American people, isolationism will be rejected as a policy for the U. S."

William Foster, Administrator, Economic Cooperation Authority: "You certainly exhibit a keen awareness of the evils of isolationism."

Rep. Madden, (D. Ind.): "I want to congratulate you on the thoughts which you set out."

Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.): "I go along a certain distance with you in the thoughts expressed in your speech. I cannot, however, go all the way."

William Green, president, AFL: "Your attitude toward isolationism is, in my opinion, the same as the attitude expressed by the representatives of organized labor everywhere in the U. S. You expressed these views in a very clear and definite way."

George Harrison, president, AFL Brotherhood of Railway Clerks: "Certainly, now is no time to abandon the democratic forces to the Kremlin and crawl in our shell."

Hugo Ernst, president, AFL Hotel & Restaurant Workers: "I think your sharp attack on the Taft-Hoover-McCormick axis for the comfort and help they give to all brands of totalitarianism is well taken."

John M. Eklund, president, AFL Teachers' Union: "This type of aggressive interpretation of our responsibility in the free world should be pressed."

Frederick L. Allen, editor, Harper's Magazine: "While I am on your side in the argument, I cannot go along with you in branding 'those men who advocate giving up our allies in this life-and-death struggle' as 'virtual traitors,' or in saying that 'isolationism today is communism's fifth column'; or that it is 'as much our enemy as the communism it serves.' . . . I strongly incline to the feeling that they are wrong, but I believe it does harm rather than good to throw accusations at them."

Jonathan Daniels, editor, Raleigh, N. C., News and Observer: "I wasn't surprised to find you standing up and slugging it out with the Hoovers and the Tafts, but it makes me feel good that you are."

Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., Harvard University: "It is an excellent job; and having just returned from Ohio myself I know how badly it was needed. Keep it up."

Stanley Gewirtz, Washington lawyer: "Your speech was a large courageous stride in the right direction."

William Constantine, U. S. Navy, from Japan: "I have always been against Taft and Hoover, but not this time."

B. A. Conklin, Fairhaven, N. J.: "To suggest or whisper that Mr. Hoover and Mr. Taft are traitors, as you did, indicates the low level of smearing attack you and your outfits can descend to."

James G. Patton, president, National Farmers Union: "I think Taft and Hoover are doing the best job Communist Russia has had done for it yet."

Republicans In Ohio House Spike Unity

The Republican majority in the Ohio House of Representatives doesn't think much of bipartisanship—even when the country is in a state of crisis, State Rep. John C. Smith (D.) of Dayton found to his surprise.

Smith introduced a resolution calling on both parties to "set aside selfish interests . . . and petty prejudices" in view of the grave international situation. The Republicans howled it down on a voice vote.

Milwaukee Journal:

'Time To Remind Taft He Was Elected Senator From Ohio'

THE MILWAUKEE Journal, a conservative newspaper which is independent in politics, has turned its editorial spotlight lately on Sen. Taft (R. O.) and his military and foreign policy stand.

It found the view rather dim.

In one editorial it described him as a saboteur of U. S. foreign and military policy with a delicate sense of timing, taking a position that offers nothing new and advancing arguments "made again and again in the United Nations by Russia's Jacob Malik and Andrei Vishinsky."

HIS INVITATION to the United States "to take the futile road to isolationism and to abandon the rest of the world to the aggression of communism," it continued, must be making this country, to our allies, "look as dependable as a paper house in a windstorm."

"America cannot afford to risk Sen. Taft's way," the editorial concluded.

"America will remember that it was Sen. Taft who, in February, 1941, 10 months before Pearl Harbor, said that the danger of attack by Japan was simply 'fantastic.' He now says of Russia: 'I do not myself see any conclusive evidence that they expect to start a war with the United States.'

"Sen. Taft has been painfully wrong in almost everything he has ever said about foreign and military policy before World War II and again after it. He is wrong now. He is either blind to the peril of economic, political and military strangulation that would follow our abandonment of Europe to Russia—or he is willing to ignore that peril in his overwhelming zeal for his own political advantage."

IN ANOTHER editorial a few days later, the Journal approved Secy. of State Acheson's acceptance of Taft's offer to discuss foreign policy, in the hope that out of it "might come some formula to end Sen. Taft's confusing and divisive attacks on our diplomatic and military policies." It continued:

"We must confess, however, to some of the bewilderment that seemed to creep into Secy. Acheson's further reply: 'But we have been discussing foreign policy all the time, and working it out, with the people chosen by Sen. Taft and the Republicans to represent them in such matters.'"

The editoral went on to explain:

"The foreign relations committee of the Senate consists of 13 members. Last session there were eight Democrats and five Republicans. This session there will be seven Democrats and six Republicans. Republican members are designated by the committee on committees of the GOP Senatorial delegation and are approved by the entire delegation . . .

"Sen. Taft is entitled by seniority to have a place on this committee. He has never sought it. As a Republican leader, as chairman of the party's policy committee, as 'Mr. Republican' he has had a major voice in choosing those who have served and those who will serve on the committee.

"Therefore, under the system with which we operate, the Republican members of the committee speak, in their dealings with the State Department, for Sen. Taft and all other Republican members."

TWO SITUATIONS which contribute to confusion and add to the difficulty of achieving unity are pointed up by Taft's "maneuverings," the editorial says. It continues:

"The present controversy, on the debate level, at least, is almost exclusively a Republican one.

"Democrats in the administration and in the Congress are almost unanimously in back of the present Truman-Acheson-bipartisan foreign policy.

"It is Republican spokesmen—Hoover, Dewey, Taft, Stassen, Knowland, Capehart and various others—who are offering views differing violently with each other. The nation would have to fly apart if it were to go the various directions that Republican leaders are pointing."

Taft's maneuverings also point up the riddle of his own status, the Journal finds. It concedes he is a Republican "of some proportions" and has quite a following.

"But he has no position of direct executive responsibility," the editorial continues. "He has never served on the foreign relations or the military affairs committees of the Senate and he has never shown interest in either diplomatic or military matters. Yet he is now giving the nation the most detailed advice on these most complex problems.

"He speaks as if he represented all Republican thought, certainly all Republican senatorial thought, although he obviously does not. He proposes to bypass the members of his own party, whom he himself has helped choose to represent him, on matters of foreign policy.

"He 'offers' to 'negotiate' with the President and the Secretary of State. Truly he acts, as James E. Reston of the New York Times put it recently, as though he were 'a sovereign body' and the administration must 'restore diplomatic relations' with him.

"Perhaps it is time for someone to call Sen. Taft's attention to the fact that he was elected senator from Ohio in the last election; that he has not yet been elected President of the United States or even chosen as the Republican party's candidate for that honored position."

Don't Shortchange Health—Ewing

Demands of the military for rationed materials can not be considered to the exclusion of the basic health needs and the over-all strength of the civilian economy, Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing said Jan. 26 in a speech before the drug, chemical and allied trades section of the New York City Board of Trade.

The Federal Security Agency is a claimant agency before the National Production Authority in respect to civilian school and hospital construction and the distribution among civilians of supplies and equipment needed in the fields of health, education, welfare, recreation and related activities.

"You cannot shortchange the health of a nation beyond a certain point without weakening its basic military and industrial structure," Ewing said. "Our job is to protect the consumer. Wherever possible, we shall act to get full recognition for the civilian health requirements of the nation—on the principle that this recognition constitutes an essential factor in the over-all defense."

Green Steps Down As Head Of Shipyard Union

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

JOHN GREEN, head of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers since its formation in 1934, stepped down from that office at the union's 15th convention, held in Boston last week.

In an emotion-filled speech, Green announced his decision not to seek re-election to the presidency, and turned the gavel over to Vice-Pres. John Grogan of Hoboken, N. J. Grogan was scheduled to be elected to the IUMSWA top post without opposition on the final day of the convention.

Green's retirement from the shipyard union office had been foreseen when the CIO announced two weeks ago that he had been selected as chairman of the newly formed United Railroad Workers of America, which will carry on organizing activity among non-operating rail employes.

After conversations with CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Green told the nearly 200 delegates who attended the sessions at the Hotel Kenmore he reached his decision to retire "in the interest of unity in our organization."

PROMISING his cooperation and help in the future, Green recalled that "more than any other labor organization in these United States, our union has been affected by the upswings and downturns of industrial activity."

"I have known the good years and the bad," Green commented. "I have been in the middle of our advances, and on the spot in our setbacks.

"I helped this union grow to be one of the nation's largest, during World War II, and I knew the stresses and strains and hardships, when the shipbuilding and repair industry faded away almost to nothing."

Grogan, who succeeds Green, also has been active in the union's affairs for many years. He also has been serving as a city commissioner of Hoboken, N. J., for the past several years.

The "stresses and strains" mentioned by Green were evident in the report which he, Grogan and Secy.-Treas. Ross Blood submitted to the convention. It reflected the serious problems of a union faced with a sleeping industry and with jobs at a premium during much of the post-war period.

But the officers' report also voiced optimism for the future, with the nation's shipyard and repair facilities expanding to meet the needs of the national defense effort.

All three union officers joined in an urgent plea to raise the amount of per capita paid each month to the national union headquarters to a level high enough to finance expanded organizing jobs in the months ahead. Discussion of the issue brought out the sharpest debate of the convention.

The issue came before the convention in words that underscored the serious problem facing the union. The officers said flatly that higher per capita was needed to give the IUMSWA "the strength to continue." They added that without financial and moral help from the CIO during the past 24 months, it would have been difficult for the union to survive.

With nine votes to spare, the convention passed by the necessary two-thirds majority a constitutional change lifting the per capita to the national office from 65c a member a month to $1.

In another action, the union instructed all locals to seek wage boosts to bring average pay up to $2 an hour in privately-owned shipyards.

Although one large local at Camden had seceded from IUMSWA months ago, the officers appealed for a new sense of unity and voiced hope that the Camden workers would return to the union's fold.

AFL craft unions which have sought to raid the union's members were severely criticized. The IUMSWA leadership charged flatly that certain AFL practices in a number of contract talks during the past two years had "sold shipyard workers into virtual wage slavery. They did that in order to kill our union."

THE EFFORT.. failed, the IUMSWA convention was told, through the "a most super-human effort" of the union's officers, staff and membership.

In addition to fights with employers, raiding unions and internal divisions, IUMSWA during the past two years has been concerned by lack of federal government policy for building up the strength of the American merchant marine, the delegates were told.

Part of the blame for this was put squarely up to the shipping industry, and the union said the building and repair companies were caught in the middle of this dispute.

"In report after report," the union said, "we have warned that in order to obtain assistance, the shipping industry must eliminate those practices which brand it in the eyes of the average citizen as a pilferer from the public purse."

POINTING out that shipyard construction for the emergency is still lagging behind, the union stressed the need for maintenance of a strong merchant marine during times of peace.

"We have seen as never before how a defense crisis, as we have had in Korea, makes it more than important that the American maritime and shipbuilding skills be kept in operation and given full employment," the Green-Grogan-Blood report declared.

Noting that it had won pensions from a number of shipyards, the union leaders said that future wage policies might have to be fixed in the light of governmental controls and other considerations.

In case of wage controls, the union was urged to "carry forth the message of stabilization, its purpose and its lessons." Recalling experience under the Shipyard Stabilization Program during World War II, they called for care to avoid repeating "the errors" made during the wartime period.

"Once forewarned is forearmed," they added, and such a three-way stabilization arrangement "is the only hope of our members in any coming emergency."

The union was urged by its leaders to move quickly, if the industry's jobs expand in number, to seek union security clauses in coming contracts.

"Only under a union shop can we assume the necessary responsibilities inherent in the functioning of American trade unions during a war."

Bringing strong messages of support to the union were CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who spoke on the first and second days of the meeting.

Haywood praised the work of Green and Grogan, and vowed that the CIO would continue to work in close harmony with the union.

Calling for a vastly-strengthened merchant marine, Haywood declared:

"We can't let mothball methods run us. Our mothball fleet (the ships taken out of service at the end of World War II) was obsolete when it was put away. One atomic bomb could sink them all in one convoy."

The CIO vice-president said that new ships, capable of speeds essential to run away from submarines, are an essential part of national defense.

Haywood praised the shipyard union's democratic policies, and predicted that Communist agents would make little headway in infiltrating into the ranks of organized labor.

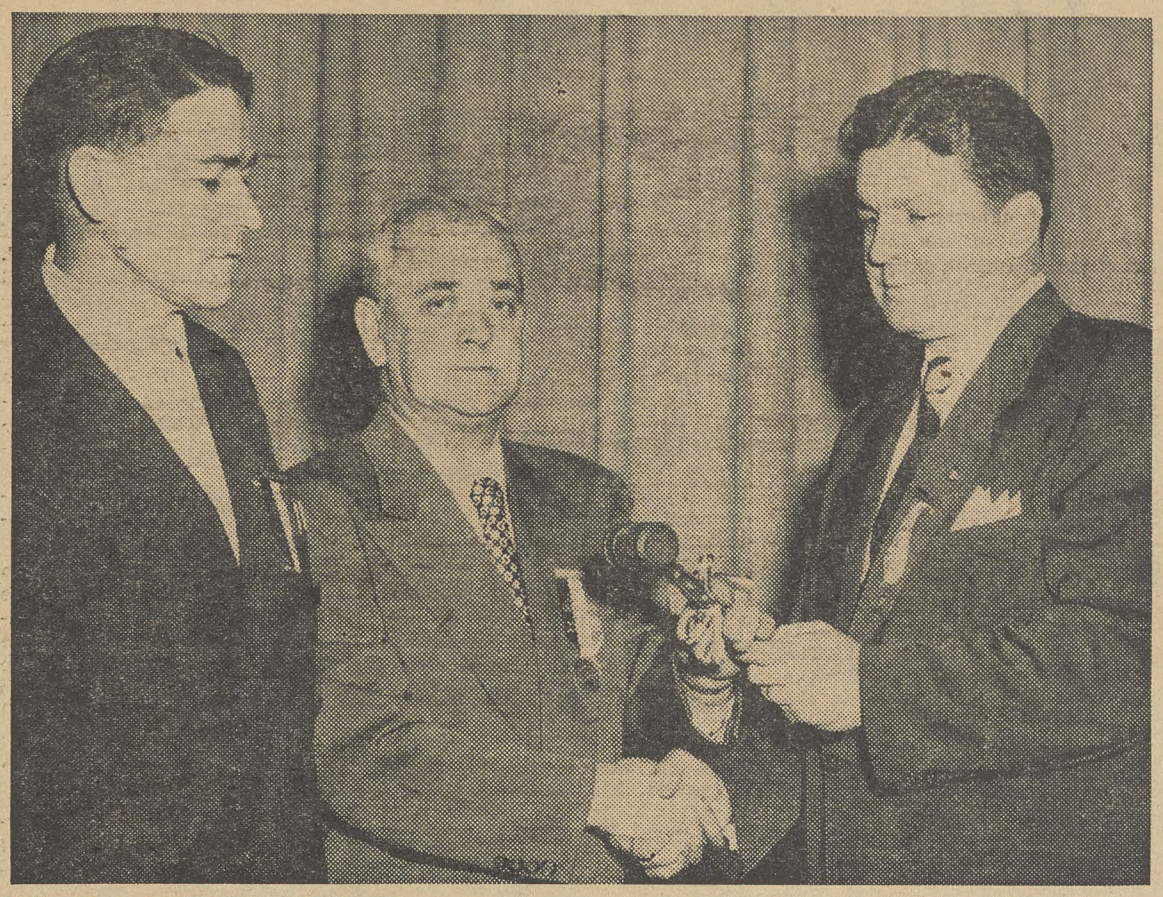
CAREY, IN his address to the delegates, called upon democratic forces at home and abroad to unify their activities and make the most of their strength.

Carey, who also heads the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, was sharply critical of Charles E. Wilson, former General Electric president who is now top mobilization director for the government in Washington.

Charging that GE had showered favors on the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, Carey recalled newspaper ads signed by GE—when Wilson was its president—which, he said, showed Wilson and the company "didn't know the difference between a unionist and a Communist, and an anti-Communist."

The CIO officer read from a letter being sent to Pres. Truman complaining of lack of labor representation in government defense circles. The letter said that "the Tafts and the NAM (Natl. Association of Manufacturers) and the Chamber of Commerce, and those you called Wall Street in 1948, have scored a coup d'etat—they have taken over the people's government."

He said the CIO does not object to industry representation, but he strongly urged the need for adequate labor appointments at the top levels of the defense effort, in order to make it more efficient for the national welfare.



TURNING OVER THE GAVEL: Pres. John Green of CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers (center) turns over the gavel to Vice-Pres. John Grogan (right), after telling union convention delegates he would not seek re-election. Looking on is IUMSWA Secy.-Treas. Ross Blood. Green, head of the union since 1934, was recently named chairman of CIO railroad organizing drive. He had led the IUMSWA since it was established in 1934.

300 Fast Cargo Ships Advocated

Scrapping of 1000 Liberty ships, built during World War II and now obsolete, and the construction of 300 new high speed cargo vessels were advocated by the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Convention.

The delegates complained that private shipyards are getting little if any of the work resulting from a recent $600 million appropriation for new Navy construction and reconversion work.

Navy work should be allocated to private yards, and Navy yards should be stopped from "pirating" the workers of private construction firms, the union said.

NLRB Reinstates Spied-on Workers

The Nashville (Tenn.) Display Co. has been ordered to reinstate with back pay 50 workers fired during an organizing drive by the CIO Steelworkers.

The company, which makes wire merchandising displays, fired the workers after C. B. Rollins, Jr., son of the owner, spied on a union meeting from a building across the street. Company claims that the discharges were made because of a shortage of material were disputed by union members who inventoried raw stock. The National Labor Relations Board trial examiner, Eugene E. Dixon, also ordered the company to stop interfering with the unionization drive.

Gets Cathedral Post

The Very Rev. Francis B. Sayre, Jr., liberal Episcopal clergyman, has been elected dean of the Washington Cathedral, which has been under construction many years and is a showplace of the nation's capital.

Mr. Sayre, son of the former Assistant Secretary of State and a grandson of the late President Woodrow Wilson, will continue to serve his present congregation at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in the heart of industrial Cleveland until after Easter. He was one of the speakers at the 1949 CIO convention in Cleveland.

Publishers Keep Trying

The ancient—to the CIO Newspaper Guild—wheeze that editorial employes paid above contract minimum wages are "professionals" and hence not covered by the agreement was dusted off again by the Scripps-Howard Cincinnati Post during negotiations last summer—and tossed back into the discard last week by Trial Examiner George A. Downing of the National Labor Relations Board.

Downing upheld the Guild's position in an interdmediate report. He called the newspaper's position "arbitrary and unreal." He showed that 46 of the 61 editorial employes, or 75%, would be placed in the professional category under the Post's system, and that seven more, or an additional 11%, get the top minimum "and could be immediately converted into professionals by the simple expedient of granting them merit increases of $1 a week."

The board also ordered the Post to give the Cincinnati Newspaper Guild information it had sought on merit increases, and to bargain with it on such pay boosts. The order also applies to the Kentucky Post, owned by the same company and serving the Covington, Ky., area.

Aid Asked For Workers Idled By Conversion

PRES. WALTER P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers has proposed that President Truman urge Congress to enact legislation which would provide funds to supplement unemployment compensation for workers laid off because of a shift from civilian to defense production.

Reuther said his suggested legislation would provide enough additional compensation to pay laid-off workers an amount which with regular unemployment compensation would be equal to what they would earn at their regular 40-hour-week wages.

He asked the President to propose legislation "to give the workers the same protection as granted business and machinery."

"Helping workers and their families during the conversion period must be considered a normal part of the cost of our national mobilization program. Failure to provide security for workers during that period will be highly discriminatory and will work undue hardships upon many workers and seriously affect their morale."

Reuther's proposal would work in the following manner:

A worker receiving $70 for a 40-hour week, who was laid off, would get $28 from state unemployment funds. The federal government would provide an additional $42 a week to make up the normal check.

'Self-Interest' Justifies RTP Renewal—CIO

STANLEY Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, urged the House Ways and Means Committee last week to approve renewal of the Reciprocal Trade Act, as a matter of "enlightened self-interest."

"Apart from . . . more direct and obvious economic considerations of enlightened national self-interest," Ruttenberg declared, "there are special reasons—equally compelling—why the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act should be renewed at this time . . .

"The Reciprocal Trade Program, together with such other economic assistance programs as ERP and Point IV, has been an inspiring symbol of the U. S. Government's genuine interest in the economic welfare and development of the free world, and of its determined effort to maintain world peace . . .

"Failure on the part of the USA to renew the Program . . . might well tend to undermine the trust of the free world in our willingness to assist them, and jeopardize our position of leadership and ability to carry with us, as allies, many important segments of world opinion.

"Under such conditions, American labor would find seriously impaired its own efforts to work effectively with the free trade union forces throughout the world in support of sound international programs and policies."

ICFTU Prober Reports Soviet Tactics 'Bleeding Austria White'

SOVIET RUSSIA, in its occupation of Eastern Austria, is "bleeding the country white," according to a member of an Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions delegation visiting that nation.

The delegate's impressions were sent to ICFTC headquarters in Brussels, Belgium.

"Democracy was restored in Austria immediately after the Nazi invaders were driven out," he observed, "but the conclusion of a state (peace) treaty, which was supposed to restore Austria's independence, has been delayed for years, and meantime the occupation has continued.

"THE RESPONSIBILITY for this breach of promise has been clearly established. The Soviet government has, under the thinnest of pretexts, delayed the negotiation of a state treaty for years, and the Western occupation powers cannot withdraw their forces as long as the independence of Austria is not guaranteed by a state treaty. If they acted differently, they would invite the Soviet government to step into the vacuum and t turn Austria into a satellite country."

If all of Austria were under the powers occupying the Western zone, said the ICFTC delegate, "it would be annoying but by no means disastrous." But, he continued, in the East, Russia "without giving anything in return but arms for Communist factory guards," is guilty of "methods of exploitation which have nothing to do with the internationally recognized rights of occupation powers."

"The chief instrument of exploitation has been the seizure of property which the Soviet government has claimed to be German," he continued.

"Under this title the Soviet government has seized, and has been exploiting under its exclusive control, no less than 211 industrial plants, 32 mineral oil and natural gas plants, and 102,000 hectares (1 hectare equals 2.471 acres) of land.

The number of person employed in the Soviet-administered plants is more than 53,000, or almost 13% of the 422,000 person employed in manufacturing and mining industries in all Austria in 1949. There is moreover, a heavy concentration of Soviet-controlled establishments in some key industries. Some of them, such as the mineral oil, rayon, railway engine, turbine and glass industries, are entirely or virtually entirely controlled by the Soviet government."

It would be bad enough if the profits from this exploitation remained in the country, the delegate noted, but the Soviet government "exploits the sector of the Austrian industry under its control in the most shameless imperialistic fashion."

It not only uses the products to its own advantage and takes the profits out of the country, but refuses to pay income and excise taxes—which would pay half the occupation cost—and is millions of schillings in arrears on social security taxes which have been deducted from the workers' wages, he added.

IN ADDITION the Soviet government deprives Austria of other normal revenue by smuggling the products of its own industry and those of its satellites into the country without paying import duties, he said. Likewise, according to the delegate, it has confiscated millions of dollars worth of industrial and transportation equipment and half of the Austrian Danube flotilla.

"True, the Austrian economy is basically sounder than it used to be in the period between the two world wars," he said.

"It has developed its oil industry and its waterpower and has built up a sizable iron and steel industry. It has been able to do this partly through financial assistance from the Western countries, and especially through Marshall Plan aid.

"But the Austrian economy is certainly not yet strong enough to stand the strain and drain to which it has been subjected from the East, without telling social effects."

ECA Moves To Aid Austrian Workers

The Economic Cooperation Administration has authorized the Austrian government to release 50 million schillings (about $2.34 million) from counterpart funds for investment projects aimed at combating seasonal unemployment and maintaining employment levels.

"The well-being of Austria's workers is the most important aspect of the nation's economic recovery," said Clyde M. King, ECA chief in Austria, in announcing the release of funds.

Alcoa Defeated In Monopoly Case

The government's battle to break up the aluminum monopoly has ended after 14 years in the courts.

It was a monopoly which dated back to 1928, when the Aluminum Co. of America set up Aluminum, Ltd., of Canada and distributed common stock in the new company among Alcoa stockholders.

Federal Judge John C. Knox in New York has approved a plan whereby principal dual stockholders have agreed to dispose of their Canadian holdings over a 10-year period. Lone exception is Edward K. Davis, retired president of Aluminum, Ltd., who has elected to sell his 34,500 shares of Alcoa. A total of 1,292,174 shares of the Canadian firm's 3,722,050 common shares will be sold.

The agreement exempts the 487,195 shares held by Doris Duke, the Doris Duke Endowment, and the Mellon Children's Trust, but these parties will give up Canadian voting rights.

Textile Union Asks Pay Hike In Synthetics

A REQUEST for a voluntary reopening of contracts to provide cost-of-living wage adjustments has been forwarded to the rayon and synthetic yarn manufacturing industry by the CIO Textile Workers, Herbert W. Payne, the union's synthetic yarn director, has announced.

He said TWUA's proposal, on behalf of approximately 38,000 workers under union contract, is intended to protect them against increases in the cost of living which have already taken place, and those predicted for the future, at a time when industry profits have reached a record high.

The union now proposes, Payne said, that contracts be amended to provide quarterly wage adjustments "plus or minus 1c an hour for each 1.14 points change in the consumer's price index of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics." Such adjustments would start with a "lump-sum" settlement when negotiations are concluded, based on the rise in the index since July 15, 1950.

PAYNE said TWUA recognizes that the present contract does not permit a reopening at this time, but "economic conditions have changed so sharply that the union no longer can remain quiet while its members suffer constant and growing reductions in their living standards in a period when the industry is prospering as never before."

He pointed to figures published by three leading firms which show that while sales have risen almost 50%, profits before taxes increased 186% for the third quarter of 1950 over the same quarter in 1949. At the same time, workers' productivity has risen steadily, he said.

Civil Liberties Parley Is Set

THE FOURTH annual Conference on Civil Liberties of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House will be held March 1 and 2 in the Hotel 2400, Washington.

The program includes a panel discussion on progress in civil liberties with speakers including Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Sen. Wayne P. Morse (R. Ore.), and Irving M. Engel, executive committee chairman of the American Jewish Committee; and another on the McCarran Act led by Rep. Javits (R. N. Y.); Edward J. Ennis, former general counsel for the U. S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, and Frank W. McCulloch, administrative assistant to Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.).

Speakers will include Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.); Dr. Robert E. Cushman, director of the Cornell Research Program in Civil Liberties; Alan Barth, editorial writer on the Washington Post, author and contributor to the Guild Reporter, official organ of the CIO Newspaper Guild, and Patrick Malin Murphy, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Study Of Aged To Be Headed By Tibbetts

"ALL BUT a tiny fraction of our older people are capable of rendering signal service in the present emergency," declared Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing last week when he appointed Clark Tibbetts chairman of the Committee on Aging and Geriatrics (old age and its diseases) of the Federal Security Agency.

Tibbetts is former chief of the Div. of Public Health Methods, in the Public Health Service, and served as director of the National Conference on Aging called by Ewing in Washington last summer.

The Committee on Aging and Geriatrics was set up at the request of President Truman to explore problems arising from the increasing proportion of older persons in our population. The request has been made more urgent by the need to exploit the skills and capacities of older people as a matter of national security.

The committee, working with private organizations and government agencies, will have three major purposes:

To develop methods for integration of older persons into our total mobilization effort.

To continue the collection of information about the characteristics and potentialities of older people and their problems.

To satisfy the increasing demands, since the National Conference on Aging, for information and guidance to public and private organizations interested in fitting older people into active participation in normal family, social and community activities.

"WE HAVE been faced for some years," Ewing said, "with the fact that an increasing proportion of our people are in the aging or aged groups, and we have failed to take a realistic view of what this means to our country socially and economically, and to ourselves as individuals.

"We have been too much inclined to put these people on the shelf. The present emergency calls for every shortcut we can devise to bring into the service of the country the skills and the wisdom of those who have been pushed out. This calls for their reemployment whenever possible and immediate action in vocational training and rehabilitation and in health measures which will bring other older workers back into harness.

"Our hope is that ultimately, through this program, we will have established a better place for all of us in our later years."

Wage Study Set Up In Virgin Islands

A special industry committee to investigate industrial, economic and competitive conditions on the Virgin Islands has been set up by William R. McComb, administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Dept. of Labor.

The committee is composed of two public members, two representing employes and two from employer groups. It is charged with recommending minimum wage rates, not to exceed 75c an hour, for workers under the Fair Labor Standards Act. Meetings will be held in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, beginning Feb. 20.

Defense Program Can't Shield Trust Growth, Prosecutor Says

THE DEFENSE program can't be used as a cloak to throttle anti-trust suits, H. Graham Morrison promised Jan. 24. The new assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Dept.'s anti-trust division made that promise in his first speech since taking office, when he addressed the anti-trust section of the New York State Bar Association in New York City.

He promised "energetic prosecution of pending cases . . . and prompt initiation of anti-trust cases where violations are found."

In fact, said Morrison, "many of the cases now pending and many of those which will be filed will substantially aid our defense effort." He cited cases of price fixing, limitation of production, withholding from the market, unauthorized allocations, tie-in sales, and full-line forcing.

As to pleas for suspension of anti-trust actions as interfering with defense work, "any request can only be considered if it is factual and demonstrates a direct and substantial interference with the defense program. A request for suspension based upon the undeniable inconvenience of an anti-trust case clearly is not enough."

MORRISON SAID that among his division's jobs are: "To devise, in cooperation with defense agencies, methods to eliminate factors in the defense program which promote undue concentration of economic power, and to make these methods fully effective to the extent they are consistent with the defense effort," and to report to Congress any defense activities which harm small business and eliminate competition.

He warned that "if, in accomplishing the monumental task that is ahead, we permit, on grounds of expediency or any other grounds, the concentration of our economic system in the hands of a few large organizations we may have destroyed the very mainspring of the free enterprise system."

Recalling the concentration that came with World War II output, Morrison said, "The production experts tell us that a great part of our defense requirements can be effectively manufactured by our small and medium-sized manufacturing facilities all over the nation."

The problems of concentration and related problems, he said, will be attacked when they first arise—at a planning stage—and all requests for postponements of anti-trust actions will have to be made directly to the Justice Dept. In World War II defendants ran directly to the various defense agencies. LPA

Canal Zone Head Rapped By GCEOC Aide

THE RECENT action of Gov. Francis K. Newcomer of the Panama Canal Zone, rejecting all the major proposals of Local 900, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, has been termed by GCEOC Rep. Edward K. Welsh as "lacking in human sympathy and justice."

The governor's reply to the union's request for an upward adjustment in the wages of local rate employes "represents a complete negation of the fundamental principles of democratic thought and action," he said, and "was as harsh and as cold as the point of a North Korean soldier's bayonet."

Local 900 last September submitted requests for a general wage increase, establishment of a 46c-an-hour minimum wage and other steps to be taken to raise the living standards of the Zone's local rate workers.

"Apparently the Governor is of the opinion that only U. S. citizens are entitled to decent wages and to a decent life in a wholesome environment," Welsh declared.

"The implication in his reply are that Panamanians, Costa Ricans, West Indians and others from the Caribbean area, brought to the Canal Zone to work, are not to be treated as other human beings, and that their standards should remain on or below a subsistence level, steeped in misery and insecurity."

"During my recent stay in the United States I talked with representatives of the American press as well as to hundreds of American citizens about conditions in the Canal Zone.

"They were both surprised and ashamed to learn that thousands of the men and women of the U. S. Government employes in the Canal Zone are working for as little as 38c and 42c an hour, with many receiving less and subjected to other forms of substandard conditions, merely because they are not citizens of the United States.

"They were shocked to learn that the Canal Zone administration fosters a policy of discrimination where the determining factor for decent wage and living standards is based upon the accident of birth.

"The GCEOC will not give up its fight to get a measure of social and economic justice for these exploited workers."

GCEOC Supports Whitten Repealer

The CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee is supporting a Senate bill repealing the worst features of the Whitten rider—the sections concerning transfer of Federal workers from non-defense to defense agencies.

The measure was introduced Jan. 25 by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) at the request of Richard Shoemaker, GCEOC legislative representative. The GCEOC is also supporting a similar bill introduced recently in the House by Rep. Miller (D. Cal.).

Reporter Discredits Story Of Ohio Welfare 'Chiseling'

THERE'S one sure way of knowing when a new Legislature has arrived in Columbus, Ohio.

All you have to do is read the newspaper stories about "chiselers."

As regularly as clockwork, these stories appear in the Columbus newspapers every two years, just as the Legislature gets ready to consider social welfare legislation.

This year the rash of stories has broken out again, timed to appear as two bills were introduced in the Legislature. One was aimed at so-called unemployment compensation "chiselers" and the other at welfare "chiselers.

Presently, Ohio laws provide stiff penalties for those who chisel on either unemployment compensation or welfare funds. But the authors of the new bills weren't satisfied. Their measures call for far stiffer penalties, making such chiseling a felony and providing state penitentiary sentences for violators.

At almost the same time, the city auditor of Columbus made front-page charges that widespread "chiseling" was going on in Franklin County's welfare setup. He named six cases, and claimed these were typical of a tidal wave of "chiseling."

The Columbus Citizen, a Scripps-Howard newspaper, assigned Reporter Katharine Sullivan to the task of finding out how one of these families "lived in style," as the city auditor claimed, while it "chiseled" on the welfare setup.

Her objective story, which the Citizen played up on page one, described in detail the sordidness and squalor in which this family lived. While they had been on the welfare roll for many years, her story proved they were obviously in such straits that they would always remain a charge upon the public welfare.

This reporter broadly hinted that the father was mentally incapable of providing his young children and his overworked wife with any kind of a steady income. Thus, they regularly received aid from the country welfare agency, which doles out money a few dollars at a time.

Evil Of Mill Towns Hit By Catholic Unit

MORTON ELDER, Birmingham, Ala., representative for the CIO Steelworkers, was elected vice chairman of the Catholic Committee of the South Jan. 24 at the organization's three-day convention at Columbia, S. C.

Resolutions adopted by the archbishops, bishops, priests and laymen making up CCS recommended laws "to strengthen, rather than weaken, our workers' God-given right to organize," and attacked "the so-called right-to-work bills."

Another resolution placed special emphasis on the evil of "certain industrialists controlling mill towns" who "exert economic, social, political and even religious pressure to thwart the Southern workers' right to join unions."

Other resolutions called for cooperation of government, capital labor and agriculture to "solve the problems of inequality and insecurity that beset workers and farmers in the United States," and for American support of the International Trade Organization sponsored by the UN.

Newspaper Strike Held UnityExample

THE UNION cooperation demonstrated last summer during the CIO Newspaper Guild's strike against the New York World-Telegram & Sun is the kind of action that insures victory, leaders of the unions agreed at a recent luncheon meeting in New York.

From the vantage point of distance in time, the union leaders looked back on the refusal of AFL and unaffiliated union members to cross Guild picket lines and decided unanimously that it paid off for all concerned.

"Labor in the newspaper field has demonstrated once and for all that the only way to accomplish results is through unity," declared Francis G. Barrett, president of Local 6, AFL Typographical Union.

"I'm sure our members recognize it. This cooperation must not end.

"We of the ITU feel that any obligation is not all on one side. In this case, the Guild was the spearhead. And the rest of us must be right behind. Our members feel that any money it may have cost them was an excellent investment."

CHARLES McNALLY, president of the Greater New York Allied Printing Trades Council, said the joint action caused much favorable comment throughout the country.

"Because of that unity of action,," he said, "I feel the CIO and AFL are drawn much closer together and nearer the unity labor needs. Our collective members have done more than win the strike. It has been a great victory for labor."

The cooperation displayed during the strike has made the job of bringing unity into the ranks of craft unions in the book and job groups easier, said Ed Dillon, president of the Allied Printing Trades Council of New York State.

"As never before our members realize the strength of unity in labor," declared Al Peabody, business representative of Eureka Lodge 434, Machinists, an unaffiliated union at the time of the walkout but now in the AFL.

EDWARD EASTON, president of the New York Newspaper Guild and World-Telegram & Sun unit chairman at the time of the strike, again expressed the formal thanks of the CIO union for the action of the members of the other groups.

"It's the kind of unity which won the Battle of Barclay St. that also insures victory for the forces of labor in their endeavors," he said.

Members of New York Newspaper unions had the right answer to the problem presented by the breakdown of negotiations between the Guild and the newspaper, said Thomas J. Murphy, executive vice president of the New York Guild.

"If we act united, we are strong," he declared. "If we try to act independently we would play right into the publishers' hands."

Oil Workers Win 11c

More than 250 CIO Oil Workers at the Gulf Refining Co. in Detroit have won an 11c pay boost. The union also settled a seniority dispute which had touched off three unauthorized strikes.

OHE Survey Shows Need Of Rent 'Roll-Back'

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

WITH PRICES and wages sure to come under some kind of control— if they are not there already — prospects brightened somewhat last week for a stronger, longer-lasting rent control law.

The Office of the Housing Expediter was preparing draft legislation to submit to Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, who is expected to approve it and then send it on to the White House. It will, according to present plan, go up on Capitol Hill as "must" legislation. It is believed that Congress can scarcely refuse to do for rents what it has empowered the President to do for wages and prices.

The present law provides automatic controls till March 31: the community involved can extend them to June 30 if it likes, but must vote to do so before the March 31 deadline. It also provides "local option decontrol": a simple resolution of the city governing body is enough to remove controls entirely.

THE NEW law will ask absolute power for OHE to recontrol any area and to roll back rents to any level. (Congress may fix a date beyond which rents may not be rolled back, or may insist that all landlords be given a percentage-type "escape hatch" —a sort of Little Steel formula for rents—but it'll have to do something.)

OHE is getting ready for hearings, though it does not know when and where they will be held, and has been quietly preparing since early last fall, when it sent out over 400 questionnaires to areas still under control, seeking the appraisal of local rent advisory boards on the actual extent of the housing shortage and the pressure against rental ceilings.

The CIO News has looked over the answers to these questionnaires, and without attempting to summarize the results, has selected a few towns and cities where organized labor is strong.

We present these findings — which are typical of all the others —to show the absolute necessity for continued, strong controls, particularly in a time of rising employment on the one hand and increased military service on the other. Workers must have sanely priced rentals; soldiers' families must be able to get along on service pay.

The rent boards were asked to go beyond the newspaper ads and formal listings and check whether the vacancies really existed and really were suitable for home living.

They found in many instances that listings and ads were strictly come-ons: the landlords actually hoped to sell, and refused to rent, or else the "three-room apartment" turned out to be just sleeping rooms, with neither kitchen nor bath. Weeding out this type, here is what they found:

Akron, O.: During a typical week in September, 1950, there were 25 actual rental vacancies in this town of 273,000. Of these, only seven were listed as renting for less than $50 a month; 10 were above $75. Half of the accommodations consisted of one- or two-room apartments. Half of them (not necessarily the same half) offered just rooms with "share bath and toilet." Sixteen prohibited children. Most real estate agencies had given up keeping waiting lists: the three that did so had a total of 1204 applicants. Akron still has rent control, has not decided whether to keep it past March 31.

Altonna, Pa.: Here in this railroad shop center there were 13 vacancies during a typical September week: six rental agencies listed 1540 applicants. The town's population is about 77,000. Of the existing vacancies, only three were for $50 a month or less; five required the tenants to share bath and toilet. There still is rent control here, but the City Council is undecided whether to keep it.

Austin, Minn.: This "packing-house town" of 23,000 had no vacancies at all during a typical September week, and the local Chamber of Commerce had just finished issuing a statement that "the city is handicapped in its growth by a lack of rental units." Austin still has controls, but they may expire March 31.

Battle Creek, Mich.: There were exactly 20 vacancies in this town of 49,000 people during a typical September week. Thirteen were for three rooms or less; 11 rented for over $50 a month; 10 would not accept children. The Percy Jones Army Hospital was to reopen Dec. 1 with 1200 beds, and the authorities had notified the city that the personnel "cannot be accommodated on the post." In spite of this, the City Council on Oct. 20 removed rent control in Battle Creek.

Cleveland, O.: Some 906,000 people live in Cleveland. During a typical September week there were only 18 actual rental vacancies. Fourteen of these were for under three rooms; 14 rented for over $50 a month and of these 14, nine were offered at $150 or more. Five warm-hearted Cleveland landlords would accept no children or pets; eight just specified no pets. There were 460 unduplicated "wanted to rent" ads in the classified sections of the Cleveland papers that week, and rental agency waiting lists were "enormous." The Cleveland City Council has voted to continue rent control till June 30.

Detroit: This is the fifth largest city in the United States. Greater Detroit has a population of just under three million, at the moment. In this entire area, there were 36 rental vacancies during a typical September week. (One group of landlords controlling a total of 24,267 units reported just three vacancies.) Ten units consisted of one or two rooms; only 13 rented for under $50 a month, and 11 were listed at over $100. Eighteen would not accept children. Two rental agencies—a tiny minority—had 1853 applicants. The personnel director of the Fisher Body plant reported 200 "housing resignations" since April 1, and said the rest of the 1400 he had hired since then were living in rooming houses.

The Great Lakes Steel Co. reported an average of three such resignations a week; Chrysler, an average of five. Ford reported no rental units available for less than $100 a week within convenient distance of any of its plants: the average Ford worker earns $73.46 a week before taxes. And in spite of this situation, the Detroit Tank Arsenal was planning to hire 4000 men, and was frankly worried. There were no vacancies in either Hamtramck or River Rouge. Detroit still has rent control, but the City Council shows no disposition to keep it past March 31.

Gary and Hammond, Ind.: At least 220,000 people live in this highly industrialized area. During a typical October week, there were 29 rental vacancies; 15 of one or two rooms, seven with no heat, 15 where children were not accepted, 10 "share bath and toilet": only 15 were listed at $50 a month or less. U. S. Steel and Inland Steel were having difficulty hiring skilled labor: no place to live. Controls are still on, but may expire March 31.

Indianapolis: Nearly 550,000 people live in greater Indianapolis. During a typical September week, there were 49 rental vacancies: 29 of one or two rooms, 23 where no children were allowed; six with no heat. An incomplete check of rental agencies showed 4507 on waiting lists. Nearby Camp Atterbury had been reactivated and the Naval Ordnance Plant was planning to double its personnel and was having "extreme difficulty in recruiting labor" because of the housing situation. There is still rent control but no decision about what happens March 31.

Louisville, Ky.: About 368,000 people live here. In an October week, there were 57 genuine vacancies; 19 of one or two rooms, half over $75 a month; 26 "no children"; 19 "no pets." The Housing Commission had 7411 applications on file, and many families with higher-than-standard income were occupying public housing but could not move because there was no place to go. On top of this the Jeffersonville Quartermaster Depot is being reactivated. Louisville still has controls, but has not moved to keep them beyond March 31.

Oakland, Cal.: Some 2,214,000 people live in the San Francisco Bay area. In a typical November week, in the area on the Oakland side of the bay, there were 262 vacancies; 64 of one or two rooms, only 44 for under $50 a month, 143 would not accept children. There were over 2000 families waiting for temporary barracks-type housing, and no vacancies in this classification at all. The California Dept. of Employment reported a "drastic" shortage of skilled labor. The population gain in this area since 1940 has been over a million: new housing has not begun to keep pace. Oakland still has rent control, has not decided whether to keep it. San Francisco has it, and will keep it till June 30.

Portland, Ore.: There are 271,000 people here. In a typical September week there were 47 actual rental vacancies; 28 of three rooms or less, only 17 for less than $50 a month; 24 would not take children. Thirteen offered a shared bath and toilet, four had no heat. On Dec. 29, 1950, the Portland City Council ordered rent ceilings removed. Rentals on single-family houses jumped an average of 42%; on apartments, 10½%. The medium annual income in Portland in October, 1949, was reported to be $2819 a year.

Decontrol Brings Tragedy In L. A.

Side effects of rent decontrol in the boom city of Los Angeles:

1. The county welfare office has estimated that the additional relief it will have to pay for rent boosts (if the boosts are held to 15%) will hike the annual tax roll by $1,332,000. This extra cash will have to come from somewhere—the answer appears to be fewer relief clients or higher county taxes.

2. Many persons, the office says, already are receiving the legal limit in relief payments, and the rent boost will simply send them to the poorhouse, the Los Angeles county hospital and other places, also supported by tax funds.

Typical example: an ailing 80-year-old woman who received aid of $75 a month—the legal limit—found her rent raised from $30 to $60 a month. This left her $15 a month for everything else—food, clothing, medical care. She can't live on it, and there's nothing the relief office can do about it.

The welfare office as of Jan. 19 already had received reports of between 600 and 700 evictions based on failure of persons such as these to pay increased rentals. There is literally no place for them to go except to the overcrowded public institutions.

Rent controls went off in Los Angeles in December, after a six-month fight through the courts. The City Council voted decontrol June 28, but the Tenant's Council and the Office of the Housing Expediter both insisted that it had not followed the required procedure—in fact, had considered no evidence as to whether the housing shortage had been overcome. A U. S. Supreme Court decision finally over-rode OHE's objection. Housing Expediter Tighe Woods was forced to sign the decontrol order—a task he described as "the most distasteful" he had undertaken in his entire career as Housing Expediter.

What Decontrol Means To Renter

Coming events cast their shadows before.

In most cities where rent controls still are in effect, groups of units for one reason or another have been exempted. OHE has "comparison-shopped" them —comparing rentals charged for controlled and uncontrolled units in the same general neighborhood, of the same size, with the same equipment. Here are some results for virtually indentical units:

Akron, O.: controlled $30, uncontrolled $50; controlled $50, uncontrolled $100; controlled $39, uncontrolled $65. Battle Creek, Mich. (decontrolled entirely Oct. 20): controlled $55, uncontrolled $70; controlled $65, uncontrolled $95. Indianapolis: controlled $55, uncontrolled $110; controlled $55, uncontrolled $90.

Louisville, Ky.: controlled $62.48, uncontrolled $85. New Orleans: controlled—$15, uncontrolled $40; controlled $40, uncontrolled $90. Oakland, Cal.: controlled $45, uncontrolled $85; controlled $69, uncontrolled $115; controlled $60, uncontrolled $90. Portland, Ore.: controlled $52.50, uncontrolled $80; controlled $63, uncontrolled $85; controlled $45, uncontrolled $90.

Just Wonderful To Be Boss Dept.

The personnel manager of the great Steel Corp., at Gary, Ind., told OHE he had an answer to the housing problem. Simple, too.

"We will not hire anyone," he said, "who does not already have housing, and we will not import families."

Inland Steel, also in Gary, is actively recruiting labor. But its policy—strictly dictated by the housing situation—is to "hire single men only—from Texas."

Dec. 15,1950.

Mr. Tighe Woods

U.S. Housing Administrator

Washington D.C.

Dear Mr. Woods:

I am writing this letter to make polite inquiry: WHEN WILL THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS TAKE ACTION TO PROTECT THE LITTLE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES?

When Long Beach decontrolled rent in January,1950, I was told by my landlord, the new owner of some 400 houses in Long Beach, "BUY OR MOVE!" I could not buy, so I had to move. Discounting all the problems of moving into new quarters with two children, I found that my rent would now be $79.50. A gain of $25.75 over the $53.75 I had been paying for a three bedroom house. During the summer, because of the large percentage of vacancies, our rent was reduced 5.00. NOW, SUDDENLY, in anticipation of possible controls, our rent has been raised $10.00, making it $85.00 for a very ordinary 2 bedroom Apartment.

Now, during this time my pay as a teacher has been raised by $140.00 a year. Due to increased taxes, my take home pay is $20. more a YEAR.

profits before controls are put down. I've voted the Democratic party since I was first old enough to vote in 1932. I was one of the loyal voters who stuck by Harry in 1948. The administration has said it would act to prevent exploitation in this emergency. Except for autos, it hasn't. Tom Dewey, a Republican, has advocated these controls. When 1952 comes, there are a great many staunch Democrats who will weigh these years when considering party loyalties.

PLEASE GIVE US SOME ACTION.

ACTION ON ROLLING BACK RENTS is asked in this letter from a tenant to Housing Expediter Woods. This letter is typical of many received by the Office of the Housing Expediter.

A Chapter In Labor History

There Was A Lithographers' Union In That Fishing Club!

By WILLIAM WEISS

TODAY, when a group of workers decides to set up a new union to represent them in collective bargaining procedures with employers, the process usually is out in the open and the more publicity the venture gets the better its chances of success.

In New York City back in 1862, however, a group of lithographers who decided to organize and band together for their mutual protection found it advisable, due to the unfavorable light in which unions were looked upon in those days, to refer to their secret organization as the Romar Fishing Club of New York.

In a few months the so-called "Fishing Club" had enough members and had developed to the point where it could boldly change its name to something more in keeping with the lithographic industry. The new organization became the Hudson Lithographers Association, and shortly after affiliated with the Knights of Labor.

Four years later, in 1886, the newly founded group was fed up with the Knights' failure to give support to its fight for shorter hours. It withdrew and changed its name to the more imposing Lithographers Intl. Protective and Benevolent Association. The LIPBA remained independent for the next 20 years.

WHILE primary emphasis was given to the job of improving working conditions and the wage scales of members, the union also interested itself in the welfare of members' families. The LIPBA was one of the first unions to set up mortuary funds for the benefit of members' survivors.

In the industry, meanwhile, other craft organizations were following the lead of the Lithographers. In 1892 the Artists, Engravers and Designers League was formed. During the next three years, the Stone and Plate Preparers Association, the Poster Artists Association and the Intl. Protective Association of Lithographic Feeders of the U. S. and Canada were established.

Twenty years to the day from its founding in 1906, LIPBA affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. That year a Lithographers Trade Council which included all the above mentioned organizations was set up in New York City.

The Artists, Engravers and Designers League spearheaded a move in 1912 to unite all trade union organziations in the industry into one amalgamated union. The program was successful and by 1915, several independents had formed the Amalgamated Lithographers of America with a membership of 4000.

The first president of the Amalgamated was Frank Gehring. He was succeeded in office by Philip Bock, who was followed in turn by Andrew J. Kennedy and William J. Riehl.

Following years of struggle against employer groups, the Amalgamated in 1941 was able to establish the principle of paid vacations in the industry. Two years later, in 1943, the first Amalgamated contract providing for paid holidays was signed.

IN THE FALL of 1945, due to a basic jurisdictional difference with the Printing Pressmen's Union, the ALA withdrew from the AFL by the almost unanimous decision of its members. The following year the organization affiliated with the CIO. In the same year, 1946, the union signed its first contract for a 36¼ hour work week.

The first pension fund agreement to be administered by the ALA was signed in 1947. The following year, the organization was successful in winning its first welfare program paid for by the employer and managed under a joint trusteeship arrangement.

Today, 69 years after the establishment of the short-lived fishing club, the members of the Amalgamated Lithographers of America enjoy the full fruits of union organization.

ALL MEMBERS of the union now receive a two to three-week paid vacation each year and six to 11 paid holidays. More than 80% of the lithographic industry has adopted the 36¼ hour work week, 60% of the membership is protected by pension plans, and 80% of ALA's members are covered by welfare plans paid for by employers.

The Amalgamated today has a total of 76 locals established throughout the U. S. and Canada, and has a membership of approximately 25,000. This represents about 90% of the workers in the lithographic industry.

The union has come a long way from the Romar Fishing Club days.

Reuther Asks UAW Provide Insurance Co.

A BIENNIUM in the life of the CIO Auto Workers was reviewed for the union's 1,250,000 members last week by Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a report which took up the full 20-page January issue of the United Automobile Worker.

Reuther also gave them a peek into the future, announcing that at the next convention he will ask delegates to approve establishment of a non-profit insurance company. The union is large enough—and will have 50,000 more members by convention time—to handle its own insurance on a mutual non-profit basis, he said, and make sizable savings for the members. The convention will open in Cleveland, O., on April 1.

Reuther noted that the union has gained 250,000 members since the last convention in July, 1949. He reviewed UAW wage policy, and defended the union's stand on cost-of-living escalator clauses and annual improvement raises.

Social security demands were given priority in 1949, with Ford the test case, he recounted, and the principles won there were nailed down at Chrysler after a 104-day strike. Future pension goals, he predicted, will be a minimum of $200 a month and the right to transfer pension credits from one employer to another.

He also predicted that the union will ask for a boost in dues and the per capita tax at the 1951 convention. They were last raised (to $1.50 a month) in 1946.

"We are simply up against the fact that 1946 income will not meet costs," he said.

Japanese Seamen Vote To Oust Communists

Spokesmen for the All-Japan Seamen's Union have voted to consider anyone acting under Communist orders as having voluntarily withdrawn from the union. At the same time, the Nipponese seamen endorsed closer cooperation with the Intl. Transportworkers Federation. The ITF is affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

TWUA Asks U.S. To Take Over Duck Mill Closed By Strike

MEMBERS of the CIO Textile Workers on strike at the Denison Cotton Mill, Denison, Tex., since last June, have called upon the government to take over operation of the mill and get it back into production of duck, desperately needed by the armed forces.

In a letter to Rep. Rayburn (D. Tex.), TWUA Rep. W. L. Dernoncourt pointed out that since the union was certified after a National Labor Relations Board vote in June, 1948, "every effort has been made by us to arrive at agreement on a contract."

Dernoncourt said that since the strike began, the company has met with the union only two times.

"We suppose the last meeting came about because we finally went to the NLRB and charged the company with refusal to bargain," he wrote.

"In World War II, the workers at Denison earned Army and Navy 'E' awards. All these people are anxious to do their part in the national effort to stem the tide of totalitarianism. But the workers feel they would be breaking faith with their belief in democracy if they just abandon their legal right to obtain a collective bargaining agreement.

"What this manufacturer wants is simply a little dictatorship. The facts show that. Cannot someone in our government do something about this situation in Denison?"

Stellato Honored

Carl Stellato, president of Ford Local 600, CIO Auto Workers, is the "Outstanding Young Man of 1950," in Dearborn, Mich.

The head of the world's largest local union is the first union leader to receive the award, made by the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Another 'Cureall' Found Phony

Don't buy a diathermy device—application of heat through electric current—to treat yourself for arthritis, asthma, neuritis, lumbago, sciatica, bursitis, neuralgia or similar disorders.

That, in effect, is what the Federal Trade Commission declared in ordering the Bell Diathermy Co., New York City, to stop representing that the device, when used "by the unskilled lay public in the treatment of self-diagnosed conditions, is a competent treatment or cure" for the disorders listed above.

The FTC found that the firm "falsely represented that the device provides a competent self-administered treatment and cure," and that its use will ease or relieve the pains associated with those ailments. The firm's advertisements also were false, said the FTC; they failed to reveal what may happen to you if you use the device.

2822 Firms Violate Fair Standards Act

MORE THAN half of the 5085 firms in New York and New Jersey inspected in 1950 by the New York regional office of the Wage-Hour and Public Contracts Divisions were found to be in violation of the minimum wage overtime or child labor requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Thus reported Wage-Hour Reg. Dir. Arthur J. White.

He noted that among the 2822 employers not in full compliance were 954 firms found to be paying less than the 75c per hour minimum wage rate, which became effective Jan. 25, 1950. They agreed, he added, to pay a total of $815,823 to workers who either had received less than the minimum or no overtime wage.

Most frequently chiselled out of their proper wages were beginners in the apparel trades and learners in metal products and miscellaneous manufacturing, White said.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer attended the convention of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers of America in Boston. This union has gone through a terrific period since the end of World War II and is now through that and on its feet again. John Green, President since the inception of the union some 17 years ago, did not run for re-election, as he has taken over the chairmanship of the United Railroad Workers of America, CIO. The convention voted by more than a 2/3 majority to increase its per capita to $1.00. We will report on election of officers next week. The delegates overwhelmingly approved the National CIO Defense Program.

The CIO Vice-Presidents met this week in Washington and dealt with matters growing out of the Nation's defense.

All matters pertaining to field personnel participation on various committees growing out of the national defense program, such as manpower, price control, wage matters, civilian defense, etc., will be cleared through the Organization Dept., working with our affiliated unions, regional directors and councils. Manpower personnel is about completed and our next step shall be taken as it arises.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a representation election at Durite Plastics, Philadelphia, Pa., the workers voted 94 for the Rubber Workers, CIO, and 10 for no union. URWA Rep. Eugene Tormey is to be congratulated on a fine job.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of IUE-CIO reports a representation election victory at the Silex Co., Hartford, Conn., with a vote of 175 for IUE, 3 no union; UE withdrew.

Organization Director Adolph Germer of the Woodworkers reports a representation election victory in the Kirby Lumber Co.'s five operations in Taxes. The results were IWA-CIO 832, AFL 237, no union 126, void 29. C. A. McPeak, acting regional director for Texas, was in charge.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that in a representation election at the J. C. Penney Co., Ottumwa, Ia., the employes voted for the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union-CIO as their bargaining agent.

District Director William F. Donovan, of the CIO Steelworkers, reports a union shop election at the White-Roth Machine Co., Lorain, O., with the following result: For 39, against 3.

Reg. Dir. Francis Carmichael reports that in a representation election at the Scott & Williams Co., Laconia, N. H., the workers voted 492 for the United Steelworkers, 128 no union. USA Reps. Kenneth Glynn and John LaMarr were in charge of the drive assisted by CIO Rep. Robert W. Davis.

Gov. Byrnes Insists On Separate Schools

South Carolina's newly installed governor, James F. Byrnes, has left little doubt as to where he stands on the question of racial segregation.

In an address to the state General Assembly last week, Byrnes declared, "We need have no fear that segregation in the state's public schools will be abolished."

Fulton, Minnesota Regional Director, Ill

Fullerton Fulton, CIO regional director in Minnesota, with headquarters at St. Paul, has been ordered to take a much-needed rest by his physician and has gone on leave to his old home at Gillespie, Ill.

Serving as acting director in Minnesota is William Mayo, regional director for Northern Indiana, with headquarters at South Bend. Henry Henry, assistant to Reg. Dir. Michael Mann, of Chicago, is filling in for Mayo.

Atomic Energy Commission Decision Against Government Towns' Spurs Land Speculation

THE DECISION of the Atomic Energy Commission against building any more "government towns" already has started one land boom in a residential site.

The policy was announced shortly after AEC acquired a 280,000-acre tract southeast of Aiken, S. C., on the Savannah River, for its new Savannah River plant. It plans to employ 8000 construction workers there by July—to have a peak of 35,000 working there a year later—and to level off at a permanent 6000 by January, 1954.

And it is not lifting a finger to provide housing for these men or their families. Allegedly, it made a survey of nearby facilities (averaging around 40 miles from the heart of the tract) and found "adequate accommodations."

Well, the local populace doesn't think so. The entire area, according to well-documented reports, is having an old-fashioned land boom like Florida in its wildest days. The price of residential lots has doubled and tripled, and land speculators are buying and selling options on nearby acreage on a strictly profit-taking basis.

The option on one large lot is reported to have changed hands three times in one day, each time fetching a higher price. Landlords are doubling and trebling rents, families are planning to let out their spare rooms (with a hot plate) as apartments, etc. School boards, water commissions, and other groups in charge of community facilities, are frantic. And construction of the atomic plant hasn't even begun to start yet!

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee has been told about this, and has called for an investigation. Also, language has been written into the pending emergency housing bill, which would set aside a revolving fund of $10 million for the government to buy land surrounding defense areas, in order to prevent speculation. The logic of this has yet to be explained: it probably would not cost as much to build government housing.

ACWA Wins Disability Pension Plan

THE CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers have obtained pension rights for permanently and totally disabled workers under the age of 65, which the 81st Congress refused to enact in amendments to the Social Security Act.

An agreement, which was reached Jan. 23 by the ACWA and the employer members of the Amalgamated Insurance Fund, covers workers in the men's and boys' clothing industry.

Beneficiaries of the disability pension benefits, among the 150,000 clothing workers covered by Amalgamated collective bargaining agreements, will be those who have been employed 20 years in the industry and whose employers have contributed, on their behalf, 3% on their weekly pay into the insurance fund for at least two years before they become eligible. The disability must have occurred after July 1, 1947.

Under the Amalgamated retirement plan, in operation since January 1947, more than 6000 retired clothing workers are receiving $50 per month, plus their federal pensions, bringing their total income, after 65, to an average of $116 per month.

Those clothing workers, who will qualify before 65 for the disability pension, will be limited to $50 per month from the industry funds. When they reach 65, they will receive the additional federal benefits.

NMU Reaches Agreement On Insurance, Hospital Benefits

THE CIO Maritime Union has reached agreement with 97 steamship companies on an employer-financed welfare plan which provides $100 million group life insurance and hospital benefits for the union's 40,000 members.

The welfare plan, described by NMU Pres. Joseph Curran as the "most comprehensive" in the maritime industry, is financed entirely by employer contributions of 25c a day for each seaman participating in the program.

Curran said the employer contributions had accumulated since last August, when payments started, and that the welfare plan now has a reserve of more than $517,000. The program was won by the union last June.

Under the plan, each insured seaman will receive a policy providing $2500 of group life insurance, $2500 of accidental death and dismemberment insurance and $15 weekly for hospital expenses for periods up to 18 weeks for each disability.

Death benefits will be paid for any cause whatsoever, except that deaths due to war risk will be covered by Seaman's War Risk Insurance.

To be eligible for coverage a worker must have a minimum of 20 days' employment in a six-month period. Curran said that special arrangements have been made to continue the benefit of seamen for periods of at least six months during unemployment.

Curran said he expected the benefits of the program to be increased "as finances and circumstances permit."

The insurance plan will be administered by 12 trustees, six from the NMU and six from the American Merchant Marine Institute, the employer group.

Curran said that the NMU trustees already had passed a resolution calling for an increase of $1000 in each type of insurance—life and accidental death—and a $20 weekly increase in hospital payments.

UTSE Aide Studies Africa

Harold D. Snell, assistant to Pres. Willard S. Townsend of CIO Transport Service Employes, has been appointed the CIO member of an Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions mission to look into labor conditions in several West African countries. Townsend made the appointment.

The delegation will include representatives of trade unions from all Western European nations, who will investigate economic and working conditions in French Equatorial Africa, French West Africa, Cameroons, Sierra Leone, Gold Coast, Nigeria, Belgian Congo and Liberia.

The delegation will go first to French Equatorial Africa. Snell will return to this country in approximately two months.

CIO Asks U. S. Mediation In Reich 'Strike'

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week asked U. S. officials in western Germany to "use their good offices" to avert serious threats of conflict in the country's steel and coal industry.

At issue is the problem of "co-determination" — government language covering representation of labor with management in production councils in corporations taken over from their former Nazi controlling groups.

German unions have threatened a militant strike if efforts are made to push the labor group representatives out of the production councils.

In a cable to U. S. High Commissioner John McCloy, Murray said "the objective of the free German trade union movement is to prevent the return to power of the old German industrialists with Nazi sympathies . . .

"Friendly mediation on your part would have a most wholesome effect upon the attitude of West German trade unions to the U. S. and to the defense of western Europe against communism."

Murray suggested that there should be no change in the production councils pending the passage of legislation by the German Parliament.

NLRB Aids Part-Timers

A final decision by a three-man panel of the National Labor Relations Board has directed the J. C. Penney Co., Las Cruces, N. M., to include school students who work part time in a collective bargaining unit.

Sea Unions Win On Policy Jobs

Two spokesmen for seamen's unions will be recommended for top-drawer policy posts in the proposed National Shipping Authority, Vice Admiral Edward L. Cochrane, federal maritime administrator, announced Jan. 16.

The NSA will supervise merchant shipping in an all-out emergency much as the War Shipping Administration did during World War II. AFL, CIO and unaffiliated maritime unions recently demanded a policy role and submitted specific policies affecting manpower they thought the authority should follow.

Cochrane made his announcement following an all-day conference with spokesmen for both labor and management. Previously he had met with the two groups separately.

Unions Differ On Job Evaluation

Unions differ sharply in their attitude toward job evaluation, Prof. Sar A. Levitan, of Champlain College, Plattsburg, N. Y., disclosed in an article in the winter number of Industrial and Labor Relations Review, quarterly publication of the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell Univ.

Levitan's conclusions were based on the answers to questionnaires he sent to the research directors of 60 unions. Among the unions viewing job evaluation favorably he found the CIO Steelworkers, CIO Newspaper Guild and AFL Paper Makers. "Strong and uniquivocal" opposition came from the CIO Packinghous Workers and the AFL Electrical Workers.

Crisis 'Opportunists' Warned By FTC Head

"Opportunists" in the business world who seek to use the defense emergency to exploit consumers must find the Federal Trade Commission ready for them, Chairman James M. Mead told the staff in a message Jan. 26.

"All civilians will be expected to make sacrifices," he warned the staff of the FTC's Bureau of Antideceptive Practices, "and in return, it is the responsibility of the FTC to protect their health and pocketbooks against false and fraudulent claims of unscrupulous advertisers."

He cited food, drugs and curative devices, wool fabrics and other critical materials as among products which will be under constant surveillance.

IUE Districts RE-Elect Heads

William Snoots, former secretary-treasurer of the Administrative Committee of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, has been re-elected president of IUE District 7, which was recently enlarged to include Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma, as well as Ohio and Kentucky.

Another election named Robert I. Wishart, former business agent of the 7000-member Local 1145, IUE, Minneapolis, president of District 10, which covers Minnesota, Wisconsin and northern Illinois.

Both Snoots and Wishart automatically become IUE international vice-presidents.

Bethlehem Steel Net At New High

The prosperity that has been sending industry to the banks round-shouldered with the weight of their profits has caught up nicely with Bethlehem Steel.

It reported last week that in 1950 it earned an all-time high net of $122,976,071, or $12.51 a share of common stock after dividends on preferred, compared to $99,283,539, or $9.68 a share of common, in 1949. The directors let a comparatively small amount of the record earnings trickle down to the stockholders. They voted a dividend of $1 per share of common for the first 1951 quarter, compared to 60c for the first quarter of 1950.

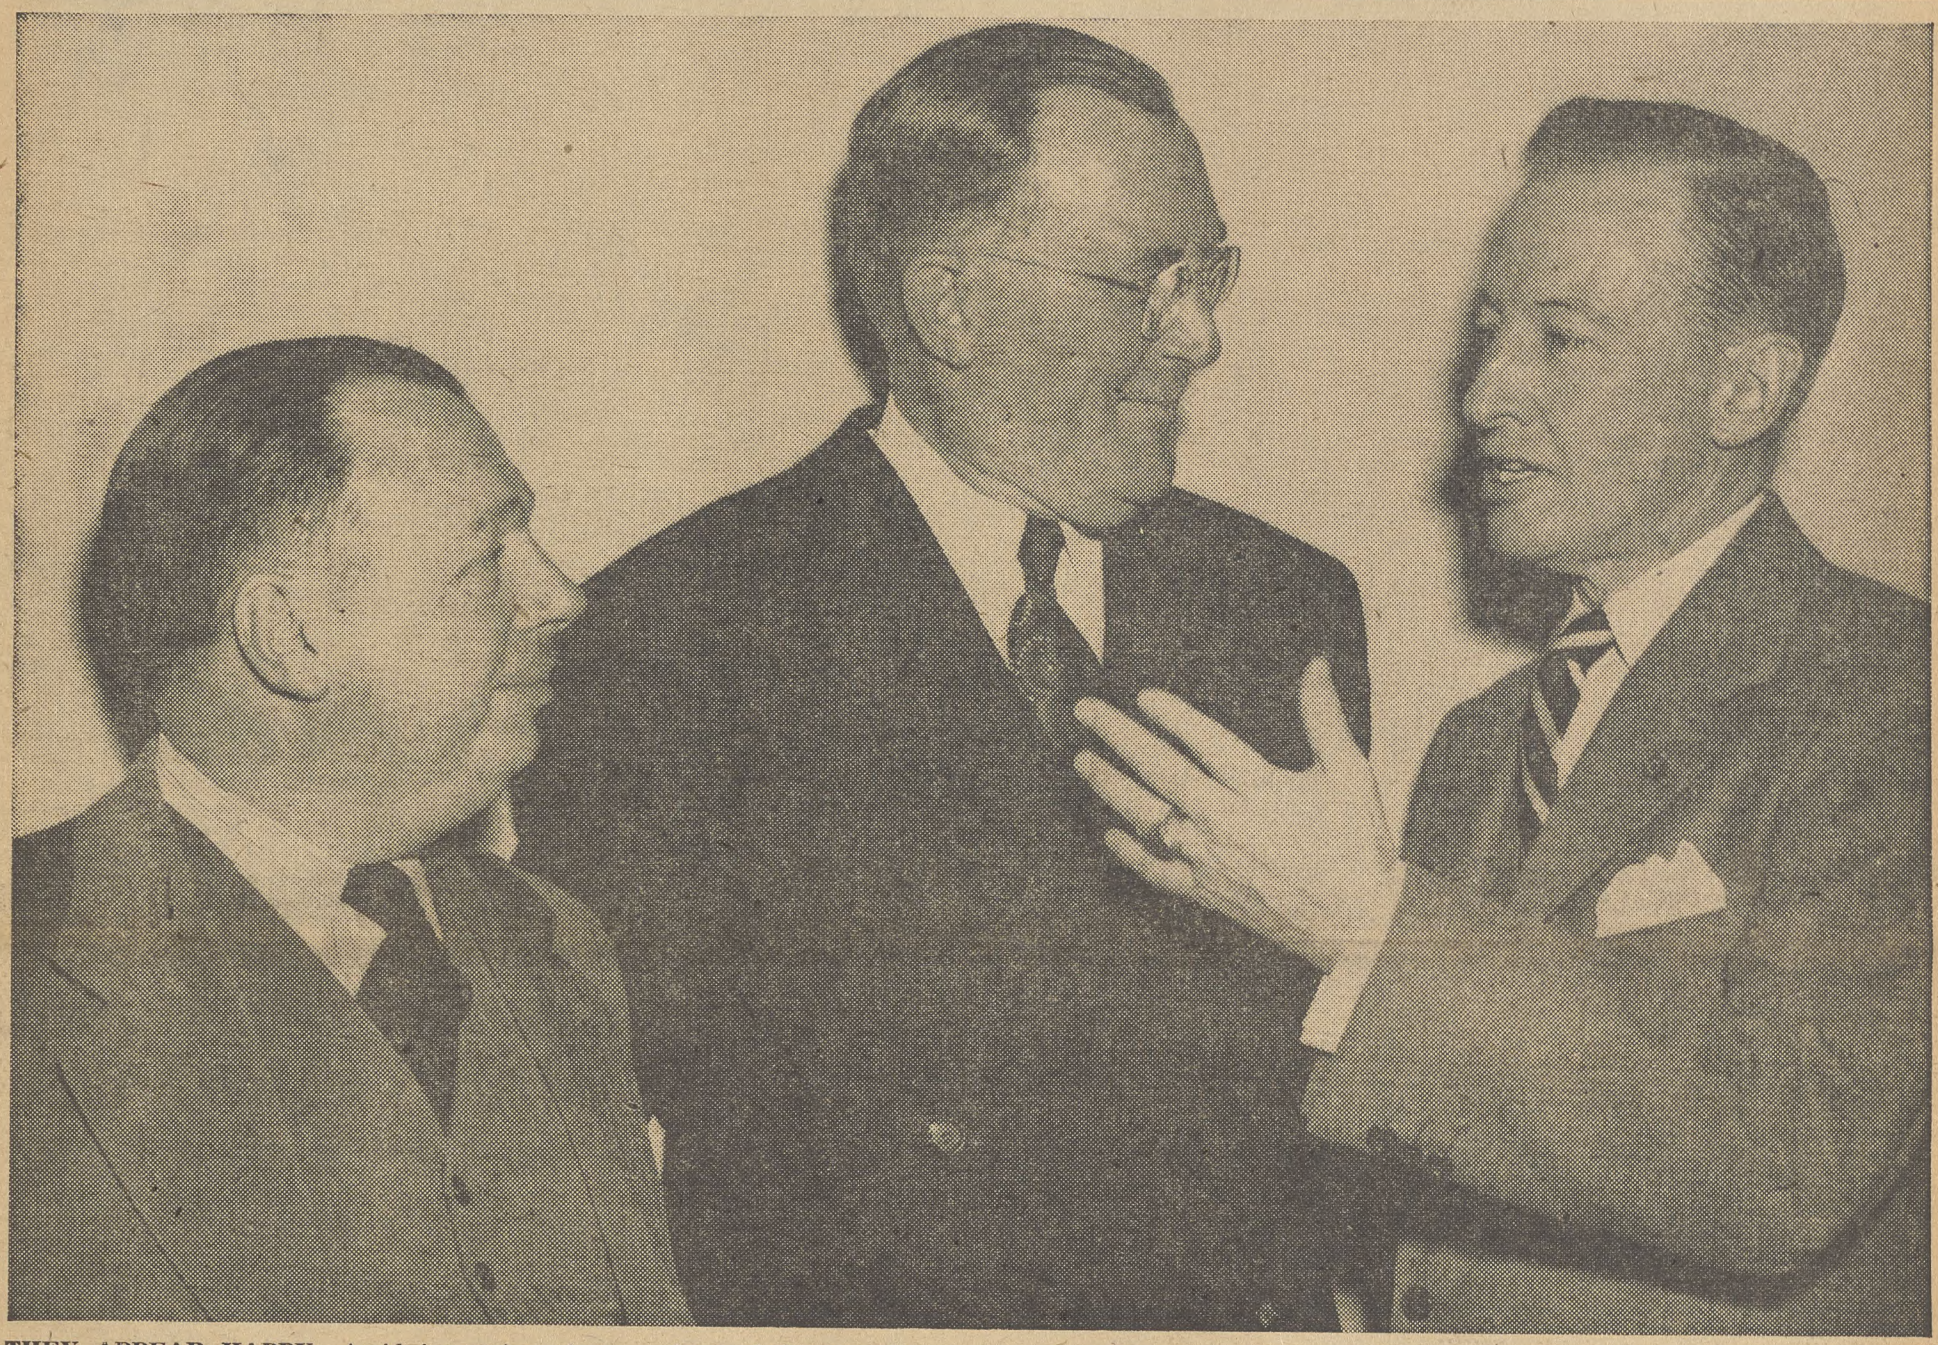
Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., FEBRUARY 5, 1951 82 No. 6



THEY APPEAR HAPPY: Amid increasing signs that a large number of Americans are not pleased with the Defense Production Act and its application, three of the top officers charged with its enforcement appear unworried. Left to right, Price Stabilizer DiSalle, Defense Mobilizer Wilson, who is top DPA administrator, and Economic Stabilizer Johnston. CIO Beats FTA On West Coast

For the second time in four months, the CIO has badly defeated the Communist-run FTA in a NLRB election for the allegiance of the Pacific Coast packing-shed workers. Latest CIO victory is in the Imperial Valley, Cal., and Yuma, Ariz., areas. (See Page 12.)

MCS Local Joins The NMU

By a three-to-one vote, the Portland, Ore., local of the Communist-dominated Marine Cooks and Stewards has decided to join the CIO Natl. Maritime Union. NMU Vice Pres. Warner hails the action as "opening wedge" of the campaign to bring the MCS into the NMU. (See Page 2.)

British Health Plan A Hit

Fresh from Great Britain where they resided for 15 months, two American trade unionists have returned home with a glowing account of the British Health Plan. They have reason to know; they were patients under the plan, which provides complete medical and surgical care. (See Page 6.)

Survey Shows Press Bias

One reason that liberal candidates lose elections is given on Page 7. A survey by Stanford University shows the California press was heavily on the side of the successful Senatorial candidate, former Rep. Nixon (R.), and vehemently opposed to his liberal opponent, former Rep. Douglas (D.)

'Opening Wedge'

Portland, Ore., Local Of MCS Joins NMU

THE Portland, Ore., local of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Union last week voted by a three-to-one majority to escape from the Communist-inspired MCS leadership and join the CIO National Maritime Union.

The vote came after a stormy three-hour session during which the local also approved a report of its port agent, H. A. Robinson, bitterly condemning MCS as "a seafaring base of the Soviet Union."

The members present voted to sign NMU cards immediately and to work actively to organize all of the local's eligible membership. Foreseeing some trouble, they also adopted a resolution stating: "We are totally opposed to violence, but will resist with every effort any attempt at intimidation, violence or victimization . . ."

Hulbert Warner, a NMU vice president and chairman of its drive to organize MCS, called the Portland decision an "opening wedge" in the NMU campaign.

The MCS was ousted from the CIO for adherence to the Communist Party line.

As expected by the NMU leadership, the party-liners have been circulating rumors against the NMU, not the least vicious of which is one of racial discrimination.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran commented: "The membership of MCS knows full well that our union was the pioneer against discrimination since its inception in 1936, and has written into its contracts long ago that there could be no discrimination because of race, color or creed."

As for the announcement by Harry Lundeberg, Secy-Treas. of the AFL Sailors' Union of the Pacific, that he too would open his doors to MCS members, this is being counteracted by simple, if colorfully phrased, explanations of the exact nature of the offer.

Lundeberg said he would admit MCS to membership on an "autonomous" basis—which, according to the NMU Pilot, means he would "hang it on the coat-tails of the SUP when times are good, and cast it to the winds when times are bad."

Negroes To Be Admitted To Two More Schools

NEGROES LAST week won the right to attend previously all-white schools at St. Louis, Mo., and College Park, Md.

Washington Univ., St. Louis, announced that Edward R. Thomas will be the first Negro to be admitted to its medical school, and will enroll in September. Thomas made an outstanding record as a pre-medical student at New York Univ.

It took a court decision in Baltimore to win Hiram T. Whittle, 20-year-old Negro, admission to the undergraduate school of the Univ. of Maryland on the main campus at College Park. Previously Negroes had been admitted there only for graduate work.

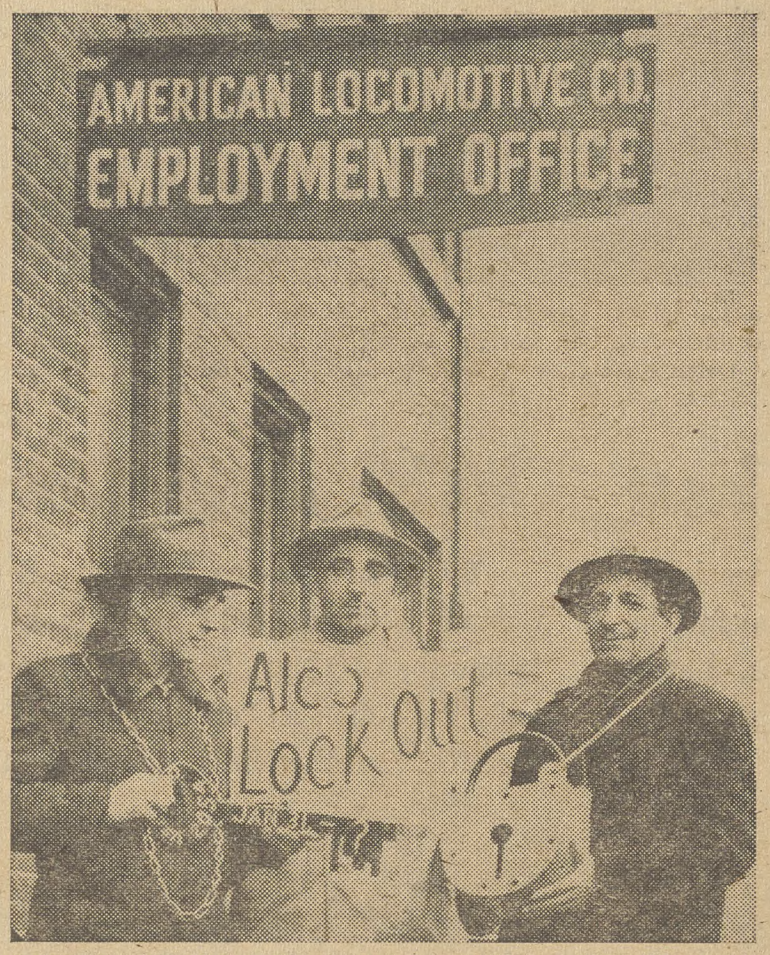
The attitude of schools and courts on segregation likely was improved by decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court last spring. The court ordered Texas to admit a Negro to the Univ. of Texas Law School at Austin, and the Univ. of Oklahoma to end the practice of requiring a Negro student to sit apart from the others. The CIO intervened in an "amicus curiae" brief on behalf of the student in the latter case.

OTHER ACTIONS in the past week affecting Negroes:

In Chattanooga, Tenn., Mary Robbs, 25, Negro, whose father works as a porter in a barber shop there, was chosen to appear as a soloist with the white-member Chattanooga Symphony Orchestra in a concert in March. Miss Robbs, who paid her way for voice study in New York by sewing labels in a garment factory, was chosen in series of auditions.

In Richmond, Va., a U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals declared that a rule of the Atlantic Coast Line railroad requiring segregation of passengers in interstate commerce is invalid. The ruling reversed a lower court in the case of William C. Chance, 66, a Negro school teacher from Parmele, N. C., who refused to move to a coach for Negroes, and was ousted by police.

In Arlington, Va., a three-judge court took under advisement a suit brought by Mrs. Jessie Butler, a Negro, to invalidate the state poll tax.



THEY HAVE THE PROOF: Members of Local 2054, CIO Steelworkers, illustrate that they were locked out of most of the departments of the American Locomotive Co. plant at Schenectady, N. Y., Aug. 24. The dispute occurred because the company refused to grant a 16c an hour wage increase and to stop violations of the incentive plan. Note Jan. 31 on the key; that was the date when the wage portions of the contract expired and the walkout became a strike. The company's plants at Dunkirk and Auburn, N. Y., also were struck.

Frozen Wages Thaw A Little, New Price Formula In Works

THERE WAS an inch of ice on Washington streets last week; a heavy freeze on wages, and a rapidly-developing thaw on prices.

The ice-storm—which covered a good section of the northeast—came several days after the government's "freeze" of prices and its crack-down on further wage increases.

The price "freeze" merely legalized highest prices in the month prior to Jan. 5.

Within a few days, however, the office of Price Administrator Michael DiSalle revealed it is studying a new price program, providing for prices to be based on current costs, plus the amount of distributor's mark-up in effect last June.

This would permit still further increases for a large number of commodities purchased by the general public.

Affected by the price freeze were only a few food products—those already selling at over the farm-industry price "parity" level. Other food products, on sale at lower prices, cannot be frozen because of the provisions of the Defense Production Act—which the CIO and other groups have long said is in urgent need of improving amendments.

AS THINGS now stand, grocers can raise the prices on such food staples as canned vegetables and fruits, bread, butter, eggs and chickens. Meats are price-controlled—at least temporarily. Seafood, fresh fruits and vegetables are completely uncontrolled.

Except for those areas where rent control is still in effect, rents are also unaffected.

CWA Unit Slips Under Pay Freeze Deadline

The 3000 traffic department workers of CIO Communications Workers Div. 50 in Washington, D. C., just managed to get under Economic Stabilization Director Eric Johnston's wage and price freeze of Jan. 26.

After three days of negotiations, the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. suddenly agreed to a 10% average wage boost on Jan. 26, the day the freeze was announced. The company announced the next day that the raise would be put into effect immediately unless given specific orders to the contrary by the WSB.

Meanwhile, labor members of the three-group (public-labor-management) Wage Stabilization Board made no secret of their dislike for the wage freeze or of methods proposed by industry spokesmen for "thawing" that freeze.

In its first order, the board gave its OK to contracts signed by Jan. 25 and going into effect by Feb. 9. That permitted the CIO Communications Workers, the Mine Workers, and about 500 other smaller pacts throughout the country to be cleared. The board also said it would exert no controls over employes of cities, towns, counties and states.

NEWSPAPER reports indicate the board may soon issue a regulation permitting wages only a 10% increase from the 1950 levels. Labor members have indicated their dislike for this formula, and for employer suggestions that the cost of welfare plans, pension programs, Christmas turkeys, etc., be figured into the 10%.

The labor members—CIO Vice-Pres. Emil Rieve represents the CIO—have also been reported fearful of employer attempts to over-ride the Bacon-Davis Act, which covers wages for building trades workers on government projects, and the Walsh-Healy Act, providing for prevailing wages on work performed under government contract.

With prices thus legalized at high points and the certainty of some major restrictions on wage boosts, the United Labor Policy Committee met last week for a discussion of current problems.

REPRESENTING the CIO, the AFL, the railroad brotherhoods and the machinists, the committee issued a terse statement that it is "gravely concerned about the way the mobilization program is developing."

The committee is known to be concerned about reports that handling of manpower problems will be taken from the Labor Dept. and placed directly under the control of Charles E. Wilson, former General Electric president who has top power in the mobilization program.

A labor "advisory" committee—of which CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member—met with Wilson during the week, but had little comment afterwards. But an increasing number of union officials have been expressing concern about the rapid grabbing of power by big business representatives in the Wilson organization.

Unions have been seeking a top level representative in the mobilization program, but no appointment has been made. At present, neither labor nor the consuming public is represented in the set-up.

Wilson's two principal lieutenants are Gen. Lucius Clay, who has been serving as chairman of the board of Continental Can Co., and Sidney Weinberg, boss of a big New York investment banking house.

Community Of Interest

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that embalmers and ambulance men employed by the Riverside Memorial Chapel at Miami, Fla., are to be included in the same bargaining unit because of "a community of interest."

Canadian Phone Firm Throws Book At CWA, But It Wins

AWAY UP in Northern Ontario and Quebec, land of the Northern Lights, where rivers flow north—when they flow at all—and where the thermometer hits 40 below zero most of the winter, employers have a cute way of fighting unions.

For instance, it's okay to smile on a company union, to allow it to meet on company time and premises, to encourage workers to attend its meetings.

Canadian unionists work under even greater handicaps than Taft-Hartley imposes on workers in the States. What U.S. unions are able to get stopped as unfair labor practices is shrugged off by Canadian government officials. "Our laws are inadequate to deal with the situation," they say.

The CIO Communications Workers have been up in that country organizing telephone workers. CWA has just won an election among employes of the Northern Telephone Co., which provides telephone service in 19 towns spread across 1000 miles of the territory.

Final vote in the election: 219 to 127. Since only 368 workers were eligible to vote, this is an almost unbelievably high turnout.

THE COMPANY "is no better and no worse than other employers in that section," CWA reported. "All of them throw the book at any union when it tries to organize."

In this case company officials promoted one officer of the union, demoted another. They promised workers a $15-a-month raise if they would vote against the union—and did it quite openly.

They told the workers that if CWA won the elections, all employes with below-par educations would be fired by the union and the workers would have to pay union dues for five years—even if they left the company.

They fired CWA's local president one week before the election date.

But election results showed that the workers weren't too much impressed by the company's fear campaign.

This Country Has Got Into One Heck Of A Mess

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE WORD coming over the office news ticker was as dismal as the weather. Outside what had started as snow and had become rain was now ice, and it pattered against the window with the sound of a distant, angry drum.

". . . Flour millers announce a price increase of 5c to 25c a hundredweight for the Eastern territory," the ticker said.

". . . The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index extended its rise for the seventh consecutive week, soaring 9c to $7.17, the highest level in more than 28 months."

". . . President Truman will ask about $10 billion in higher taxes in a special message he will send to Congress . . . and will propose some $6 billion more later."

WHETHER THE millers could make the flour price increase stick was, at the moment, in the hands of Price Director Michael V. DiSalle. Whether the eating customers were going to pay more, eventually, for the 31 commonly used foods in the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale index depended on the strength of their resistance and the number of unused holes in their belts. Whether the President was going to get all his $10 billion in higher taxes, including $4 billion more in individual income taxes, depended on Congress.

It didn't look good. What, someone wondered, has happened to our economy?

"It shouldn't happen to a dog," the CIO Dept. of Education and Research agreed unhappily.

The experts hauled out some figures. Even to a reporter who always totes up an expense account with a feeling that he's going to spend the rest of his life in jail they looked pretty grim. Here's what they showed:

The Wholesale Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics increased 14.5% between June 27, 1950, and Jan. 23, 1951.

The Consumers' Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics increased 4.8% from June 15, 1950, to Dec. 15, 1951.

Net Profits After Taxes in the last quarter of 1950 were 10% greater than in the second-quarter—the one in which the world was turned upside-down by the Communist invasion of South Korea.

Straight-time Average Hourly Wages in manufacturing industries have increased 6% since June.

The Dun & Bradstreet Wholesale Food Price Index has increased 23.8% since the week of the Korean invasion.

In not all instances, the experts say, do the figures reflect the true picture. Take the Consumers' Price Index, for instance. Up 4.8%, yet one of the things it doesn't show, but which affects the cost of living, is the disappearance of some low-cost items. Another is the dilution of quality of those still available. Still another is the lag between higher wholesale prices and the time they are translated into higher costs at the grocery and market and department store.

OR TAKE the wholesale price index. That doesn't yet show the full effect of the unparalleled wave of speculation that hit the country's commodity markets about the same time the Communists hit South Korea.

The BLS has an index that measures changes in the commodity exchange prices of 28 spot commodities. These are the raw materials that are basic to the whole economy — wheat, corn, scrap steel, zinc, cotton, copper and the rest. Without them our factories couldn't run and some of our commonest foods would be missing.

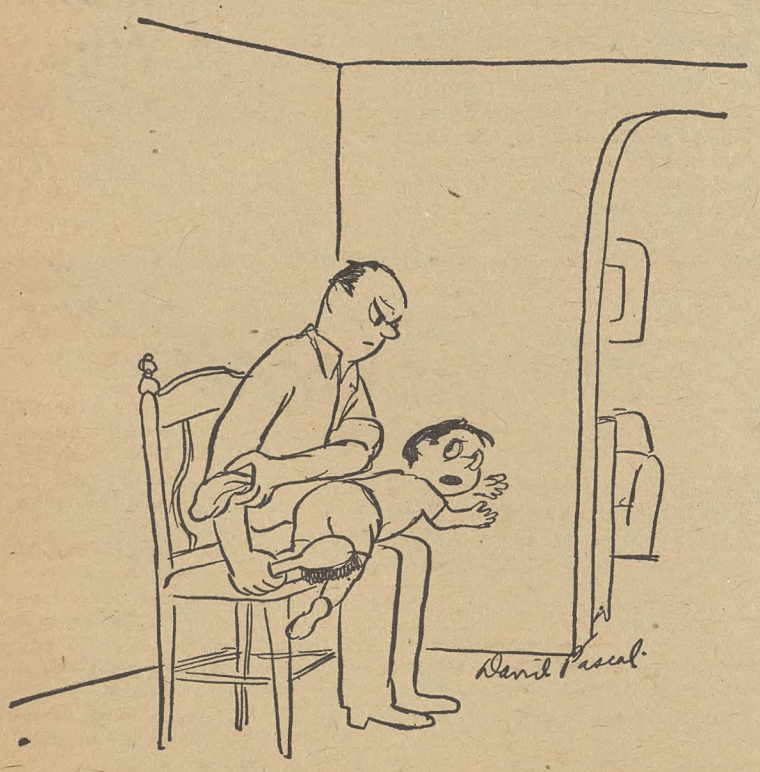
These 28 basic commodities went up an average of 45.7% between June 23, 1950, and Jan. 26, 1951.

The commodity exchanges upon which they are bartered are not regulated by the government. In fact, the Defense Production Act, which was supposed to safeguard the country's economy, specifically prohibits the government from regulating them. This means that a slick operator can go into one of these markets and on a margin of 10% run up his shoestring into heavy cord of currency.

For instance, suppose a fast buck boy "bought" 1000 units of a commodity at $10 a unit last June 23. The total price, $10,000; the total investment, on a 10% margin basis, $1000. Then suppose he sold on Jan. 26 and made exactly a 45.7% profit. The profit in dollars: $4570—on an investment of $1000.

On exchanges regulated by the Federal Reserve Board, such as the New York Stock Exchange, the speculatar would have had to post a 75% margin.

The worst part about prices is that the tempo of their increases has grown faster. This was summarized last week by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO research director, in a panel discussion before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.



"Remember, Dad, it's like working overtime without getting paid."

Retail Foods Up 1.1% To New High

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported Feb. 1 that retail food prices jumped 1.1% during the first half of January to a new record high, 220.5% above the 1935-9 average and 7.7% more than the level at the time of the Communist invasion of Southern Korea.

The Jan. 15 index was 2.3% above the Dec. 15 reading and 1.7% beyond the previous high, set in July, 1948. The upward movement was caused by increases in the prices of 41 of the 51 foods covered in a special eight-city survey.

"We have to remember," he said, "that since Korea the 28 basic commodity prices of the BLS have gone up about 50%. That means that there has been an average of a 6% per month increase in basic commodities. In the last month, in the very last month, that increase has been at a greater rate than the average for the six months during 1950.

"Now, if we take a look at the industrial prices, we find that they have gone up some 14%. Those industrials which make up that section of the 28-commodity index have gone up 14%, an average of a little less than 2% for the first six months.

"AND IN THE last month, particularly since the talk about a wage and price freeze and the current second reverse in Korea, industrial prices have gone up 2.2%—in just one month. That means a 27 to 28% increase a year at that rate, if it is going to continue.

"Retail food prices have increased in the past month 2.5%, as contrasted to an average monthly increase in retail food prices for the first six months after Korea of 1%. So we have gone from a rate of retail food price increases of 1% on the average per month for the first six months after Korea, to 2.6% in the last month."

Thus the picture is one of increasing inflation—an era in which a majority of Americans, including most workers, will find themselves falling farther and farther behind in the fight to maintain something like their standards of living.

Who will suffer most? The 31 million families, or spending units, which make up the bottom 60% in the economic scale—those with incomes of $3200 a year or less, the low-paid, the underpaid and exploited, the pensioner and others on modest fixed incomes. The middle income group (the classification is that of the Federal Reserve Board), the approximately 10.5 million families or spending units earning between $3200 and $4500 a year, also will be affected—and even many of the 10.5 million families in the top 20%, with $4500 a year or more, will feel the pinch.

The principal weapon of the government in this fight against inflation is the Defense Production Act, which became effective last Sept. 8. The CIO opposed the act because it won't do the job. The CIO still takes the same position. It is like giving our soldiers in Korea slingshots instead of rifles and tanks and planes.

But the act, which might possibly slow down inflation even if it can't stop it, was on the books for more than three months before it was invoked and the prices of new automobiles were temporarily frozen on Dec. 18. Wages in the auto industry had to be frozen too, as one of the gimmicks in the Defense Production Act is a requirement that when prices in a specific industry are controlled, wages have to be controlled also.

The full significance of the over-all temporary price freeze order was not yet clear as this edition of the CIO News went to press, with DiSalle and his aides still consulting over how much and what kind of "thawing" will be permitted in an effort to keep the economy on an even keel.

But fairly rigid price controls at every level, which are impossible under present laws, are the key, many feel, in the fight against further inflation. Even though the government can't regulate the commodity exchanges, for instance, effective regulation of the prices of finished and semi-finished products into which the raw materials enter will kill the speculative profit possibilities.

THE GOVERNMENT in its effort to stem inflation also invoked credit controls, especially the kind of credit consumers use to buy consumer durable goods such as autos, refrigerators, etc.

How much good this has done is apparent from last week's report by the Federal Reserve System on the operations of its member banks. It said that on Jan. 24 business loans by the member banks had reached an all-time high of $18.018 billion—an increase of $46 million in a week.

With prices frozen at their peak, net profits after taxes, the most fantastic in history, seem also frozen—at their peak.

True, some of the fat is being trimmed off in higher corporate taxes and a mild excess profits levy, but not enough. At the other end of the economic scale not only the fat—what there is of it—but a lot of the lean is being hacked away from the incomes of people who have to play it so close to the chest they count it a triumph when they have an extra dollar to add to the savings account.

In approving the Defense Production Act, President Truman observed that it was so confusing it might be necessary to resort to over-all controls before they became really necessary. The general feeling is that over-all controls should have been imposed before they were on Jan. 26.

The wage-price sections of the act expire in June. Congress will have to do something about them within the next few months. It would be difficult to make them any worse, and almost any change would be for the better.

ORGANIZED labor is not opposed to wage controls, provided the proper safeguards against inflation are set up. It feels that what are now labelled "safeguards" are not proper.

Ruttenberg put the case succinctly in his panel appearance:

"I think that the trade unions—and this is a united position of the AFL, the CIO and the independent unions—have said to the Wage Stabilization Board that they are willing to accept a wage stabilization program provided an over-all anti-inflation program is successful, one which taxes adequately and equitably, one which controls prices and the cost of living.

"Under these conditions, trade union groups told the Wage Stabilization Board, they would accept a wage stabilization program that would permit wages to be adjusted for changes in the cost of living, on the theory that if we were really successful with an anti-inflation program, it would be unnecessary for wages to move up in relation to prices because prices would be stationary; but that it would be no more than fair to say to the labor groups, 'If we are not able to stabilize prices, then you should be permitted to have adjustments in wages in accordance with the changes in prices.

"'On the other hand, if we are successful in controlling prices, then wage levels should remain at their present status—after, of course, you went through the kind of wage pattern now being considered by the Wage Stabilization Board.'

"NOW, THAT is the position the labor groups have taken.

"I would like to say just one word of warning: That along with indirect controls through taxes, credits, savings, all of which I would support—and I am sure the labor groups would support—that we must in addition keep in mind that during the period when those indirect controls are attempting to catch their roots in the economy, we cannot permit prices to continue to move the way they have within recent months; and that we ought to think in terms of a short-range and a long-range program, the short-range program being one of wage and price stabilization and the long-term program being one of expansion of capacity."

Canadian Increases Are 'Reason Enough To Ask For Price Controls'

The Canadian Congress of Labour—with which CIO unions north of the border are affiliated—took a look at these price increases and decided, according to the January issue of its monthly Newsletter, that they "are reason enough to ask for price controls:"

Even Team's Star Can't Go It Alone

United States Should Let Other Democratic Nations Know Quickly That Hoover Isolation 'Bomb' Was Merely A Dud

By ALLAN L. SWIM

I ONCE KNEW a slightly goofy guy named Ed who played halfback on a reasonably good high school football team.

He was big, fast, strong, and smart about most things, but he never learned the full meaning of real teamwork.

Ed got his name in the local papers every now and then because of some individual exploit on the gridiron. The spectators and most of the sports writers thought he was pretty good, but his team-mates didn't trust him completely.

Trouble was that Ed tried every now and then to pull off a spectacular stunt on his own, regardless of how the quarterback called the play.

Then came the big game of the season—on Thanksgiving Day. The opposition was leading 13-12 late in the last quarter when Ed's team maneuvered itself into possible scoring position.

The quarterback called for a play around left end with Ed carrying the ball. Ed decided just as the ball was snapped back to him that the wrong play had been called—so he feinted to the left, reversed and tore out for the right sideline.

He was promptly tackled—and the final whistle was blown before the team could start another play.

ED WAS A lot like some of the politicians around Washington who spend much of their time throwing monkey-wrenches into our international affairs machine.

For nearly 20 years the United States has been moving away from its old isolationism and has been trying to win the friendship and support of people throughout the world.

Undoubtedly some of our tactics have been bad but our desire for international understanding and cooperation was a good one.

A couple of dictators brought the anti-fascist forces of the world together quickly some 10 years ago and they formed a team which emerged victorious from the war.

Then another dictatorial power—Russia—began kicking over the traces.

It quickly became obvious that the only hope for preventing the spread of communism was for the democratic forces of the world to become welded together into a team.

And the star of the team became the United States—just like Ed did in years gone by.

The United States was big, strong and smart about most things. And we had money and great productive ability.

Congress agreed that one of our first post-war moves should be to help Western Europe help itself to get back on its feet economically.

As a result, the Marshall Plan was put into operation.

We formed a pact with nations of this hemisphere and later we forged the North Atlantic Pact. We did our best to make the United Nations an effective instrument for the establishment of world peace.

WHEN THE Reds made their first major challenge to the UN we threw out our armed forces into Korea—along with armed forces of our allies.

Now it looks as if we've started the big game—the one which may eventually determine whether the world will be governed by democratic or totalitarian forces. And now is the time to demonstrate to our allies—in a manner more forceful than we've ever done before—that we're part of the democratic team, and that we weren't kidding when we said, "We've all got to stick together."

HOWEVER, SOME of our team-mates don't trust us completely and they're a bit skeptical about our intentions.

They've been listening to those of the Hoover school who say that we should reverse our field and tear off alone in one direction while our "interference" goes in another.

It's natural for them to wonder—and worry—about public reaction to the Hoover plan, which they see as a scheme to abandon Western Europe to the Russians if the worst comes to worst.

This uncertainty must certainly influence their actions in the United Nations and make them cautious about our program for rearming Western Europe.

Somehow or other—perhaps by a real showdown in Congress—we should let the rest of our team know definitely whether we intend to execute the big play according to the signals that have already been called or whether we're going to try to score a "touchdown" on our own.

And if we try the latter we're likely to get tackled and be responsible for losing the game.

THE BIG FREEZE

It appears as this is being written that the "big freeze" that was instituted a little more than a week ago is going to be followed by a "big thaw."

The order putting a temporary ban on prices and wage increases was still a squalling infant when those charged with stabilizing our economy revealed they were working on other orders which would provide exemptions.

When you pile exemptions on top of the loopholes in the stabilization law you have—well, to say the least, a bit of a mess.

And let us point out right here that you're mistaken if you think the present efforts will bring a halt to the increase in the cost of living.

The trouble is that Stabilizer Eric Johnson has to operate with a piece of economic control machinery that wasn't put together in the right manner.

The act setting up the machinery is vague in many spots and contradictory in others.

If Congress doesn't realize this already it certainly will—unless it closes its eyes and ears—before long.

Obviously Congress can't enact a perfect new control law or amend the present one in such a manner that every segment of the population will be satisfied and happy.

But Congress certainly could—and should—come up with something better than we now have.

THERE IS REAL DANGER IN IT Two big mobilization campaigns within 10 years present a real danger to our nation that goes much beyond that which is easy to see on the surface—the danger to our economy, the danger to the men who put on military uniforms.

Our whole concept of government from the very founding of the nation was that we should be governed by civilians and that the military should play only a minor role in our affairs except in time of great crisis.

We as a nation objected strongly to universal military service and we insisted that our armed forces be kept at an absolute minimum.

But now some of our top leaders are talking in terms of a universal military service program that would go on from year to year without interruption.

Some people in government are talking quietly about the possibility of drafting men and women for essential civilian jobs if the world situation becomes really tough.

Right now our great emphasis is on military preparedness—as it must be under present circumstances.

The thing against which we should guard is a shift in national thinking which would result eventually in government either dominated by or operated by military men.

We seem to be in no danger of this at present—but it's something to think about as we plan for the future.

Irish Unions Face Fight For More Pay

IRISH workers like others the world over are watching uneasily these days as they see their wages dropping behind in the race with the cost of living.

With prospects of a fight for a postwar round of wage increases in the offing, one of the most settled periods of industrial relations in the Irish Republic's history appears to have come to an end, reports the Christian Science Monitor.

All during the last war, the government kept ceilings on wages, but in 1946 controls were taken off and most adult male workers received pay increases. But prices continued to go up, and in 1948 the unions and the employers reached for the first time a national wage formula agreement.

Since 1945 there have been two national labor organizations in the Irish Republic representing together about 260,000 workers. The Irish Trade Union Congress, formed in 1894, for many years included both the branches of British unions operating in the whole 32 counties and the strictly Irish unions which later sprang up and operated mainly in the 26 counties of the Irish Republic.

The split took place over sending representatives to the World Trade Union Conference in London in opposition to the wishes of the Irish unions which felt that the British unions were trying to dominate them. The group which withdrew set up the Congress of Irish Unions. Present membership of the CIU is reported to be between 170,000 and 180,000, including 120,000 members in the Irish Transport and General Workers Union.

The older group, the ITUC is somewhat larger, with about 190,000 members divided fairly evenly between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic, according to the Monitor. The program of the CIU follows the strongly nationalistic tendencies of the Irish Republic, and maintains that unification can be accomplished only on the principle that all unions involved be Irish-based and controlled.

Both groups agree that a united movement would greatly strengthen the position of Irish unions, but each steadfastly holds to conditions which the other will not accept.

The two labor congresses recently sought removal of the limit of 11 shillings increase accepted by both sides in the national wage agreement of 1948, but were turned down.

The Federated Union of Employers, management's main industrial relations organization, and cooperating groups refused to agree, arguing among other things, that increases in productivity were due to the enterprise of employers and not to the workers.

WHEN the case came before the Government's Labor Court set up by the Industrial Relations Act of 1946, the decision handed down was to the effect that a case for a wage increase had not been proved. After failing to win a national agreement with the employers, the two labor congresses advised their unions to go ahead on their own in trying to win wage boosts.

As a result strike notices and wage demands are increasing, with the lower paid, unskilled workers who need wage increases the most, in a poor position to get them, while skilled workers, now in short supply, will be able to get increases easily.

ONE OF the differences between the two labor congresses which illustrates how the division has weakened the effectiveness of the unions is shown in the different stand taken on wage demands. The CIU recommended that its unions limit demands to 12 shillings a week, while the ITUC set no limit.

Firm Is Told To Pay Workers At NLRB Meet

Five workers laid off by the Superior Co., Piqua, Ohio, when they took time out to attend a National Labor Relations Board meeting will get their lost pay from the company. Isadore Greenberg, NLRB trial examiner, has recommended that the company, which makes underwear, make good the pay even though the workers were told they could not have the time off. All had been active in an organizational drive by the CIO Textile Workers.

That's No Donkey, That's Joe Stalin

That was no donkey, the editors of the Czech-Soviet Friendship Society magazine "Halo," declared in Prague recently.

It was Joe Stalin, they stoutly maintained.

Secret police, who raised the point, examined the photo with care. It showed Stalin against a background of massed flags. The flags had been touched up so that two of them looked like extensions of his ears. The cops confiscated the whole issue.

She Said 'Strike Is The Only Answer'

HE WAS ONE of the city's leading merchants—a man who had some very definite ideas about the New Deal and trade unions.

The New Deal, he believed, never should have been and unions should be abolished.

His daughter, whom we shall call Mary, never knew the meaning of hard times. She had always had the clothes she wanted and all the spending money she needed.

Mary went to an exclusive women's college, learned to do the "right" things—and then something happened.

The United States went to war against the Axis.

AT FIRST MARY was content with the idea of helping entertain service men, but the contentment didn't last.

Her father became a high officer in the Army supply service and Mary accompanied him to a big military post. Before long, by pulling strings, she was helping put out the post newspaper.

Not long afterward she returned home, applied for a job on a daily newspaper and was hired. The paper badly needed replacements for staff members who had been drafted.

Guild officers expressed immediate anxiety over the effect the replacements were having on their union.

"This gal Mary's likely to give us a lot of trouble," one of them said. "Her old man's got a lot of dough, so it wouldn't surprise me if she tried to sell our replacements on the idea that they don't need a union."

DESPITE THE skepticism, a handful of printed material relating to the Guild was placed atop Mary's typewriter.

She read it, walked over to the desk of the Guild president and asked, "How much does it cost for me to join?"

He told her. She wrote out a check.

A few days later she approached the president again and said, "I've been reading about the Political Action Committee and I'd like to make a contribution."

He referred her to the PAC chairman and she gave him a couple of dollars.

Despite this, you could have gotten a bet with big odds that Mary wouldn't show up for Guild meetings.

But she did—and before long she was taking an active part in floor discussions.

MARY READ ALL of the union publications she could obtain and discussed unions and politics with anybody who knew anything about them.

Before long she had become an ardent New Dealer and took an active part in the Roosevelt re-election campaign.

This alienated many of her social acquaintances and caused a rift between her and members of her family. So she began developing a new circle of friends.

Eventually she moved from the family home into an apartment and quit discussing politics with her father because doing so always resulted in an argument.

Even so, some of the skeptics on the paper refused to buy the idea that Mary would cling to liberalism if the chips were down.

FINALLY THE chips were down. Management kept saying "no" to Guild contract proposals and members began to talk about striking.

Guild leaders decided that what was needed right then was a strong strike threat—but not a strike.

An actual walkout, they decided, was at least a month or six weeks in the future.

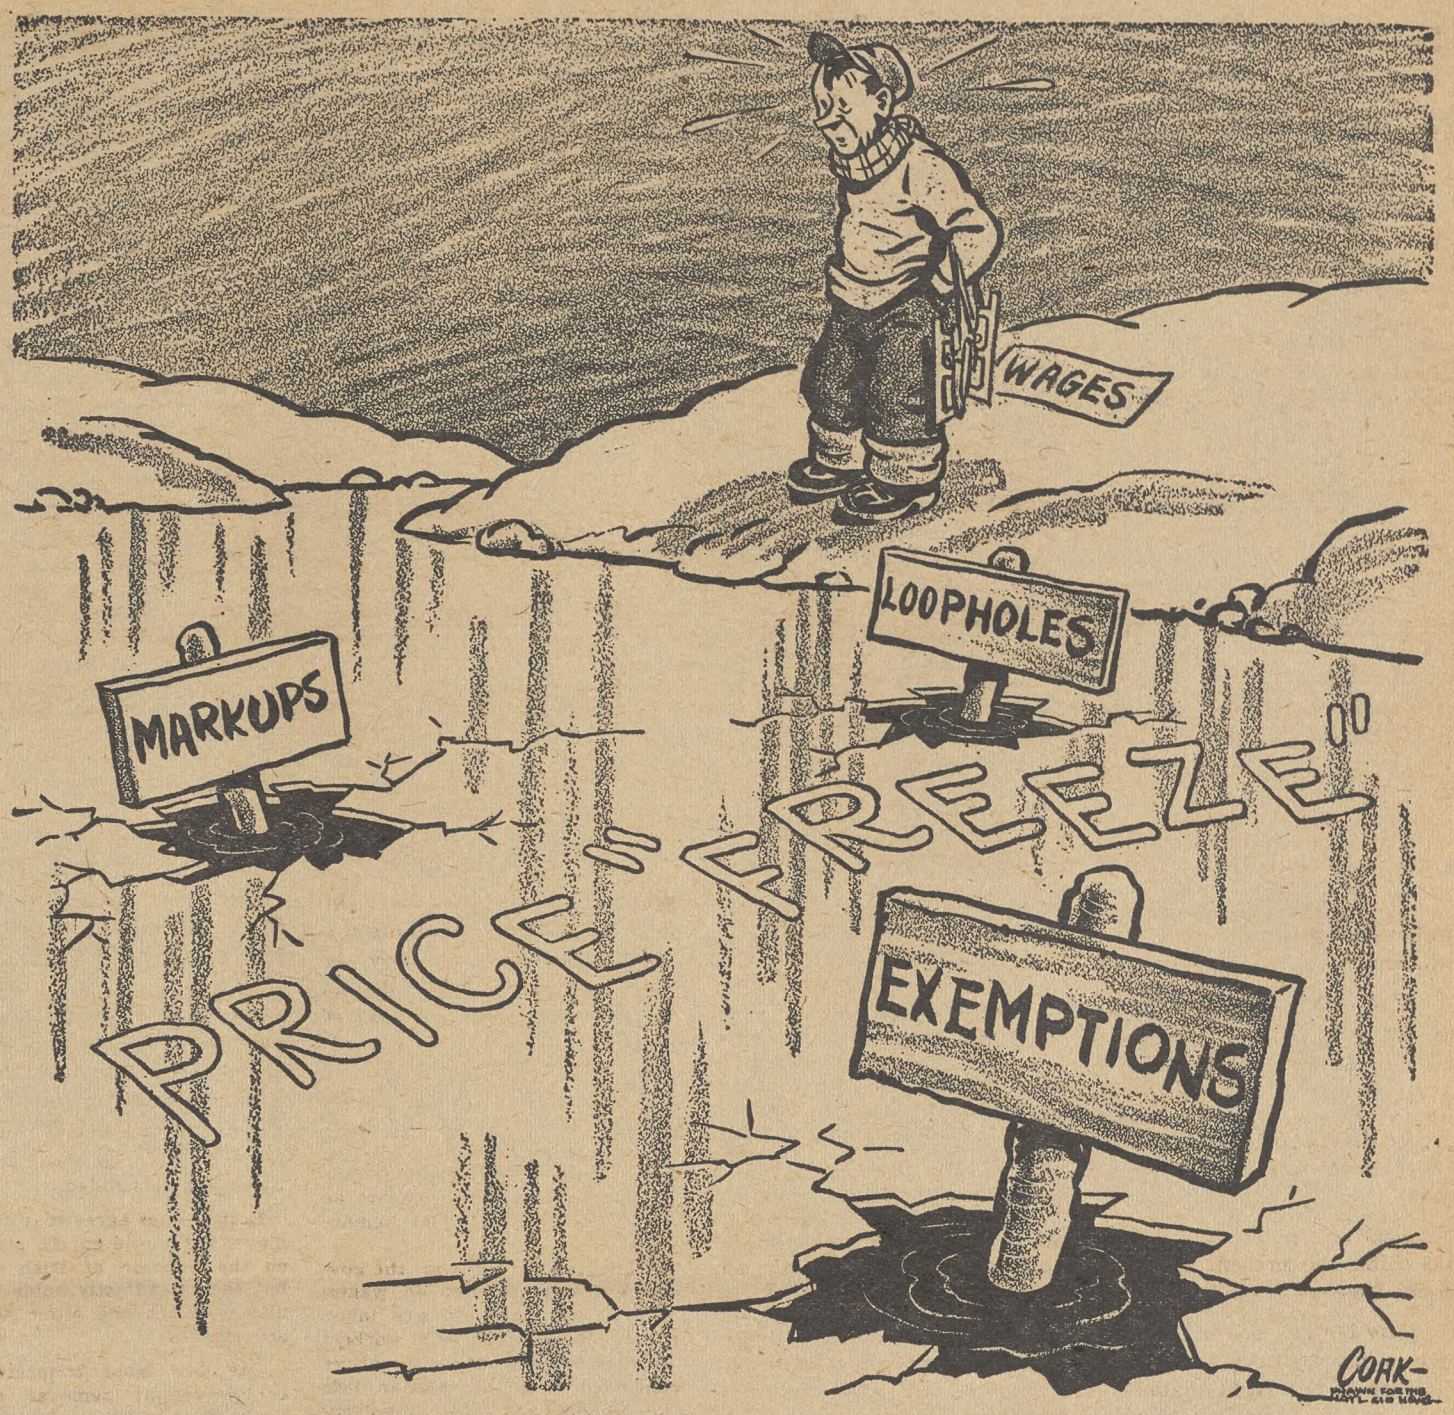
A well-attended Guild meeting was held. A report on negotiations was made. The president said it was time to "begin getting tough."

Somebody proposed adoption of a resolution setting up a "strike preparation committee" but not calling a strike.

At this point Mary jumped to her feet, told the men in the union they were a "bunch of sissies," and proposed a strike within a week unless a satisfactory contract was obtained.

It took the best oratory of the skeptics to keep Mary from stampeding the group into an immediate strike vote—and from then on they referred to her as "a real unionist—despite her old man." A. L. S.

THIN ICE!



Irwin Ross On CP: 'Civil Liberties For Us—Not For You'

THE POSITION—if it can be called that—of American Communists on the question of civil liberties is examined by Irwin Ross, author of Strategy For Liberals and well-known writer on politics and economics, in a new pamphlet published by the American Jewish Committee.

It boils down, he finds, to this:

"Civil liberties for US . . . but not for YOU!"

The "professed passion of American Communists for our traditional freedoms," he feels, is responsible for much of the confusion with which some liberals view the CP.

He explains by going into life under the Smith Act, which outlaws advocacy of the overthrow of the government by violence.

He recalls how it was first used against a small group of Trotskyites in Minneapolis, Minn., in 1941, and how the Communists, "mortal enemies of the Trotskyites . . . gleefully applauded the government's action," which resulted in jail sentences for 18 people. Again in 1943, he recalled, they "fervently supported the strong arm of the law" when it was used against a band of die-hard isolationists and more or less hidden fascists.

But in 1948 the act was used against the Communists.

"Suddenly the Communists discovered that the Smith Act was a grave threat to American liberties," he writes. "The act, they now argued, penalized opinions as well as deeds; it violated the constitutional guarantee of free speech and free press; it subverted democracy and was little short of totalitarian.

"In their righteous wrath the Communists neglected to explain why the Smith Act had possessed none of these disabilities when applied to others."

The Communist record on civil liberties is throughout "as shabby a performance as their oscillations on the Smith Act," he writes.

"THE COMMUNISTS have long been capable of the most fulsome rhetoric in favor of the Bill of Rights," he goes on. "When they get down to cases, however, they are as eager to suppress their opponents' freedoms as they are to protect their own."

As an example he cites their record during the days of the so-called popular front, between 1935 and 1939, when they fervently demanded that Nazis and their sympathizers be barred from holding meetings and distributing propaganda, "eminently legal enterprises, even when their purposes are obnoxious."

"The Communists, however, cared not a whit for these distinctions," he continues. "In their view, fascists were without the pale of the law because they sought to subvert the law. The fact that the same logic might apply to them apparently never occurred to the Communists."

He recounted the Communist "defense" of the rights of minorities and their long but unsuccessful campaign to win the allegiance of Negroes as "the prime example of Communist deceit and inconsistency," during which they "have blown hot and blown cold." He also recalled how they exploited the Scottsboro case for party ends with no regard for the rights, civil or legal, of the defendants themselves.

While they give lip service to civil liberties and protest their devotion to the Bill of Rights, Ross says, "they are not at all distressed that in the Soviet Union there is neither freedom of speech, press or assembly; that these rights have never existed, despite the guarantees in the 1936 Soviet constitution, since the early months after the October Revolution."

The same type of inconsistency that characterizes the Red record on civil liberties "has distinguished every aspect of Communist policy down through the years," he says. By now, however, most American liberals are immune to the Communists' appeal, realizing "first of all, the sheer illogicality of cooperating with Communism."

AN EFFECTIVE program to combat Communist influence in U.S. life, Ross claims, might be built around a three-point approach: safeguarding fundamental civil liberties; exposure of Communists in and their elimination from private organizations, and vigorous government action to counter Communist intrigue, the action to be "selective and scrupulous" in its regard for basic liberties.

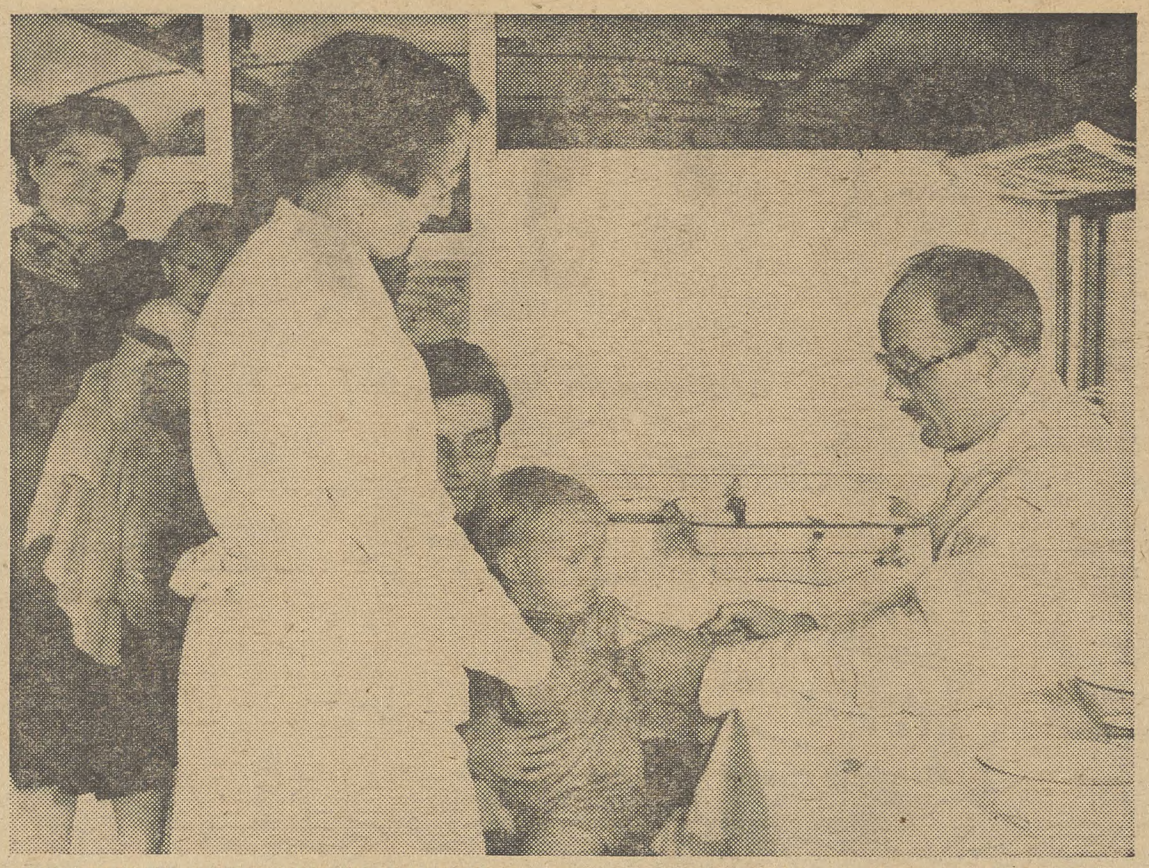
"Although we uphold the civil liberties of Communists—and of KKers and anti-Semites and fascists of every description—we must never be deluded by the Communists' pose as civil libertarians," he concludes.

"The Communists are about as devoted to the Bill of Rights as Hitler was to the Brotherhood of Man. They must be exposed and fought at every turn. The true believer in civil rights combats the Communists with one hand while he shores up the Bill of Rights with the other. Both tasks are equally crucial if American democracy is to be preserved."

Two American Patients Like British Health Plan

By EUGENE MARTINSON

(Eugene Martinson, who wrote the following article, recently returned from Great Britain where for 15 months he studied at the London School of Economics on a scholarship. He was a member of the CIO Auto Workers, and his wife, Gene Lurie Martinson, was one-time secretary to UAW Pres. Walter Reuther. The Martinsons are in-laws of Lawrence Rogin, publicity and educational director of the CIO Textile Workers, Mrs. Martinson being Mrs. Rogin's sister.)



THIS MAY BE PART OF THE REASON that Eugene Martinson in the accompanying articles comments: "British babies are beautiful and healthy looking." As part of the British Health Plan, a physician in this mobile clinic is immunizing children from diphtheria.

MY WIFE Gwen and I are enthusiastic boosters of the British national health service. It isn't just the idea we like. We were both patients in British hospitals operating under the scheme.

I had an emergency appendectomy. Gwen gave birth to our little boy. Neither operation nor the medicines or services we used cost us a cent and we received the very best of care, even though we are Americans and do not pay taxes in Britain.

Did we have to wait in long lines to see the doctor? Did the doctors rush us through? Were we made to feel uncomfortable about utilizing the service? The answer is "no" in each case.

When I got an attack, which seemed like appendicitis to me, I went to see a London doctor whose name I found listed in my local post office as a member of the plan.

Though I had not yet registered under the health scheme, it took all of two minutes to get my card filled out and another five minutes to see the doctor. He examined me thoroughly, diagnosed the case as a possible emergency appendicitis and gave me a letter to a surgeon in a nearby hospital clinic.

It was lunch time when I arrived at the clinic, so I waited till after lunch. If I had presented the doctor's letter, I learned later, I would have been examined on th spot.

Before long I was wrapped in a blanket, whisked into a wheel chair and prepared for surgery. The only question I was asked was whom to notify about the operation. At 6 p. m. my appendix was out. No fuss, no embarrassment, no bill.

THE SERVICE was excellent. The ward which housed me and 18 other chaps was spotlessly clean. The food? Well, if you like lots of rabbit and savory porridge . . . (Savory porridge, by the way, is just oatmeal flavored with sage or thyme.)

There was tea first thing in the morning. There was a bed radio attachment with earphones. My fellow patients were an interesting lot.

When I got out of the hospital I went back to my original doctor during his office hours and he gave me excellent treatment. And no waiting. All the drugs he prescribed were free, too. I could have had free house calls.

I should have registered for the service beforehand. But since I had not, and it was an emergency, no one raised any objections or red tape. My health came first.

I would have gladly paid for the operation and treatments if I had been working. Persons who are working pay a small payroll tax (14c a week). It was taken for granted I shouldn't pay.

The British feel every resident of England, whether a citizen or not, is entitled to health care. And not paying, I got the same service that I would have expected under our American fee system.

My wife and I are very grateful for the excellent care provided for the birth of our son, Keir. When Gwen found she was pregnant, she called on a doctor and arrangements were immediately made for her confinement.

Extra food rations were authorized right away. Gwen received an extra half ration of meat, milk at 1½c a pint, free vitamins and concentrated orange juice at 5c a bottle.

The majority of British babies are delivered in nursing homes staffed by midwives. But since this was Gwen's first child and she was over 35, she was accepted in one of the "finest hospitals in London.

An almoner (medical social worker) interviewed Gwen to find out about our home situation and whether we needed free household help after the baby arrived. Gwen made regular monthly visits to the hospital to be weighed and examined.

The closest tabs were kept on her progress. It was a friendly atmosphere. Tea was served in the waiting room and the women chatted quietly, read or knitted as they waited their turn. There was some waiting. But no longer nor more tedious than it would have been in any doctor's office here in America.

Gwen had the baby in a ward containing six beds. There were midwives in attendance—patient, understanding, well-trained women who made Gwen feel perfectly at home. There were doctors available if you needed them.

Gwen stayed in the hospital 10 days. The British don't rush things at the hospital. One little premature baby and his mother were there a month. Babies, by the way, are kept in the same room with their mothers in this hospital, unless they get an exceptional crying jag.

GWEN WENT to the hospital in an ambulance at 4 a.m. That was free, too. She had classes in relaxation provided free by the hospital's physio-therapy department. As part of the health service, she took our baby to a child welfare clinic.

She could have gone to see her original practitioner if she'd wanted to. If she were a British working mother she would have had a family allowance—a cash maternity benefit to compensate for loss of earnings.

Nurses work hard in the British hospitals. Due to the manpower shortage, orderlies are hard to find. So the nurses help out with the cooking and cleaning. But they don't complain and they're genuinely interested in their patients.

I found out that the mortality rate in Britain has dropped astonishingly since everyone can have free medical care. British babies are a beautiful, healthy looking lot. Everyone is very proud, after all these years of rationing and deprivation, to be the parent of a bouncing well-fed child.

JUST WHAT the health plan has meant to the British worker was dramatically described to us by our weekly charwoman. She told us her husband had suffered for years from arthritis and heart trouble which kept him bedridden.

When the health plan went into effect, he went for free treatment which cured his arthritis so markedly that he could get around again. Then he was given occupational therapy on a carpet-weaving machine and was sent to a convalescent home where the treatment surpassed his wildest dreams.

At first he had felt somewhat humiliated about receiving free treatment. How could he have ever expected care like this without the humiliation of a means test or an investigation? It was hard for him to understand for a long time that he could accept the treatment with pride, that it was his right as a British citizen.

The health service is being expanded as fast as doctors come in to the plan (it's voluntary for them). Though many doctors still oppose the plan, they're coming in. To the doctor who had a rich practice before, the plan means more work for the same money.

BUTS IT'S A boon for the young man who is getting started and it's helping to equalize doctors' income. Each doctor can carry up to 4000 patients and he is paid a set amount by the government for each patient he accepts.

The health plan is in Britain to stay. Even the Conservatives wouldn't dream of abolishing it. They just say they could administer it better.

Even the doctors will be for the plans as the years pass. Many of the next generation of doctors will know they never could have a diploma without the free medical education provided by the government.

British Health Plan Socialism

The British Health Plan, under which Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Martinson receive free medical care, is socialism. The government pays specialists on the basis of a salary scale for special services and the general practitioners on a per capita basis with extra fees for certain services.

The government also runs the hospitals and clinics. Furthermore, the entire operation is almost entirely financed out of general taxes.

On the other hand, President Truman's Health Program, which is falsely labelled "socialism" by the American Medical Association, would be financed like social security, with the employe and the employer sharing the cost. Physicians would have a voice in determining how much they would be paid by the government for their services. Hospitals and clinics, which would continue to be privately operated, would bill the government for their services.

Medic Assails Fee Splitters

Fee kickbacks from one doctor to another tend "to reduce surgery to the level of the confidence game and the surgeon to the level of the lowest fee splitter, the racetrack tout." So declared Dr. Paul R. Hawley, director of the American College of Surgeons, at a college sectional meeting at St. Louis, Mo.

"The college has never compromised in its opposition to fee splitting," he said, "but there still are too many cities and too many hospitals where it exists."

Charging that some surgeons remove "healthy organs," Dr. C. E. Burford, of the St. Louis University School of Medicine, said unnecessary operations are the frequent result of "an unholy alliance employing a method, unknown to the patient, of dividing the spoils or fees."

Papers 'Loaded' For Nixon, Biased On Douglas

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

STANFORD University, Palo Alto, Cal., has just released the results of its research into newspaper coverage of the political campaign which resulted in the election to the U.S. Senate of former Rep. Richard M. Nixon (R), who defeated former Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D).

The study was made under a $1000 research grant given by the American Newspaper Guild (CIO) and its California locals. Result: it has been found that the press was on Nixon's side!

The study was done so "scientifically," with such obvious gaps in its approach to the measurement of the effects of bias or the lack of it, as to approach the ridiculous—and yet this very fact makes the findings on California press performance doubly damning.

THE SURVEY made no attempt, for instance, to give more weight to a statement at the top of page one than to one buried at the end of a yarn about something else and located back among the want ads. It measured merely "statements," deciding whether they were for or against Douglas or Nixon, or neutral, regardless of placement in the paper.

The researchers gave no weight to the fact that some of the papers surveyed had 10 times as much circulation as others, with the big ones favoring Nixon, or that neither of the two (small) papers which editorially favored Mrs. Douglas had a Sunday edition.

They counted headlines as "statements" but gave no more importance to a big, black three-column head than to a little, buried, one-column one.

They did not take into account the fact that some of the papers they studied were the only ones published in their town. . . . They made no attempt to find out how many press releases from campaign headquarters had hit the wastebaskets, merely counting those that actually got into print.

They gave equal weight, in measuring "statements" favorable to either candidate, to ideas of unequal emotional appeal.

(For instance, if a story about Mrs. Douglas said she was attractive but also said she was pro-Communist, the researchers simply chalked one up on each side of her "score".)

—And yet, with all this to its discredit, and with only the sober and "scientific" measurement of statement against statement, the researchers found that a dozen California newspapers had come out in favor of Nixon by an average of 29.2 points. In other words, after adding up all the favorable statements made about either candidate, subtracting all the unfavorable ones, and then finding out the difference in the total favorable and unfavorable score, Nixon came out far ahead.

To put it in another way, the survey found—using the same figures—that while Nixon had only a slight edge on the number of favorable statements, Douglas drew almost 70% of all the unfavorable ones made about either candidate.

Considering all the important factors the survey did not measure, the CIO News can be pardoned for being surprised that the pro-Nixon bias showed up as clearly as it did.

And it shows up even more closely when the individual papers are studied.

THE TWO editorially pro-Douglas papers were: the Ventura Star—Free Press (circulation 14,165 daily; no Sunday edition; only paper in Ventura) and the Los Angeles News (circulation 251,232 daily; no Sunday edition; next-to-smallest of Los Angeles' five daily papers; its publisher, Manchester Boddy, was Douglas' opponent in the Democratic primaries and fought her vigorously, mainly on the Communist issue.) These had a pro-Douglas score of 63.1 and 75.7 respectively.

The one paper supporting neither candidate editorially was the Sacramento Bee (daily circulation 111,047; no Sunday edition; one of two papers in Sacramento), which came out with a pro-Douglas score of 7.9—in other words, was just about neutral, by the "scientific" test. The other Sacramento paper favored Nixon.

Supporting Nixon were: The Bakersfield Californian (daily circulation 30,286; no Sunday edition, only paper in town); the San Francisco News (daily circulation 132,476; no Sunday edition; one of four papers in San Francisco.) These two actually came out with slight pro-Douglas scores: 5.5 and 2.0, respectively.

—The Marysville-Yuba City Appeal Democrat (circulation 10,950 daily—no Sunday edition; only paper in the area), which favored Nixon by only 1.6.

—The San Diego Union (morning half of two papers published by same owner. Its combined daily circulation with the Tribune, its evening twin, is 140,395 daily and 193,065 Sunday.) The Union's pro-Nixon score was 16.9.

—The Sacramento Union (circulation 29,434 daily and 35,697 Sunday), which gave Nixon 27.8.

—The Los Angeles Times (circulation 385,582 daily, 782,953 Sunday), which gave him 93.5.

—The Los Angeles Examiner (circulation 357,453 daily, 827,051 Sunday), which gave him 118.9.

—The San Francisco Chronicle (circulation 160,477 daily and 267,318 Sunday; the favorite newspaper of West Coast intellectuals), which gave Nixon 68.4.

—The San Francisco Call-Bulletin (circulation 154,593 daily; a Hearst paper), which gave him 96.2.

THUS, THE survey shows — if you take the trouble to look up circulation data and other information in the Editor and Publisher Yearbook—that Douglas' outright support came from papers with a combined circulation of only 265,397, none of it on Sundays, and that Nixon's outright support came from papers with a combined daily circulation of at least 1,238,885, not counting the ones whose pro-Nixon score was slight, and a Sunday circulation of 2,106,084.

In other words, papers favoring Nixon reached between four and five times as many readers, six days a week, as did papers favoring Douglas—and he had the field to himself weekends.

And then, look at the big-town story. In Los Angeles, a five-paper town, the survey covered three papers—two, with combined daily circulation of 743,036, favored Nixon with scores of 93.5 and 118.9, respectively, while one, with a daily circulation of 251,232, favored Douglas with 75.7. In San Francisco, no paper favored Douglas at all.

Nixon carried Los Angeles county by 931,803 to Douglas' 612,510. He carried San Francisco by 165,631 to Douglas' 122,207—and in the same area, two Democratic candidates for the House were victorious.

In San Diego, where there was no pro-Douglas press, Nixon won by 115,119 to Douglas' 72,433—and again, a Democratic Congressional candidate won.

In Sacramento, where the Bee was neutral and the Union pro-Nixon, he won by 49,798 to 47,689.

THE SURVEY made a conscientious attempt to pin the statements for and against candidates down by source—and in so doing, brought out without any particular emphasis another angle of the newspaper campaign which disturbed and disgusted Douglas supporters right up to election day.

CIO Political Action Committee observers accused the papers of using pro-Nixon propaganda as "news." The researchers soberly found that 23.9 of all the statements favorable to Nixon came from "reporter or political writer"—half of them writing without bylines. In other words, 23.9% of the material favoring Nixon in all papers appeared in the so-called "news" columns. On the other hand, the researchers, who examined over 8000 statements in all, found not one unfavorable comment about Nixon in "news" stories without a reporter's name attached, and only 9.9% in "news" columns with the writer identified.

(Amusing sidelight: the main source of statements favoring Nixon was Nixon himself. He supplied 41% of his own praises. Douglas supplied a modest 28.5% of hers.)

CIO-PAC also reported it had extreme difficulty in getting anything in the papers at all, under its own steam—and this seems borne out by the researchers' findings that "labor leader or organization" is cited as the source for only 3.3% of all statements favoring Douglas, and only .6% of statements unfavorable to Nixon.

THE importance of the Communist theme in the election actually is underplayed two ways in the survey—first because the researchers made no attempt to weigh its emotional value and second because, in discussing the various themes used, they broke the question down into several sub-sections. Again, however, the fact shines through the fog—the theme was used, heavily and often, against Douglas. How viciously, the survey does not show.

Here are seven headings, for instance, in the list of propaganda themes used against Douglas, all of which clearly add up to one big issue—the Communist problem. The seven are: "National Security," "Comprehension of Communist Threat," "Control of Subversives," "Guilt by Association with Communists," "Americanism," "Welfare State, Socialism," and "Other Communist Themes."

The total percentage for all of these is 35.5—making it far and away the most popular theme of attack on her. The next biggest — 14.9% — is something called "Strength-Weakness"—the bandwagon stuff, in which speakers prate about her certain defeat, desertion by members of her own party, etc.

AND THE third biggest—14.1% — is "Political Morality" — which the researchers define as follows: "Statements which charge, that the candidate or his supporters were political opportunists who did not give the whole and the true picture . . . Most of these statements were to the effect that the opponents misrepresent and falsify and dodge the real issue."

Editor and Publisher, the industry trade magazine, makes little of the bias uncovered by the survey, but pats the California papers on the back because the survey found that by and large the 12 papers gave equal space to both candidates—with no mention of where the space was, of course.

The survey covered the period from Sept. 1 to Nov. 7, and the papers were alerted beforehand to the fact that they would be under observation.

GORILLA ASSOCIATES WITH McCARTHY! The beast should be thrown out of the zoo: he's let Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) right into his cage. 'Taint so, of course, but this is the kind of picture that McCarthy's aides used to help defeat ex-Sen. Tydings (D. Md.) by "proving" he associated with Communists. Such a vicious fake was circulated in Maryland.

PAC Endorsement Story Is 'Buried'

Here is an example of the kind of treatment PAC got from the "impartial" California press during the Nixon-Douglas campaign:

The Los Angeles Times received a press release giving the list of PAC endorsements. The story made the paper, all right: buried way back among the obituaries was a little two-inch story, beginning: "If anybody cares, here is the list of endorsements made by the CIO Political Action Committee."

This kind of thing apparently does not show up in the survey at all, since it was not directly about either Senatorial candidate.

Some Distortions Aren't Measured

The effect of misleading headlines was not measured, either. For instance, when Sen. Dennis Chavez (D. N.M.) went to Los Angeles to speak on Helen Douglas' behalf, he commented in passing: "Now, Nixon is a nice enough young man, I suppose—I don't know much about him, but I do know Helen Douglas . . ." He then launched into a series of tributes to Mrs. Douglas.

This story appeared in the Los Angeles Times under the headline: "Chavez Praises Nixon."

Presumably the statements in the body of the story were duly counted as favoring Mrs. Douglas, subtracting by that amount from the headline's pro-Nixon slant. But how many newspaper "readers" get past the headline?

Alien Workers Help British War Machine

GREAT BRITAIN, short of workers to man an industrial machine that has jumped production 50% since the end of World War II, is admitting foreign workers to take up the slack at the rate of 30,000 a year.

Further production boosts and employment opportunities are in sight as defense production expands.

Approximately 350,000 workers from continental Europe have worked in British industry since the war ended, and about 200,000 of them are now making their homes in Britain permanently—the remainder have gone out to other countries of the British Commonwealth.

The government and the British trade unions combined forces to see to it that the foreign workers were not exploited by industry or used by employers to force down wages and debase working conditions. At the unions' insistence, they cannot be employed except at the same rates of pay and under the same conditions as native-born workers. In some industries such as mining, the immigrants had to become union members.

The continued high flow of workers into the country—which has had virtually no unemployment for the last five years—is now taking place without government-sponsored planning. Many of those from Western Europe are engaged in domestic work, but many others are employed in industry.

Prospective employers applying for permits now have to show that qualified permanent residents of the community to be affected are all employed, and that wages and working conditions will be not less favorable than those given to British employes for similar work.

Former Local C. Of C. Head, Ex-Wallaceite Identified As Taft Labor League Leaders

By AL ZACK

YOO hoo, Senator Taft. Your slip is showing. One of your high-priced press agents pulled a boner and the best-kept secret of the 1950 elections campaign is a secret no longer.

Remember how carefully you concealed the identity of the real brains behind your so-called "Labor League for Taft"?

Remember how hard you worked to perpetuate the fiction that his leaders were real labor men?

Well, the cat is out of the bag now.

The last time your alleged labor organization met in Columbus your press agent issued a yarn saying they wanted you to run for President of the United States.

AND the press agent said, "J. Eugene Carr of Canton will call the next meeting." He also reported Carr was your best organizer. In fact, he said, Carr "led in organization of local league units last year."

Sounds like Carr's a mighty fine labor organizer, doesn't it?

But the fact is, Carr has been an official of the Brush-Moore Newspapers, Inc., which owns a big string of daily papers in Ohio. As a matter of fact, he had the title of "Director of Radio" for the Brush-Moore Newspapers, which also owns a string of radio stations.

Around 1947, Carr was also president of the Canton Chamber of Commerce, serving two terms in that office.

That's a labor leader, Mr. Taft?

Funny thing about that "Labor League for Taft" meeting, Senator. Your press agent also reported you sent a recorded message to Carr and company, thanking them for, in your words, "standing up against the self-appointed labor bosses."

By the way, who elected Carr a labor leader? Was it the Canton Chamber of Commerce or the Brush-Moore Newspapers?

ALSO, who paid Carr for his services? His name didn't appear on the official report filed by the "Taft for Senator Committee." That was the report which showed how much your committee gave the other "leaders" of the so-called "Labor League for Taft."

That report shows your committee gave $650 to Willis O. Hall, who was identified in your publicity as chairman of the Labor League for Taft.

It also shows your committee gave $1256.25 to Marion Patten, who was identified as the Montgomery County chairman of the Labor League for Taft. Patten, you will recall, was active in the Wallace campaign in 1948 and also fought for the United Electrical Workers when that union was expelled from CIO because of its Communist domination.

That same report, Mr. Taft, shows your committee gave $1750 to Bryan Garber of Toledo, $900 to Fred Ross of Cincinnati and $268 to Otto Lyman of Warren, who got his name in the paper because he quit a minor post in the Trumbull CIO Council to join your organization. Your publicity referred to these men as "labor men."

INCIDENTALLY, Senator, your press agent quoted Howard Reynolds of Delaware, whom he identified as a field representative, as saying, "We've started a job in 1950 that I hope we can finish in 1952."

Just to refresh your recollection, your committee gave Reynolds $2098.13 for working from May 4 to Nov. 6. Maybe he wants to be on your contribution list for two more years.

Sounds like a funny labor outfit you're running, Senator. Its top organizer is a past president of the Canton Chamber of Commerce. It agrees to meet on call from a man who was a big wheel in a big newspaper chain. It names ex-Wallaceitis who support Communist-dominated organizations as county chairmen and gives them money, too.

Sure you don't have the labor movement mixed up with the National Association of Manufacturers?

Heaven protect workers from your kind of a labor organization.

CIO Endorses Drafting Of 18-Year-Olds

CIO SECY.-Treas. James B. Carey gave CIO endorsement to proposals for drafting 18-year-olds in testimony Jan. 29 on amendments to the Selective Service Act before a sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Armed Services.

"We believe that lowering the induction age," he said, "would prove least disruptive to our way of life and at the same time serve as a great source of strength to our armed forces.

"We are somewhat more reluctant to endorse the request of the Dept. of Defense to extend the period of training and service from 21 to 27 months. Nevertheless, we do not oppose this provision because of the urgency with which our top military leaders have insisted that the additional period is necessary to adequately train men for the various armed services.

"At the same time this committee should recognize that by so doing we are buying increased security for all of us at the expense of a relatively small group of men who will be required to serve an additional six months in the armed forces. This can be justified only on the grounds of military expediency.

"THIS EXTENSION should not, however serve as a precedent for further requests to lengthen the period of training and service at some later date solely because it is easier to keep men in the service than to extend the draft to new groups.

"In the future, if there is need for further strengthening of our armed forces during peacetime, it would appear more equitable to broaden the base of those subject to induction rather than to increase further the burden on those already in service."

Carey strongly opposed a proviso in the bill which would authorize the President to cut the basic pay of trainees from the regular $75 a month to $30.

Carey registered objection to changing the title of the law to the "Universal Military Service and Training Act."

"The concept of 'universal military training' has generally been associated with the draft into military service of all citizens without regard to physical condition, sex, occupational skills and other special considerations," he said.

"THERE IS nothing in the proposed bill which is inconsistent with the present title. . . . Certainly this bill, as it now stands . . . presents no rational excuse for amending the title. We believe that the proposed change in the title will leave the door open to the drafting of individuals not qualified for military duty to perform functions normally carried on by civilians.

"To this we are unalterably opposed. It smacks of national service legislation which not one of us would want to see replace the voluntary free labor which has so successfully served the nation in previous periods of peace and war."

Carey urged complete equality of treatment for Negroes and other minority group members in all branches of the armed services, and praised the Air Force for demonstrating "the practicability and favorable results that flow from a policy of complete integration."

Stand Against Communist Aggression Leads To Purge Of Local UE Officers

BECAUSE they said 'the union should support American troops fighting aggression in Korea, four officers of Local 1227, United Electrical Workers, have been expelled. The result has been a revolt of the membership against Communist discipline.

(The UE was expelled from the CIO at the 1949 convention for following the Communist Party line.)

The story goes back to last October, when the members were told that the UE convention declaration on foreign policy did not mean support for the U. S. and UN in Korea. James Prenz. business agent, disagreed, demanded a firm pro-UN stand. He was purged in the local's election in December, being succeeded by Vince Perillo.

Bruno Andrews was elected president; Robert Blume, vice president; James DiSena, sergeant-arms. All three are anti-Communists, were under constant attack by the party-liners, and told "to get back in line or get out."

The test was due at the membership meeting Jan. 24 at Long Island City, N. Y. At a hurried executive meeting that afternoon, all four were expelled for "voting wrong," and "opposing the policy of UE." Blume, in addition, was accused of dual unionism, for having joined the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical Workers under orders to learn what he could about IUE activities.

Three hours after the expulsion, more than 1000 members of the local showed up for the January meeting. All were screened by a group including members of the Fur and Furniture Workers' locals.

(The Fur and Leather Workers were expelled by the CIO for following the CP line, but the Furniture Workers, which also were slated for trial by a CIO board, were saved from expulsion by purging themselves at their convention last year.)

The four expelled officers were barred from the hall. Fistfights broke out during the meeting, and police had to be called.

Andrews, Blume DiSena and Prenz called an open-air meeting across the street and pledged "to continue to fight for an honest and patriotic union. If we can't have it in UE, then we'll look elsewhere because our members want a decent union, not one run by Party members." LPA

NY Guild In Drive For CBS Workers

The New York CIO Newspaper Guild has begun a campaign to organize radio and television office workers of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The New York Guild claims jurisdiction over the workers because of a clause in the union's constitution which covers "radio company and television broadcasting company" employes. Some local Guilds outside New York have contracts with radio stations. The number of eligible employes at CBS is between 650 and 700.

CBS recently declined to negotiate a new contract with the left-wing Distributive, Processing and Office Workers of America, contending that the independent union did not represent a majority of the workers. The AFL Office Employes Intl. Union also is seeking to organize the CBS workers.

Strike Barely Averted

A strike on the Aliquippa & Southern Railroad—a feeder line owned by the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp.—was averted last week 15 minutes before a deadline set by the CIO United Railroad Workers when the management agreed to arbitrate the size of a wage increase. The raise will be retroactive.

Free Transport Unions To Aid Democracies

Arms necessary for the defense of the democracies will reach their destinations in spite of everything the Communists can do to block them, representatives of free unions of Mediterranean transport workers pledged recently at a conference in Marseilles, France, under the auspices of the Intl. Transportworkers' Federation.

A committee was set up to carry out the pledge. Represented on it are the unions of transport workers in France, Greece, Turkey, Israel, Egypt, Algeria, Tunisia and Morocco.

Phony Labor Paper Blasts Truman

"THE SOUTHERN industrialists no longer need the goon squad in white sheets, the tar-and-feathers, the free ride out of town on fence rail that were so popular a few years back," says John C. Cort on Unions in the South, in the Feb. 2 issue of Commonweal, Catholic weekly.

"They use them, too, occasionally even now, but today the better class of people doesn't soil its fingers with such vulgarity," says Cort. "Today they hire a high-priced lawyer and strangle the union to death with red-tape and delay, to which homicide the Taft-Hartley Act lends itself with glad abandon."

Based on a study of Taft-Hartleyism in Southern textiles prepared by the CIO Textile Workers' attorney, Isadore Katz, Cort's article discusses what's wrong with the South's attitude on labor and what can be done about it.

But Northerners shouldn't "give way to self-righteous feelings of superiority toward the South," says Cort. "It is only that up here, thanks to circumstances, and no credit of our own, some of these sins are not as fashionable as they remain in the South."

Much can be done by Southerners themselves, to change things, Cort believes. For one thing, more Christian missionaries are needed "to help teach the Southerners something about Christianity." Cort says he can "think of no better place for missionaries to go than into the Southern mills."

PROSPECTS for a socialist revival in this country appear at present to be rather dim, in the opinion of Max Nomad whose article, "Will American Workers Go Socialist?" appears in the Jan. 26 issue of the Socialist Call.

"Yet circumstances might arise which might break the deadlock, just as half a century ago a number of objective circumstances led in England to the formation of what was to become a trade-union-supported Labor Party," writes Nomand.

A writer and teacher who lectures at New York Univ. and the New School for Social Research, Nomad is the author of "Rebels and Renegades" and "Apostles of Revolution." The Call article is one of a series of New Roads to Socialism.

Looking the question straight in the face, Nomad says, "So far all roads have led only to sectarian isolation." He finds many reasons for the indifference of American workers to socialism in the past. They include the traditional "American dream" of great opportunities for the poor man, early establishment of political democracy in the U.S. at a time when Europeans were still waging revolutionary struggles against remnants of feudalism and absolutism, the development of American unionism along the lines of improving wages and hours, with little influence exerted by middle-class malcontent intellectuals.

"It has been pointed out time and again that, left to their own devices, the manual workers never go beyond the concept of better wages and shorter hours," according to Nomad.

Many things have changed today but "the democratic socialism movement is as weak and even weaker than ever," Nomad writes. One reason for this is the enormous cleavage between the standard of living of the skilled and well organized workers on the one hand and the unskilled and semi-skilled on the other, which rules out class solidarity, one of the foundations of the socialist outlook. Another is that the New Deal Democrats have "stolen much of the Socialist thunder."

On the other hand, Nomad believes that a defeat of the Democratic Party followed by an ultra-reactionary Republican administration, and increased employer resistance to workers' demands for higher living standards, are some of the things that might work in the direction of socialism.

SOME OF THE heaviest strains on the freedom of the press in this country are being exerted by a screwball anti-labor sheet published monthly in Indianapolis, Ind. Whoever named the paper probably did not mean to be funny, only sly, in calling it The Labor Digest. The masthead gives the editor's name as Norman A. Zolezzi and states that the paper was founded in December 1927, "pledged to the cause of labor all the time."

It's a curious little eight-page paper that may get away with a lot because it isn't taken seriously. It regularly slings mud and slime against both CIO and AFL unions and leaders, as well as government officials and bureaus, but the February issue really outdoes itself. It gives the whole front page to an attack on President Truman which sounds like the rantings of a maniac at times. For instance:

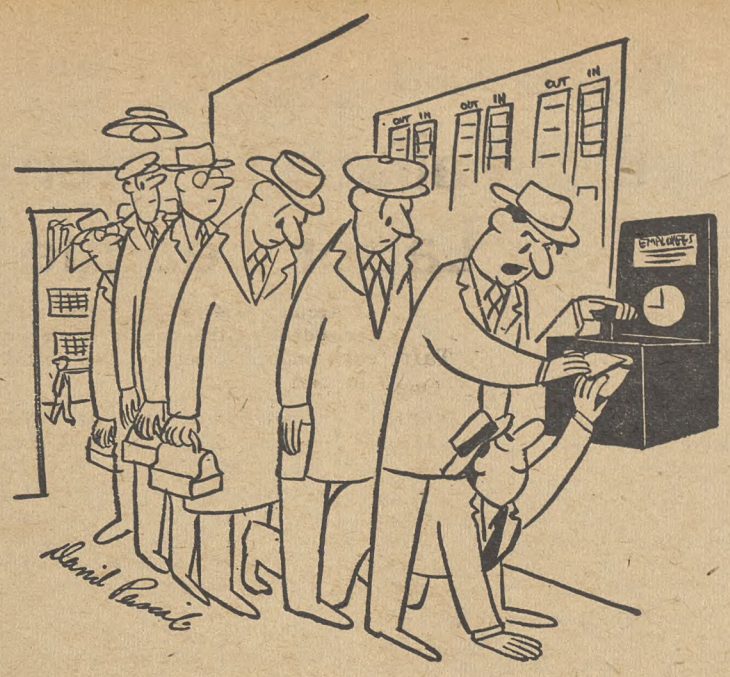
"What has happened to the soul of Harry Truman? What sorceries have been practiced on the man? They must have been potent to transform a Missouri county judge (county commissioner), who loved to boast of his economies and tender regard for the tax dollar, into the most insanely wasteful head of a state the world ever knew. . . .

"Standing glassy-eyed, like Trilby under Svengali's spell, President Truman read his recent message to the Congress and a frightened nation. . . . He spoke as a Socialist, though obviously the words were not his but belonged to his 'controls'. Sentences were long and cumbrous and he mispronounced many words." And on and on for a whole page.

Then finally this one: "It would be grand if devil-possessed Harry Truman could be impeached. And treated for his derangement before he really does kick someone who isn't 'wearing a support below,' or before he gives his hero, 'good old Joe,' who looks like Tom Pendergast, the key to Fort Knox."

Sex Hormone Probe Asked

Women who are unable to have children may be able to trace their troubles to artificial fattening processes used by meat packers, according to Rep. James J. Delaney (D. N.Y.) Delaney wants Congress to let him head a seven-man committee to investigate reports that synthetic sex hormones injected in chickens, pigs, sheep, and cattle to fatten them can make women barren.



"Okay, Hennessy. Get in line like the rest of us."

Hayes Of Machinists Named Mrs. Rosenberg's Assistant

ALBERT J. HAYES, president of the Intl. Association of Machinists, has been named special assistant on manpower to Assistant Secy. of Defense Anna M. Rosenberg. He is the first special assistant in the history of the national military establishment to come from the ranks of organized labor, the Defense Dept. said.

It was announced that Hayes would continue to serve as president of the Machinists while performing his duties with the Defense Dept. on a regular basis. He will also be available for consultation on other matters.

Hayes is a member of the United Labor Policy Committee which represents the CIO, AFL and Railway Labor Executives Association. He is also a member of the Labor Department's Management-Labor Advisory Committee on Defense Manpower and of the advisory committee to the Director of the Defense Mobilization Board.

The Machinists recently voted to rejoin the AFL on terms which eliminated the causes of a jurisdictional dispute leading to disaffiliation several years ago. LPA

CIO Members Bar Enemy Ship Work

Members of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers refused point-blank last week to do repair work on the Polish passenger liner Batory.

Terming the vessel "a Communist enemy ship" and a "potential threat to the lives of Americans fighting in Korea," the workers declared they would rather go on relief than work on the boat.

The vessel put into the Todd Shipbuilding Corp. in Brooklyn, N. Y., for a hull scraping, painting and repair of her propellers. IUMSW Reg. Dir. Alfred W. Myers declared that shipyard workers from Maine to the Gulf of Mexico would refuse to touch it.

"When our contract was signed," he said, "there was no provision in it for handling enemy ships. Our men won't repair the Batory and that's all there is to it."

U. S. Blacklist Stands Against Defense Bidder

A firm put on the statutory three-year blacklist for violating the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act can't get off merely because it has a chance to work on a defense job, Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin has ruled.

The act requires payment of the prevailing wage in the area by employers who win federal contracts of $10,000 or more. Tobin's ruling came on an appeal by the Quality Manufacturing Co., New Rochelle, N. Y., a hat-making firm, to be removed from the blacklist because it had been asked by a government agency to negotiate for defense contracts.

Buffalo CIO Hits Use Of FBI Circular

The Greater Buffalo, N. Y., CIO Council has protested the Buffalo school board's authorization of the distribution at schools of a circular calling on children to report all persons or organizations considered "subversive" to the FBI.

The circular was distributed by an otherwise unidentified "Seven Point Committee." It contained a statement by FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover, listing seven steps to follow "in reporting information pertaining to espionage, sabotage and subversive activities."

The Buffalo Council said in a resolution that the use of children "to report" upon families, neighbors and friends is the method of the totalitarian police state and is completely foreign to American ideals.

Those 'Jewels' Are Only Sucker-Bait

If you run out of ready cash due to the high cost of living, don't make the mistake of trying to hock one of the "floating jewel sapphire" phonograph needles made by the Electrovox Co. of East Orange, N. J., says the Federal Trade Commission.

According to an FTC trial examiner, the needles which the company claims are tipped with sapphires and rubies are actually made of synthetic materials.

Furthermore, the company has been ordered to stop claiming that the needles are good for 4000, 6000 or 10,000 playings or any specified number because such claims "are grossly exaggerated, speculative, and have no basis of fact."

Plans To Use Mexicans On Farms Flayed

WHILE a delegation of labor leaders was protesting U. S. plans to import Mexican farm workers, thousands of the latter were reported heading for the border.

A delegation representing the CIO, AFL, Railway Labor Executives Association, and social welfare organizations called on Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin Jan. 30. They protested plans to import 500,000 foreign workers to be used on the nation's farms, railways and in processing industries.

The delegation urged that pools of unemployed and partially employed American citizens be utilized before any foreign workers are imported. In a memorandum they left with Tobin, they pointed out that sufficient labor can be mobilized in the U. S. and its possessions to meet any present manpower needs on the nation's farms.

THE potential sources they cited included: 1,540,000 seasonal workers, mostly in the South, harvesting the cotton crops, who are idle at least seven months a year; 226,000 Puerto Ricans working in the sugar cane fields less than five months a year; 3 million sub-marginal farm operators who barely scratch out a living and often have to take other work to make ends meet.

The protest was filed while agents of the U. S. State and Labor Depts. were negotiating in Mexico City with the Mexican government on an agreement to import as many as 300,000 Mexicans. Meanwhile Mexican laborers were heading for Brownsville, Mexicali and El Paso, hoping to cross the border illegally, as "wetbacks" (those who wade or swim across to elude the border patrol).

The big farm operators, who run what is known as "factories in the field," prefer Mexicans because they work for less, and thus depress the wage scale for the entire area, and put up with miserable conditions.

THE memorandum left with Tobin called for legislation to provide for a program of recruitment and transportation; standards of wages, working and other conditions; adequate housing, educational and recreational facilities, emergency medical care, accident insurance and social service.

"We urge you to use your influence to develop a realistic program to supply American farms with American labor before you give your approval to a plan for the importation of any foreign nationals," the memorandum read.

Those in the delegation comprised Lewis G. Hines, special representative of AFL President Green; Paul Sifton of the CIO United Auto Workers; Ernest Benson of the Railway Labor Executives Association; H. L. Mitchell, president of the AFL National Farm Labor Union; Mrs. Veniette Weil, secretary of the National Council on Agricultural Life and Labor. LPA

Island Pay Boosts Add $21.6 Million Per Year

Seventeen orders on minimum wages issued during 1950 by the Insular Minimum Wage Board of Puerto Rico will add an estimated $21.5 million to the annual income of 79,000 workers, according to the board's computations, or an average of $5.23 per week.

Legislatures Move On Labor-Backed Bills

STATE legislatures are devoting much attention to the problems of working men, a survey shows. Here is the latest roundup showing action taken on wages and hours, unemployment and workmen's compensation, FEPC and other matters directly affecting union members.

Arizona: Bill introduced to abolish Dept. of Labor operated by the Arizona Industrial Commission and appoint a labor commissioner at $4500 a year. The appointment would be by the Governor subject to Senate confirmation. The commissioner would handle wage disputes. Another bill would raise the limit on unemployment benefits from 12 to 20 weeks while lowering rates for small employers.

California: A State Labor Relations Board has been proposed to govern collective bargaining among intrastate employes. Closed shops and picketing for organizational purposes would be outlawed by a bill introduced by Harold Levering, of Los Angeles.

Colorado: Gov. Dan Thornton wants "a reasonable and enforceable" FEPC because he is convinced that "right-thinking Americans firmly believe in equal and non-discriminatory work opportunities regardless of race, color or religion." Another bill would raise the minimum wage to $1 an hour.

Connecticut: Bills to establish a 75c minimum wage and give equal pay to women are before the Legislature. Another would increase workmen's compensation to a maximum of $32 a week and provide that widows or widowers of workers killed on the job be given compensation for life or until remarried.

Delaware: Time-and-a-half after 40 hours is provided in a bill sponsored by Sen. Frederick Klair. It would also set a 75c minimum wage now, increasing to $1 in two years. Unemployment benefits for workers on strike or involved in any sort of labor dispute would be paid under a bill by Rep. Joseph A. Bruno. It would increase maximum benefits from $26 to $30 weekly and raise minimum benefits from $8 to $15.

Georgia: A bill would outlaw secondary boycotts under penalty of $1000 fine, 12 months in jail or both.

Indiana: Proposals to strengthen the FEPC law and provide $50,000 for enforcement are before the Legislature along with a bill to found a State Labor Relations Board. The board would investigate, hold hearings, and fine FEPC violators.

Maine: Hopes for a state minimum wage law faded as the Legislative Research Committee found Maine workers "under no hardship a minimum wage could correct."

Minnesota: The Legislature is considering FEPC, unemployment compensation and child labor bills. The FEPC bill would create a nine-man commission to eliminate unfair employment practices. Minimum age for child labor would be raised from 14 to 16 and limit 16 and 17-year-olds to eight hours a day by another bill.

Missouri: Rep. Donnell R. Perryman (D.) has introduced a bill to repeal the King-Thompson law, which forbids strikes against public utilities.

Montana: The Public Utilities and State Commissions Committee of the House has reported adversely on an FEPC bill. A bill is being pressed by Rep. J. S. Brenner to boost workmen's compensation payments $1.50 a week.

New Hampshire: Employes of "hotels, restaurants, inns and cabins" who were excluded from the state minimum wage law two years ago are covered in a bill which would establish a new 50c minimum.

New Jersey: Speeding up of appeals under the Workmen's Compensation Act will be possible under a bill sponsored by Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll.

New York: Democrats are backing a bill to repeal the Condor-Wadlin Act, outlawing strikes by state employes. Representatives from both parties are behind proposals to give labor a say in "all emergency manpower, production and control boards on both the policy and operational level." Bills also are up to improve workmen's and unemployment compensation laws.

North Carolina: Rep. Clyde A. Shreve is fighting to repeal the anti-closed shop law and to establish a minimum wage law with a 75c floor and time-and-a-half for overtime. Amendment of workmen's compensation laws is asked to raise benefits from a $24 to $35 weekly maximum, and death or permanent disability payments from $6000 to $7500.

Ohio: Two FEPC bills have been introduced which would have a commission to enforce fair employment standards. Sen. David M. Ferguson wants a joint investigation of the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Oregon: Workmen's compensation under the "hazardous occupations" section would be extended to bus and cab drivers under one new bill, and another would extend coverage of unemployment insurance to 30,000 employes of small firms.

Rhode Island: About 3000 workers in laundry and dry cleaning plants who are now covered by a 12-year-old minimum wage of 30c an hour may get relief soon. A nine-man board has been appointed to recommend revisions.

Tennessee: The administration is backing plans to increase maximum unemployment compensation benefits to $24 for 20 weeks. It is now $20 for 20 weeks.

Utah: A State-administered occupational disease fund is asked of the Legislature here along with a $10 weekly increase to $25 in benefits for occupational diseases and workmen's compensation injuries.

Wisconsin: A new minimum wage law is in the works that will cover all workers instead of just women and children as at present. It would be 65c the first year it was enacted, 70c the second and 75c the third. LPA

Union Shop Vote Asked At Chrysler

The CIO Auto Workers have filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board for a union shop election among approximately 90,000 employes of the Chrysler Corp.

The petition was buttressed by more than 52,000 signatures of eligible workers, about 25,000 more than the 30% required under the Taft-Hartley Act. The signatures were collected in one week, although many workers were not at their jobs because of a model change-over, according to Norman Matthews, director of the UAW Chrysler Dept.

Postum Admits Coffee Is Not Divorce Grounds

If your wife divorces you on the grounds that you have a disposition like a wounded water buffalo or that you stay out all night playing poker with the boys, it's perfectly all right with the Federal Trade Commission.

However, when the manufacturers of Postum recently inferred in advertisements that drinking coffee tends to increase the nation's divorce rate, the federal agency decided such claims were somewhat off base and stepped into the picture.

As a result, General Foods, which makes the coffee substitute, has promised in a stipulation filed with FTC that in the future Postum ads will not suggest that coffee drinking will cause the little woman to take a walk, or any of the following disasters:

Business failures, factory accidents, juvenile deliquency, traffic accidents, fires or home foreclosures.

Alvano Honored For Aid To Italy

VICE PRES. Vincent Alvano of the CIO Clothing Workers, was honored recently at a dinner in New York by the Italian Rehabilitation Fund for raising funds to build an olive oil refinery in Amantea, Calabria, Italy, where he was born.

Alvano rounded up $250,000 in voluntary contributions from union members and employers in the shirt, pajama and allied industries of Greater New York. The refinery gives employment to 500 persons, helps nearby olive growers and has rescued Amantea from virtual poverty. It was hailed at the dinner as a bulwark against the spread of Communist imperialism.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the Clothing Workers, described the venture—which was viewed in a documentary film by the 1000 diners who paid tribute to Alvano—as a demonstration of what democratic American trade unionism can do to rehabilitate war-torn economy abroad and turn back the red tide. The refinery project, he declared, is more than equal to "a dozen so-called diplomatic victories by the enemies of democracy."

Potofsky Co-Leader Of Brotherhood Week Unit

Pres. Jacob Potofsky, of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, has been named a co-chairman of the national Labor-Management Organizations Committee for Brotherhood Week, it was announced Feb. 3 by Eric Johnston, general chairman of Brotherhood Week. Pres. Dwight R. G. Palmer of the General Cable Corp. was named the other co-chairman.

The co-chairmen will head the effort for mobilizing the cooperation of industry and labor in the national observance which will be held Feb. 18-25 under the sponsorship of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. President Truman is honorary chairman of the week-long observance.

More Gains Asked

More than 6000 employes of Electric Auto-Lite at Toledo, Ohio, have turned down an escalator clause and told CIO Auto Workers negotiators to go back for higher gains.

FPC Delays Hearings On Natural Gas Boost

By IRVING FAGAN & CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

THERE'S MORE than one way to skin a consumer, the big utilities know.

Take the Phillips Petroleum Co. of Bartlesville, Okla., owner of 12% of the nation's natural gas reserves. For a couple of years, Phillips has been dodging an investigation of its pricing practices asked by Wisconsin and Detroit.

Kansas City, Mo., has also filed a complaint against the company. As a result the Federal Power Commission, supposedly the protector of the public interest, is very much on the spot.

Back in November, 1948, the FPC ordered an inquiry when Detroit and Wisconsin charged that Phillips wanted excessive prices for delivering natural gas to the Michigan-Wisconsin Pipeline Co., serving Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri and Iowa.

YOU KNOW how investigations drag on. By Dec. 19, 1950, FPC staffers had completed field surveys and the stage was set for public hearings. On that date, the commission deferred the investigation until at least Jan. 8.

Later, further delay was ordered. There were rumors that on Feb. 6 the commission might decide whether to conduct hearings at all, but a spokesman for the agency has refused to confirm the date.

And what has all the delay been about? You'd guess if you thought for a moment. In a period of international crisis the Phillips Petroleum Co. discovered the flag and began waving it. Too busy with defense business to be bothered with hearings, the company said.

The firm chattered about new processes it's experimenting with for the government and claimed airing of the price charges might lead to "disclosure of classified information which would give aid and comfort to the enemy and violate respondent's security agreement with the government."

Just what do these alleged secrets have to do with Wisconsin's charge that Phillips raised the price of its natural gas five times before a cubic foot of the stuff ever crossed the state line?

Wisconsin contends that the price hikes raise the annual bill the pipeline company owes Phillips by about $5 million—an extra fee Wisconsin consumers will have to pay if Phillips gets away with its "secret process" talk. The company argument is "pure hokum," according to the Milwaukee Journal.

Remember the Kerr Natural Gas Bill which Congress enacted last year but which died under President Truman's veto? Phillips along with other oil and gas companies lobbied that bill through.

If it had become law, the FPC's power to regulate "independent" natural gas companies would have been abolished. In fact, there would have been no basis for the complaints filed by Wisconsin, Detroit and Kansas City.

The rates charged by gas producers just wouldn't have been subject to regulation. Phillips could have upped its bill to the pipeline company by $10 million if it wanted to and Wisconsin consumers would have had to dig deeper into their pockets if they wanted to cook with gas.

BUT IF THE FPC refuses to take a hand in the dispute, the effects of the Kerr bill will have been achieved without legislation—and without much national publicity.

What about the Federal Power Commission? Why doesn't it jump into the fight? To get the answers you have to remember some more recent history.

About the time the fight on the Kerr bill was reaching a climax, FPC Member Leland Olds was up for re-appointment. And the gas and oil companies lobbied just as hard to eliminate Olds as they did to shove the Kerr bill through. What's more, they succeeded.

The President re-appointed Olds, an outstanding liberal who battled for the public interest at every turn. But the Senate turned him down, although he already had served a couple of terms.

PRESIDENT Truman then appointed his old friend Mon C. Wallgren, a political hanger-on, formerly Governor of the state of Washington and a Senator to boot. Wallgren, now FPC chairman, actually is on the spot.

Leland Olds used to give consumers a three-to-two majority on the five-man FPC. Last December, the commission voted three to one to defer investigation of the charges against Phillips. The lone vote for plunging into the matter was cast by Thomas C. Buchanan. One commissioner, Claude L. Draper, was absent but probably would have voted Buchanan's way, the guess is. Thus, in a showdown, Mon Wallgren is the key man.

Wallgren voted wrong in December, but liberal members of the Senate are reportedly asking him to change his mind. If he doesn't, the oil and gas lobby will score a tremendous victory and consumers will suffer a crushing defeat.

"Okay, Jones, stop being economical. Hitch it up and get it out of here."

Aid For Trenton Six Asked By N. J. CIO

ALL CIO unions in New Jersey have been urged to give moral and financial support for the case of the "Trenton Six," the group of Negro defendants whose new trial on a murder charge opens Feb. 5.

The New Jersey CIO Council, which issued the appeal for support for the defendants in their "fight for a fair trial," has named Arthur Chapin, its civil rights director, as chairman of the labor committee for the defense of the men.

Origin of the case goes back to 1947 when William Horne, a second-hand store proprietor, was murdered. Police rounded up and arrested a number of Negroes, six of whom were subsequently convicted of murder and sentenced to be executed, despite conflicting testimony of witnesses, suppression of evidence and alibis showing that most of the accused men were working at the time of the slaying, according to the council.

LATER the State Superior Court threw out the conviction and a new trial was ordered. In the decision, the court rebuked the trial judge for his handling of the case and stated that the police, in their desire to secure a conviction, had denied the defendants their full rights.

The Civil Rights Congress, listed as a subversive organization by Atty. Gen. Howard McGrath, withdrew from the case after CRC exploited the trial for propaganda purposes.

The defendants now will be represented by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the American Civil Liberties Union. Arthur Garfield Hays will be the ACLU counsel, and Raymond Pace Alexander, J. Mercer Burrell and Clifford Moore will represent NAACP.

Georgia Protests 'Honor Of Schools'

Georgia schools are going to get twice the money from the state that they ever got before, but none of it will go to any school that accepts both white and Negro pupils.

Gov. Herman Talmadge has approved a bill appropriating $189 million for state aid. The bill bars aid to "any school system that does not provide separate schools for the white and colored races."

(In Washington, Clarence Mitchell, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said his organization would take the bill to the courts as soon as it became law.)

Oklahoma CIO Asks Better State Laws

R. J. THOMAS, assistant director of organization, told the delegates to the ninth annual Oklahoma CIO Council convention at Oklahoma City that the American working man "is infinitely better off" than the average Russian worker.

Thomas leveled a blast at the steady stream of propaganda coming from the Kremlin which pictures Russian workers as being well fed, well housed and supremely happy. The convention was held Jan. 28 and 29.

When he visited Russia in 1945, Thomas said, the workers in an auto factory he went through appeared "extremely dejected and undernourished" and acted "as though their spirits were broken."

"While I was there," he declared, "I saw few workers over 65 years of age but I attributed it to the fact that most of them who should have been that old were probably dead from overwork."

ANTHONY W. SMITH, assistant CIO councils director, pointed out that this country has a very definite stake in the development of the backward nations of the world and said that only by giving these nations our vigorous and permanent support can be certain that they will be our allies during critical periods of the future.

Jim Hughes, Oklahoma Commissioner of Labor, who is held in the highest esteem by labor unions throughout the state, outlined better state compensation laws.

His views on such matters are completely in accord with those held by state CIO officials. He reminded the delegates that Oklahoma is the only state in the Southwest without a single anti-labor law on the books.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert McVay of Oklahoma highlighted the progress made by the CIO in the state. He declared that until just a few years ago the CIO was either wholly unwelcome or had to elbow its way into various civic, business and social organizations. It is now consistently bombarded with invitations and is welcome and warmly received in the state, he said.

THE CONVENTION called for enactment of a liberal state law to protect the widows and children of workers killed in industry. Another resolution favored tighter restrictions and state control over insurance companies. A third resolution advocated a graduated land tax, better farm-to-market roads and no further school consolidations without approval of people affected.

Other resolutions favored federal aid to education; elimination of segregation and discrimination; closer relations and cooperation between labor organizations and churches; and full support of ECA.

Albert Mitchell was re-elected to his fifth term as council president, Paul Copeland and Lena Kountz were renamed to the posts of vice president and secretary respectively.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer went to El Centro, Cal., to address the pre-election rally of Local Industrial Union 78, United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Workers, CIO. The election took place on January 31, and resulted in one of the greatest victories for CIO over the FTA-DPO (dying-puny outfit). The election results show a complete rout of the Cominform boys, reflecting the attitude of the workers in repudiating those leaders who adhere to the Communist line. The overwhelming results were as follows: Voting 2181; Local 78 1249; FTA 640; no union 40; void 7; challenged 245. Congratulations to CIO Natl. Rep. Dick Leonard, who, along with his staff, worked tirelessly to achieve such a smashing victory.

Allan Haywood

Congratulations to the workers themselves for voting so strongly in favoring the CIO over the "dying-puny outfit." Congratulations to Reg. Dirs. Irwin DeShetler and Tim Flynn, and staff members of internationals who gave assistance on a job well done. This completes the campaign in California among these vegetable and fruit packers. On to Arizona to eliminate FTA-DPO.

Another blow at the Comiform boys came at a recent meeting of the Portland, Ore., Local of the National Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards when the members moved to pull out of the union and rejoin the CIO after denouncing all but its own port agent for "fanatical adherence to the Communist Party line." A resolution was passed that called for withdrawal, warned that the local would resist any attempt at violence or intimidation and called on all non-Communist members to sign cards for membership in the CIO National Maritime Union.

As an example of Communistic conduct, the following incident occurred when the S. S. Lurline docked recently on the West Coast. As NMU representatives approached the docked vessel, an attempt was made to slug them by a strong-armed squad of the Marine Cooks and Stewards. Such strong-armed squads can and will be handled. The crew of the S. S. Lurline are all in favor of a true bona-fide trade union. The CIO has that union in the NMU.

At their recent convention in Boston, the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers elected the following officers: John Grogan, president; Andrew Pettis, vice president; and Ross Blood, secretary-treasurer. A great deal of unity was displayed and through this unity a bigger and stronger organization will be built.

The CIO also was victorious in the following union security elections: Reynolds Metals Co., La Grange, Ill., USA 116, against 4; Minneapolis-Moline Co., Moline, Ill., IUE 408, against 70; Houdaille-Hershey Corp., North Chicago, UWA-CIO 24, against 11.

The Newspaper Guild of New York reports that in a representation election held at the Consumers Union, the workers voted in favor of the Guild over the Distributive and Office Workers Union by a vote of 66 to 57.

Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson reports that in a union shop election held at the Ross Heater and Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y., CIO Industrial Union 897 won by the following vote: 199 for, 20 against, 3 challenged.

The CIO Rubber Workers was named bargaining agent for workers in the Mundet Cork and Insulation Co., Toronto, Ont., plant. The union was certified by the Ontario Labour Relations Board. The Mundet factory is the first Canadian cork plant organized by the URW.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election held at the Denver, Colorado, warehouse of the Firestone Rubber Co., the workers voted in favor of the CIO Rubber Workers by a vote of 10 to 4 for no union. Staff Reps. Jack Ferline and Michael Yanak made preparations for the election.

Nazi Slayers Of 142 GIs Escape Death

SIX NAZI war criminals, who led the massacre of 142 GIs trapped at Malmedy, Belgium, in the Battle of the Bulge, will not have to die for the crime.

U.S. High Commissioner John J. McCloy not only commuted their sentences and granted clemency to 54 others sentenced at the Nuerenberg and Dachau trials, but he also freed Alfred Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach, Nazi Germany's biggest steel manufacturer. McCloy also reversed the 1949 Nuerenberg confiscation of the gigantic Krupp empire. Krupp had been sentenced to 12 years for helping build Hitler's war machine.

In addition, 28 others, including the head of the Krupp munitions works, were freed outright, and the sentences of 33 others reduced.

Meanwhile the coal and steel big shots of Europe, including Krupp, in an effort to save their cartels, have protested to six governments negotiating the Schuman plan draft treaty to pool Europe's coal and steel facilities and create a common European market for coal and steel.

AT BONN the federal cabinet approved the bill giving labor new rights to take part in the management of coal and steel mills in Western Germany. Passed by the Bundestag (lower house of the parliament) the measure now goes to the Bundesrat (upper house). The labor-management agreement averted a strike of 800,000 coal and steel workers.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray a few weeks ago cabled McCloy, asking that the steel and coal dispute be mediated and emphasizing that the demand for co-determination was legitimate LPA

France Demands WFTU Dissolve

The French government has ordered the dissolution of the Communst-backed World Federation of Trade Unions, headquarters of which are in Paris.

Two other pro-Communist organizations were ordered dissolved at the same time. They are the World Federation of Democratic Youth and the International Democratic Federation of Women. The drastic actions were looked upon as a continuation of the French government's "get-tough" policy with respect to Communists.

Rehiring 83 Strikers Urged By Examiner

A MEDIUM-SIZED industrial empire with a long anti-union record has been called upon, for the second time, to pay back wages to a large group of striking employes it refused to rehire because of union activities.

Hamilton Gardner, National Labor Relations Board trial examiner, in an intermediate report made public Feb. 3, recommended that the Textile Machine Works, Inc., of Wyomissing, a suburb of Reading, Pa., be ordered to offer reinstatement to 83 employes of its machine shop and foundry who walked out in a strike called by the CIO Steelworkers in 1947.

They were refused their jobs when they applied for them at various times during the following year and thereafter. The firm also would be directed, under the recommendation, to make up any pay they have lost since they first applied.

THE TEXTILE Machine Works is owned by the Thun-Janssen-Oberlander interests. They also own the giant Berkshire Knitting Mills, largest hosiery mill in the world, in adjacent Reading. There they have fought unions since the early National Recovery Act days.

Some years back, after a legal fight of years, the NLRB ordered Berkshire to reinstate a large number of members of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, at that time a CIO affiliate through the Textile Workers but now independent, and to give them back pay which amounted to approximately $750,000.

In the Textile Machine Works case, the 83 ordered reinstated were among 85 on whose behalf complaints were filed with the NLRB after they had been "discharged" when they tried to go back to work after the strike, and who later were denied employment.

Testimony at hearings before Gardner showed conclusively that management representatives in most cases flatly told the workers they would not be considered favorably because they joined the strike and went on the picket line. Additional testimony showed the company tried to get the 83 fired when other employers hired them.

THE TRIAL examiner also recommended that the NLRB order the company to stop discouraging membership in the Steelworkers by discriminatory discharges, refusing to reinstate, or discriminating in regard to hiring and keeping jobs; and to stop questioning employes about their union membership, activities and sympathies, and interfering otherwise in union affairs.

In another case a three-member NLRB panel ruled that a threat to "close the shop if the union gets in" is not a violation of the Taft-Hartley Act, so long as it is made to a supervisor.

The complaint was filed by the Steelworkers against the Chatauqua Hardware Co., Jamestown, N. Y. The threat was made by Alan Jones, company president, to Albert DeMeyer. Trial Examiner George Bokat had ruled DeMeyer was only a "straw boss" and that Jones had violated T-H, but the board panel reversed him and decided the man is a supervisor. The board also ordered the re-hiring of two other men discharged for union activity.

The "featherbedding" section of T-H is aimed only at employes who are paid for doing no work at all, the board ruled in another decision. The ruling grew out of a complaint filed by the Palace Theater, Akron, O., against Local 24, AFL Musicians Union.

BEFORE T-H, the union furnished a standby orchestra when name bands played the theater. The company refused to pay for it any longer when T-H was passed. Two name bands cancelled engagements under a clause in their contracts permitting them to do so unless the local union approved the conditions under which they appeared.

Local 24 offered to approve the name bands if work was given its members at a later and non-conflicting date, but the theater refused. The board majority, pointing out that the union wanted its members to work for their money, ruled there was no feather-bedding and dismissed the complaint.

Furniture Workers Launch Label Drive In Their Industry

THE CIO Furniture Workers has started a campaign to have its label placed on all the products turned out by the shops it has under union contract, Secy.-Treas. Fred Fulford announced Jan. 31.

At the same time, he said, the union is calling for the cooperation of all union members and the general public in the purchase of products made by the UFWA.

These include, he said, not only furniture and bedding products, but a variety of other products such as radio and television cabinets, kitchen cabinets, clothes closets, bathroom fixtures, juvenile furniture, baby carriages, bicycles, cleaning utensils, hammocks, display cabinets, hope chests, sashes and doors, office furniture and pianos.

It even includes guitars, made in a plant the union recently organized, Fulford said. Union musicians, it is expected, will want to play the union-made instruments.

"The union label," Fulford said, "means that the workers receive an American standard of living, that speed-up and sweatshop conditions have been overcome, and that the workers have recourse through their union grievance procedure against unfair treatment."

The UFWA plans to cooperate wiith the CIO Clothing Workers in its union label drive, as well as with the CIO Union Label Committee.

West Coast 'Fruit Tramps' Again Reject FTA For CIO

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

IT SOUNDED like the chant of an auctioneer: "CIO-CIO-CIO-CIO." That's the way it went as National Labor Relations Board tellers pealed of the ballots in a vote-count.

And when it was over, the CIO again had defeated the Communist-dominated Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers.

This time, it was an election held Jan. 31 among packing-shed workers in the Imperial Valley, Calif., and Yuma, Ariz., areas. About 4500 workers were eligible to vote but some sheds had closed.

When the tally was in, it read: 1249 for the United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, Local 78, CIO; 640 for the Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, Local 78, FTA-DPO; 245 votes challenged, seven void, and 40 for no union.

IT WAS THE second defeat in the fresh fruit and vegetable packing industry handed the rapidly-crumbling FTA by the CIO. Last October, about 3500 shed workers in the Salinas Valley. Calif., voted CIO by a strong majority.

CIO has petitioned for a third such election among shed workers in the Phoenix, Ariz., area, and expects it to be held next spring. Victory in that election would complete the destruction of the Red-led FTA, which has been battered hard ever since shed workers opened their drive a year ago to stay in the CIO after the FTA had been expelled because of its Communist domination.

THE CAMPAIGN was highlighted by a visit of Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, who made the chief address at a rally in El Centro, Calif., and a letter from CIO Pres. Philip Murray to the shed workers. In an election victory statement, Haywood said:

"The election has demonstrated again that the workers of America reject communism and all of its evil intrigues. They are loyal to the democratic principles contained in the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights.

"Now, together, shed workers can build a strong, great CIO union in this great and vital industry. The CIO is proud of them."

Richard T. Leonard, national CIO representative and director of the drive, said:

"THE ISSUE in this campaign, as it was in the Salinas Valley, was communism. Once again, American workers have demonstrated their loyalty to Democracy. The CIO charged—and proved—that FTA was Communist-dominated.

"The workers were presented the facts; the results show how they made up their minds. Shed workers can now move forward to continue to build their own, democratic CIO union."

Leonard announced the CIO immediately will petition for a union shop election.

Amalgamated Bank Elects

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the CIO Clothing Workers, has been elected president of the Amalgamated Bank of New York, the largest labor bank in the United States.

At the same time CIO Pres. Philip Murray was elected a member of the board of directors. Potofsky, who will continue to serve as chairman of the board, succeeds Michael M. Nisselson, who resigned to take an executive post with the United Jewish Appeal. Nisselson will continue as a director.

Cerebral Palsy Not Inherited, Says FSA

Cerebral palsy is not inherited, is not contagious, and victims are not necessaily feeble-minded, according to "The Child with Cerebral Palsy," issued by the Children's Bureau and the Office of Education, both of the Federal Security Agency.

The 10c booklet, obtainable from the Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., says the outlook for the nation's 175,000 sufferers from the disease is brighter than ever before. Many towns are establishing public health clinics and special facilities for children with cerebral palsy and schools are bringing them additional care. Parents are cautioned by the booklet to encourage palsied children to mingle with others their own age as they learn by imitation, as do other children.

N. Y. State Directory Of Unions Issued

About 85% of all national unions, including 4200 of New York State's total of 5000 local unions, operate in the Empire State according to a new Directory of Labor Organizations issued last week by the state's Labor Dept.

The directory may be obtained for 50c from the Bureau of Administrative Finance, Room 651, 80 Center St., New York City, and from the Bureau of Printing, New York State Dept. of Labor, Room 912, Gov. Alfred E. Smith Office Bldg., Albany, N. Y.

S. Carolina Contractors Fight Union Scales At H-Bomb Plant

SOME South Carolina contractors, asked to help in the war against Communism, are carrying on a private little war all their own against American workers and American wage scales.

Trouble started when the U. S. directed DuPont Co. to erect a huge new H-bomb plant at Aiken. More than 30,000 skilled and unskilled craftsmen will be imported and, in line with past policy established under the Bacon-Davis Act, the union wage scale must be paid.

Both the government and DuPont are willing, but local plant owners and building contractors are pulling more wires than a troupe of puppeteers in an effort to make the U. S. force workers who go to Aiken to work for non-union wages.

(The CIO News last week said that local residents were engaging in wild speculation in residential buildings lots after the Atomic Energy Commission, which is in charge of the operation, decided against building any more "government towns.")

R. E. Fulmer, of Columbia, S. C., is head of a contractors' group leading the fight, and C. P. Street of the Charlotte Contractors' Association declared that freezing construction in other parts of the country would force workers to go there.

Joker is that most of the actual construction work will go to big out-of-state construction concerns with the know-how to get the job done. Local industry groups, however, are apprehensive as to what would happen if local workers "get a taste" of real wages. They also fear the wiping out of the Negro-white differential because union rates just don't take color into account.

Communists—Pardon—'Americans' Planning 'Crusade' For Peace

They're at it again—the Commies, that is.

Now they've dreamed up something they call—so help us—the "American Peace Crusade." Its first order of business was a summons for a "Peace Pilgrimage on Washington" on Mar. 1. The phony Stockholm Petition, it is confidently predicted, will get a good workout.

The sponsors include all the old party hacks and party liners who are used to getting together on this sort of thing. Among them are Paul Robeson, the singer; Ernest DeMaio, vice president of the pro-Communist United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Ben Gold, president of the Fur Workers, like the UE a CIO union until both were expelled because of Communist domination; Rockwell Kent, the artist; former Gov. Elmer Benson, of Minnesota, chairman of the so-called Progressive Party, and Howard Fast, author.

Salt Firm Fresh, Must Pay $40,000

The Morton Salt Co. of Chicago can profit by wallowing in its own product, it appeared last week when a judgment for $40,000 was entered against it for getting fresh with the Federal Trade Commission.

The company was one of 19 salt producers investigated by the FTC to see if they were complying with a 1943 order against an admitted combination and conspiracy to fix and maintain the price of salt and regulate its production or sale. In September, 1947, the FTC directed all the companies to file special supplemental reports on compliance. The Morton company refused. The Federal District Court and the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals upheld it when the FTC sued for the statutory penalty of $100 a day, but the U. S. Supreme Court reversed them in January, 1950.

The judgment was pursuant to the Supreme Court rule. And Morton must still file the report.

CIO Asks REAL Stabilization Program NOW

"Workers should not be compelled to pay, in reduced living standards, for the business profiteering and speculation which has been largely responsible for skyrocketing prices. The stabilization program should permit wage adjustments based on increased living costs."

That's what Emil Rieve, CIO member of the Wage Stabilization Board, said in a report filed with the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

Rieve charged that there could be no effective stabilization program unless food prices and rents are controlled. And he added present laws will not effectively control them.

Rieve, on behalf of CIO, made specific recommendations for meeting the present emergency. For details see Page 3.

ECHOES OF TAFT ISOLATIONISM: Communist papers throughout the world are giving a big play to isolationist attacks on American foreign policy and on United Nations which Senator Taft has been making on the floor of the American Congress. Pravda — official paper of the Soviet Communist Party—gave the Ohio Senator a three-column spread and more than 40 inches of space for a Tass account of Taft's attacks on Truman, the Atlantic Pact, the United Nations and other aspects of American foreign policy. Similar build-up was given the Ohio Senator by "La Vie Ouvriere," organ of the French Communist labor organization. Under headline "The Atlantic Pact is war—or the admissions of Mr. Taft," the French paper devoted two full pages to Taft's Senate speeches. Gist of the Communist propaganda was that Taft's statements fully supported the paper's own reckless charges against American policy. Once upon a time Commies didn't like Taft!

Tax Plan Hits Poor Hardest

Secy. of the Treasury Snyder has recommended a new taxation program which would place a heavy burden on those least able to carry it—those at the low end of the economic scale. See details on Page 2.

Model For Labor Daily Makes Appearance

A NATIONAL daily newspaper for labor became a reality last week—for one issue only. It was the National Reporter, printed as "a rough expression of an idea" by the Newspaper Unions Publishing Co., which published the Pittsburgh Daily Reporter when dailies in that city locked out their employes for six weeks.

There will be no further editions of the sample of what a labor daily might look like and what it might contain.

The National Reporter was written and edited by volunteers who did the work in addition to their regular jobs in support of their conviction that "a national labor daily can be done, if we want it." Sam Eubanks, executive vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was coordinator. Copies were sent to labor union officials and others who had previously expressed interest.

The story of the paper was printed in a two-column box on Page 1.

"Because a national daily newspaper for labor has long been a subject of conversation among trade unionists," it said, "the Pittsburgh unions are making their report a dual purpose—taking advantage of a unique opportunity to give physical form to a long-discussed proposal.

"The concept of a labor daily presented here is not a substitute for the daily newspaper of general circulation any more than the Wall Street Journal is a business executive's substitute for other newspapers. It is a supplemental source of information in which general news is treated only in capsule form.

"National and international news of particular interest to labor would be presented from labor's viewpoint. Experts in the fields of economics and politics would interpret and analyze news developments in labor terms. The activities of government at all levels and in all areas that affect labor would be reported in detail—sufficient to provide a substitute for various weekly and daily 'reporting services' now largely patronized by trade unions for lack of other sources.

"The general news of labor from every state in the union and from the nations throughout the world where free trade unions exist would be covered thoroughly."

The volunteers who produced the trial issue believe a daily is practical.

"Twenty-five thousand annual subscriptions at $20 would launch it," they feel, "without subsidy and without advertising revenue.

"The National Reporter is not setting up as a business. The Pittsburgh newspaper unions have made a contribution to the advancement of the idea. Those who see merit in such a publication should carry it forward."

TEMPORARY headquarters have been established in the office of the Daily Reporter at 512 Commonwealth Annex Building, Pittsburgh.

A section of the one-issue daily was devoted to the story of how the Pittsburgh newspaper unions, AFL and CIO published the Daily Reporter during the walkout—and emerged with $50,000 in profits that went into the production of the National Reporter.

The sample edition also carried Washington news on wage and price stabilization, articles relating to various unions, strike news, stories on farm labor and a review of the many efforts to establish citywide labor dailies that have ended in failure. It also had departments on reports from the National Labor Relations Board and developments in labor education, reports on legislative activities in states, cartoons and charts, and stories on unions in other countries.

Astronomers Please Note

U. S. Steel Corp. did about 30% better in profits in 1950 than in 1949. Net income (profits after taxes) was $215,337,655, against $165,908,829 in 1949. Sales were $2,955,235,391. Previous high was $2,418,500,000 in 1948. The 1949 figure was $2,301,685,689.

To celebrate, the directors declared a dividend of 75c a share on common stock, the same as the last quarter of 1950 and 10c higher than a year ago. making total dividends for 1950 on common stock of $90,078,658.

Non-Union Stronghold Tottering In Detroit

The 4500 employes of the Burroughs Adding Machine Co., largest non-union employer in the Detroit area, may soon be members of the CIO Auto Workers.

The union petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for a representation election after the company had refused a request for recognition.

The NLRB probably will set an election date in the near future.

Administration Tax Plans Would Hit The Poor Hardest

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE BURDEN of paying for the war will fall upon those who can least afford it—the people at the low end of the economic scale — if Congress adopts the $10 billion tax program Secy. of the Treasury Snyder recommended to the House Ways and Means Committee on Feb. 8.

As had been previously disclosed, the program calls for $4 billion in additional individual income taxes, $3 billion in higher corporation taxes and $3 billion more in federal excise levies.

As broken down by Snyder, it means that individuals of low and moderate income and corporations in the same classification would pay the bulk of the $10 billion.

Snyder recommended:

Individual income taxes: An increase of four percentage points in each bracket. This would mean a 20% increase on the first $2000 of taxable income, the lowest bracket, and smaller proportionate increases in each succeeding bracket.

He explained that a married person with a net income of $3000 and two dependents who now pays $488 (after a deduction of $2400 for exemptions) would pay $584 under the new schedule. That's an increase of 19.67%, which he didn't mention. On the other hand, he said, a married man with two children, earning $25,000 net, would find his tax boosted from $9796 at present to $10,772. The increase, which again he neglected to mention, would be but 9.76%.

Corporation taxes: An increase of eight percentage points to 33% on the first $25,000 of income and to 55% on all over that amount. This means that small corporations making modest profits would have their taxes increased at the same ratio as those with swollen profits. The excess profits tax rate would go up the same, from 77% to 85%.

Excise taxes: Again the individual of low and moderate income would pay the bulk of the boost by higher levies on his necessities and the things he commonly buys for amusement or recreation. Among specific increases Snyder suggested were:

Automobiles, from 7% to 20%; radio and television sets, gas and oil appliances, refrigerators, phonographs, other electrical appliances and other consumer durable goods, from 10% to 25%; whisky, from $9 to $12 a gallon (this would make the tax on a fifth of 100 proof whisky $2.40 instead of the present $1.80); cigarets, from 7c to 10c a pack; gasoline, from 1.5% to 3% (doubled); beer, from $8 to $12 a barrel.

Capital gains tax: Increase from 25% to 37½% (capital gains are the profits on sale of real estate or securities).

Excess profits tax: "Possible revision."

Snyder also asked the committee to close a trifle tighter the widest loopholes in the present tax structure, the special allowances for oil and gas producers. At present they are allowed a 27.5% deduction for depletion on their gross income; Snyder proposed that the deduction be cut to 15% and that a corresponding slash be made for producers of minerals.

He also proposed increases in many miscellaneous items of taxation, and some new levies. Among them he listed gift and estate taxes, taxation of state and municipal bonds now tax exempt, and a better and more equitable manner of taxing the business earnings of life insurance companies. In addition, he suggested that Congress devise a withholding system for the collection of taxes on dividend payments.

SNYDER admitted that the new tax load would fall most heavily on those at the lower end of the economic scale, even though no decrease was proposed in the $600 personal exemption. The greater part of the burden will fall on them, he said, because there are more taxpayers and more income down there. He estimated that 83% of all taxpayers and 58% of all income come in the less-than-$5000-a-year classification.

"This concentration of income must be tapped," he maintained, "if the tax is to raise enough revenue."

He neglected to mention that the income is a lot more concentrated in the upper brackets, or that a married man with two kids can get by a lot better on the $14,288 he would have left out of $25,000 a year than another man with two children can get by on the $4416 he would have left out of $5000 a year.

UAW Hopes Gambling Probe Will Solve Reuther Shootings

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A GAMBLING syndicate is said to have lost a quarter of a million dollars in Detroit during a three-week strike which shut down the Ford Motor Company's huge River Rouge plant employing some 65,000 workers.

Organized gambling in the city's auto plants alone is estimated to be a $25 million a year business.

In April, 1948, Walter Reuther, the CIO Auto Workers' president, was shot through the kitchen window of his home in a murderous attempt on his life which left him with a permanently injured arm.

His brother, Victor Reuther, the union's education director, lost an eye 13 months later in a similar attempt on his life. Rewards totaling more than $200,000 announced by the union have so far failed to bring forth any information leading to the identity of the would-be killer or killers.

IS THERE any connection between the multi-million dollar gambling racket in Detroit and the shooting of the Reuther brothers? There is some reason to believe there might be, and that's why the union has long been pressing to have the Senate Crime Investigating Committee include Detroit among the cities where hearings on the nation-wide gambling network have been held.

The committee opened hearings in the motor city beginning Feb. 8, and subpenas for dozens of witnesses had been issued.

One of these was for Edward Hester, former UAW member employed at the Rouge plant, who was kicked out of the union and his job for his gambling activities. He is said to have been arrested two years ago as a leader of a $5 million gambling ring in the Rouge plant, but he has never been brought to trial.

UAW officials, who have been pressing the Detroit police for more activity in trying to find out who was responsible for the Reuther shootings, hope that the Senate investigating committee may unearth some information that will help solve the mystery.

One theory is that gangsters may have ordered the Reuthers "rubbed out" because they were known to be incorruptible union officials, devoted to reform for the benefit of the auto workers, who would do everything possible to stamp out the gambling racket.

ALTHOUGH THEY never gave much publicity to the matter, UAW leaders have long been aware that gambling interests have tried, in some cases successfully, to plant their stooges in the union, or to corrupt shop stewards and committeemen, who could act as collecting agents for numbers and other gambling rackets.

In some cases, shop stewards who were discovered to be using their positions to benefit gambling rackets have been ousted and replaced by Reuther supporters.

The UAW administration also has been aware that racketeers have tried to influence union elections in the interests of their gambling setup. Plagued by the gambling menace in numerous known ways, aside from the possibility of undercover violence against unionists who might stand in the way of gambling racketeers, the union has sought cooperation with management in an effort to wipe out plant gambling, with little success.

ANY LEADS opened by the U. S. crime investigators at the hearings in Detroit will be watched carefully by the union. Harry Bennett, former strong-arm aid of the late Henry Ford in his fight to destroy the union a decade ago, testified Feb. 8.

Bennett's career with the company came to an end in 1946 when he was let out by the young Henry Ford.

Bennett was questioned about his underworld connections. Among other things he was asked what he knows concerning a New Jersey trucking company allegedly controlled by racketeers, which has done business with the Ford plant at Edgewater, N. J., for 15 years.

During his years with Ford, Bennett hired ex-convicts and other shady characters to help build up a private police force which was used to fight the union.

The pictures all showed "Mr. Republican," Sen. Taft (R. O.) posing with a hunk of chicken at the GOP "box luncheon" rally in Washington last week.

But the report was that before going to the shindig, Taft visited the Senate restaurant and ate an order of ham and eggs.

Rieve Says:

Time Is NOW For Real Stabilization Plans

EMIL RIEVE, administrative chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, last week coupled criticism of lop-sided plans for economic stabilization with a request that Congress act to insure increased production and equality of sacrifice.

Rieve, who is president of the CIO Textile Workers and a member of the Wage Stabilization Board, characterized the steps taken by the administration to stabilize the economy as "half-hearted, haphazard and inequitable."

In a statement filed with the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report, Rieve called for adoption of administration policies backed by congressional action where necessary, to accomplish the following:

1. Increase production of defense-essential goods and services now, instead of later, with the government issuing contracts promptly and building plants itself, if necessary.

2. Establish rigid price and rent controls now, instead of later, in order to hold down the price of the defense program and balance the consumer economy. He quoted from the recent "price freeze" order:

"Every 2% increase in the price level means that the cost of the present security program goes up 1 billion dollars per annum. Every 1% rise in the cost of living means that consumers are called upon to spend an additional 2 billion dollars annually for the same goods and services." He said prices at all levels should be rolled back, and strong enforcement machinery set up.

3. Adopt a flexible wage stabilization policy after these two steps have been taken. Freezing and controlling wages now, Rieve commented, "forces workers into the role of society's step-children." He continued:

"Workers should not be compelled to pay, in reduced living standards, for the business profiteering and speculation that has largely been responsible for skyrocketing prices. The stabilization program should permit wage adjustments based on increased living costs.

". . . No effective action has been taken to control the two main items in the cost of living—food prices and rents. Without such controls, there can be no stabilization program worthy of the name.

"Yet there are those who have been crying loudly these many months for rigid wage controls. Such controls over wages alone, without any over-all stabilization policy, could only deepen the cut into workers' living standards.

"The failure of the Wage Stabilization Board to determine its policy to replace the wage freeze is a disrupting factor in labor-management relations. It is breeding unrest and disruption. For while price levels continue upward, wages have been rather solidly frozen.

"The inequity of this condition is readily apparent to all, especially to the workers who are compelled to live on frozen earnings.

"As far as the American people are concerned, there is no stabilization program in effect—except wage stabilization. Wages have been selected for control, while other areas of the economy have sufficient freedom to go their merry way.

"Stabilization cannot be achieved by controlling only one group in the population. It cannot be done piecemeal.

"Let us not be tempted to place iron-clad controls on wages because of the relative ease with which it can be done. Wage stabilization policy should be considered only as one part of an over-all stabilization program. . ."

4. Increase taxes on an equitable basis, based on ability to pay. "As of early 1950," he said, "the highest income fifth of our families held 83% of total liquid assets," yet taxes for these families were still below World War II levels while those of the lower-and-middle income groups were already at the wartime peak.

Corporation taxes should be stepped up on the same basis, he said, since while total compensation of employes from 1939 to the fourth quarter of 1950 had increased 241%, corporate profits in the same period jumped 642% before taxes and 390% after taxes.

"It is unthinkable, under such circumstances," he said, "to compel low and middle income families to pay greater taxes that can only cut into their basic living standards."

5. Set up a federal savings program akin to the World War II bond drives, since income is not inflationary until goods are bought with it, and bond purchases are a powerful anti-inflationary force.

6. Soften the newly adopted consumer credit regulations, which have "made it almost impossible for the low income groups to purchase homes, automobiles or household appliances, while allowing those with ample cash reserves to buy as much as they choose."

"Seven long months have passed since the Communist invasion of the Korean Republic," he commented. "We cannot afford to waste any more valuable time."

Rieve proposed a series of amendments to the stabilization law, all aimed at making price control more effective.

Meanwhile, the CIO Auto Workers' executive board issued a statement terming the recent price "freeze" an "outright fraud."

"The price control order, freezing prices at their highest level, simply legalizes the scandalous profits of speculators and war profiteers," the UAW said.

"It also increases the costs of the defense effort by billions of dollars, thereby increasing the already inequitable tax load of most middle and lower income American families. . . . It is absolute folly to try to find some formula for wage controls so long as the country remains without any over-all system of inflation controls."

THERE WERE several developments on the wage stabilization front last week, which CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg summed up and analyzed on Feb. 8 for CIO attorneys.

The main WSB regulations issued to date are the following:

1. The wage freeze itself, which was issued Jan. 26 and froze "wages, salaries and other compensation" as of Jan. 25.

2. Exemption from the wage freeze of increases agreed to or announced on or before Jan. 25 and effective not later than Feb. 9.

3. Permission to employers to adjust wages to conform with Wages and Hours laws without asking permission of the Wage Stabilization Board.

4. Exemption of civil service employes — although state, county, municipal and other non-federal governmental agencies must conform with overall stabilization policies.

5. Approval of normal merit increases, wage progression increases and incentive payments called for by contracts, and approval of promotions or transfers to higher paying jobs at rates specified for the new job. New employes must be hired at rates applicable Jan. 25.

Wholesale Food Index At It Again

Wholesale food prices have only 2% to go before they equal the all-time, purse-busting record hit July 13, 1948, according to the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale price index for Feb. 6.

Already, prices are higher than any previous record except that one.

The index, which represents the total wholesale prices of a "market basket" of 31 commonly used foods, moved up 4c in just one week to $7.21. It's now 24.3% above a year ago and 21% over the week before the Korean outburst. Wholesale prices inevitably are reflected in later retail advances.

Local Volunteer Aid Requested By DiSalle

PRICE ADMINISTRATOR DiSalle, on Feb. 3, quietly took a hopeful step towards straightening out the economic stabilization mess.

He wired the mayors of 1253 cities and towns, asking them to set up volunteer citizens' committees to help federal authorities make price controls effective.

The committees, DiSalle said, should be composed of a cross-section of representative community groups, specifically including representatives of labor unions, local merchants, employers, churches and women's organizations.

There should be a nine-man committee, DiSalle said, with the task of seeing to it that the law is understood and publicized. They can do much to see that it is also enforced.

The committees would not, of course, have the same function as did local price and rationing boards under OPA. No authority exists in the present unsatisfactory law to start such an operation.

However, they could perform a most useful service—not only in rallying all elements of the community back of the law, but in channelling to Washington the suggestions that come from the community leadership.

THE LOCAL volunteer groups under OPA did this most effectively, and in the opinion of many experienced persons the community operations were the real "heart and soul" of OPA.

One immediately practical step that could be taken by local committees, for instance, is the securing of agreements from all local merchants, through their trade organizations, that they will post lists of "freeze" prices of their goods as a guide to shoppers.

Weak as the "freeze" order is, it was made even weaker by the lack of any provision for such notification of the public.

Johnston Names Murray Adviser

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has been named a member of a labor-management advisory committee to work on stabilization problems by Economic Stabilization Administrator Eric Johnston.

Other labor members are Pres. William Green of the AFL, Pres. John L. Lewis of the Mine Workers and Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Intl. Association of Machinists.

Industry members are: Benjamin F. Fairless, president of U. S. Steel; Fowler McCormick, chairman of Intl. Harvester; C. E. Wilson, president of General Motors, and Lewis H. Brown, chairman of Johns-Manville.

Administration To Seek Stronger Rent Control Law

AT LONG LAST, the Administration is getting ready to ask Congress, in no uncertain terms, for a new and much stronger rent control bill.

Defense Mobilizer Wilson, after three weeks' consideration, has approved the draft legislation submitted to him by Housing Expediter Woods.

One relatively minor point is up for further discussion, but Wilson and the White House are ready to ask the House Banking Committee to start hearings Feb. 19—almost as soon as that group can possibly finish reporting out the defense housing bill.

The portions which have been approval would allow OHE to re-control any area, abolish all local option provisions, apply rent ceilings to new construction, and restore criminal penalties for violation of rent ceilings.

Implicit in the order also would be the power to roll back rents to any desired level. It would be at least as strong as the World War II law.

As drafted, the legislation would keep OHE separate from the rest of the mobilization set-up. The proposals are expected to go up to Capital Hill separately from the proposed amendments to the stabilization law, and there would be no administrative tie-in. The full pressure of administration support, however, including that all top mobilization officials, would be back of the proposals.

It was deemed likely that the main case for the stronger rent law would be presented by Economic Stabilizer Johnston.

The present law extends rent controls—along with the much criticized local option provision—only until March 31. After that, only those incorporated communities which already voted to continue under controls would retain federal rent ceilings.

The entire law expires June 30. The local option provision states that the local governing body may remove controls at any time it chooses to do so. If this is done, OHE may not put controls back on, nor may the community vote itself back, regardless of new developments.

It's Going To Be Tough In Days Ahead

Living Costs And Taxes Will Go Higher, Shortages Will Become More Acute—And Now Is A Good Time To Face The Unpleasant Facts

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AMERICAN TROOPS in Korea were advancing slowly over frozen ground which they had already won and lost since the fighting began.

In Nevada bright flashes lit up the sky and the ground trembled as experimental atomic explosions occurred.

In Washington the Economic Stabilization Agency attempted to work out rules and regulations for combatting inflation.

Throughout the country draft boards were busy with the job of selecting young men for our armed forces.

Over in Western Europe the democratic countries were making preparations to step up their military preparedness.

How did it start? What did it all mean? How much was it going to cost? How long will it continue?

Those were among the questions which most Americans were asking. It was easy to ask, but difficult to find some of the answers.

It all started because the men who rule Russia decided to expand their influence and control to other parts of the world—perhaps to the whole world.

We as a nation got into actual fighting because we supported the United Nations idea that aggression should be halted whenever and wherever it reared its ugly head.

WHAT IS INVOLVED is a struggle between the forces of democracy and the forces of totalitarianism, the latter parading this time under a Communist banner.

Nobody knows how much it will cost because nobody—except perhaps the men of the Kremlin—knows how long it will continue.

But it is plain that our country is moving rapidly toward a partial wartime footing and that the burden is going to be a heavy one.

IT IS OBVIOUS, too, that there is much disagreement over the methods which should be used in combatting communism abroad and inflation at home.

Despite the disagreement, it is plain that the months—and perhaps years—ahead will be tough ones.

Taxes will be increased again. Nobody knows yet how much. The cost of living will increase, too, unless something unforeseen happens.

The housing shortage will become more acute. There will be shortages of products to which we've become accustomed.

The chiselers are likely to establish black markets and the profiteers are likely to grow fat.

It isn't a pleasant picture because what it adds up to is a lower standard of living for the nation as a whole.

There are certain things which we could and should do about the situation in which we find ourselves.

We should, first of all, insist that there be as much equality of sacrifice as possible. This is extremely important. And there hasn't been such sacrifice up to this point.

We should produce as much civilian goods as possible—after military requirements are met—so that inflationary pressure of shortages will not be so great.

WE SHOULD REALIZE that there is a real crisis at hand and demand an end to business as usual, politics as usual and leisure as usual.

We should tell our lawmakers in no uncertain terms that we expect them to toss partisanship out the window whenever it interferes with our campaign against international communism.

And we should try to conduct our affairs at home in such a manner that nations abroad will want to follow our leadership.

Taxing Where It Hurts Most

"Taxes should bear heaviest on individuals with high incomes and corporations with large profits. They must not drive down the living standards of lower and middle income families, to the detriment of their health and well-being."

There's nothing particularly new in that statement (it was tucked away in a long CIO economic statement filed with Congress last week); it has been the basic idea in progressive tax thinking for a long time.

But the fact is that neither President Truman's recent tax message nor the proposal for heavier excise taxes requested by Secy. of the Treasury Snyder follows those principles.

If those recommendations are adopted, people in the lower and middle income groups are going to find themselves bearing a heavy share of the tax burden.

The President's proposals suggest a standard increase on income tax rates; but while the increase of four percentage points would represent a 20% increase in the lower income brackets, it would be far less of a burden on those toward the top of the income scale.

In fact, the Treasury's own charts tell the story. Families with a $3000 net income would be paying an annual income tax that comes within shouting distance of the peak taxes of World War II. But a $25,000-a-year family would pay $2600 a year less than in 1944; and a $50,000 family would be paying $6000 less.

On top of this, sales taxes proposed by Secy. Snyder would hurt lower income groups most heavily—as sales taxes always do.

The pack-a-day cigarette smoker, for instance, would have to pay out an additional $5 a year. The average motorist would be forced to pay an additional gasoline tax of $20 or more a year. Excises on other consumer goods would also dig deeply into family finances.

But while the wealthy have reserves, the lower income groups would have to scrape hard—on essential living items—to pay for these tax boosts.

The President has suggested closing of loopholes by which the wealthy get out of many of their taxes, and a somewhat higher tax on corporation profits. Congress should act quickly on these problems.

There is danger, however, that Congress will do almost nothing about removing inequities from the tax system unless the public hollers a lot more than it has so far.

This is one certain case where a penny's prevention is worth a dollar's cure.

OUT-TAFTING TAFT-HARTLEY

The Dixiegop-controlled 82nd Congress has given some dangerous signals that it may try to out-do the record rolled up by the "awful Eightieth" in 1947-48.

Now comes Rep. Richard Vail (R., Ill.) with a proposal to out-Taft the Taft-Hartley Act. Vail, who rolled up an almost unblemished string of "wrong" votes in the 80th Congress, wants to put a knife in the CIO American Newspaper Guild.

He proposes that T-H be amended to forbid any benefits obtainable through the National Labor Relations Boards from being enjoyed by any union composed of men and women "directly involved in the gathering or presentation of news."

This goes even beyond Taft-Hartley. Further, Vail's thesis is based on the absurd falsehood that reporters who are union members write "slanted" news copy. Even the most conservative publishers have abandoned that argument.

We hope Congress gives Vail's bill the heave-ho treatment it deserves.

McCarthy To Help Pass On State Dept. Funds

By IRVING FAGAN
And CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

THE WORK of Congress is done by committees, and assignments to committees are usually in the order of seniority. The Democrats decide who of their members will serve on certain committees when there are vacancies, and the Republicans do likewise.

There was a place open, on the Republican side, on the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, that passes on funds for the State Dept. among other things. You may not have noticed whom the Republicans picked for the spot, but it was Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin.

Smile, if you wish. Call it just playing politics and brush it off. But if you think a minute, your smile will fade. For this is the man who charged, on the floor of the Senate, that there were more than 200 Communists, or Communist sympathizers, in the State Dept.

Challenged, he cut down the number, successively, until finally he pinned all his charges on one man—who was not a member of the State Department. And despite his bluster, he never dared repeat those charges off the Senate floor, where he could be held to account, and sued for libel.

IF ANY DECENT men in the Republican party protested the McCarthy appointment they did so in private. But one Democrat had the courage to protest in public. That was Sen. Benton (Conn.), who on the Senate floor Feb. 1 declared that McCarthy's appointment "added measurably to the chaos and the unspeakable danger of today's world." He went on:

"We could question, even in normal times, a procedure which would give the potential power for life and death over any government department—the power to grant or withhold funds, and allot them in detail—to any Senator who had proved himself an implacable and—in this case I may add—irresponsible enemy of that department.

"We must question, in these days of chaos and unspeakable danger, an appointment which gives over to a ruthless propagandist such enormous potential control over the destiny of the government department which has the major task of attempting to steer us safely through the chaos and save us from the unspeakable danger."

McCarthy conducted "guerilla warfare" and "sneak attacks" on the State Dept., Benton said. He summed up McCarthy's tactics as "if you can't make one libel stick, try another." Benton noted that the members of the State Dept. are helpless against the "false and irresponsible charges" of McCarthy, and McCarthy can now torment the department, "be the judge, jury and prosecutor" and he "becomes his own kangaroo court."

Said Benton: "If the public understood the significance of this appointment, a quiver of revulsion would run from one end of the country to another. Decent people everywhere would experience shock, wonder, perplexity and distress." He called the appointment "the most important and significant of the year," and warned of "the new and worse seige of irresponsibility which lies ahead of us."

BENTON CALLED upon "the responsible leaders of the Republican party to re-examine this appointment in terms of the national interest in a time of crisis." In addition, he asked for the privilege of meeting with the Republican Committee of Committees.

What was the response?

Sen. Butler (Neb.), chairman of the GOP Committee on Committees, said he was willing to meet Benton "but I don't know of a thing he could tell us that would change the appointment of Senator McCarthy." Sen. Bricker (Ohio) said "the appointment will stick, and I think it's a good one." William Jenner, of Indiana, said "the committee will take no advice from Benton."

SEN. WHERRY (Neb.), the minority leader, said McCarthy "has done more to establish confidence in the hearts of Americans than any man I know. He is giving the American people new heart in cleaning out infiltration of communism in the United States."

Other Republicans said McCarthy was entitled to the appointment as a matter of seniority.

If you still want to write off McCarthy as just a regrettable accident of American politics, think this one over: McCarthy managed to get Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R. Me.) removed from a key Senate investigating committee, to make way for freshman Sen. Nixon (R. Cal.). Nixon, while in the House, was co-author of a "thought control" bill.

Why was Mrs. Smith thrown off the committee?

Mrs. Smith, you may recall, was one of the handful of brave Republican souls who in the Senate last year signed "a declaration of conscience" because she could not stomach the kind of wild charges McCarthy throws around. But the GOP has now given McCarthy a brand new opportunity to fling his mud.

Philadelphia Unions Join In Defense Move

Representatives of the AFL, CIO and railroad brotherhoods in Philadelphia are planning a joint committee to present labor's side in disputes arising out of the new price, wage, and manpower regulations.

The first meeting was exporatory and representatives were to report back to their central bodies before issuing a joint policy statement.

He Said He Would Serve Another's Sentence

GETTING recognition for their union was tough—but getting a contract with the textile mill was even tougher.

About the only thing the company said was "no." And after it was said a large number of times the workers went on strike.

Because they had little financial reserve, most of the strikers were in need of assistance within a week or 10 days.

The Textile Workers established a commissary, where food was given out to members once a week and requests for fuel and other necessities were received.

This went on week after week until the big climax came.

IT BECAME OBVIOUS early in the strike that the company, an independent, was going to operate on the "wait and starve them out" theory.

Before long the company learned this plan wouldn't work.

Then several foremen were given the assignment of starting a back-to-work movement. They called on worker after worker, made strong charges against the union and urged the strikers to return to their jobs.

A few went back early in the strike but after a short time they rejoined the strikers.

Then company officials got business men of the town to "turn on the heat."

STRIKERS WERE TOLD that if they tore up their union cards and went back to work the company would give them everything the union had asked for.

"And you won't have to pay dues to those outsiders, either," they were told.

This didn't bring results.

Neither did the line that the company had "taken good care of" not only the strikers but, in many cases, their fathers, who had worked at the mill in years gone by.

Then a rumor was circulated around town. It said that the company had definitely decided to shut down and move its machinery to South America unless the strike ended promptly.

This didn't cause workers to return to their jobs.

FINALLY THE company decided to go into court in an effort to bring the strike to an end.

An injunction limiting the number of pickets was secured—and before long arrests were being made on flimsy and trumped-up charges.

Among those arrested was the father of five children. He was sentenced to 30 days at hard labor.

A hurried conference among union leaders and strikers was held in the courtroom.

".....really was on a spot," one of the strikers reported later. "He had five children and another on the way—so we decided to ask the judge if one of us couldn't go to jail for him."

BEFORE ANY OF THE strikers could volunteer as a substitute, the organizer who had established the union stepped before the startled judge and asked, "What would be wrong with serving ————'s time?" he asked.

The judge lost his judicial composure. Then he regained it and suspended the sentence.

"I believed the labor organizer was sincere, so I decided I wouldn't send either of them to jail," the judge said later.

Realizing that it had lost its campaign, the company signed a contract within a short time.

And when called upon to make a speech to members after the strike ended, the organizer said, "Don't try to make a hero out of me!"

An Equal Load?

59% Of Europe's Unionists Affiliated With ICFTU

MORE than 21 million of Europe's 35 million trade unionists are members of unions affiliated with the anti-Communist Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, according to a report made to the recent meeting of the ICFTU's European Regional Conference.

"Even on the basis of their own (undoubtedly exaggerated) claims," said an ICFTU statement, "the Communist-controlled World Federation of Trade Unions has less than 8 million, or 22%; the Christian Intl. about 2.5 million, or 6%, while the remaining 13% (about 4.5 million) belong to non-affiliated trade unions."

The 21 million ICFTU members constitute 59% of the European total.

C. J. Geddes of the British Trades Union Council was elected president of the regional council.

The full report of the ICFTU delegation which visited Austria was approved by the council. It was decided to give it the widest possible publicity, emphasizing the Russian responsibility for that country's economic plight.

Reports also were received on the work of the ICFTU in the Schuman Plan, on relations with the European offices of specialized agencies of the United Nations, and on the assumption of responsibility by the ICFTU for the work of the European Recovery Plan Trade Union Advisory Committee. In connection with the latter, it was agreed to consider further the question of continued association of the Christion trade union centers.

Among proposals considered was one for the pooling of technical and material resources to help solve the European housing shortage. A sub-committee will consult with the Intl. Federation of Building and Wood Workers and will explore the possibility of aid from the Office of European Economic Cooperation and the Economic Cooperation Administration.

A sub-committee for European economic affairs was set up with representation from Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Norway, the Saar and Switzerland.

It Took A Miracle (Drug) To Make Him Respect Negroes

Silas Judson is not his name, but the man we are about to refer to is as human in the flesh as any of us.

We met him first in Memphis, Tenn. That was years ago. Judson was quite intelligent; was an active member of our organization; took part in civic enterprises and boasted he was 100% American—except that he had a feeling the Negro should be "kept in his place."

He could never believe they should be allowed to sit in the union meeting nor to attend schools with whites. In fact, he openly contended the Negro is an "inferior type" and that "God never intended him to be equal of the white man."

Some years later we met Silas Judson again. He was not as active as formerly. Said he had the rheumatism which was keeping him from getting good jobs in meat shops. He thought it was a shame "Niggers" were being hired in Memphis in some shops while white members were loafing.

We made another trip to Memphis later and met Silas Judson again. He was in a wheel chair. His hands looked cramped and twisted. His face showed signs of excruciating pain. Rheumatoid arthritis was taking its horrible toll.

"Why can't someone do something for the millions of arthritis sufferers like me?" he asked. "There ought to be someone somewhere who can develop a remedy that would be helpful—if only to ease the pain." We told Judson to have hope and courage and a remedy would be found. He said he would kiss the hand of that man.

A short time ago we visited Memphis and saw Silas Judson again. He was out of his wheel chair. His pain had disappeared and he expected to go back to work "very shortly."

Judson told us that his doctors had treated him with Cortisone, the new miracle drug, for arthritis. We asked him if he would still kiss the hand of the man who discovered Cortisone. "I sure would!" Silas Judson replied.

It so happened on that very day we had a newspaper in our pocket. On the front page was the picture of Dr. Percy Julian, the great Negro chemist who discovered Cortisone. We showed it to Judson. He looked at it a moment in silence and said, "To me this Negro, next to Christ, is the greatest man that ever lived."

AMA Fights GOP Health Proposal, Too

THE AMERICAN Medical Association, which is opposed to President Truman's Health Program, also is fighting the substitute health plan introduced in Congress by liberal Republicans.

AMA says the GOP proposal "essentially amounts to a federal subsidy of voluntary health insurance, which would lead to federal control," and also "discriminates against commercial health insurance."

Of the nine bills dealing with health introduced so far at the 82nd session of Congress, AMA disapproves of six.

THE AMA looks with horror on bills which would:

Delegate to a civilian agency of the government the job of rehabilitating men rejected by the armed services for physical and mental defects.

Aid medical education.

Aid local public health units.

Provide hospital and medical care in armed service facilities for dependents of servicemen as is permitted in an 1874 law.

Helping to rehabilitate men rejected in the draft, according to AMA, is "a new medical proposal that surpasses, in the extent to which it nationalizes medicine, even the compulsory health insurance bills."

The AMA opposes care for the dependents of servicemen because it would be just awful to have "so many dependents as camp followers in areas adjacent to camps."

It has approved bills which deduct for income tax purposes premiums and dues payments to health insurance plans and companies, provide a study of air pollution, and boost grants for hospital construction to $150 million.

THERE WAS growing talk in both military and congressional circles last week of reviving the Emergency Maternity and Infant Care Program established for servicemen's dependents during the last war.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers asked the Senate Sub-committee on Health and Rep. Priest (D. Tenn.) to introduce and push legislation which would give dependents of military personnel the same advantages of health insurance they would have in private employment.

He called for legislation under which a worker covered by health or hospitalization insurance could elect to continue to pay his share of the cost if he enters the service, with his peacetime employer required to continue paying the company's share.

British Labour Govt. Wins Confidence Vote

The British Labour government won a vote of confidence on steel nationalization Feb. 7, by a vote of 308 to 298.

The motion of "no confidence" was introduced by Winston Churchill, leader of the Conservative party, World War II prime minister and probable choice for that post again should his party return to power while he's still active.

The Conservatives have fought steel nationalization bitterly since it was first proposed by the Laborites. The Feb. 7 vote was a last-ditch effort to forestall the transfer of iron and steel company securities to a state corporation Feb. 15.

N. Y. Court Revokes Prison Terms Of 25 Bell Aircraft Strikers

TWENTY-FIVE union members fined and sentenced to jail on charges of violating an anti-picketing injunction during the 1949 strike of the CIO Auto Workers at the Bell Aircraft Corp., Niagara Falls, N. Y., won't have to serve their prison terms.

Justice William H. Munson, of the New York State Supreme Court, modified the sentences at the joint request of attorneys for the union and the company, who said they acted "in the interest of national defense." The fines still stand.

Much disorder during the 19-week walkout was blamed by impartial observers on the company. It grew out of the injunction against picketing and company efforts to goad the strikers into violating it.

Ten of the defendants were fined $500 and sentenced to 60 days in jail. Among them were Edward Gray, UAW sub-regional director, and Robert Siegler, then president of the Bell local.

Fifteen others were given 30-day terms and fined $250 each. Among them was Clayton W. Fountain, of the staff of the United Automobile Worker, publication of the international union, and author of the novel, "Union Guy." Three additional pickets were fined $250 each.

Modification of the sentences have no effect on convictions of some of the defendants on additional charges. Gray also was accused of conspiracy, a misdemeanor. Joseph Ippolito, Joseph Blachowicz and Donald Fried were charged with rioting, a felony. All four have been convicted and have appealed to the State Court of Appeals. Blachowicz was one of those fined $500 and sentenced to 60 days on the picketing charge.

N. J. Council Takes Sides On Legislation

THE NEW Jersey CIO Council announced last week its support of 16 bills pending in the State Legislature and its opposition to four others.

Among those it favored were administration (Republican) measures raising the minimum salaries of teachers from $2200 to $2500 a year, and repealing the special restrictions on proof of and collection for silicosis and asbestosis under the workmen's compensation law.

Also supported were two bills establishing an eight-hour day and a five-day week for state, county and municipal employes, and others repealing the Public Utility Anti-Strike Act, and the 3c per pack cigaret sales tax.

Unemployment compensation bills endorsed by the CIO included measures increasing the benefits to $30 a week plus $3 for each dependent up to three; limiting the labor dispute disqualification to four weeks in strikes and eliminating it in lockouts; requiring $150 earnings in the base year instead of 25 times the weekly benefit amount, and extending coverage to employers of one or more workers.

Support also was given bills establishing a State Labor Relations Board, reducing the voting age from 21 to 18 years, and memorializing Congress to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

The bills opposed by the CIO would bar "subversives" from unemployment compensation benefits and direct relief; require a loyalty oath from each relief recipient; "wreck child labor standards by permitting employment of youths 14-16 years of age until 10 p.m. and those 16-18 years old until midnight during school vacations," and requiring a reimbursement agreement from all public assistance recipients.

Prosecutor Stricken, Trenton Trial Delayed

THE SECOND trial of the "Trenton Six" came to an abrupt end last week when the prosecutor, Mario Volpe, was taken to a hospital for an emergency operation for appendicitis.

Judge Ralph J. Smalley, of the Superior Court, declared a technical mistrial in the case of the six Negroes accused of murdering a shopkeeper in Trenton, N. J., three years ago, and set March 5 for reopening of the trial.

After widespread protests to the effect that the defendants were convicted on false and insufficient evidence at their first trial in 1948, the State Supreme Court in June, 1949, threw out a verdict under which all six men were sentenced to death, and ordered a new trial.

The New Jersey CIO Council, the big District 4 of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and other CIO groups representing many thousands of workers in the state are giving their financial and moral support to aid the accused Negroes in getting a fair trial.

"Prejudice and bigotry have no place in America," stated a resolution passed by IUE District 4. "We must fight for justice without regard to color, creed or national origin."

AFTER THE unexpected interruption of the trial, defense counsel announced they would seek a change of venue outside Mercer county on the basis that racial bias had cropped up in the questioning of prospective jurors. Only one juryman, John Muste, a worker at the General Electric plant in Trenton, had been chosen when the technical mistrial was declared. Judge Smalley ordered a new panel drawn for March 5.

The Negroes are being defended by a staff of attorneys from the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People headed by Raymond Pace Alexander of Philadelphia, Arthur Garfield Hays of New York, and former Judge George Pellettieri of Trenton.

The defendants are Ralph Cooper, Collis English, John McKenzie, James Thorpe, all in their early twenties; McKinley Forrest, 35, and Horace Wilson, 37. All are residents of Trenton and vicinity, but a jail cell has been their home for three years.

Kleeb Is Named NLRB Legal Aide

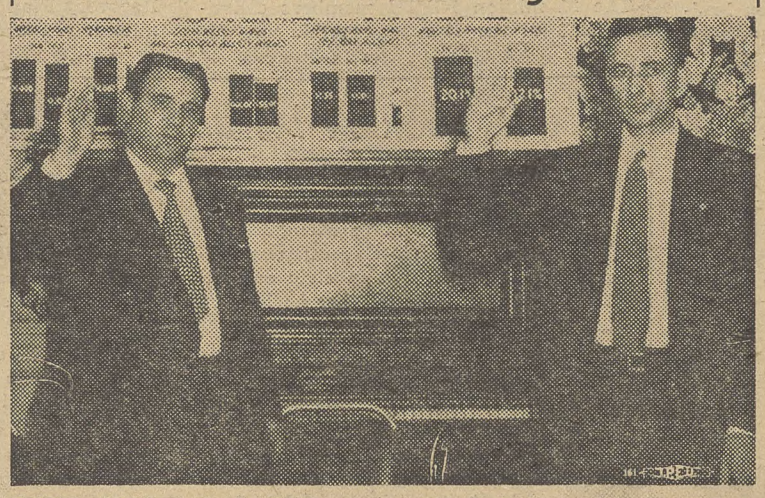
Howard W. Kleeb, regional director for the National Labor Relations Board at St. Louis, was appointed executive assistant to William O. Murdock, associate general counsel in charge of the board's operations division. He will be succeeded in St. Louis by Assistant General Counsel V. Lee McMahon.

Kleeb, a native of Pittsburgh, joined the NLRB staff as a field examiner in Detroit in 1937. He became examiner in charge of the Denver regional office in 1943, and five years later was named head of the St. Louis office.

McMahon was born in Bode, Ia., and was an assistant district attorney in Texas before joining the NLRB at Fort Worth.

After his discharge from the service, he was named chief law officer at Buffalo and later at St. Louis. He was appointed assistant general counsel in 1948.

IUE Set For Radio Wage Drive



PRES. JAMES B. CAREY of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers (right) administers the oath of office to Daniel Arnold, chairman of the union's new Radio, Television and Parts Conference, at the board's first meeting in Erie, Pa. IUE is seeking a 12 to 15c hourly wage increase for production workers in the radio and television industries.

IUE To Seek Pay Raises In RadioIndustry

A DRIVE for wage increases of 12 to 15c an hour for workers in radio and television has been announced by Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The announcement was made at the first meeting at Erie, Pa., of the newly formed IUE Radio, Television and Parts Conference, attended by 52 delegates from plants throughout the nation. Daniel Arnold, from the RCA plant at Camden, N. J., was elected Conference Board chairman, Mary Callahan, from the International Resistance Co. plant, Philadelphia, was elected secretary.

The wage increases can be granted "through the enormous profits of the industry and without raising prices," a report to the conference declared. Carey said the industry profits went up 120% between 1949 and 1950.

He pointed out that the industry, through a loophole in the excess profits tax law, is exempt from a large part of the excess profits taxes on the ground that it is a "growth" industry. The language did not fit Philco, so a special provision was put in so Philco could qualify to keep its profits, Carey said.

Carey said the average worker in the industry with three in the family had $50.34 left in January, 1950, after federal income and social security taxes; by November, 1950, he had only $49.70 left. Thus, after an increase of nearly 7% in hourly wages, he had less money left for his family than in January, 1950. LPA

Five Miners Slain By Franco Killers

ASSASSINATION OF five Spanish coal miners for democratic trade union activities has been reported to the CIO by the exiled General Union of Spanish Workers.

Writing from Toulouse, France, near the Spanish border, Pascual Tomas of the exiled union group said reports from the Asturian mine area of Spain indicate a "fierce and systematic persecution of the working miners" by members of General Franco's fascist Falange movement.

The report said that on Dec. 19, five miners in the Villoria Valley district were "detained and later assassinated" by anti-union Falangists.

At about the same time, the head of the Basque government-in-exile, with headquarters in Paris, charged that "Franco is playing Stalin's game by providing him with ready arguments and with fifth columns of desperate and disillusioned men."

Pres. Don Jose Antonio de Aguirre, of the free Basques, said that the people of Spain "have their natural place" in the western alliance of democracy, but added that Franco's dictatorship "is the obstacle in the way of the efficient and complete cooperation of these peoples with the western world."

"Franco's Spain is an obstruction to the defense of western ideals," he asserted.

Query: Who Got Hit?

Congress, whose members live in Washington most of the year, is considering a bill by Rep. Klein (D. N.Y.) to continue rent controls there "for the duration of the emergency."

Rating System Blocks Fairchild Settlement

STRIKING members of Local 842, CIO Auto Workers, opened their picket lines last week to permit two U. S. Army trucks to enter the plant of the Fairchild Aircraft Division at Hagerstown, Md., to pick up 36 parts vitally needed by the U. S. Air Force.

The union also authorized enough employes to enter the plant to tag and prepare for shipping parts which union officials were informed are badly needed to keep in the air several C-119 Packet cargo planes in Korea and this country.

Chief stumbling block to settlement of the strike of almost 4000 workers, which began Jan. 8, is the company's insistence on retaining a rating system which the employes charge was used to cut wages. On Feb. 2, the workers in a secret ballot voted 2144 for rejection to 141 for acceptance of the company's latest offer of 15c an hour increase as long as the firm insists on keeping the rating system.

WHEN THE request for the parts came from Lt. Col. S. E. Cleveland, of the Air Force, attached to the local Fairchild plant, union officials cheerfully agreed. The men assigned to the job of boxing the equipment were chosen by seniority.

As the union members walked into the plant to comply with the Air Force request, the company, in a full-page ad in the local newspapers, continued its campaign of name-calling. It quoted an article by a W. H. Graham in the Journal of Commerce in which Graham undertakes to label the strike as "sabotage" and one that is influenced "possibly outside the United States."

This has been in line with the campaign maintained by Fairchild throughout the strike to confuse the issues and to brand the employes, many of whom are World War II veterans, as unpatriotic.

Time and again, management sought to fall back on the war in Korea and decry the fact that production of the C-119 Packets had stopped, but it failed to note that there would have been no strike, if it had agreed to abandon the rating system.

ONE REASON for the rejection of the company's offer on Feb. 2, was the fear of the strikers that it was another attempt to start a back-to-work movement.

The company's claim that its rating system is a "merit" system is overwhelmingly denied by the employes, who charge that it can be so manipulated that it can, in effect, be used to cut wages.

The walkout occurred after a long period of fruitless negotiations. Before the plant was struck the company raised its wage offer from a 3c to a 12c an hour increase.

Britain To Let Miners In Army Return To Pits

The British Government, with 5000 miners in the armed forces, offered to release any who would go back to work in the pits. The announcement was made by Philip Noel-Baker, Minister of Fuel, as a debate on the coal shortage opened in Commons.

Board Endorses Reuther Aid Plan

The CIO Auto Workers executive board has voted unanimous support of Pres. Walter P. Reuther's proposal for federal legislation to provide funds to supplement unemployment compensation for workers laid off as a result of shifts from civilian production.

Reuther had asked President Truman to urge Congress to provide money to pay such workers an amount which, with regular unemployment compensation, would be equal to what they would earn at their regular wages in a 40-hour week.

"Helping workers and their families during the conversion period must be considered a normal part of our national mobilization program," Reuther declared. "Failure to provide security for workers during the conversion period will be highly discriminatory and will work undue hardships upon many workers and seriously affect their morale."

Judges Are Named For Hillman Contest

Entries in the Sidney Hillman Foundation contests will be judged by a board composed of Lewis Gannett, book editor of the New York Herald-Tribune; Columnist Thomas L. Stokes, and William L. Shirer, former foreign correspondent and radio commentator, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers announced Feb. 6.

The foundation will distribute $4000 in prizes in the fields of general, periodical and labor journalism, radio and television, fiction, drama and motion pictures dealing with the general subjects of trade union development, race relations and peace. The contest closed Feb. 1.

"—and in the future, let's just ask the customer to 'sit down' rather than 'take a chair'."

ECA Aide Foils Red Plot To Discredit Marshall Plan

COMMUNISTS stacked a recent meeting at Neath, Wales, but their plot to discredit the Marshall Plan was foiled by William C. Gausmann, labor information officer of the Economic Cooperation Administration mission to Great Britain.

The meeting was arranged by the British National Council of Labor Colleges. Gausmann appeared to answer charges by Idris Cox, Communist Party secretary in South Wales, that the Marshall Plan "has meant the domination of Britain by America."

The debate raged hot and heavy for five hours. At its conclusion Gausmann had demonstrated that Communist speakers had not produced "a shred of evidence to indicate that there has been improper American interference in British affairs."

HE DECLARED that the 1950 general elections and the meetings of Trades Union Congress showed that the Reds and their charges had been completely discredited by British workers. He rebutted Communist charges that the Marshall Plan was a scheme to get rid of surplus American goods and capital, to rebuild Germany as a war base, to weaken Britain in world markets and to secure American domination of Western Europe in preparation for a war against Russia.

Gaussmann, who is a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, reminded the Reds that the Marsall Plan did not become a weapon in the cold war until the European countries participating in it and the United States all realized that they must rearm against the threat of Russian aggression.

Pacts Extended InWoolen-Worsted

The CIO Textile Workers' wage and policy committee has extended contracts covering 70,000 woolen-worsted workers until Feb. 15.

John Chupka, TWUA woolen-worsted director, said that notification of the action has been sent to all TWUA locals affected by the expiration of contracts Feb. 1.

He declared that at the same time, the committee had notified the Wage Stabilization Board that a wage policy must be established which will permit woolen and worsted wage levels to rise to a parity with other major industry groups, such as auto and steel. The committee had proposed that pensions and other benefits generally existing in mass production industries be established in woolen-worsted, Chupka said.

He also asked that the wage stabilization policy permit wage increases based upon increases in the cost of living in view of the impossibility of controlling prices under present legislation.

PICKETS at the Fairchild Aircraft Division plant at Hagerstown, Md., permit an Army truck to pick up parts which the U. S. Air Force says are needed to maintain C-119 Packet cargo planes. Strikers tagged and prepared the parts for shipment.

Measure Would Jail Person Accepting Labor Spy Report

A BILL AIMED at ending labor espionage in interstate commerce was introduced in Congress on Feb. 5 by six liberal Senators.

The measure would impose a $5000 fine and a two-year prison sentence to anyone accepting "any verbal or written report" intended to "coerce" an employe in regard to his right to join a union of his own choosing.

The measure was sponsored by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.), Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and Sen. Morse (R., Ore.), all members of the Senate Labor Committee.

Murray, who is now chairman of the committee, in the last term was chairman of a sub-committee on labor-management relations which surveyed several industries to find out how the Taft-Hartley Act was working. It came as a "great surprise and shock," he said in a floor speech on the new bill, to find out during the sub-committee's hearings that such legislation is needed.

"Most decent employers," he said, "have long since abandoned it for the loathsome thing it is, but in some of our industrial byways, it still sprouts and poisons labor-management relations.

"We have found it in the textile industry, in the furniture industry and elsewhere. The most shocking system of labor espionage we discovered in the marine divisions of some of our great oil tanker companies."

Testimony before his sub-committee last September indicated that the Cities Service Oil Co.'s marine division had a spy system operated by former Coast Guard officers in order to keep the AFL Seafarers' Union off its ships. The union forced the company into a contract in spite of the spies.

Peron's Recent Assault On Union Draws Protests

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

PROTESTS against a new move by the Argentine government to break any show of independence by the country's unions have been voiced in the last week throughout many parts of Latin America.

Forty-nine Argentine railway workers have been charged with "crimes against the state" by the dictatorial Peron government for their part in a nationwide strike late in January.

In addition, thousands of railroad workers have been fired from their jobs for taking part in the three-day walkout. The strike was called to get higher wages and to force action from the government on their demands.

Leaders of the union, in most cases appointed by the Peron regime for loyalty to Peron's party and for service to the dictator's wife—onetime actress Eva, who now leads the government's powerful Ministry of Social Affairs—denounced the strike as "unauthorized."

Peron's henchmen broke the protest by placing the rail lines under military control and drafting the workers into "civilian service of national defense."

THE GOVERNMENT'S action brought forth a vigorous protest from the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. ORIT early in January refused to permit the Peron-controlled union apparatus to affiliate with it.

ORIT scoffed at Peronista charges that the Argentine rail union is Communist-controlled and at the "false accusation that they obey Communist orders. In reality, the movement is exclusively one for justified union demands, initiated a long time ago by these workers . . .

"The members of the railroad workers union are democratic, and they only seek to prevent the loss of improvements for which they had fought under tremendous sacrifices."

ORIT called on all democratic groups "to protest against the assaults on labor of the Peron government. It asks them at the same time to make a determined display of solidarity with the valiant Argentine workers, and to lend them effective help to save the freedom of their people, which has been taken away by the Peronist regime."

In New York, meanwhile, Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee made public a long report on Argentine workers' conditions. The writer was described as "an outstanding Argentine and friend of labor whose name, for obvious reasons cannot be revealed."

The writer praised the action of the CIO delegation, headed by Potofsky, which led the fight against seating the Argentine General Confederation of Labor (CGT) at the ICFTU conference in Mexico early in January.

"The Argentine CGT is an entity which has ceased to be a free labor institution and has become nothing but a political instrument of Peron," the letter said. "It has capitulated to him unconditionally and unabashedly, and has allowed itself to be used for his demagogic purposes.

"I can assure you honestly that there is now no worker in the direction of the Argentine unions who is not a 'Peronist', in spite of the fact that among the rank and file, though in a hidden way, there are still thousands and thousands of liberals, socialists and conservatives."

THE REPORT said that throughout the country, union freedoms are being trampled, and that pre-Peron unions have been "extinguished or dissolved."

At present, the writer added, "Argentine unionism is nothing but a theatrical comedy under the dictatorship of Peron, and the hierarchs of the CGT are his unconditional stooges and mute puppets, who never discuss his orders because of the rich gifts and privileges they receive at his hands.

"The leaders of the unions are imposed on the latter by the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (the domain of Eva Peron), which is the biggest political set-up in the Argentine Republic."

Mrs. Peron, in daily radio speeches, insists that any worker who does not subscribe to her husband's version of the totalitarian state is "unworthy" of calling himself an Argentine.

She also calls for the denunciation, as "traitors" of all workers who oppose Peron's policies, and adds the comment that such men should be "extinguished."

According to the report to the CIO, "the worker who does not believe in the Peronist doctrines—and these workers in general are the most able and responsible—lives in silence and fear. He does not dare express his thoughts and convictions . . .

"These conditions force the Argentine workers into display of their Peronist 'faith', for fear that otherwise they may lose their jobs and find it impossible to get other work—for the police will refuse them certificates of good conduct, necessary and required for obtaining new positions."

EFFECTIVENESS of the thought control mechanism devised by Peron husband-and-wife team is illustrated in the case of Cypriano Reyes, a packinghouse worker who had been elected to the national Congress.

The report said that "because he fought for union liberty, they forged an indictment against him for 'subversive acts.' Then he was deprived of his parliamentary immunity, and for the last two years he has been kept as an illegal prisoner at a Buenos Aires jail.

"No judge—for fear of dismissal—has yet dared to give him back his freedom.

"Another case: Antonio Aguirre, a leader of the food workers union, was treacherously murdered by a policeman in the city of Tocuman, after he had been held a prisoner by the police for eight days. He, too, was a great defender of union freedom.

". . . Argentine justice has unfortunately lost its dignity and independence. There are thousands of cases like those of Reyes and Aguirre, and of workers who disappeared for the same reasons. They cannot be found, despite incessant search by their families."

ALTHOUGH some Peron-controlled unions are occasionally permitted to strike and to win wage increases, the government also permits prices to rise much higher.

A pair of shoes, which cost 12 pesos in 1943, now sells for 90. A shirt selling for 8 pesos in 1943, now is priced at 40.

Bread, meat, coffee, milk, cheese and butter have all risen anywhere from 3½ to 6 times their 1943 price levels, and rents have jumped almost seven times.

Industrial workers or school teachers, with a monthly income of about 500 pesos, must spend about three-quarters of it for their meager food supply. By doubling up on living space, in order to cut rent, workers can squeeze out a few pesos for limited supplies of clothing.

The writer of the letter to Chairman Potofsky of the CIO International Committee described as "misguided" the efforts of Mexican labor officials to gain admittance for the Argentine unions to the ICFTU American regional organization.

If observers for the Mexican unions could "do the impossible"—talk with Argentine workers without being seen and heard by the secret police and the CGT—"I am convinced that these men would return to Mexico profoundly disillusioned and sorry to have defended an unjust cause, for the defense of something unworthy and foul," the writer said.

A Story Of Fear, Force And Repression

Last month the CIO and AFL led a successful fight to keep the Argentine General Confederation of Labor from affiliation with the new American hemisphere organization of democratic labor unions.

This story—based on news reports and eye-witness observations by a leading Argentine citizen—explains the CIO's objection to the Peron-controlled Argentine unions.

It is a story of fear, force and repression—through which a dictatorial regime "keeps the unions in line," while denying them basic freedoms or the right to choose democratically their own union leaders.

Peron 'Union' Closes Democratic Paper

La Prensa, Buenos Aires daily paper with a worldwide reputation, is apparently losing its long battle against the Peron regime in Argentine.

The paper, often quoted for its democratic views, has been harassed by the Peron machine for many years. Censorship, restriction of newsprint supplies, super-enforcement of technical regulations have all been used.

Last week, however, the Peron-controlled news dealers' "union" demanded that a heavy proportion of La Prensa's classified advertising revenue be turned over to the organization. When the paper declined—on grounds the demand would quickly bankrupt it—the vendors refused to handle the paper's sales, and the paper stopped printing.

Despite heavy protests from the democratic world, the Peron regime is continuing its tactics of shutting down the paper.

Potofsky Asks Two Million Tons Of Grain For India

TWO MILLION tons of grain should be promptly donated to the government of India, where threats of famine are growing, Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Intl. Committee said last week.

"Such a gift would be in the best American tradition of humanitarianism and generosity to the unfortunate," he said, at a press conference in Providence, R. I.

"Free of any political strings, such a helping hand to the poor people of India would be a concrete demonstration of American friendship and good neighborliness," Potofsky commented.

"Such a gift would constitute a demonstration of international good will that would go far to offset the preposterous claims of the Kremlin propaganda mill that only the Communists are the friends of the unfortunate."

Potofsky repeated his requests in wires to Chairman Connally (D. Tex.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and to Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.), head of a subcommittee considering the matter.

Meanwhile, a group of GOP and Democratic Senators led by Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) said they would introduce emergency legislation on the subject, and they asked for a conference with Pres. Truman on the subject.

In a letter to the White House, Benton said that a series of misfortunes, "including earthquakes, floods and locusts," has cut India's grain production six million tons below minimum requirements.

The Indian government has arranged to buy four million tons but does not have the foreign exchange with which to buy the additional two million tons that are needed, Benton told the President.

HE ALSO HAILED the Point Four program—for aiding under-developed areas of the world—as "performing a similar service for this country and for democratic forces."

Potofsky—who represents CIO on the Point Four advisory committee— said "our national defense will be strengthened by Point Four—by parallel programs of military protection and investments in lasting peace."

Under such a program, he pointed out, people in underdeveloped areas will get a chance to "use their own resources—human, industrial and natural—to improve their own living conditions. It's really a process of democracy at work."

"The cost of such a program is comparatively small, yet it will permit tremendous benefits from each dollar we spend," Potofsky added, predicting that it may become "perhaps the most important and beneficial long-range foreign policy on which our country has ever embarked."

Head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Potofsky urged an effective anti-inflation program that would bring "real control of living costs" and an "equitable tax program." He charged that wage stabilization policy must be set up so as "not to penalize working men and women because of rises in the cost of living."

On the manpower issue, Potofsky referred to efforts of Charles E. Wilson, defense mobilization head, to bring manpower problems under his organization, with these words:

"Organized labor views with alarm any attempt by any other government agency to usurp these functions now being handled in the Labor Dept.

"It is clear that the Dept. of Labor is the government agency best equipped by experience and understanding to handle our emergency manpower problems."

Ben Fairless Sees Mote In Labor's Eye, None In Big Biz's

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

BEN F. FAIRLESS, head of gigantic U.S. Steel, got something called "the Applause Award" from the Sales Executive Club in New York.

He won it "for outstanding salesmanship and public service." He made a speech, entitled "Target for Termites," and thereby joined the Hysteria Brigade.

Moscow, said Ben, has in the U.S. a "Red Army of Trained Termites," which he estimates at from "50,000 to 100,000 troops," which have "infiltrated into virtually every branch of the American economy."

They are, he said, trained in espionage, but their "principal weapon is a lie, or—still more dangerous—a half truth."

These termites, Ben said, "will naturally seek to fill the labor press with savage attacks upon management," will help foment strikes, try to turn one class against another, but their main target is "big business," because "they must not only destroy public confidence in big business; they must create positive public hatred of it."

THAT'S A LOT of territory. For labor leaders who have proven their hatred of Communism have attacked big business—and with good cause. The sober economists of the Twentieth Century Fund have put out two fat volumes dealing with the sins of big business.

The anti-trust division of the Dept. of Justice has brought some—all too few—big business combinations to book. The other day a Senate committee report complained that in the defense effort the small businesses face extinction while the giants of big business get the gravy.

Congressional investigations time without number have exposed the sins of big business. The Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Power Commission, the House committee that investigated lobbying have exposed big business.

Only the other day an official of the Bureau of Internal Revenue disclosed that it's the big income boys who cheat Uncle Sam on income taxes.

And the debates on the excess profits tax, and the current debates on new taxes, have once more highlighted the scandalous loopholes that enable big business to evade taxes—and not pennies, but millions upon millions of dollars.

Big business has fought the New Deal, and then the Fair Deal, for almost 20 years. And before that, big business fought virtually every social welfare measure ever advocated, beginning with its fight against trade unions.

Those battles date back long before there was a Soviet Union, long before there was a "Red Army of Trained Termites."

Just one little example of why labor people see "red," without being what you call "Red Termites:"

Dr. Herbert R. Northrup, economist for the National Industrial Conference Board, in discussing wage stabilization, has no objection to wages being under such control. When it comes to salaries of executives, he wails in anguish, as follows:

". . . it would appear that there is strong sentiment in management circles for removing the salaries of executive personnel from the wage stabilization agency. The reason is that the Wage Stabilization Board is a tripartite organization, but executive personnel are not union members.

"Hence, if the WSB were charged with controlling executive salaries, an anomalous situation would result: representatives of the employes would be fixing the salaries of management. Moreover, executives frequently do not care to have salaries of the management team made matters of common knowledge. And the tripartite setup is ill suited to handling confidential data."

Big Shots Are Chiselers, House Tax Committee Learns

THE MAN WAS polite, and spoke of "margin of error." But in the plain terms, what he was talking about was that it's the big boys who gyp the government on taxes.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue George J. Schoeneman told the House Ways and Means Committee Feb. 6 that: Seven out of every 10 tax returns in the $25,000 a year or more class do not show the correct amount of taxes owed; those reporting income from business operations are wrong five out of 10 times; that he expects his office to collect about $1.9 billion this fiscal year from persons and business concerns who didn't pay all they should have paid, and $2 billion next year.

The margin of error was not so great in the returns of individuals and business groups under $25,000 a year, Schoeneman said.

Hereafter, he disclosed, his office will audit every return in this group at least once every two years, and at the same time, the return for the previous year will be examined. More, his office is now segregating all business returns "to permit a more careful scrutiny."

Of the more than 90 million tax returns filed in the last year, only 4,326,886 were examined, he said, in urging that his enforcement staff be increased to get the chisellers.

"We are not anywhere near the point at which additional audits cease to be highly profitable," he said.

WFTU Retreating Behind 'Curtain'

Headquarters of the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions are being moved back behind the Iron Curtain.

The WFTU announced its offices will henceforth be in Warsaw, Poland. They are being moved from Paris, where the French government recently ordered that the office be disbanded within the next month.

Danish Trade Unionists Say U. S. Lags On Social Progress

THE AMERICAN workingman, who believes he enenjoys the highest standard of living in the world, might be a trifle shocked at the report made by seven Danish trade unionists after a month in the U. S.

The seven, who toured industrial plants in the U. S. under the auspices of the ECA, were much impressed with U. S. production, but found America lagging far behind Europe in many respects.

Visiting a steel plant in Cleveland during a strike, they "found it somewhat strange to see that American labor unions had to go on strike to bring to a successful issue claims for such social conditions as have been considered a matter of course in this country for more than 30 years, and which are the birthright of every Dane."

THEY REPORTED taxes on normal incomes "about the same as Denmark," that U. S. rents are higher, and sickness and medical aid very high because "there is no National Health Insurance scheme in the United States corresponding to ours."

American production evoked unstinted admiration, but the group said, "American industrial superiority is not followed by a corresponding superiority in other fields, for example, agriculture and transportation."

One aspect of production did not get their praise—the speed at which Americans work. They noted that the U. S. worker has shorter hours and more machine power to help him, but that "the working pace is much tougher than is customary in Denmark."

After a visit to the Ford plant, they groggily reported that "from a Danish point of view it is not very inspiring to watch the very monotonous work performed by most of the workers . . . techniques should help the worker, not lead to a situation where he becomes a mere tool controlled by a conveyor belt."

The visiting Danes found much to praise in America. They said it was "remarkable that so many different nationalities have been able to blend into one people and then develop the most industrialized community in the world."

THE WORK of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, particularly pertaining to productivity, was something entirely new to the team and they came away armed with many facts.

For example: U. S. output increased 55% from 1940 to 1944; output per man is approximately 2.2 times as high in America as Britain; American coal miners load eight times more coal than their English counterparts.

American trade unions were given a large part of the credit of speeding the industrialization of the country and gaining higher wages and shorter hours for workers. The wages and hours made higher production costs which necesitated the introduction of better machinery, they noted.

While speaking highly of the cooperation between some employers and unions on problems, the team said there was still much antagonism from one group of employers "who undoubtedly believe that the American labor movement may again be reduced to a negligible quantity."

The visitors noted that the great spurt of unions in America has been made in recent years and that much of the progress was made in pitched battles between unions and management.

"The means employed in the fight against American labor unions in the 30's were callous and not very democratic," they said. The group thought it would take many years to wipe out the animosity developed in the 30's but a real foundation is being laid for peaceful bargaining.

THEY POINTED up this thesis by telling of the cooperation between employers and the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers', AFL and the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

They said both unions had taken over when the trades were at the mercy of sweatshop operators, and by organization and cooperation with legitimate employers had driven the chiselers to adopt fair working standards and wages.

The group went into detail concerning the much-vaunted American standard of living and found it ahead of European standards in many things, but just about the same as far as the cost of food is concerned.

"An American worker can buy a radio set for two or three days wages whereas a worker in this country will have to spend at least three weeks' wages to buy a similar set," they reported.

"It is well-known that automobiles are also relatively cheap in America. One of the new models costs $1400 or $1500 all told. On the other hand, the American workers' wages will not buy much more food than those of Danish worker."

AVC Backs Raises For U.S. Employes

The National Planning Committee of the American Veterans Committee (AVC) at a recent meeting in Minneapolis, Minn., endorsed two House bills increasing the pay rates of federal classified and postal employes by 17%.

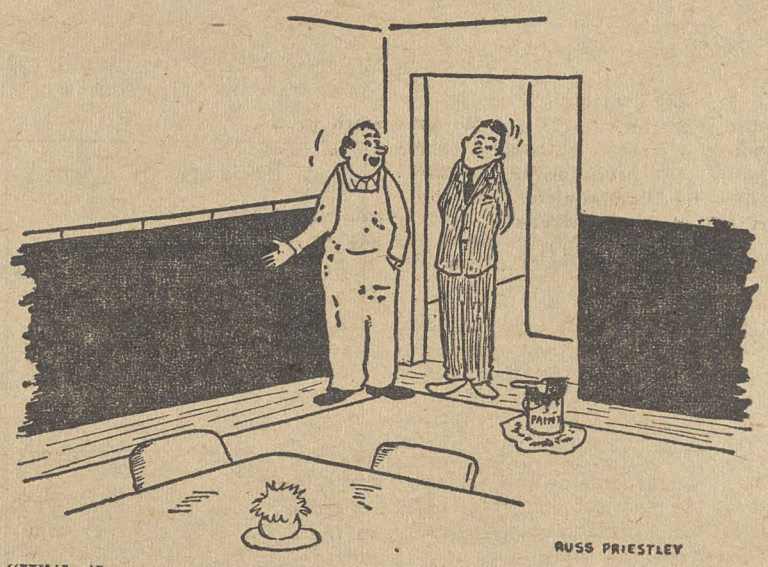
One of the bills also would eliminate some of the lower grades of postal employes, a provision of special concern to the AVC since many veterans lack seniority because of their World War II service and thus are in the lower pay grades. The CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee looks with favor on both measures, H.R. 241 and H.R. 244.

Ohio CIO Seeks State FEPC Law

The reorganized and augmented Civil Rights Committee of the Ohio CIO Council has opened a campaign to put an enforceable Fair Employment Practices Commission law on the state's statute books.

The 10 members of the committee, headed by James Culver, of Warren, vice president of the council, met recently at Columbus and also held a joint session with the Ohio Commission for Fair Employment Practices.

The committee asked the state council executive board to ask all local councils and local unions in the state to set up civil rights committees, and agreed to a program of action to "give courage and guidance and know-how to Ohio CIO members in our continuing crusade for human rights."



"With three small boys we decided to give up the idea of white walls in the kitchen."

GCEOC Asks City Raise N.Y. Bonus

The New York City Joint Board of the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee has called on the city's Board of Estimate to increase to $500 the $250 temporary bonus voted recently for city employes.

The board has received "almost unanimous denunciation for its penurious gesture," GCEOC officials said. They quote the New York Times as saying the raise is "inadequate."

A statement by the Joint Board said union members "are beginning to wonder whether the Board of Estimate, individually or collectively, has any conscience at all."

Court Ends 7-Day Week Of A Child Acrobat

The Illinois Dept. of Labor has proved a stumbling block to the acrobatic team billed as the "Garltons" at the Oriental Theatre, Chicago.

Nine-year-old Tommy Acker, a partner in the act with his father, has been doing four turns a day, seven days a week and taking his schooling by mail.

Tommy can take it easy from now on—at least in Illinois—because labor dept. charges were upheld by a Municipal Court Judge who fined the father $25 and let him go with a promise not to use the lad in the act again.

Haywood Hits Bridges Rail 'Raid' Charge

CIO VICE PRES. Allan S. Haywood hit back hard last week at reports that Harry Bridges, head of the CIO-expelled Intl. Longshoremen's & Warhousemen's Union, had accused the CIO of conducting "raids" among railroad workers who were staying off the job.

"If Bridges is quoted correctly, he knows he hasn't told the truth," Haywood said. "Bridges' statement could result only in injuring the righteous cause of the railroad workers.

"I know what Bridges' motive was. It was to camouflage his own party-line activities, by putting up straw men and false issues, in an effort to buttress his own waning control among honest, trade union longshormen."

The Bridges statement followed by only a few days a similar attack in the Daily Worker, Communist paper.

HAYWOOD pointed out that the CIO has been engaged in railroad union activities for many years, and that the railroad division of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers was recently given a charter as the United Railroad Workers of America. He added:

"The United Railroad Workers of America, CIO, has not and will never act in such a way as to impair other railroad workers from gaining their just demands. Anybody who makes such a charge is telling an unmitigated falsehood."

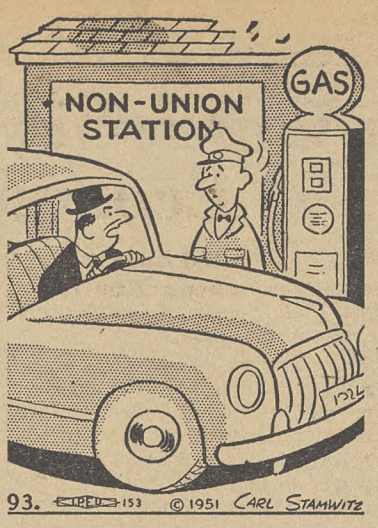
John Green, head of the United Railroad Workers, pointed out that the CIO is not organizing operating railroad men. And, he said, the union had instructed its members to give full cooperation to members of the brotherhoods in their effort to win better wages and conditions.

Bridges' Local Calls His Bluff

THE CIO National Maritime Union's drive to organize the rank-and-filers of the Marine Cooks and Stewards, which was bounced out of the CIO last year for following the Communist Party line, is running into typical left-wing trickery, as expected.

Harry Bridges, president of the Longshoremen's Union, which also was kicked out on the same charges, promised his union's support to the MCS in its fight against NMU "raiding." Bridges was immediately "called" on this by the vice president of his home local, San Francisco Local 10, who said the longshoremen had not gone on record in support of MCS and would not do so.

MCS representatives took two different lines in two different places without telling one left hand what the other left hand was doing. In San Francisco, stewards of the Lurline—biggest ship under MCS contract—were shown leaflets issued by MCS calling on the AFL Sailors' Union of the Pacific to "join us" against NMU—while in Los Angeles, stewards of the Cleveland heard MCS Pres. Hugh Bryson decry "raids" by this same AFL union as well as NMU.



"I'm outta gas. Will you push me to a 'fair' station?"

Beichman To Be ICFTU Public Relations Man

Secy. J. H. Oldenbroek, of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, has announced the appointment of Arnold Beichman as public relations representative for the ICFTU in the United States and Canada. Beichman will be attached to the ICFTU North American Office at 20 West 40th Street, New York City.

Beichman is a journalist with experience in the daily newspaper and trade union press field. At present New York correspondent for the American Federation of Labor News Service and public relations director of the New York musicians and electricians local unions, he was formerly assistant managing editor of the newspaper PM.

Perlis Briefs Midwest CIO On Role In Civilian Defense

"THE MAIN target in any possible bombing of this country would be the factories in which CIO people work. That shows you how close the job of civil defense is to us."

Leo Perlis, director of the CIO National Community Services and Civil Defense Committee, struck this urgent note in speaking at the committee's two-day regional staff conference at Chicago.

"We can't wait," he said. "We've got to get busy right away, so that we'll be ready if any atom bombs start falling."

About 40 community service workers from seven Midwestern states got a briefing on what they could do in civil defense on the plant and community level.

PERLIS AND other speakers urged that union-management committees be established in each plant to handle the job of preparing for a possible bombing attack and other war emergencies.

"These committees," said Perlis, "should be something apart from the collective bargaining process, so that they can operate without the friction that comes from other issues."

An employer and civil defense chief agreed with Perlis that civil defense on the plant level shouldn't be handled by management alone.

"Unions and management should have equal representation on committees to handle this problem," said Frank V. Martinek, assistant vice president of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana and chairman of the plant protection committee of the Chicago Civil Defense Corps.

Perlis urged that CIO unions in every area check their civil defense organization to see what help they can give.

"THERE'S ROOM for labor people not only on top committees, but on various subcommittees such as those on communications, public affairs, transportation, welfare, medical services," he asserted.

Newman Jeffrey, staff member of the CIO Auto Workers' education department, warned:

"It's not enough that we should scream for representation on this and that board and committee. We've got to be sure to pick men who have the time to give to the work and the skill to handle it."

As a step to getting this skill, Jeffrey said that unions should send members to various civil defense training schools that are being planned for every part of the country.

"And we should go into these courses right at the start," he added, "so that we can hear just what they're dishing out."

JEFFREY REPORTED that he attended the civil defense college at the Univ. of Maryland during World War II and found some anti-labor undertones which were hard to correct in their later stages.

According to Perlis, the CIO in many localities has already woven civil defense training into its regular union counsellor program. The pioneers in this are CIO locals in Kansas City, Mo., St. Louis, Detroit and Chester, Pa.

Perlis said that international unions ought to be giving thought to bargaining for war casualty insurance.

"Not just for servicemen, but those on the home-front should be protected by insurance," Perlis said.

A similar conference for community service workers on the East Coast is scheduled for Feb. 20 and 21 at the Statler Hotel, New York City.

N.J. CIO Protests WSB State Division

NEW JERSEY CIO Pres. Carl Holderman last week protested to Wage Stabilization Board Chairman Cyrus Ching against a proposal to split New Jersey into two areas—with administrative offices in New York and Philadelphia—for wage stabilization purposes.

The proposal is reportedly being considered by Ching. In a letter to the WSB chairman, Holderman declared:

"It has come to my attention that the Wage Stabilization Administration is planning to split New Jersey into two districts for purposes of wage stabilization—with part of the state in the New York district and part of the state in the Philadelphia district.

"On behalf of the 200,000 CIO members in New Jersey, I want to record our protests against this proposal and to suggest very strongly that the state be administered as one unit under WSA.

"New Jersey is an economic unit. The small size of the state makes the problems of North Jersey similar to the problems of South Jersey. One district for the entire state will greatly simplify the administrative problems of the agency in charge of wage stabilization.

"WHILE THE state is small in size, it nevertheless has the greatest industrial concentration per square mile of any state in the nation. Its great importance as a prime producer of materials for the armed forces and the civilian economy justifies its unified administration by one agency in wage matters.

"It is bad enough that New Jersey is not now a separate district for wage stabilization, but is included in the New York office. It would be far worse, however, if the state were split into two areas, with principal offices in two neighboring states."

UAW Slaps FTC On Failure To Act On Natural Gas Price Rise

THE Federal Power Commission's failure to act on charges of price-gouging by the Phillips Petroleum Co. "authorizes" oil companies to continue the "outrageous profiteering" they hoped to legalize through the Kerr Natural Gas Bill last year.

That's what Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers told FPC Chairman Wallgren in a telegram Feb. 6. The UAW leader said seven postponements of action by the FPC on complaints filed by Detroit and Wisconsin resulted in "continued extortion from the public" by Phillips.

The oil company keeps raising the price of natural gas, Wisconsin and Detroit contend. As a result, local regulatory agencies have no alternative to raising the price to consumers. The FPC is authorized to regulate the prices charged by producers of natural gas.

LAST YEAR, through the Kerr Bill, the oil and gas companies tried to strip the FPC of the power to regulate the prices charged by "independent" gas producers. The bill was lobbied through Congress but was killed by a Truman veto.

However, the companies were able to block a reappointment of FPC Member Olds, who had a long record of acting in the consumer interest.

In his telegram to Wallgren, Reuther charged that the FPC was flying in the face of Truman's "courageous veto of the Kerr Bill."

"On behalf of the UAW-CIO I demand that the commission act now, and act fast, to regulate the gas prices charged by these oil companies," he wired.

PHILLIPS has obtained a delay in the consideration of the original complaints on the ground that it is heavily involved in defense work, including secret processes which might be revealed if pricing methods were aired in public hearings.

Observers in Washington have questioned the alleged connection between secret processes and the company's price for natural gas in Detroit and Wisconsin.

Big Brokerage Firm's Profits Rise 421%

The largest brokerage firm in the world, which luxuriates in the impressive name of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane, revelled in unprecedented profits in 1950, its annual report showed last week.

Its take for buying and selling for the accounts of traders in many fields jumped from $2,404,170 in 1949 to an impressive $12,544,091 last year—a mere 421.7%. The company has 100 brokerage offices scattered across the country, four sales offices, 86 partners and 3389 employes.

"We understand that there is a motion picture being shown here—can you direct us to it!"

AP Guildsmen Obtain Raise, New Minimums

GENERAL wage increases of $3 to $5.50 a week and new minimums ranging from $95 to $120 a week were awarded 1500 members of the CIO Newspaper Guild employed by the Associated Press in an arbitration decision handed down last week.

The award affects only those earning less than $145 a week.

The top minimum, for newsmen of at least six years' experience, was increased from $110 to $120 a week in New York, Chicago and Washington; from $105 to $115 in Philadelphia, Boston, Detroit, Los Angeles and San Francisco; from $100 to $110 in Pittsburgh, Atlanta, Kansas City, St. Louis and Minneapolis-St. Paul; from $92.50 to $102.50 in 19 other bureaus, and from $85 to $95 in 67 addition bureaus.

Starting minimums in all bureaus were jumped from $45 to $50 a week. AP employes not increased through the boosts in minimums were awarded raises of $3 for those earning up to $60, to $5.50 for those earning at least $120 but less than $145.

The award covered 24 other categories of employes ranging down to office boys. Their new rates were set at $32.50 to start, $37.50 after a year, and in the two top groups of bureaus, to $40 after two years.

The Guild and the AP agreed to arbitration last November after several months of fruitless efforts to carve out a new wage schedule. Other articles of the contract were negotiated, including a wage reopener next November.

William E. Simkin, of Philadelphia, was chairman of the arbitration board. The Guild was represented by Joseph G. Colangelo, director for wire services, and Leonard Milliman, on leave from the AP cable desk in San Francisco. Personnel Chief L. H. Thomason and Traffic Executive Harry Montgomery served for the AP. Both Guild and management members filed sharp dissents from parts of the award, which is subject to action by the Wage Stabilization Board.

We Often Wondered About Our Coat, Too

Your mink coat cost so much because of "conspiracy to suppress competition," says the Federal Trade Commission, which has issued a complaint against the Mink Traders Association and its 70 members.

The association, says the FTC, used boycotts and threats to boycott and thus "persuaded, threatened, coerced and compelled" the various segments of the mink fur trade to go along. As a result, "the purchasing public has been deprived of the advantage of competitive prices, terms and conditions in the purchase of mink furs," it added.

The association, says the FTC, dictated and imposed methods, terms and conditions for ranchers, breeder associations and auction companies, with the net result that your mink coat costs more than it should.

Steps Taken On World Unit Of Newsmen

UNOFFICIAL representatives of newspaper unions in six countries took preliminary steps toward formation of a new international organization of journalists in the free nations at a recent meeting in Brussels, Belgium, under the sponsorship of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

None of those participating was for a position to commit his organization, but all agreed to present the idea to their own national bodies with a recommendation that a preliminary organization meeting be held in mid-April in Paris if enough interest is shown. The new group would replace the Intl. Organization of Journalists, which is affiliated with the Red-led World Federation of Trade Unions and has degenerated into a sounding-board for Russia and her satellites.

The executive bodies of most of the unions represented at the Brussels meeting, meet within the next six weeks. The CIO Newspaper Guild is committed to aid in the formation of a new world congress of journalists by action of its 1950 convention.

Harry Martin, ANG president and chief of labor information in Europe for the Marshall Plan, presided at the Brussels meeting. Others attending were:

Richard Kurfurst, vice president of the Austrian Journalists Union; C. J. Bundock, secretary, and John Taylor, vice president, of the British National Union of Journalists; Andre Viot, secretary-general of the French Force Ouvriere Syndicat des Journalistes, Wilhelm Endrulat, German Union of Journalists; Claudio Rocchi, of the Union of Italian Workers, and Oscar de Swaef, of the Belgian General Trade Union Federation Union of Journalists.

"I wish we had a union agreement so we could rotate this damned graveyard shift!"

Raise, Union Shop Won At Can Firm

The CIO Steelworkers recently signed a new contract with the Continental Can Co. which gives 10,000 workers in 15 cities wage increases averaging more than 16c an hour.

The company also agreed to the union shop.

The Continental pact followed by six weeks an agreement with the American Can Co. in which a wage increase and union shop were won. The two firms dominate the industry.

Hourly increases at Continental run as high as 30½c and will tend to help cut down rate differentials existing in different parts of the country, according to USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes. Other important gains won in the new contract shove the average hourly increase even higher. For example, shift differentials were increased from 8c on the afternoon and night shifts to 10c and 12½c hourly, respectively.

U. S. Lacks Schools At Economic Peak

THE FEDERAL Security Administration's 1950 report shows that in a year when wages, production and employment reached an all-time high, 2 million children failed to attend school.

FSA Chief Oscar Ewing attributes this failure to the lack of sufficient schools, the teacher shortage and illegal employment of minors.

He pointed out that 275,000 children were charged with delinquency during the year and that one out of 20 will spend time in mental institutions in the future unless constructive action is taken.

Almost 200,000 crippled and handicapped youngsters received Federal-state aid, but 30,000 more remained on state waiting lists and many others who required care had not yet been brought to the attention of state authorities.

On the brighter side of the picture, Ewing called the development of industrial pension plans won by many unions in collective bargaining sessions, and the amendment to the social security act, the biggest advances of the year.

"Old age and survivors insurance payments were almost doubled for persons already receiving benefits and more than doubled for future beneficiaries," he declared. "Nearly 10 million more people were brought into the program, including agricultural wage earners, domestic workers and such self-employed workers as small shop owners."

On the debit side, Ewing called attention to the fact that such issues as national health insurance and federal aid to education were vigorously argued during the year without receiving Congressional approval.

He also cited a Congressional report issued last March, showing that 38 million Americans were still members of families having a total income of $2,000 in 1948. This low-income group, the study showed, had more illness than any other group and their children got the worst education.

"Excellent" was the term used by Ewing to describe the team work of Federal and state agencies in vocational rehabilitation of the handicapped. "During the past year," he said, "60,000 disabled workers were returned to paying jobs—a record high for the 30 years the service has been in operation."

But, the report said: "Even in the field of social security, the year's great progress still left significant gaps. What does having a social security account mean to a man too young to retire and too disabled to ever work again—who has no insurance protection that will provide a substitute income for his wife and children?"

IUMSWA Rejects Bethlehem Offer

The CIO Shipbuilders on Feb. 7 rejected an offer of an 11.5% wage increase for 17,000 workers in eight Bethlehem Steel Co. yards on the Atlantic Coast.

The proposal was to raise first class mechanics by 18c an hour, or from $1.57 to $1.75, with other hourly rates increased by the same percentage.

Pres. John J. Grogan, head of the union negotiators, said it was turned down because it leaves the hourly rate too low to support the workers and their families, or to attract men for the defense effort.

The union is asking a 43c increase, which would raise the top journeyman rate to $2.

Indiana CIO Sets Up Civil Defense Group

A Civil Defense Committee has been set up by the Indiana CIO Council. Members are representatives of international unions and industrial union councils throughout Indiana. National CIO recently urged its member groups to form such committees.

Pres. Neal W. Edwards of the Indiana council said the 300,000 members in his state are "ready and willing to cooperate to the fullest extent" whenever the proper authorities set up machinery for an official Civil Defense Organization.

Court Rules School Janitors May Strike

Janitors and janitor-engineers in the schools of Minneapolis, Minn., have a perfectly legal right to strike, the Minnesota Court has ruled.

The school employes went on strike Jan. 23, the day after a temporary restraining order obtained by the Minneapolis Board of Education was vacated by Judge John A. Weeks in Hennepin County District Court. They are asking wage increases of $50 a month for men and $30 for women, on top of present salaries ranging from $2370 a year ($45.57 a week) to $4140 a year ($79.61 a week). The walkout has kept 68,000 children from their classes.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Intl. Rep. John J. O'Connell of the Auto Workers, CIO, in Boston reports a great victory won by Local 901, UAW-CIO, in the unemployment compensation case of the Ford Motor Co., Somerville, Mass., plant. These workers had been denied unemployment compensation during a work stoppage. CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Carmichael, who is also an attorney, carried this case all the way up to the Massachusetts State Supreme Court. Brother Carmichael rendered great service in securing a favorable decision. The Supreme Court dismissed the Ford petition and affirmed the union's position. Congratulations to Frank, John and the members of Local 901 for a job well done.

The operation of setting up manpower regions is just about completed. It seems as though in some government circles a man must be a big industrialist in order to qualify on various emergency boards. Labor will fight and continue to fight for more and more participation in all affairs that affect the people of our country, their jobs and the welfare of our great nation.

Reg. Dir. William Smith reports that in a representation election at the American Can Co., Tampa, Fla., the workers voted in favor of the United Steelworkers, CIO, by the following vote: eligible 699, USA-CIO 337, no union 313, challenged 6. This campaign was handled by Smith with splendid support from Natl. Dir. John Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee, and the USA-CIO.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that the United Rubber Workers, CIO, had a union shop election at the Firestone plant at Noblesville, Ind., with the following results: 780 yes, 25 no, 6 void. This campaign was conducted by H. C. Anthony, URW-CIO representative.

Reg. Dir. E. D. Hodson reports that in a representation election in Wilmington, Del., Delaware agents of the Quaker City Life Insurance Co. voted in favor of the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, by 21 to 0 for no union. IAWOC Reps. Paul McDonald and Ben Stahl conducted the campaign.

Natl. Rep. George DeNucci reports that in a consent representation election, conducted by a neutral party in the office of the Jewell Dairy and Ice Cream Co., Mt. Vernon, O., the workers voted: eligible 35, yes (CIO) 29, no 5. The campaign was conducted by Gerald A. Hughes, Ohio director of Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes Union, CIO.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, International Woodworkers, CIO, reports that in a representation election at Jeffries & Smith Lumber Co., Washington, N. C., the workers voted in favor of the IWA-CIO by the following: eligible 30, IWA-CIO 23, no union 3, challenged 2.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the United Steelworkers, CIO, won representation rights for employes of the Metalcraft Mfg. and Sales Corp., Kansas City, Mo., by a vote of USA-CIO 30, no union 15. Intl. Rep. Horace Brock conducted the organizing campaign. In a representation election at the Schatz Distributing Co., Kansas City, Kan., the workers voted in favor of the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers, CIO, by UBW-CIO 8, no union 4. Intl. Rep. Mel Greenthal conducted the organizational campaign.

Week's Nifty: Bill To Deny Law To Guild

THE OUTSTANDING example of profound thinking in Congress last week came from Rep. Vail (R. Ill.), a lawyer and steel products manufacturer, who introduced a bill which would deny the facilities of the National Labor Relations Board to the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Vail said a reporter who belongs to a labor organization cannot deal with it impartially, a fear publishers dismissed in the middle 1930s. He also told reporters—most of whom would be affected if the proposal becomes law—that his bill would "avoid a suspicion of slant in the mind of the reader" and avoid "the possible slanting of news by reason of alliance with a labor organization."

He said the bill would apply only to the Guild or a similar union of persons "directly involved in the gathering or presentation of news" and would not apply to mechanical unions.

It would prohibit the NLRB from holding collective bargaining elections for any union which includes writers, reporters, correspondents or commentators, or from issuing unfair labor practice complaints at the behest of any such union.

Defense Housing Bill Condemned By CIO

LEO GOODMAN, secretary of the CIO Housing Committee, told the House Banking and Currency Committee last week that the pending defense housing bill was unsatisfactory and would result in waste of government funds, without getting production of essential military and civilian housing.

The bill provides additional federal mortgage insurance for private home builders who undertake to meet government specifications. In part, it is an extension of the Wherry Bill, which was enacted on Aug. 8, 1949.

Goodman said that as of Feb. 1, 1950, only eight projects for housing military families near defense posts had been started under this law; by Nov. 30, 1950, 1727 dwelling units had been completed and approximately 46,000 were under construction. This was less than one-tenth of the total number needed, according to conservative estimates.

CIO favors giving top priority to military housing at this juncture, Goodman explained, but does not favor the "false economy" of issuing mortgage guarantees rather than paying outright for construction and then renting to military personnel. Under the pending bill, the builders would own and rent out the homes, or sell them to other private owners for renting.

The false economy is demonstrated in two ways, Goodman said. First, unsatisfactory housing for military personnel results, as has been proven over and over again, in a serious drop in the re-enlistment rates, which in turn means high expense for training new personnel.

(The Secretary of the Air Force, Goodman reminded the committee, testified recently that where the military establishments have provided decent housing, re-enlistment rates for jet engine experts, for instance, have been as high as 75%. But at those bases where housing shortages exist, the rate was as low as 7%. It cost the government over $20,000 to train each of these experts.)

Second, Goodman pointed out, the government has profited, rather than lost, wherever it has built housing and rented it out. This excess of income over outgo is reflected in the 1952 budget estimate to the tune of $432 million.

Goodman also asked that the direct approach be used for housing for defense plant workers. He detailed some of the chaotic conditions surrounding defense plants and predicted that manpower problems, already serious in some localities, would multiply unless a direct, planned approach were undertaken at once. The issuance of additional mortgage guarantees is not the answer, he emphasized.

"These programs cost tremendous amounts of money," he said. "But failure to undertake them will cost even greater sums."

FTC Acts To Police Unfair Practices In Auto Financing

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission is getting set to crack down on auto dealers and finance companies who indulge in deceptive practices in installment selling of motor vehicles in interstate trade.

The commission said that, subject to jurisdictional requirements, "appropriate proceedings in the public interest will be taken to prevent automobile dealers and financing institutions from engaging in any unfair trade practice as defined in the following set of rules:"

1) Misrepresentation by the seller of insurance coverage or financing rates.

2) Failure to furnish the buyer with a written itemization which discloses the delivered price of the motor vehicle, including extras.

3) Having the buyer sign an installment sales contract or receipt in blank with the intention of deceiving the purchaser.

4) Use, by the seller, of financing rate charts which mislead the buyer as to the amount required to finance the unpaid balance of the contract.

5) Requirement by the seller that the installment sale of an auto be conditioned on the purchase of an insurance policy from a particular company when the purchaser desires to purchase a policy from another company.

Proceedings leading to establishment of the rules were instituted by the commission on its own motion. Commissioner Lowell B. Mason was put in charge of enforcement of the rules.

Work Injuries In '50 Are 4% Over '49

Work injuries in 1950 were 4% over 1949, the 1,952,000 total being 82,000 over 1949. The 1950 figure was below 1948, and was the second lowest since 1940.

Of the 1950 total, 15,500 persons died as a result of work injuries; 84,000 suffered some permanent impairment, including 1600 who will never work again. About 95% of the injuries were minor.

Lost through injuries were about 40 million man-days, equivalent to a year's full-time employment for 134,000 workers.

Senate Unit Says NPA Ignores Small Business

THE NATIONAL Production Authority is making the same mess of its relations with small businesses that World War II mobilizers made, the Senate Small Business Committee reported last week.

And because officials are making the same mistakes they made a decade ago, the report asserted, "thousands of small manufacturing establishments are today facing extinction."

The committee, headed by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), accused the NPA of "insensitiveness" to the problems of small companies at a time when "a large segment of American small business is in imminent danger of bankruptcy through the shortage of basic materials." Under one NPA order, the report said, "some 14,000 aluminum fabricators are going to be forced out of their present business." The committee charged the NPA with "lack of both energy and imagination."

The NPA has done a poor job of explaining to businessmen the need for restrictions on the use of critical defense materials, the committee charged, adding that the "squeeze was tightened further when a slumbering Munitions Board stirred tardily to increase stockpile holdings which should have been augmented at a gradual rate since 1947." Secy. of Commerce Sawyer also was rapped for his indifference to the plight of the little fellow.

Chances of small business getting the materials it has to have in order to stay in business, whether it produces for civilians or the armed services, don't look very good. Charles E. Wilson, the mobilization boss and former president of General Electric, has said he doesn't think small firms can fill big contracts, but that they can get by on sub-contracts. He has the power of veto over NPA decisions.

REP. PATMAN (D. Tex.), chairman of the House Small Business Committee, said his group wants to make certain that "the small guy gets a chance," and that it will supplement and cooperate with the Senate committee on shortages, priorities and allocations.

The Senate committee rapped the NPA for not working closely enough with the Defense Dept. to ease the effects of cutbacks in production.

"Perhaps the greatest single disillusion shared by small manufacturers," its report said, "is the absence of a sufficient volume of war contracts to take up the slack created by material shortages and curtailed civilian production."

It recommended that the NPA establish quickly a controlled materials program, "including the allocation of steel to specific end uses, along with other critical materials, to insure that the quantities of such materials not required for defense and stockpiling purposes will be reserved for the most essential civilian purposes."

Disloyalty Charges A Flop, Negro Captain Wins Apology

CAPT. CHARLES A. Hill, Jr., 25-year-old Negro army reserve captain, was personally cleared of disloyalty charges—with an apology—last week by Thomas K. Finletter, Secretary of the Air Force.

An inquiry scheduled to be held in Detroit was called off, and Hill's service record, which the Air Force said was "outstanding," was cleared once and for all.

Hill, who is an auto plant worker, a law student and the father of two children, was ordered Jan. 29 either to resign or to face a board of inquiry on a disloyalty charge. Stunned, he told reporters that as far as he knew, the principal charge against him was that his father, the Rev. Charles A. Hill, had run unsuccessfully for a position on the Detroit City Council in 1949 and that he allegedly had had the support of the Communist Party. Also, the Captain said, he had been accused of "being seen reading the Daily Worker."

Hill decided to fight the charges rather than resign. The case was brought to Finletter's attention by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Finletter then personally reviewed the file on Capt. Hill and ordered the charges dismissed, with regrets.

MEANWHILE, Thurgood Marshall, special NAACP attorney, conferred with Gen. MacArthur in Japan on the as yet unannounced results of his personal investigation into the facts behind conviction of members of the 24th Infantry division on charges that they had disobeyed orders under fire. Marshall talked with the convicted men and officers, and with the chief of staff, the inspector general, and the judge advocate general.

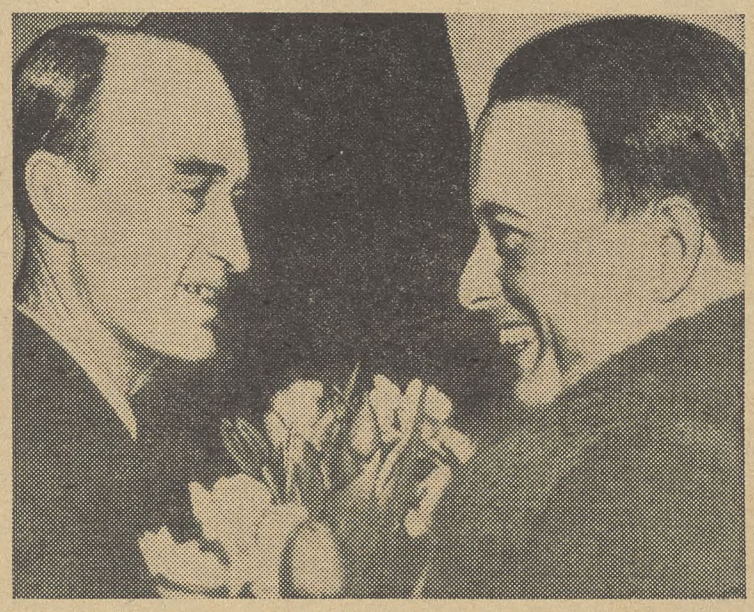
As a result of his report, Marshall was given clearance to go to Korea and talk to other members of the 24th Infantry, providing they were not "actually engaged with the enemy" at the time.

The NAACP recently wired President Truman asking appointment of "a qualified Negro civilian to the position of judge of the Court of Military Appeals, in view of the disproportionate number of court martial cases involving Negro members of the armed forces in World War II and the present action in Korea."

Greeting For Mayor

A committee has been formed to welcome Mayor Ernest Reuter of West Berlin when he comes to Detroit Feb. 26 for a speaking engagement. Organizations cooperating in the committee include the CIO Auto Workers, the Michigan and the Wayne County CIO Councils.

Dr. Reuter was a leader of Berliners in their resistance to Russian pressure during the Soviet blockade. He also will visit Cleveland and Chicago.



FREEDOM, flowers and industrial empire were given Alfred Krupp (left), wartime German munitions maker, promoter of Nazism, and business associate of high financiers all over the world, when he left war crimes prison at Landsberg, Germany, to resume career as big shot in cartels. Flowers came from brother Berthold (right). Freedom and property came from U. S. High Commissioner John J. McCloy, a former Wall St. lawyer.

Death Of 8 Children Laid To Antihistamine

At least eight children under two years old have died as the result of an overdose of antihistamine cold tablets. So two doctors declared in an article in the latest issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Treatment of convulsions caused by overdoses has been "none too successful," reported Drs. James B. Wyngaarden and Maurice H. Severs, both of the Univ. of Michigan medical school.

Until the Federal Trade Commission made them stop, the makers of the antihistamines had advertised that their products would cure colds. Doctors have warned that this claim is false, and that there is no known cure for colds.

TO: ALL CIO AFFILIATES AND MEMBERS

The 82nd Congress, in session for almost two months, has not yet come to grips with vital domestic problems seriously disturbing the American people. Weaknesses in defense mobilization laws are playing into the hands of representatives of Big Business holding key positions in the defense program.

Four basic issues affecting everyday living standards require quick Congressional action. These are:

1) PRICES. Living costs have sky-rocketed. The so-called "price freeze" is a fantastic mockery. The Director of Price Stabilization admits that prices will rise even more. Wages always lag behind exorbitant price increases. Congress must amend and improve the Defense Production Act at once, to stop this runaway inflation.

2) RENT CONTROL. The Federal Rent Control Act expires March 31. Rents continue to zoom because controls have been removed in many areas, yet Congress has taken no step to provide effective rent control. Unless Congressional action is taken before March 31, we will be faced with tremendous increases in rent.

3) TAXES. Congress has received tax recommendations from Secretary of Treasury Snyder which would place an unfairly heavy part of the burden of defense program costs on lower and middle-income groups. Congress shows no inclination to close the loopholes by which the wealthy escape fair taxation, nor to adopt an adequate excess profits tax. Instead, many Congressmen urge cutting the exemptions on lower incomes, and imposing an inequitable federal sales tax.

4) HOUSING. Congress shows little concern for the housing needs of the families of those in the Armed Services, defense workers, and others in the lower-income group. Meanwhile, the real estate lobby is seeking to guarantee increasing profits for private builders.

Congress will not legislate on an "equality of sacrifice" basis unless people demand it clearly and forcefully Now! Continue to write to Senators and Representatives, to insist on prompt and effective action on these four issues. Tell your Senators and Representatives how inflation has hit you - how your grocery bill has risen; how increased housing costs are proving intolerable; how unfair tax burdens will hurt your family welfare.

Such letters will help win passage of an effective anti-inflation program that will help our families and will help America best defend itself.

Sincerely and fraternally,

Defense Brings Lush Days For Business, Phony Price "Freeze" For Housewives

By GERVASE N. LOVE

WASHINGTON hotels are crowded again, just as they were in the early days of the World War II defense program.

In some of them the patrons are limited to five-day stays. The restaurants, especially the better ones, are jammed. Cocktail parties are so numerous that even the free loaders get in without much question, and the character of the night club entertainment is leaning toward the more expensive side.

Business, its badge of office the brief case, is fighting another war and has come to Washington to do it. Firmly entrenched in key emergency offices, thanks to the pulling power of Economic Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, it is thronging the corridors of the buildings where his appointees hold forth.

It is in its usual pursuit of the dollar, which it doesn't find quite so elusive as the workers do. It is seeking contracts, information on priorities and allocations—or the customary 5%.

THE WORKERS, though, and the great army of the nation's consumers, have to stay home. They have no corporations to finance luxury trips to Washington. The best they can do is write letters. They're writing them, too. Mostly to Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle.

They don't like the way the so-called price "freeze" is working. They'll like it even less after what went on last week, because some of the "frozen" prices — which really should be red hot after the way they've gone up in the last few months—have been melted at the edges, and the prices of a number of foods which have not been selling at parity are going to go still higher.

Most of the consumers who write in their often bitter plaints are housewives. A lot of them blame the Truman Administration for high prices. This isn't completely fair in view of the blatantly ineffective Defense Production Act Congress passed last summer and which the President signed with the utmost reluctance.

(Item: The Dept. of Agriculture reported that the middle man in the meat industry is getting twice as much of the housewife's dollar as he did during World War II. His share on a pound of meat while OPA regulations were in force was 9.3c. The spread jumped to 22.3c by Dec. 1, when the average price per pound to the consumer was 59.1c. Where the department found meat at that price was something of a mystery. The consumer couldn't.)

DiSalle himself is refreshingly frank about the price freeze. In an interview printed in the weekly magazine, United States News and World Report, he said:

"I'd be tickled to death if by June or July we would begin to see some results of stability but I'm no optimist about what's going to happen.

"I'm in complete disagreement with some of the economists who say that maybe in five months we'll have a three-point rise. I think it's going to be more than that."

By "more than that" he said he meant 5% or 6%, "or even more."

(Item: The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that on the basis of a spot check of 50 foods in eight cities, retail food prices soared to an all-time high in the last two weeks of January —the freeze was effective as of Jan. 25—to an index figure of 221, which it said was about 8% above the pre-Korean war level.)

The Office of Price Stabilization marked Lincoln's Birthday by removing from the "freeze" sugar and all unprocessed farm products selling, at the farm, at prices below parity. These include fresh fruits and vegetables, eggs, chickens, turkeys, milk, butter fats, sugar beets, wheat, corn, oats, hay, maple syrup and sugar and some types of tobacco.

When they are in processed form, the higher price paid to the producer can be tacked on to the present prices all down the line.

(Item: The United Press made its own spot check of grocers in 26 cities across the country and found out that nine representative foods which cost an average of $7.01 last June 24, when the Communists invaded South Korea, rose to $7.87 by Jan. 25, the price "freeze" date, and to $8 in the next 19 days.)

That's nearly 15% since June 24, or about twice the BLS estimate, and—what's more important—1.7% in less than three weeks. If the rate of increase after the "freeze" were to continue for a year, it would mean a jump of about 30% in that time.

Secy. of Agriculture Brannan issued a report on "Farm Prices in the Price Control Picture." In it he denied that farmers have been given special or privileged treatment, or that agricultural commodity prices are disproportionately high. Farm prices have gone up 21% since the Korean war started, he said, compared to 138% for tin, 78% for aluminum, 50% for lead, 27% for chemicals and 32% for textiles.

If all farm prices now below the apparently unattainable parity level would reach that status, consumer food costs would jump another 5% and the over-all cost of living about 2%, he said

He didn't say that parity is based on the price of the things the farmer has to pay for what he produces, and that there often is an inter-relationship which makes it difficult, if not impossible, for parity ever to be reached. For instance, hogs, which are often referred to as "corn on feet," have been below parity. But corn also has been below parity. And when the price of corn goes up, the parity price for hogs also will go up. Sometimes it seems as if the consumer just can't win.

(Item: The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index plodded up another 4c in the week ended Feb. 13 to $7.25, highest since it reached $7.30 on July 20, 1948, and only 11c below the all-time high of $7.36 on July 13, 1948. The rise was the ninth in as many consecutive weeks. It was caused by increases in 14 of the 31 commonly used foods included in the index, which now stands 21.6% above the pre-Korean level and 23.7% higher than the $5.86 it registered a year ago.)

Housewives' letters and the problem of melting the edges of "frozen" prices weren't the only things harrying DiSalle. He was running into difficulties on enforcement of whatever ceiling prices there may be. F. Joseph Donohue, the lawyer who won conviction of Harry Bridges on a charge of perjuring himself when he swore he wasn't a Communist, resigned as chief enforcement officer when President Truman appointed him a commissioner of the District of Columbia.

DiSalle also became involved in a dispute with the Dept. of Justice over the enforcement of price edicts and the prosecution of violators. This one was settled by the intervention of Economic Stabilization Administrator Eric Johnston.

Under the plan, the OPS will nominate special attorneys to the staffs of all U.S. Attorneys in the 96 federal judicial districts. As special assistant U.S. attorneys under the Dept. of Justice, they will handle all civil and criminal cases growing out of both price and wage control violations.

(Item: The cost of living jumped 1.3% between December and January to an all-time high, the National Industrial Conference Board, an industry organization, reported on Feb. 15. Food, the major component of the index, increased 2.1% from mid-month to mid-month, the board said.)

DiSalle took one commendable step to head off a black market in meat. He froze the number of slaughterhouses at their Feb. 9 figure until April 1, and also their output. Those who do not register by Mar. 15 will have to go out of business after April 1. Hundreds of new slaughterhouses were established during World War II and did a flourishing business. So did black markets.

On Feb. 15 he took another good step, ordering many big packers to cut prices to wholesale and retail outlets by setting up local ceiling prices. Some big packers had set their ceilings for the whole U.S. at the highest they had charged in any place in the country. This resulted in some sharp post-"freeze" increases on both coasts.

So Long As It's Not Stillborn, Emil

Reporters gathered outside the offices of the Wage-Stabilization Board members on Feb. 14 to check a rumor that the board had reached agreement on a "catch-up formula" for granting wage increases.

Emil Rieve, CIO member of the board, heard the footsteps and looked out his door.

"How about the formula, Emil?" he was asked.

"The child will not be born today," Rieve said, "Stop walking up and down like expectant fathers."

Country's Burning Up Now Because Congress Fiddled Last Summer

(The following article on the Defense Production Act was written for the CIO News by a member of the staff of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research who has closely observed the workings of the law since it was passed last summer.)

IF YOU want to know one of the major reasons for rising prices, take a look at the Defense Production Act of 1950. This law was passed last summer and was supposed to curb inflationary pressures.

You don't have to be a statistician or an economist to know that it has failed as an anti-inflationary weapon. For while the expert is figuring out what happened to prices last week, the cost of food at the corner store continues to rise. Skyrocketing prices are moving upward so fast that the government's price experts are in the rear, trying hard to catch up with the changing facts.

The act has served to weaken the mobilization effort by tying the hands of the government's price stabilizers. It makes effective stabilization an impossibilty.

With the best intentions in the world, you can't hold down the rising cost of living under this law. It's so rigged as to make real price control impossible.

CIO can say—"We told you so." For CIO pointed out the weaknesses of the law when it was passed. The CIO Convention last November requested amendments to the law. But nothing was done.

NOW, IT'S apparent to all, the price control section of the law is a flop, and the consumer is getting it in the neck. Living standards of working people are being undermined.

The new Congress, which started its session about six weeks ago, has not seen the urgency of this matter. Congress has failed to do anything to make effective price controls possible.

Under the law, no ceiling below the parity price can be placed on farm products. The parity price is a sliding scale and it's sliding upward.

The prices of some 50% of the food purchases of the average family are now below parity. These prices cannot be controlled until they reach parity. So they continue to rise. And the parity price moves up, too. It's a race the consumer can't win. The buying power of the pay envelope continues to shrink week by week.

THE DEFENSE Production Act could be amended to allow food price subsidies which would permit effective controls over retail food prices and at the same time assure fair returns to the farmers. The subsidy would make up the difference between the parity support price the farmer gets and the controlled ceiling price.

That's the way they controlled food prices during World War II. It worked fairly well then. It can work again. But it can't be done under the present law.

One reason for skyrocketing prices is speculation on the commodity markets. The speculators moved in as soon as the Korean war started. Prices of 28 raw materials on the commodity exchanges jumped 12% in the first month following the Communist invasion of South Korea.

The speculation continues. Commodity prices continue upward. Yet there's nothing you can do about it under the Defense Production Act.

The CIO thinks this law should be amended to permit the government to regulate trading and margins on the commodity exchanges.

The Defense Production Act makes it impossible to impose effective grade labelling requirements. This permits manufacturers and retailers to gyp the public through the deterioration of quality.

AND IT prohibits the effective placement of quantity ceilings on higher priced items produced or sold. Already low-priced goods are disappearing. Manufacturers and merchants are shifting to high-price, high-profit materials.

Rents, which comprise about 25% of the living costs of an average family, are specifically exempt from controls under the Defense Production Act.

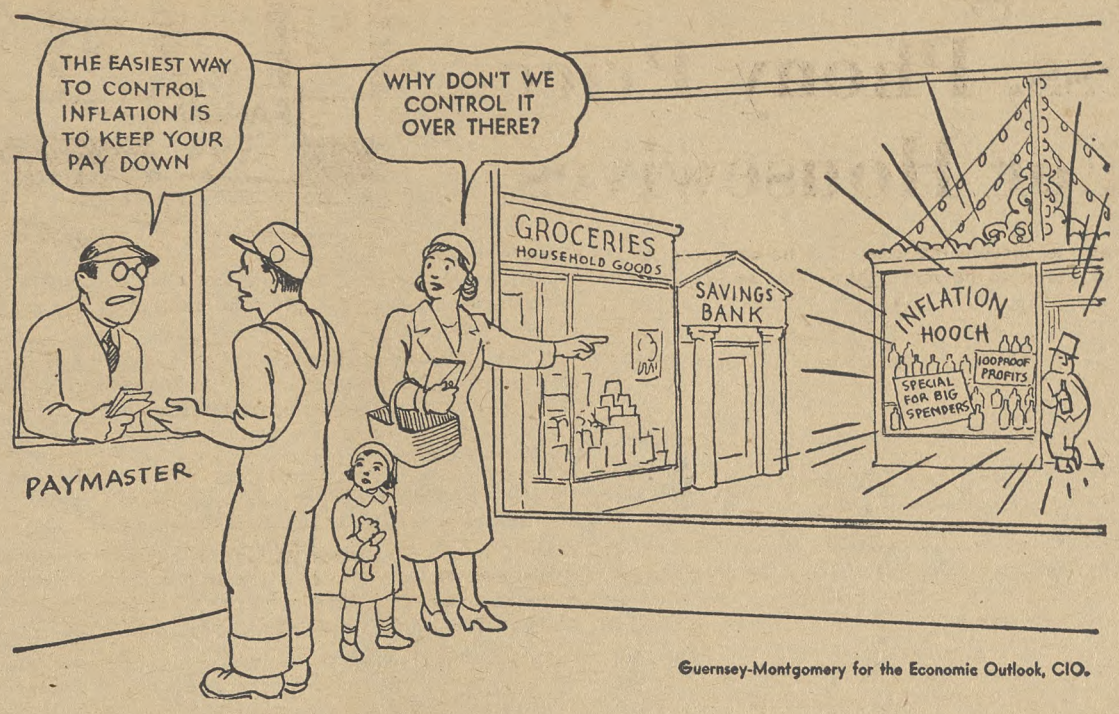
WSB Labor Members Quit Over Unfair Wage Plan

LABOR'S three members withdrew from the government's Wage Stabilization Board last week in protest against a new wage policy they described as "unfair and unworkable."

The action, which was preceded by days of debate within the Wage Stabilization Board, followed adoption—by a 6-3 vote—of a wage policy that will permit wage increases of only 10% over the pay received by a worker on Jan. 15, 1950, and will freeze present inequities.

The labor members of the board described the formula as "an attempt to do a great injustice to all Americans who work for wages and salaries."

The three union spokesmen who withdrew from the WSB were Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers Union; John Murphy, of the AFL Bricklayers; and Elmer Walker, secretary-treasurer of the AFL Machinists.



Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

IN LEAVING the board, they followed instructions from the United Labor Policy Committee, which had convened in emergency session a few hours before the final vote in the WSB.

Just before the board meeting, committee members conferred with Economic Stabilization Administrator Eric Johnston, to whom the board reports. But they failed to win a commitment from him against the formula proposed by the board's three public and three industry members.

The action came at 12:15 A.M. Friday, when the three labor members left the conference room in the government "temporary" building where the board has offices.

Another meeting of the committee was held Friday morning and it issued a lengthy statement of its reasons for opposing the wage stabilization policy and its complaints against big-business control of the defense mobilization program.

UNDER THE 10% formula adopted by the board, welfare and pension programs and other "fringe" benefits won by unions in the past would be approved, but all future fringe benefits would be counted as part of 10% "quota" to which the board's policy and industry members gave their approval.

Labor observers pointed out that the 10% allowance might rule out future productivity efficiency increases provided in many cost-of-living contracts signed by the auto union and other CIO unions.

While the board majority's formula provided that the 10% figure may be edged upward from time to time as the government's consumer price index figure rises, it would still bar satisfactory increases to hundreds of thousands of union workers.

The future of the board remained in doubt after the labor members walked out. The board was set up by President Truman as a tri-partite body and there was question whether it could continue to function with one-third of its members no longer participating.

The formula adopted by the board must be approved by Johnston. His decision was expected soon.

Several days earlier the committee had sent two letters to Defense Mobilizer C. E. Wilson. One repeated its request for appointment of a representative of organized labor to the first flight of his advisors, the second asked him to reconsider his position on the appointment of Dr. Arthur S. Flemming as chairman of an office of Defense Mobilization Manpower Policy Committee, a move which stripped Secy. of Labor Tobin of his jurisdiction over civilian manpower.

"Our committee believes that labor participation is essential to insure the effectiveness of the country's national defense effort," the first letter said.

"The appointment of a leading figure from our trade union organizations as a member of your top policy staff would immediately lead to significant and desirable strengthening of the operation of the mobilization program. Such a step would also assure the widest measure of public support and cooperation for the defense effort.

"The United Policy Committee stands ready to suggest to you the name of a trade union leader for such appointment. We can assure you that the man so selected by this committee will have the full endorsement and cooperation of every group affiliated with the United Labor Policy Committee.

"We recognize that any individual so selected from the ranks of labor would of course serve the broad public interest. In such a position, he would be able to bring the weight of his experience, skill and union background to the complex problems now facing the nation.

"We believe the appointment of a leader of American labor to such a position is long overdue."

Wilson made no move to satisfy the committee in either instance.

However, Pres. George M. Harrison, of the AFL Railway Clerks, a member of the committee, the next day was named special assistant to Economic Stabilization Administrator Eric Johnston. In a letter to the board of his union, Harrison wrote he accepted the appointment in the belief he could speak effectively for organized labor in vital economic matters, and would continue to press for larger roles for union spokesmen in the defense setup.

Rubber Workers Win 17c At Miss. Plant

The CIO Rubber Workers and the Armstrong Tire & Rubber Co. plant at Natchez, Miss., have negotiated a new contract giving 800 workers wage increases up to 17c an hour.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said tentative agreement was reached late last month between Local 303 and the company, and that the contract, first negotiated by the union since the wage freeze, would be signed last week. Incentive workers will receive 12c an hour, with hourly-rated employes getting the higher amounts. The increases, which are retroactive to Dec. 1, will raise the plant average wage to more than $2 an hour.

3000 See Medal Given Parents Of Negro Hero

Nearly 3000 persons, white and Negro, crowded the auditorium of Booker T. Washington High School at Memphis, Tenn., recently to witness posthumous presentation of the Distinguished Service Cross to the late Pvt. Edward O. Cleaborn, 18, killed in Korea.

A Negro, Cleaborn single-handed held a ridge last Aug. 15 while members of his platoon, including wounded, escaped entrapment by Communist machine guns and almost certain death. Before being killed himself, Cleaborn wiped out the enemy crews.

Lt. Gen. John R. Hodge presented the DSC to the parents, Everett and Florence Cleaborn,

Petty Role In Defense Irks Labor

AMERICAN labor last week voiced its deep discontent with the operations of the nation's mobilization program.

The United Labor Policy Committee—representing CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and the Machinists—charged that:

1. No real effort has been made to hold down the cost of living.

2. Only wages are facing sharp controls—while prices, rents, taxes and other economic factors are being given little real attention.

3. Big business has taken over the operation of the defense program; no adequate voice for labor—or any other public group—has been provided.

The Policy Committee gave full endorsement to the withdrawal of labor spokesmen on the Wage Stabilization Board.

Its statement — supported by each group on the committee—warned that "loopholes and deficiencies" in the Defense Production Act "rule out any chance of its effectiveness as a barrier to inflation.

"The Act must be changed," it said.

NOTING THAT prices were "frozen" at the highest level in history, the committee added: "The Price Stabilization Program is a cynical hoax on the American people."

The committee declared the formula—permitting increases of only 10% over the level of Jan. 15, 1950, and doing nothing to remedy basic inequities—"was dictated by the director of the Office of Defense Mobilization," Charles E. Wilson.

It added that the proposal presented to the labor members of the board had already been shown to the three industry members.

"From the beginning, the major effort of the public members has been directed at winning the approval of industry representatives in complete disregard of the interests of labor," members said.

THE FORMULA, they added, "fails to consider the serious and legitimate economic needs of America's wage earners . . . It is, in fact, a series of penalties and restrictions—imposed at a time when prices are continuing their upward rise.

"The wage formula is inflexible, inequitable and unworkable . . ."

And, the unions said, it threatens thousands of present union-company contracts.

Labor's departure from the Wage Board, the statement said, was not an isolated incident—but the wage formula "culminated a whole series of shocking developments which we consider insupportable."

The statement cited an unfair tax program, placing heavier burdens on low income families; failure to move for extension of rent control; the loophole-ridden price control law; the failure to give labor participation in top defense agencies; the neglect of small business in awarding of defense contracts, and the recent switch of manpower policy direction from the Dept. of Labor to Wilson's Office of Defense Mobilization.

'Withdrawal Of Labor Representatives Calls Public Attention To The Dangers'

The following is the introduction of a statement by the United Labor Policy Committee on the withdrawl of the labor members from the Wage Stabilization Board:

There is no group in America more alert to the dangers of Communist aggression against the free world than the 15 million American wage earners we represent. There is no mass group in the nation more definitely committed to all-out resistance against Communism than the members of our free trade union movement.

We have offered our full support to the defense program. We have accepted in advance our responsibility for making all necessary sacrifices. We have willingly volunteered to bear our fair share of the burden because our hearts are in this fight.

From the very beginning of the national emergency, American labor has led the fight for effective control of the cost of living and other measures necessary to insure economic stabilization.

We had hoped that our Government would take advantage of our earnest determination to cooperate to the fullest extent in advancing the national defense program. Instead, our offers of cooperation have been rejected.

This is not a question of an isolated incident. Our decision here cannot and must not be interpreted merely as a protest against an unfair and unworkable wage formula which is now being imposed. That formula culminated a whole series of shocking developments which we find insupportable.

These developments add up to nothing less than a crisis in our defense mobilization program.

That crisis must be quickly resolved if America's mobilization program is to move ahead with the speed which our national skills, techniques and resources make possible.

The crisis has developed because the men who are in control of the mobilization program have ignored the necessity for "equality of sacrifice" by all the people. Only through such equality of sacrifice can we fully and effectively win the voluntary cooperation and the intense will to win of every American citizen.

The unworkable and unfair wage formula adopted by the Wage Stabilization Board is both a symbol and a symptom of this crisis in our domestic affairs.

It is a symptom of unconcern for the needs and welfare of the plain people of this country. It is a symbol of ill-considered action, lacking an understanding of the problems and viewpoints of wage earners.

The withdrawal of the labor representatives on the Wage Stabilization Board did not create the crisis; it merely called public attention to the dangers which confront us.

That problem affects not only wages but prices, taxes, rent control, manpower and housing, and the general management of the defense program.

It Isn't Equitable And It Isn't Fair

Labor Has Justifiable Complaints Against Stabilization Program And Proposals For New And Higher Federal 'Mobilization' Taxes

By ALLAN L. SWIM

LABOR HAS been taking a pushing-around since the war started in Korea late last June.

It was penny stuff at first—a penny more for this item and a penny more for that. Soon it was a nickel more—then a dime—then a quarter.

Before long the average worker was beginning to feel the pinch. The grocery bill was a dollar or two more a week. Clothing cost more. The rent was higher.

Profits rose as prices increased. In some cases they skyrocketed.

Labor began saying that something should be done about the situation—something that would prevent inflation.

President Truman asked for authority to stabilize the economy—and Congress enacted legislation.

But the legislation was poorly drawn and it wasn't designed to give wage earners an even break.

Many persons didn't realize until after prices and wages were "frozen" that the "freeze" wouldn't halt the increase in the cost of living.

It wouldn't halt the increase because the cost of two important items—food and rent—weren't frozen tight.

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO's Committee on Economic Policy, summed the matter up this way:

"The first steps toward stabilization have been . . . haphazard, inequitable and half-hearted. An over-all approach to the problem, based on equality of sacrifice, is still lacking.

". . . No effective action has been taken to control the two main items in the cost of living—food prices and rents. Without such controls, there can be no stabilization program worthy of the name."

THEN THERE'S the matter of taxation, which should be causing every wage earner much concern.

Rieve, in testimony presented to the Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report, declared that our present tax program goes contrary to the principal that "taxes should bear heaviest on individuals with high incomes and corporations with large profits."

Low-income families, he said, are now paying taxes at the World War II rate but high-profit corporations and persons with large incomes aren't.

And Rieve charged that "the President's recent proposals would continue this inequitable policy."

What he means was, simply, that the administration's proposals for increased taxes would place the heaviest burden on those least able economically to bear it—on those with low incomes.

THERE'S ANOTHER matter, too, which relates directly to the well being of wage earners.

It's a matter of representation on the various agencies set up to handle the nation's mobilization and stabilization programs.

Labor's position, stated months ago, was that every important segment of our population should have a voice in making the policy decisions that would determine how these agencies operated.

Up to now, however, the show has been run largely by those with a "big business" viewpoint.

And labor isn't the only group complaining about this. Representatives of small business have charged that those for whom they speak have been taking a shoving-around.

LABOR GROUPS in various parts of the country are beginning to complain—and complain bitterly—about what has been happening.

They are not squawking because they haven't been able to lap up "economic gravy" like some of the big corporations.

They aren't complaining because the world situation is going to mean greater hardships for wage earners.

Their complaint—a justified one—is that there has not been equality of sacrifice up to this point and that there is nothing specific "in the works" which would provide such equality.

THE 'GREAT DEBATE'

One of history's great word battles is now going on but—frankly—we can't tell just yet who's winning and who's losing.

Furthermore, we can't tell exactly who's lined up behind whom and why.

It's all very confusing.

Take, for example, the case of Herbert Hoover and those who are preaching what used to be known as "isolationism." Well, it isn't isolationism now—or so they say. But they don't say exactly what it is.

Then take the case of Robert A. Taft. In several speeches he has appeared to agree with several leaders who express opposing views. Every time we figure we know where he stands he moves.

Yes, very confusing.

But a couple of things appear to be clear:

The Republican Party is badly split over foreign affairs and has no clear-cut policy regarding what we should do overseas.

The longer the debate goes on the more confused our allies will become—and that's not good.

It might be worth pointing out here that Secy. Dean Acheson must be getting a bit of personal satisfaction out of hearing the GOP big-wigs throw verbal brickbats at each other.

But Acheson must also be a bit perturbed by the silence of Democratic leaders.

Perhaps it's amusing but it isn't funny—not really.

Men chosen to lead us through a real emergency have listened to a lot of advice—both good and bad—from their colleagues and from political figures outside Congress.

It's time for them to get together behind a policy which represents the majority and is designed to carry us through future difficulties.

TALK VERY GOOD, BUT—

Don't misunderstand us, please. We think wide discussion of important issues is necessary—but there comes a time when action must be substituted for talk if we're to make any progress.

And we've reached that point.

Nothing which has happened around Washington during the "great debate" has indicated Congress will make any radical changes in the Truman foreign policy.

There has been no indication that Congress will go along with the idea that we should not work closely with the democratic countries of the world in the campaign against the spread of communism.

But indications are not enough for our allies. They deserve to know whether we are planning a shift in policy. They deserve to know the exact direction in foreign affairs that we intend to take.

We're a partner in a gigantic undertaking. We have made commitments. We have given indications that we're going to be a full participant in the team fighting the Reds.

So it seems to us that Congress can ill afford to let talk go on and on without taking specific action which will show everybody the road we intend to travel.

Taft 'Labor Leader' Shows True Colors

THE TOP management official who operates the so-called "Labor League for Taft," J. Eugene Carr, provided fresh evidence last week that the Taft outfit was a phony.

Two weeks ago, the Ohio CIO Council exposed Carr's connections with the Taft front group and the "fraud it had perpetrated on the people of Ohio."

Until that time, the "Labor League for Taft" had operated under the guise of being a legitimate organization of labor people backing the candidacy of Senator Taft.

In its expose, the Ohio CIO revealed that Carr, self-styled top organizer for the Taft Labor League, was in reality a high management official for the Brush-Moore Newspapers, Inc., which owns a string of Ohio daily newspapers.

The Ohio CIO also revealed the sums given by the Taft Labor League to people carrying union membership cards who had allowed their names to be used by the Taft outfit.

LAST WEEK, Carr was back in the news, this time as a big-wig in the Canton Chamber of Commerce, which he served as president for two years.

Presently Carr is chairman of the Canton Chamber of Commerce national affairs committee. In that capacity he has reorganized a "Committee of One Hundred" from the Chamber of Commerce. This committee is charged with writing regular letters to U. S. senators and representatives, attempting to influence their thinking along conservative lines.

At the same time, Carr let the Canton Advertising Club in on the secrets of the huge propaganda campaign conducted by the Taft forces during the last campaign.

In a nutshell, Carr's speech to the professional advertisers disclosed how the Taft propaganda was sold just like industry sells soap.

According to the Canton Repository, owned by the Brush-Moore chain which Carr serves as Director of Radio, he revealed that the Taft "sales organization" had been set up 22 months before election day.

GOP, Look Again At Lincoln

Another Lincoln's Birthday has come and gone amid the usual oratory. Some facts about the Civil War President that either were glossed over or not mentioned in the hundreds of speeches were pointed up in a radio script prepared by the Ohio CIO Council Radio Dept., excerpts from which follow:

LINCOLN, who was the first successful presidential candidate of the Republican Party, started his political career as a member of a party now long since dead. He had been a Whig, and he bluntly and forthrightly pointed out why he had changed his party affiliation.

He became a Republican, he said, because "Republicans are for both the man and the dollar, but in case of conflict, the man before the dollar."

I seriously doubt that anyone would truthfully make that statement about the party today. For, in the intervening years, it has come to reflect almost entirely the thinking of those who do place the dollar before the man.

* * *

What about labor activity in the political field? Well, Lincoln had some words to say on that subject, too.

Speaking of workers, he said, "Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the door of advancement against such as they and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon them, till all liberty shall be lost."

Can you picture the man who spoke those words condoning those who wear his party label today when they seek to bar labor unions from the political arena?

Can you picture this man saying that the entry of labor organizations into political campaigns is evil . . . that it means workers are trying to seize control of their government? Can you imagine Mr. Lincoln saying that?

* * *

He was a man who hated war . . . hated it vehemently. But he also knew that even war was preferable to a loss of freedom . . . and he risked war because he was convinced this nation could not permanently endure half slave and half free.

Can you imagine him heeding the counsel of despair and the counsel of fear, being voiced by some present-day leaders of his party? Can you see him saying to the rest of the world:

"We are so afraid of war that we don't care what happens to you. We don't care if this world becomes half slave. We'll only take care of ourselves."

No, I don't think Abraham Lincoln would have stood in that camp today. The man who was certain a house divided against itself must fall, would certainly not allow the other free peoples of the world to march into the bondage of slavery while he huddled fearfully in some dark corner.

She Put Blame On Her Brother's Union

AN ATTRACTIVE young woman strolled into the CIO News office one day and was ushered into the office of one of the editors.

She gave her name, told about the organization she represented and said she'd like to have the CIO News among her clients.

The editor said he doubted that he could use the service her organization supplied —and he stuck to his point even when she turned on her charm.

She soon realized that charm alone wouldn't work, so she decided to display her knowledge of unions.

Names of important union people rolled off her tongue rapidly but the editor got the impression that she knew none of them.

AFTER LISTENING politely for a few minutes, the editor asked rather bluntly, "Do you really know anything about unions as a result of your own personal contact with them?"

She hesitated, then replied, "Well, I've never belonged to a union but my brother did once and what happened to him has always made me wonder whether unions are really any good."

"That's interesting," said the editor. "Suppose you tell me the story."

She began by telling of the low pay and bad working conditions on a certain large newspaper for which her brother went to work after finishing college.

"He had an awful time even getting them to give him a job—and then he had to work three weeks for nothing just to make sure he had the stuff required for a reporter," she said.

"He worked for about three months for $18 a week and then he was raised to $20."

THE YOUNG woman then told how her brother, after several years, worked himself up to a job that paid $25 weekly.

"He was pretty fed up by that time—and, so, when he heard about the Newspaper Guild being formed he got interested," she said.

"He made a couple of trips to other towns to talk with reporters who were setting up the Guild and went back home convinced he and his colleagues should have a union.

"He started talking up the idea with the fellows on his paper and a couple of them seemed interested. Most of them said he'd better be careful or he'd get in trouble.

"He went right on plugging for the Guild.

"One day his city editor called him aside and told him he was 'heading for trouble' unless he quit trying to establish a union."

THIS THREAT, the young woman said, made her brother more determined than ever to establish a local newspaper workers' union.

"He got about half the fellows signed up and then the managing editor started putting on the pressure," she said.

"Still my brother didn't stop.

"Then one payday there was a discharge slip in his pay envelope. He was fired without explanation but he knew why."

Her brother, she said, did everything he could to get reinstated but failed.

"He appealed to national Guild headquarters but they couldn't get his job back either although they tried."

From that time on, she added, she had been skeptical of unions—"and I don't think they're any good when they let members get fired like my brother was."

"Don't you blame the newspaper for firing him?" the editor asked.

"No!" she snapped. "An employer has a right to fire anybody who makes trouble. I couldn't convince my brother of that and I don't suppose I can convince you either."

A few minutes later the young woman, who said she knew "a lot about unions," left the editor's office without having made a sale.

'From Gallery Wall Stalin Looks Down On Us'

The following story was printed in the Arbeiter Zeitung, principal Social Democratic newspaper of Austria. It was written by a Hungarian coal miner and tells how he made himself into a Stachanovite worker by challenging a stronger miner, called Karli, to a working contest. Originally published in the daily Szabad Nep, Hungarian Communist Party organ, it illustrates the absurdity of Communist claims to good working conditions.

EVEN the very first day was hard. I recognized that I mostly used only my two arms; my shoulder blades, the small of my back, and my legs had no sufficient share in my work. I changed my position. I chose a higher place for my feet, and from above I urged the whole weight of my body on to the work.

I was content, but only until the evening. I had figured I should outdo Karli on the very first day, but it came out different. His was the greater achievement. I learned that he, too, had altered his working method. In turn, he put more stress on the right arm, then on the left.

On the following day I tried out something new. I did not change the previous day's position of my body, but I had another idea. Formerly I used to take five minutes' rest after every hour of severe effort. When I felt my muscles growing tired, I smoked a cigarette and then, after this rest, I worked on for another hour until I was again tired out.

Having once been a long-distance runner, I knew that after some time one gets so tired that one thinks it impossible to go on. The heart is thumping, the lungs are near bursting, and the legs are filled with lead. But if one forces oneself to go on, the exhaustion gradually disappears, and one can run on for an unlimited period.

I now tried to utilize this experience. It was hard. My arms were dropping with fatigue, and the sweat dropped from my face. But I did not stop working, for all that. The cigarette be damned.

My satisfaction only lasted until evening. Karli had again been victorious. The next day I resolved further to increase my speed. I felt disgruntled.

I went home with old Varju. On the way I told him everything. The old man walked along in silence. I began to think that he had not listened to me at all. Then he said abruptly:

"Who is looking at you from the wall?"

"From what wall?" I asked, not having understood him.

"From the gallery wall. Where you are working. You know very well what I mean. Somebody always looks down on the pickman from the wall of the gallery."

What the old man says is true, indeed. Don't think that the black coal wall in front of the miner is a dull, smooth sheet. The pickman, when looking up during his work, sees many things there. I often saw my mother's image there. She was looking down calmly, observant of my work. But now I no longer saw her, but Karli. But—damn—how did old Varju know? I had never told him.

I OFFERED to shake hands with him when I left him, but he did not take my hand. "Come along with me," he invited me to his lodgings. "Sit down at the table; just wait, I am going to show you something."

He fumbled in the table drawer, then his hand reappeared with a red book. It was the life-story of Stalin.

"Have you read this?" asked old Varju.

"Yes."

"Did you understand it?"

"Surely."

"It is him you must bear in mind. He has been victorious, not with his physical strength, but with his will power. Somebody is always looking down at the pickman from the gallery wall. That is no invention of yours. He, and nobody else is to look at you there. He loves you, he loves us all. You will see you will get on wonderfully with your work."

That night I never slept a wink. Until morning, I read Stalin's life-story. But the following morning, when I went to work, I was neither sleepy nor tired. We started working. From the gallery wall he was looking down at us. He stood there upright in his blue uniform, as I had seen him in so many pictures.

When I got tired, he remonstrated with me. If the work was progressing well at high speed, he said nothing but was just looking on. His smiling face showed me his great love for us and his joy at seeing us working.

IN THE WORKING contest, I was victorious. Then Karli asked me at the Cultural House to let him in on the secret of my working method. I told him everything, down to the merest trifle.

"And there is one other thing," I told him. I turned to the wall, to the image of Stalin. "Think of him when you are working.

"HE is to look down at you from the wall of the gallery . . . Surely, his work was harder than ours is."

In this way both Karli and I became Stachanov adherents.

(In spite of the hectic working rage in the Communist story, there still is a coal crisis in Hungary, pointed out Arbeiter Zeitung.)

Unions Get 75% Of Votes In NLRB Polls

THREE OUT OF four workers who voted in National Labor Relations Board representation elections during the final quarter of 1950 cast their votes for a union.

The NLRB quarterly summary shows that 1648 elections were held involving 168,717 employes—89% of whom voted. Of the resulting 150,010 valid votes, 74.2%, or 111,364, cast their ballots for union representation. The AFL won 635 out of 970 elections, the CIO 334 out of 544 and independents 228 out of 380.

The board has been handing down decisions at the rate of 12 a day, 60 a week, a total of 790 for the quarter. It managed to cut the number of cases pending at the quarter's end to 407, compared to 425 at the end of September.

IN UNION shop authorization votes, a majority of employes in 96.8%, or 1489 of 1540 elections, voted for unions. Of the total, 723 were won by AFL affiliates, 539 by CIO unions, and 227 by independents.

There were 1280 charges of unfair labor practice filed in the period; 257 by individuals, 384 by AFL, 230 by CIO, and 153 by independents. Employers filed 83 suits against unions, individuals filed 143; the AFL and the CIO both filed 11 times against other unions, and independents filed six times.

The board need not worry about work for the future—6463 cases are pending disposition at various levels. Unfair labor practices account for 3111 cases and elections for the remaining 3352.

Congressional Equality Asked

CHAIRMAN Celler (D. N. Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee has introduced a measure which would guarantee each U. S. citizen equal representation in Congress—and it's political dynamite.

The bill simply says that the Clerk of the House would refuse to give the oath of office to anyone elected from a district not conforming to census-based standards of fair representation and not composed of "contiguous and compact" territory. (Congress can't draw up new districts, but it can set standards.)

If it becomes law, a lot of familiar faces will be missing from the next Congress, unless the state legislatures get busy and redistrict according to proposed federal standards. The bill embodies, in rough form, the recommendations recently made by President Truman.

It may come as a surprise to a lot of people that Congress should be asked to pass a law carrying out what the Constitution clearly intended—and yet here are a few of the facts about the size of present House districts which led the President to make the proposals:

The variation in population between the largest and smallest districts in 24 states exceeds 200,000; in 12 of these, 300,000; in six of these, 400,000. The extreme example is the contrast between the second district of South Dakota, with 148,147 persons, and the 22nd district of Ohio, with 903,403. The Ohio representative (Mrs. Frances Bolton, R.) thus represents 750,256 more persons than the South Dakota representative.

3 Proposed Columbia River Valley Dams Would Endanger Salmon Runs, Says CIO

STRENUOUS objection to construction of three proposed dams in the Columbia River Valley was registered last week by the CIO on the ground that they would destroy some migratory fish resources and damage others.

The objections were registered by the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation in a letter signed by Allan S. Haywood, committee chairman and CIO vice president, to Clifford B. McManus, administrator of the Defense Electric Power Administration.

The letter applied to the Dalles Dam at Celillo Falls on the Columbia not far above Bonneville Dam, Priest Rapids Dam on the Columbia above its confluence with the Snake River, and the Ice Harbor Dam on the Snake just above the point where it meets the Columbia. The effect of the proposed Priest Rapids Dam should be the worst, the CIO said.

HAYWOOD pointed out that the CIO is greatly interested in the development of hydropower resources, but considers that "such development must take place within the framework of a sound regional plan and with respect not only for the other resources of the region, but above all for the welfare of the people who live there and make productive use of those resources."

"In the Columbia Basin we have insisted that the hydroelectric potential be developed at a pace and in a manner which will make it possible to preserve the migratory fish resources which are of fundamental importance in the economy of the Pacific Northwest," he wrote.

"The government has invested millions of dollars in re-establishing on the Columbia River, above its confluence with the Snake, the salmon runs which formerly originated north of Grand Coulee Dam. The only place in the entire Pacific Northwest where blue-back salmon can be produced is in the lakes and at the hatcheries on the eastern slopes of the Cascade Mountains in this area.

"The construction of the Priest Rapids Dam as presently planned, or in anything like its present elevation, will cut off these runs again, and unquestionably destroy them."

Construction of the other two dams, in addition to McNary Dam, under construction on the Columbia just below the Snake, Haywood wrote, "will go a long way toward the extermination of the salmon resources on the middle Columbia River, and on the Snake." As an alternative, Haywood advanced suggestions contained in the committee's pamphlet, CVA: An Over-all Plan for the Valley.

"IT SEEMS to us," he wrote, "to be absolutely inexcusable to endanger an entire industry, the life of whole communities, the jobs of thousands of men, and an important resource, by failing to undertake the necessary scientific investigations and make suitable investments in fish ladders and other protective devices when construction is undertaken.

"WE BELIEVE that the government should have clearly in mind the fact that Communist agitators are using the argument among workers in the fishing industry that the government is going ahead with this construction on the Columbia River and its tributaries without regard to the interests of the people who earn their living in the fishing industry, and without regard to the welfare of the people in the region who are dependent on that industry and on the fish resources.

"Any public policy which plays into the hands of this kind of agitation is poorly conceived, particularly so when a little foresight and sound planning would make it possible to protect the working people involved, and at the same time provide electric power for defense and peace-time purposes."

We're Near Bottom Of Barrel—Chapman

The bottom of this country's barrel of natural resources is in sight Secy. of the Interior Chapman warned last week.

Recalling that the country grew strong by exploiting these resources, he maintained that their use in view of increased defense demands must be careful, if we are to retain our position of world leadership.

"These resources up to now have met our major needs in peace and war," he said. "But we can never again afford to gorge and waste. Our remaining resources can serve most of our needs adequately, but only if we direct their development and exploitation wisely."

Need Is Seen For Water Resources Plan

The federal government has no over-all policy covering comprehensive development of water and land resources, the Water Resources Policy Commission advised President Truman last week in the third volume of its report, which analyzed water resources law.

The volume discussed constitutional bases for federal action in the field of water resources and surveyed the law relating to navigation, flood control, irrigation, hydro-electric development, related land uses and other public purposes.

It points out that some statutes of national application separately control various phases of water resources development, while others approach the problem comprehensively but focus attention on individual projects, specific areas or single rivers, but that an over-all policy has never been drawn up.

D. C. Schools Alter Policy On Speakers

THE DISTRICT of Columbia Board of Education, which decides what shall be fed into the eager but segregated minds of voteless Washington's school children, has taken its courage into its two hands.

It has decided it won't just turn down speakers because they are listed in the House Unamerican Activities Committee's unevaluated files.

The board, or rather its superintendent, Dr. Hobart M. Corning, discovered belatedly that the committee files contain the names of about one million persons, and that the committee itself attaches no significance to the mere existence of a name in its files.

UNTIL RECENTLY, Corning has been quietly turning down anyone whose name appears in the files. That such a policy could ever have been adopted at all is tribute to the hysteria that has gripped the nation's capital. It started four years ago when a lady of Russian background gave a simple high school assembly talk explaining what it was like behind the Iron Curtain.

Four adolescent girls decided the lady had not damned her homeland loudly enough, and paraded up to Capitol Hill to complain to the Unamerican Committee. The students basked in the resulting publicity, and Corning apparently got scared.

What caused the change of heart after all this time was that Corning finally made the inevitable blunder—he refused to clear two well known and unquestionably patriotic persons who had been invited to make school addresses, and who, unlike many others similarly refused, decided to protest. One was newspaper columnist Marquis Childs, and the other novelist Pearl Buck. When the two announced that Corning had turned them down, a fury of protest was aroused, and even the hyper-sensitive Unamerican Committee hastened to assure Corning that the listings meant nothing in themselves.

TYPICAL of the letters received by Corning was one from the Rev. A. Powell Davies, pastor of All Souls Unitarian Church in Washington, who had been cleared as a speaker himself. He said:

"This is so preposterous an exclusion that it reduces your clearance system—which already was bordering on the ridiculous—to complete absurdity. Mr. Childs is a forthright, vigorous, and highly intelligent champion of democracy. To doubt his patriotism is not merely fantastic: It is thoroughly alarming.

"The present cowardly hysteria, which the Communists have succeeded in producing in this country, is scoring victory after victory. How much further is this thing going to go before we call a halt and find the courage to restore our democratic values?"

So now, a committee of school officers will pass on each prospective speaker, consulting the Unamerican Committee only if there is "uncertainty and doubt." A listing in the files will "not in itself be regarded as sufficient reason for preventing a person from speaking." And "if a person is well known and favorably regarded there will be no necessity to check with the files." And "if references are found in the files, they will be related in importance with other known facts about the individual."

CIO Locals, Councils Tackle Legislation

LOCAL AND state CIO councils and many local unions were busy last week lining up support or opposition to new bills dropped in the hoppers of state legislatures in all parts of the country. Among bills of interest to organized labor being considered in 23 states are those outlined below.

Arizona—One bill would take control of the Workmen's Compensation Fund away from the State Industrial Commission, give it to a new five-man board. Another would allow "merit rating" so that employers with better industrial safety records would pay less to the compensation fund.

Arkansas—The words "any employer" would be inserted in the 1943 anti-violence law which is aimed at threats and force during strikes. Labor alone has been subject to the law.

California—The State Dept. of Industrial Relations is backing a bill to raise state minimum wage for women to 80c an hour. A department survey recently showed a single working girl needs $2003.98 to get along.

Delaware—The House has passed and sent to the Senate bills raising the unemployment compensation maximum from $25 to $30 and the minimum from $8 to $15. Another bill would set up a State Dept. of Labor and Industry to mediate differences between labor and management and develop a code to cover industrial accidents and diseases.

Georgia—Three representatives jointly introduced utility anti-strike proposals which would empower the Governor to seize any public utility during a strike or lockout. There are three bills directed at Atlanta's two daily newspapers, always critical of Gov. Herman Talmadge (and his father, Ol' Gene, before him), which would make the newspapers "subject to regulation by the State."

A bill was introduced to turn state-owned schools over to private operation if courts rule Negroes must be admitted to them. The private owners could then legally exclude Negroes.

Idaho—A child labor code is sought in a bill which would bar mines, smelters, foundries and other hazardous types of work to those under 18. None under 16 could be employed in regular factories or bowling alleys, and those between 12 and 14 would only be allowed to work during school vacation as messengers in stores and offices.

Illinois—A fair employment practices bill, similar to proposals unsuccessfully introduced in every regular session of the Legislature since 1943, has the backing of 25 representatives.

Indiana—Repeal of the public utility anti-strike law is asked in a bill which would substitute voluntary arbitration.

Kansas—Maximum weekly workmen's compensation benefits would go from $20 to $30 under proposals which would also write new definitions of permanent injury. A compromise of $25 may be passed.

Maryland—Big news here was the record $159 million budget proposed by Gov. McKeldin, newly elected Republican. Weary voters looked with a bleary eye at the figures and wondered about McKendin's charges that Democrats had been spending too much.

Massachusetts—The State Federation of Labor has begun a fight against bills which seek to make workers pay up to half the unemployment tax.

Missouri—An FEPC bill to prevent racial and religious discrimination in public and private employment has been introduced. A House committee has approved a bill enabling St. Louis to levy a tax on earnings of ½ of 1%.

Montana—The House has unanimously passed a bill setting up a "second injury" fund. The fund helps encourage the employment of disabled persons by protecting the employer against additional payments to disabled workers who are injured a second time.

New Jersey—Gov. Driscoll (R.) has sent a $180 million budget to the Legislature, but has not asked a tax increase. Driscoll has also asked the setting aside of a reserve fund for wage increases for state employes when the uncertainty of the Federal Wage Stabilization law is cleared up.

New York—A test vote on rents apparently assured passage of a 15% rent boost. A tax of one or two cents has been proposed on colored margarine and the AFL won its point on civil defense by getting conscription provisions toned down. The CIO also clashed with Dewey on unemployment compensation plans with the Governor plugging for a "merit rating" plan.

North Dakota—The Senate passed and sent to the House a bill increasing maximum workmen's compensation benefits from $20 to $25 a week. Five dollars additional would be paid for a wife and $2 for each child up to six.

Ohio—A bill would make unemployment benefits $35 instead of $25, increase benefits from 26 to 32 weeks, make those not directly involved in a labor dispute eligible, and raise dependency allowances from $2.50 to $3 a week.

Pennsylvania—An FEPC commission of three members would be created by a bill introduced in the House. It would apply to all companies employing more than six people and provide fines up to $1000 for violation. AFL, CIO and UMW officials are opposing the death penalty in a proposed sabotage law as "too extreme.

Tennessee—The Joint Labor Legislative Council, representing the CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods, is supporting a measure to legalize the union shop and repeal an open shop law.

Other measures supported would provide compulsory time off without pay for voting, a referendum on a limited constitutional convention, uniform voting hours at all polling places, permanent prepayment of poll tax for all veterans, and permanent registration.

Vermont—A bill was introduced to broaden the state unemployment compensation law to include employers of one or more persons. Now the figure is eight.

West Virginia—An anti-injunction bill, patterned after the Norris-LaGuardia Act, is in the House. It would limit the jurisdiction of courts and forbid courts to issue injunctions without an open hearing.

Wisconsin—Democrats promised amendments to the public utility anti-strike law, but Sen. Casimir Kendziorski, Milwaukee Democrat, has introduced a bill asking repeal.

Wyoming—A wage-hour act, which would have provided a minimum wage of 75c and overtime after eight hours in a day, has been defeated. LPA

Senate Labor Group Blasts Bell System, Cities Service

A CIO UNION, the Communications Workers, has maintained for years that poor labor-management relations exist in the Bell Telephone System and that associated Bell companies have no real authority to bargain with the union.

The Senate Labor and Public Affairs Committee said substantially the same thing in a blistering 62-page report it issued last week covering an inquiry last year into Bell's employe relations.

The committee not only termed the relations "bad," but said they "appear to be getting worse." Strikes and threats of strikes are becoming more frequent, it added.

It recommended that the parent American Telephone & Telegraph Co., instead of its local affiliates, bargain with CWA "on national issues such as wages and pensions which extend beyond any departmental or associated company bargaining unit."

THAT HAD BEEN the chief recommendation of an earlier 34-page report prepared by a subcommittee and adopted as its own by a majority of the full Labor Committee. A minority report is being prepared by Sen. Taft (R. O.).

The Democratic majority of the full committee also recommended repeal of several provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. One was the so-called "free speech" section which permits employers to hold "captive audience" sessions.

Another would "eliminate the present loophole through which collective bargaining requirements are being circumvented."

A third recommended change, suggested by CWA during the hearings last year, would re-define the term "employer" to include any person who controls the labor policies of a company through stock ownership.

THE CLAIM OF Bell management that affiliated companies are independent of AT&T was dismissed by the committee.

"The basic cause for bad labor-management relations in the Bell System revolves around the collective bargaining process and the inability of unions to bargain at a level of management which possesses the responsibility and authority to make final decisions," the report said.

In further criticism of Bell's methods of bargaining, the report stated:

"One of the greatest contributing factors to the existence of bad labor-management relations was shown at the hearings to be frustration that has resulted on the part of the union from the long drawn-out bargaining sessions that now take place in the system.

"Management negotiators will confer and discuss union demands for months without getting down to serious bargaining."

IT WAS POINTED OUT that before the Taft-Hartley Act was passed, the National Labor Relations Board could investigate these situations and determine whether the parties were bargaining in good faith. But under Section 8 (d) of T-H, neither party has to make any concession during bargaining sessions.

"The result," the report continued, "is that employers such as the Bell System management are taking advantage of the provisions of Section 8 (d) to come to the bargaining conference without any intention of actually participating, but rather merely to satisfy the formalities of the Act by being present."

Regarding the structure of the Bell System itself, the committee found that AT&T gives "active support, suggestion and advice to its subsidiaries," all of which are equivalent to a command.

THIS SENSITIVENESS to AT&T suggestion and advice takes on particular significance in the administration of licensed contracts which AT&T has with each of the operating associated companies, according to the committee.

"These contracts serve as the medium through which AT&T ties together the Bell System into one complete operating whole," it declared.

The story of Bell's fight against the development of an integrated national union within the industry was outlined at length by the committee.

"With each step CWA has taken to strengthen its internal structure the struggle between the union and the Bell System management has become more intensified," it said.

In regard to the wage level problem in the industry, the report said the Bell System "has demonstrated that while the community wage level theory may have been adopted by the Bell System companies as their basic wage policy, that policy has not been actively applied since at least prior to World War II, and in view of the nature of the wage structure, could not be applied without seriously disrupting the present balance of that structure."

IN ANOTHER subcommittee report, the term "shocking" was used to describe the four-year war waged by the marine division of the Cities Service Oil Corp. of Pennsylvania to keep the AFL Seafarers Union off its tankers.

Nine of the 13 members of the full Labor Committee subsequently approved the report, which condemned the company for its campaign to prevent the AFL union from organizing the firm's East Coast tanker fleet in the late 40's.

As a result of its survey of the Cities Service Co.'s relations with the SIU, the subcommittee said it believes further investigation should be made into the following subjects:

Procedures under the law for determining bargaining agents; labor espionage in the oil tanker industry; waterfront "crimps," still used by some shipping companies as hiring agents; and company unionism in the tanker industry.

THE COMMITTEE also charged that the corporation had tried to prevent NLRB elections on its 22 tankers and went to what were termed "fantastic lengths" to avoid hiring union members or sympathizers.

The majority recommended legislation which would make labor espionage a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment. It also asked an investigation of alleged labor espionage in other segments of American industry and of company unionism and employment practices in the maritime industry.

The report was signed by nine members of the full Labor Committee of which Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) is chairman. A minority of four Republicans, headed by Taft, while condemning past activities of the company, declared that the company's labor relations are now "on a satisfactory basis."

Bill Seeks State Exploration Of Minn. Iron Ore Deposits

STATE REP. Joe Karth of Minnesota, who also is president of Local 75 of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers in St. Paul, is preparing to introduce a bill in the Legislature authorizing the state to conduct iron ore explorations.

Minnesota for many years has provided the bulk of the iron ore on which this country's steel industry rests. The state is prohibited by law from doing exploratory work and must accept, for tax purposes, whatever figures the mining companies see fit to give it. Considerable doubt exists in the state that the figures are anywhere near accurate—or that the iron ranges are anywhere near as depleted as the owners make out.

Karth noted that as the ore companies are taxed only on the amount of ore they report in the ground, the state may well not be getting what it has coming to it.

"This means," he said, "that the manufacturing companies, small businessmen and wage and salary earners in Minnesota are being forced to pay substantially higher taxes than they should. We will not know how much higher until the state is permitted to check on how much unreported ore is still going untaxed."

He charged the ore companies are "constantly hoodwinking the people by propaganda reports of seriously depleted iron ore reserves, and by threats of moving from Minnesota if taxes are increased."

"OUR STATE, one of the wealthiest in the United States in terms of natural resources," he said, "is being slowly bled to death by eastern steel trusts and corporation bankers."

Karth declared the time has come for "the long-suffering farmers and businessmen to call the outrageous bluff of the highly-financed steel lobby that it will pull its mining subsidiaries out of the state if the state is permitted exploratory rights and if taxes are increased fairly upon ore that is removed forever from the state."

TV Hurts Attendance At Union Meetings

Television is hurting the attendance at union meetings, according to a survey made in the Chicago area by the Midwest edition of Steel Labor, official organ of the CIO Steelworkers.

No statistics were included in the report, but some local leaders were quoted as feeling that the situation may get worse. Ray Pasnick, editor of the Midwest Edition, is making a study to determine what locals are doing to fight the attraction of the TV screen.

Italian Communist Split On Nationalism Widens

STALIN, THE Politburo, the Kremlin, the Comintern and Palmiro Togliatti are in a dither of increasing intensity.

For the Communist Party in Italy, which Togliatti heads and which is the largest in the world outside Russia, is splitting apart. A sizable and expanding faction is deserting the party and leaning more and more toward the National Communism that is flourishing across the Adriatic Sea in Marshall Tito's Jugoslavia.

The split started a few weeks ago in Reggio Emilia province, north of Rome, when Valdo Magnani and Aldo Cucchi, provincial party leaders and members of the Chamber of Deputies, resigned from the party and proclaimed their loyalty to Italy, rather than Russia.

A general strike scheduled for Reggio Emilia on Feb. 7 was called off, but defections continued. By the middle of last week nearly a score of party leaders had followed the pair, along with an undetermined but substantial number of party card holders.

The strike was held Feb. 12 and lasted 24 hours. It was pretty much of a flop. Called to support demands for higher wages and to protest layoffs in industry, it was effective among only about 30% of the workers. Previous strikes in this once-powerful red stronghold were nearly 100% effective.

THE SPLIT started when some party leaders were rebuked for declaring that Italians were bound to fight for Italy if she were invaded, regardless of whom the invader might be. This is regarded as rank hersy in orthodox Communist circles. The parade started by Magnani and Cucchi grew as word of their change in philosophy was spread.

Virtually the whole of the party machinery in Reggio Emilia has resigned. So have most of the leaders at Capaccio, including Mayor Salvatore Paolino, and in Salerno.

The Italian Partisans, an organization of underground veterans that had been taken over as a party agency, expelled Magnani and Cucchi. Within two weeks, however, the honorary president of the association and many of the officers had resigned not only from the Partisans but from the party as well.

Togliatti, meantime, has been in Russia for several months recovering from a brain operation. He was reported to have received (a) frantic pleas to get back home and whip the boys into line and (b) a tongue-lashing from Russian party leaders for not having rooted out "Titoism" before it began to flourish.

SOME observers in Italy warned against taking too much comfort from the defections. They concede that the party is losing strength in the industrial centers of the north, where it has always been at its most powerful, but say it is gaining among the agricultural workers of the south, where it has been weakest.

Meantime, the Comintern Communists are continuing their campaign to keep the fear of war at a fever pitch, to sabotage the Marshall Plan and Italian rearmament, and to spread disaffection in the armed forces.

The rebels, other observers remind the Italian people, are still Communists, just as Tito is, and continue to stick to basic Marxist beliefs and policies. Many Italians feel the chances of a Communist revolution, which all right-wing parties fear, will be increased rather than lessened if the rebellion continues to gather strength.

Barkley Honored By Histadrut

Vice-President Alben W. Barkley has received the 1950 Histadrut Humanitarian Award. Histadrut is the trade union organization of Israel. Joseph Schlossberg, chairman of the National Israel Labor Committee, presented a bronze plaque to Barkley in a ceremony at the Vice-President's office.

The Veep described the founding of Israel as a "miracle of our time . . . Whatever I have done in behalf of freedom for Israel and the people who found a haven there is because I believe in democracy and in the right of people to find happiness in its free institutions."

ECA Aid Relocates Jena Lens Factory

The famous Jena lens, regarded as the world's best by a lot of camera fans, is no longer made in Jena, Germany. Reason: Jena is in the Russian zone.

The factory has relocated at Zwiesel, in the western zone, with the aid of about $200,000 in Marshall Plan funds. Many of the 780 employes formerly worked in the Jena plant and risked death to slip across the border to freedom and jobs. The firm makes about 200 different types of optical glass.

Organizing Ability Of Volunteer Interpreter Impresses Perrine

FLEET PERRINE, organization director of the CIO Rubber Workers, spoke recently at an organizational meeting for employes of a rubber firm in a large eastern city.

At the end of the meeting, a middle-aged woman who worked in the shop and was a respected member asked him if workers who could not write, speak or understand English would be permitted to vote in a bargaining election soon to be set up by the National Labor Relations Board.

Perrine assured her they would be allowed to vote, and explained the procedure the board uses. But his interest was aroused, and he asked her who it was that couldn't speak English but wanted to vote for the URW.

She explained to him that six DP's, who had attended every organizational meeting even though they couldn't understand a word of what was being said, wanted to be able to cast their ballots for the URW. She had been acting as interpreter for them even since they started working in the plant, she added.

"Sister," said Perrine, "I'd like you to act as an interpreter for some people I know who CAN speak English."

"VICTORY!" shout the members of Local 842, CIO Auto Workers, as they vote to accept the offer of the Fairchild Aviation Division, Hagerstown, Md., to increase their pay 15c an hour and eliminate the "merit" rating system, the chief bone of contention.

Fairchild Strikers Obtain 15c, End 'Merit' Rating

THE 37-DAY strike of employes of Fairchild Aircraft Division at Hagerstown, Md., was terminated Feb. 13, when more than 3000 members of Local 842, CIO Auto Workers voted unanimously to accept an agreement which eliminated the company's "merit" rating system in favor of the union's automatic progression wage increase method.

The strikers were dead-set against the company's system.

The pickets were promptly recalled, and a group of maintenance employes entered the plants of the company the same day. The main force of workers returned to work Feb. 14.

It was a complete victory for the strikers, who stood solidly against every effort of the company to break their ranks and to conduct a back-to-work movement.

Abolition of the company's system of rating employes was the principal issue in dispute. Eventually it provoked the strike on Jan. 8. The employes claimed that the company's system is open to abuse and favoritism and that its operation caused dissatisfaction and dissension.

The agreement also provides for increases of 12c an hour retroactive to Oct. 30, the reopening date of the contract, and an increase of 15c an hour effective Feb. 19, all subject to approval by the Wage Stabilization Agency.

All of the strikers were to be returned to work without prejudice, and time of strike will be included in the computation of their seniority and vacations.

CAPITULATION of management was dramatic. On Feb. 10, management negotiators refused to budge from their position at a Washington meeting with the U. S. Conciliation and Mediation Service, which was attended by the union's negotiating committee.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who addressed the strikers at a mass meeting, invited Pres. Richard S. Boutelle, of Fairchild, to meet him at the bargaining table.

On Feb. 12 management negotiators requested a meeting with the union committee. Shortly after the meeting started, management, in a radio broadcast, announced it would yield on the issue of rating employes in favor of the union's plan "for the duration of the national emergency." The conferees spent the best part of the night ironing out the technical angles, the agreement was finally reached at 4:13 a.m.

Radio Moscow Praises UE

UNITED Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, ousted from the CIO for their Communist leanings, have received a great big pat on the back from Radio Moscow.

In a broadcast monitored by the U. S. Government, a report was read from Pravda official newspaper of the Communists, telling of a visit to the UE meeting in Chicago by two Russian writers—American newsmen were barred.

UE Secy.-Treas. Julius Emspak was lauded for a speech attacking the U. S. as the aggressor in Korea and Harold Ward, financial secretary of UE local 108, got praise for his "appeal to workers to fight for peace in a more active and energetic way."

The CIO was denounced for "attempting to liquidate the progressive UE. The CIO created a new trade union of the workers of the electrical and technical industry, appointing as its head James Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO, an inveterate traitor to the working classes. These agents of disruption succeeded in leading astray only the backward part of the electrical industry workers. The majority remain in the old trade union."

And one final laurel for the UE from Radio Moscow, which said the union "succeeds in foiling the attacks of the reactionary elements because it proceeds firmly along the path of class struggle."

Gullible Still Seek HealthThrough"Magic"

MORE DEATHS, injuries, broken homes, human derelicts and other tragedies were caused by illegal sales of prescription drugs during 1950 than by all other violations of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act put together, according to the annual report of the Food and Drug Administration of the Federal Security Agency.

The report reveals that "the search for a 'magic cure' still persists among the gullible, hypochondriacs and sufferers of chronic ailments, all willing to 'try anything' even at exhorbitant cost."

Remedies seized because of false claims for curing nervous upsets were greatest in number. They were followed by preparations for stomach and internal disorders, arthritis and rheumatism, skin and scalp afflictions, glandular disturbances, respitatory ailments and occasional nostrums.

NUMEROUS devices falsely claiming to diagnose and treat diseased conditions were also seized during the year. Two criminal cases led to jail sentences for the promoters of worthless devices exploiting the public's interest in advances from atomic research.

Fines totaling $195,056 were assessed in federal courts as the result of 363 criminal actions brought by Food and Drug Administration. In 60 cases the fines were $1000 or more. Jail sentences were handed out to 22 individuals, with 14 sentences being later suspended and the defendants put on probation.

DANGEROUS drugs were recalled from the market 17 times during the year, the administration reports. In 16 cases, the manufacturers, assisted by federal and state authorities, were able to remove the suspect batches without issuing public warnings. The other required a press and radio warning because the manufacturer could not account for 18,000 tablets containing excessive amounts of boric acid.

Condemned or discarded foods were carefully watched to prevent illegal salvage. In one instance, the owner of a hog farm bought some rancid fruit cake to feed his porkers but decided to make a fast buck by selling them to grocers at reduced prices. FDA agents put a stop to the practice.

Another enterprising operator began selling 25c-a-pound horsemeat to butchers as $1 to $1.50 a pound choice cuts of beef. Agents also curtailed his activity.

Dr. Paul Dunbar, commissioner of Food and Drugs, noted progress during the year in factory sanitation as the result of long-range industry programs which are bringing cleaner food to the consumer.

Federal judges, in imposing penalties in criminal actions, showed little sympathy for the minority who refused to keep up with sanitation practices. Three food plant managers were sentenced to jail for unsanitary operations and others received substantial fines.

Sicilians To Honor Marshall For Aid

The people of Sicily, grateful for the aid given them by the Marshall Plan, are giving an unusual gift to its sponsor, U. S. Secy. of Defense George Marshall.

It is a hand-painted Sicilian donkey cart, on its panels the story of the Marshall Plan and its help in the reconstruction of Sicily. The Sicilian cart is traditionally made of beech and mountain ash, with intricate carvings, primitive painting and beautiful ornamental ironwork, but no frills such as brakes or springs.

A Year Of McCarthyism Fails To Unearth Reds In State Dept.

One year ago last Lincoln's Birthday—on Feb. 12, 1950—Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) declared "war" on the State Dept. by charging in a speech at Wheeling, W. Va., that it was loaded with Communists.

Sen. Kilgore (D. W.Va.) and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) marked the anniversary last week with appropriate speeches in the Senate. McCarthy wasn't there.

Kilgore noted that in his first onset, McCarthy alleged that the State Dept. harbored 205 Reds. Later he scaled it down, in steps, to 57.

"It doesn't really matter," Kilgore observed, "whether he meant 205 or 57. But for the past year, these whirlpools of charges have spread a flood tide of confusion across the nation. What are the names of these individuals who were Communists a year ago?"

In answer to a question by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.), Kilgore recalled that a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which had investigated the charges wasn't able to find a single Red on the department's payroll.

"We must have confidence in the State Dept.," he said, "or our entire efforts to achieve world peace will fail."

Humphrey told the Senate that fear and suspicion have been spread throughout the country by McCarthy's attacks.

"The greatest tragedy to befall this nation," he said, "would be to undermine the faith of the people in the representative form of government."

McCarthy 'Hit' By Malmedy Survivor

A STATEMENT by a survivor of the Malmedy massacre, Virgil P. Lary, has led the American Veterans Committee to renew its demand for the unseating of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) for the part he played in saving the lives of Nazi soldiers convicted of murdering 150 GIs.

McCarthy charged at a Senate hearing in 1949 that Germans were tortured into confessing the murders.

At a press conference in Washington last week, Lary charged that McCarthy got his "propaganda" about Nazis being tortured from "James Finucane of the National Council for the Prevention of War," who got it from "one German Communist named Aschenauer."

The AVC and Lary both approved a proposed congressional resolution calling for an investigation by a five-man congressional committee into the causes and the reasons for the commutation of the death penalties of the Malmedy killers. National Secy. Joseph A. Clorety, Jr., of the AVC, said:

"We believe such an investigation will support our call for the creation of an international criminal court with jurisdiction over such crime. We believe it will expose Sen. McCarthy as the not-too-innocent dupe of the German Communist agent Aschenauer, who fed Communist lies to McCarthy through James Finucane of the National Council for the Prevention of War."

LARY told how he and 11 other American soldiers survived the massacre of some 150 GIs by German SS Elite Guard troops near Malmedy, Belgium, on Dec. 1, 1944, by playing dead.

Clorety said McCarthy "has committed many crimes against American principles of honesty, decency and justice."

"He turned his Wisconsin court into a divorce mill," he said. "He ran for public office while still occupying his position on the bench; he evaded payment of his income taxes and he lied about loyal public servants from the Senate floor under the cloak of congressional immunity. These are matters of public record."

Both AVC and Lary warned that the Malmedy case sets a precedent for release of Korean war criminals.

Put Back On Their Feet, They'll Repay $10 For $1

CRIPPLED, maimed and otherwise handicapped persons who have been put on their feet and placed in jobs through the federal-state rehabilitation program will repay, during their working lives, $10 in taxes for every federal dollar spent on them, and will also be paying state and local taxes, the Federal Security Agency reported last week.

The statement came as the result of a study of the earnings, before and after rehabilitation, of 71,543 individuals trained and placed in jobs from July 1, 1949, to July 1, 1950—a peak number, incidentally.

It was found that, before the services started, the individuals were earning at the rate of $17 million a year, on which they paid little or no taxes. After rehabilitation training, they were earning at the rate of $93 million—more than five times as much—and on this figure they would pay some $5.5 million in withholding taxes at present rates, or more than enough to repay indirectly within four years the entire federal outlay on the program during the year in which they received training.

The report also showed that 85% of those placed during the same one-year period were doing their jobs completely to their own and their employers' satisfaction at the year's end—so their cases were closed, since they were considered permanently employed. The remaining 15% "were working on jobs for which they had been fully prepared, but were still under observation to assure their complete adjustment, since many of them were retrained for entirely new jobs and others had never worked before."

The number helped is only a small fraction of those needing it. The total is estimated at 2 million. These people, the report said, "constitute one of the few sources at hand to supply ever-growing manpower requirements."

Organized Labor Urges Home Rule For Washington

ORGANIZED labor groups in the District of Columbia, including the CIO, urged the Senate District Committee to work for passage of the Kefauver Bill giving home rule to the voteless residents of Washington.

Glenn Watts, representing the Washington CIO Council, told Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.), committee chairman, that CIO members favored the bill. He also told Neely, who earlier had chided Washington residents for their lethargy in the fight for home rule, that CIO members would renew their drive for enactment of the Kefauver Bill.

C. F. Preller, president of the AFL Central Labor Union, also called for approval of the Kefauver Bill. He and Watts likewise called for creation of a department of labor in the District government to bring together the various agencies administering labor laws which "are scattered all over the structure of the District government."

In addition, they asked for the creation of a housing relocation service, pointing out that there is now no central place where families displaced from their homes can get help in finding other housing.

James Marks, of the Mine Workers, joined in demanding home rule for the District.

Neely congratulated the labor representatives for their support of District suffrage and their interest in District problems.

S.C. Assembly OKs Ban On Poll Tax

The South Carolina General Assembly has ratified a constitutional amendment approved last year, discarding the poll tax as a requirement for voting in general elections.

The Tennessee House has unanimously approved a bill killing that state's poll tax. That leaves only five states with poll taxes—Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia.

North Carolina acted in 1921, Louisiana in 1934, Florida in 1937, and Georgia in 1946. The Tennessee Legislature a few years ago passed a repealer, but its state Supreme Court ruled the action unconstitutional.

The current Tennessee bill provides that a voter would have to pay the poll tax assessed against him in 1871, the year after the constitution was adopted. Such a bill would apply only to voters now 101 years old. Also, there was no poll tax in 1871.

Carey Asks Marshall Plan For Southeast Asia

A VIGOROUS demand for the "immediate creation of a Marshall Plan for the nations of Southeast Asia" was voiced last week by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey in an address prepared for the 13th annual National Farm Institute at Des Moines, Iowa.

On moral, military and economic grounds the Western democracies place their survival in jeopardy if they lose the 560,000,000 inhabitants of Southeast Asia together with that area's natural resources to Russia's continuing aggressions, Carey warned.

"I am wholly convinced," Carey said, "that if we had developed the Marshall Plan fairly and directed a $20 billion program to the far East in the beginning, we would be considerably ahead today." He pointed out that "this year's U.S. military expenditures will come close to $70 billion, and, mind you, that is for one year alone. We would clearly have saved money had we decided to spend $5 billion a year for four years on an ECA program in the Far East."

The U.S. made a major mistake in 1947 when it decided to confine ECA assistance to Europe, Carey said. "When we had thus limited ourselves, we had taken a calculated risk and we are now reaping the results of that risk in China and Korea and in the present threat to all the nations of Southeast Asia," he said.

Carey expressed approval of the Administration's Point 4 program but pointed out, "We appropriated $25 million and patted ourselves on the back. This appropriation represents not quite 22½c as an investment in each of the 560,000,000 people whom we are pretending to help in Southeast Asia."

Cable CIOLABOR

The world-wide interests of CIO have become so extensive that Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey has obtained a cable address for the organization—CIOLABOR.

CAREY ALSO told the meeting: "We will be told, of course, by the alarmists and the greedy that if we help these people of Southeast Asia build their own economies and raise the standard of living for all their people we will be destroying one of our greatest potential markets.

"Such propaganda is vicious because it is nonsensical. The assumption is that the needs of the people will remain very simple despite their development.

"The concrete proof that such propaganda is vicious and wrong lies in the simple fact that our trade with foreign countries is highest where productive capacity is the highest. And so, if anyone wants to look at this proposal from a point of narrow self-interest, let him keep in mind that a raise in the standard of living of all the world and an increase in the productivity of all nations will call for more and more of American goods of every description."

Carey also called for closer understanding and joint action between labor and farmers. Both groups are being victimized by higher prices and lowered incomes, he declared. Farmers, he said, are now getting less for nine of their most important crops than they were three years ago. The farmer's share of each dollar spent by the consumer for food was only 53% in 1946 and has slumped to 48% today, he added.

"It isn't difficult for unionists to educate themselves on these matters," he continued.

"Our people know that food prices soared 14% in the short period between last June and last January. So while farm income has stood still or decreased, the prices workers pay at their grocery stores jumped 14%. In organized labor's opinion the profiteering that occurs in the area between farm prices and the prices we pay at our stores is vicious and outrageous.

"Labor would like to see—and I imagine farmers would like to see also—" said Carey, "a complete Congressional investigation of the reasons why both our groups have been so unbelievably gouged and gypped."

Businessmen In 'Control' Posts Belie 'War Socialism' Cry

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

JUST HOW phony is the shrieking of the business boys is revealed in their failure to agree even on what they don't like about the way things are going in Washington, D. C.

In the same week Herb ("Democracy Stinks") Nelson, sneered at "the caliphs on the Potomac," and at "the bureaucrats" in Washington while U. S. News & World Report was blazoning to the world that "Businessmen Take Over Job of Running U. S. War Economy: Each Industry to Deal with a Man Who Knows Its Problems."

Nelson is the Washington lobbyist for the National Association of Real Estate Boards (NAREB), the super-duper patriots whose vision of a beautiful world is the world of President McKinley; who have fought, with fang and claw, every measure designed to make life a little better for the millions of plain Americans.

In the NAREB view, health insurance is socialism; so is any kind of rent control; so is federal aid to education; so is public housing, or housing aid to middle-income families, or any other welfare measure.

They are against government interference except the handouts they have received by the millions in the form of government-insured loans for housing, whereby Uncle Sam takes all the risks, the realty boys take none, and the latter take all the profits.

WAILS NELSON, in the current issue of Headlines, the NAREB's weekly sheet: "The last war certainly proved the futility of government meddling and planning, and still the same old faces are coming back to play the same old phonograph record."

The beef in World War II was that New Deal politicians, lawyers and economists were in the saddle—men "who had never met a payroll." They were "planners and theorists." Well, for the record, let's see who is running the show this time.

Top man is Charles E. Wilson, as Director of Defense Mobilization. He's the former head of the General Electric Co., where his salary was reported to be $3500 a week—yes, a week. He's essentially a production expert. No theorist is Wilson.

Wilson's No. 1 aide is Sidney J. Weinberg, a top partner in Goldman, Sachs & Co., a New York investment and banking house. The No. 2 aide is Gen. Lucius D. Clay, an army veteran, also an authority on production, and until recently chairman of the board of Continental Can Co.

Heading the stabilization agency is Eric A. Johnston, electrical manufacturer and distributor, for several terms president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and now on leave as president of the Motion Picture Association of America.

Under him, the price boss is Michael V. DiSalle, lawyer, until recently mayor of Toledo. DiSalle's assistant is Edward W. Phelps, Jr., formerly vice president of a hefty food manufacturing and wholesale firm in the southwest.

Running the show for consumer soft goods for DiSalle is Joseph N. Kallick, merchandise manager for Spiegel, Inc., large Chicago mail-order firm. Another aide is Richard L. Bowditch, head of a steamship line, a large coal firm, and former head of the New England Council, a businessmen's group. He runs transportation, public utilities, fuel, service and imports and exports. Handling food and restaurant prices is J. B. Hutson, recently head of Tobacco Associates, Inc., an export trade outfit.

Heading the wage board is Cyrus S. Ching, for many years labor relations director for the U. S. Rubber Co.

CHIEF ON production is William H. Harrison, president of the Intl. Telephone & Telegraph Co. His aide is Manly Fleischman, a lawyer, who for two years as receiver handled the Sterling Engine Co. of Buffalo.

His aides include David B. Carson, vice president of Sharon Steel; Melvin W. Cole, a sales executive for Bethlehem Steel; Nigel H. Bell, a vice president of Sterling Windows, Inc., Whiteman W. Hopton, an executive of an Illinois zinc firm; Marshall M. Smith, formerly with Worthington Pump; and W. Walter Watts, an RCA vice president.

Assistant deputy petroleum administrator is Alfred P. Frame, a vice president of Cities Service Oil Co. Directing foreign oil operations is C. Stribling Snodgrass, a vice president of the Bechtel Corp. Oh, yes, there are a few from government departments, but it's business executives, and not "theorists or planners," who are running the show.

But Herb Nelson is still not happy. Here's his bleat: "Make no mistake. Socialism is in the saddle now in Washington. They call it wartime socialism to soften the blow. They intend, however, this time it is to last."

So Wilson, and Johnston, and Harrison, and the others, are now pushing us into "socialism."

Old man Carter thinks Nelson and Dave Lawrence, who puts out the U. S. News & World Report, should get together and decide who they're neutral against. So far, their footwork is pretty sloppy.

Bill Would Give U. S. Seized Plants' Profits

Rep. J. Saylor (R. Pa.) wants any profits to go to the government any time the U. S. has to seize a plant in a labor dispute.

He offered such a bill Feb. 14, saying his bill might make rail management, for example, more willing to reach an agreement. Under his bill the government also would foot any loss incurred during federal operation, and would forbid retroactive contracts.

Unions have often complained that U. S. seizure is a mockery, because a corporation's profits go on during such operation, and management can just sit back and relax.

FTC's Spicy Ruling

The makers of B.F.M. Soluble Seasonings can no longer falsely disparage competing products in the sale of seasoning and spices. The Federal Trade Commission has ordered the firm to stop representing that its products cause less gastric distress than natural spices, and that ground natural spices are "filthy," unsanitary, and deleterious to health.

"I figured it all out last night—with the cost of living so high and my wages and pension so small, I'll be 108 years old before I can retire with enough money to live on."

Union Must Abide By Own Waiver

A union can voluntarily waive or agree to a limitation upon its right to be represented in collective bargaining by any person or group, the National Labor Relations Board ruled last week, but the Taft-Hartley Act forbids an employer to insist upon such a waiver or limitation as a condition to reaching an agreement.

However, once a union agrees to waive or limit its right, the board said, it must stick to its decision. The ruling was handed down in a case involving Local 367 of the CIO Oil Workers, and the Shell Oil Co. and Shell Chemical Co., both of Houston, Tex. Employes of both plants are represented by the local. Under separate contracts, it was agreed that plant committees would settle grievances.

When the employer refused to permit a union official and other non-committee members to be present at grievance sessions, the local filed charges of unfair labor practices. The NLRB dismissed them.

DeNucci Returns To CIO Regional Post

George DeNucci, who has been representing the CIO in Puerto Rico, has completed his work there and has returned to his original post as regional director at Columbus, Ohio.

Walter Harris, who had been acting regional director in Columbus, has been named CIO national representative in the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizating Committee election campaign among agents of the John Hancock Life Insurance Co.

Pay Hearings Listed In 3 P. R. Industries

Hearings will be held in Washington next month on proposed higher minimum wage rates under the Wage-Hour Act for three Puerto Rico industries.

A hearing will be held Mar. 13 on a recommendation of 40c an hour instead of the present 25c in the china industry. Two hearings will be held Mar. 19, one for the leaf tobacco industry, where the proposal is to boost the present 27c minimum to 35c, the other for the cigar and cigarette industry, with a proposed 36c instead of the present 30c.

On Feb. 10, Wage-Hour Administrator McComb announced a proposed increase from 15c to 25c an hour for the handicrafts products industry. Interested parties have 15 days from that date to submit written data and comments on the proposed order.

9c Packing Pay Raise Is Up To Wage Board

"WE CAN smell that 9c, but can't touch it." That was said by the CIO Packinghouse Workers at a nation-wide conference in Chicago Feb. 11 that approved the 9c-an-hour wage boosts negotiated with the leading meat packing companies.

Representing some 250 local unions, the conference aimed its sights at the Wage Stabilization Board, which has to approve the increase before it can become effective.

Since the pay hike agreement expires Mar. 25 unless approved by the stabilization board, the UPWA conference cautioned: "We still are faced with the possible necessity of resuming on that date our struggle with the meat packing companies for a decent wage."

The conference voted the UPWA international executive board "full authority and power to take strike action if and when necessary."

The 9c agreement, which includes adjustments in the wage brackets of semi-skilled and skilled workers, has been reached with Swift, Armour, Cudahy and many of the leading independent meat packing companies. Other companies are signing for the same terms as soon as they are reached by UPWA representatives.

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, together with officials from the AFL Meat Cutters Union, went to Washington to seek WSB approval of the raise.

THE AFL union also had signed 9c agreements with the packing companies it represents. Together the two unions represent more than 90% of the nation's packinghouse workers.

The CIO and AFL unions worked closely throughout the bargaining period, which started last December when the unions notified the packing companies that they were reopening current contracts for wage negotiations.

The new increase, if given WSB approval, is effective Feb. 9.

Directing their attention to the stabilization board, the UPWA conference charged they are "presently denied the benefits of their collective bargaining agreements because of the wage freeze imposed by the order of Jan. 26."

"Now having successfully secured an increase from their own industry's leaders, the packinghouse workers are faced with another hurdle: big business' seizure of government," it added.

The UPWA delegates asserted that they find the "functioning of our defense and mobilization machinery overrun by representatives of big business. . . . Virtually nowhere do they (packinghouse workers) find labor recognized in anything more than token capacities."

TERMING THE Jan. 26 wage-price order a "monumental fraud," the conference said, "housewives, even in this short time, are shocked to find that prices are continuing upwards despite the freeze, and that prices on most food products are not even controlled by the order.

"The fraud of the supposed price freeze is evidenced in the astronomical profits of American industry, including the packers, secured under the prices which are now sanctified. The profits for the packing industry make clear that the industry can well absorb the increases that they have now agreed to give to their employes.

"Moreover, the leading packing companies themselves have frankly stated that these wage adjustments are fair, reasonable and justified."

Norman Thomas Receives Award

Socialist Leader Norman Thomas was honored by labor and liberals last week at a luncheon in Washington at which he was presented the Workers Defense League's David L. Clendenin award for distinguished service to the cause of labor, minority rights and civil liberties.

Messages of high praise came from, among others, Pres. Philip Murray and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey of the CIO; Pres. O. A. Knight, CIO Oil Workers; Executive Vice Pres. Sam Eubanks, CIO Newspaper Guild; Pres. William Green of the AFL; Pres. Alex Rose, AFL Hatters; Pres. Sal B. Hoffman, AFL Upholsterers; Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) and former Sen. Graham (D. N. C.).

In accepting the award, Thomas said forces which speak of a cold war for 15 or 20 years are "exploiting" the situation and fighting communism the wrong way and for the wrong reasons. He expressed himself as "profoundly disquieted" because liberals have lost their "power and drive" in this country, blaming Republican successes in 1950 on this more than any other factor.

70,000 TWUA Members Out In 160 Mills

AS THE result of the refusal of the American Woolen Co., largest firm in the industry, to make a "reasonable wage offer" in negotiations, 70,000 members of the CIO Textile Workers in woolen and worsted mills went out on strike Feb. 16.

Approximately 160 woolen mills throughout the country were shut down as the result of the walkout. Other textile companies in New England and the mid-Atlantic states were likely to feel the effect indirectly.

The union had proposed a 15c an hour raise, which would have brought the average hourly wage in the industry to $1.57 and the minimum to $1.32. The company argued that price ceilings must be lifted before a wage increase could be granted.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve charged the industry had forced the strike on the union "as a weapon to use in demanding price increases." He said he had been told that "the woolen industry is meeting with government price administrators Feb. 21" to discuss possible price boosts.

During negotiations with the company, he added, he had repeatedly stressed the fact that there was nothing in the federal wage freeze to prevent an employer from granting a wage increase.

American Woolen employs only some 15,000 workers, but occupies a key position as a wage pacesetter in the industry.

Loyalty Board Asks More Rigid Rules

THE GOVERNMENT'S Loyalty Review Board, which is the court of appeals of civil servants dismissed for disloyalty to the U.S. government, has asked President Truman to issue a new executive order,, which, in effect, would require the government to fire any employe considered a "borderline case."

This order would greatly tighten up the present standards, and might result in the discharge of some 500 persons previously cleared by the board. The board had been resolving doubts in favor of the employe, if it could find no ground for believing that, regardless of his actions and beliefs in the past, he was disloyal right now.

Or, to put it another way, it apparently would mean the almost automatic dismissal of anyone who at any time held beliefs or belonged to organizations now considered subversive, even though he may have changed his mind years ago. It would do away with a sort of invisible statute of limitations on the admissability into evidence of events, beliefs, documents, allegations or gossip from the remote past, which up to now has operated in favor of the civil servant.

The board asked President Truman to issue a wartime executive order issued by the late Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1942, in which he demanded dismissal of any government employe about whose loyalty there existed "reasonable doubt."

Hiram Bingham, former Republican Senator from Connecticut and now chairman of the board, announced the decision after two full days of discussion with 20 of the 26 members of the board. He said it was a majority decision, and explained:

"With the Communist Party now 'undegrground,' it is very difficult to find that a person 'now' is disloyal."

He added, however, that the "reasonable doubt" standard would be used in its strictest legal sense, ruling out doubts arising through "whim or fancy or any ground without proper cause."

Bosses Not Always Smart

THE ST. LOUIS Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers has concluded that the bosses are not so smart when they ask for decertification elections. The board tells why in its publication, Tex-Tales:

Every once in awhile an employer gets the idea that his workers desire to get out of the "big, bad union," and then applies to the National Labor Relations Board for a decertification election.

The Joint Board has had two such elections in the past few months. In each case the vote was a clear indication of what workers want in protection and security.

After several years of organization the people in the factory voted by a greater majority to keep the union than when they voted to have a union.

So the bosses were not as smart as they thought they were and were badly fooled in their estimate of what an organized group would do.

The most recent election was at the General Waste Trading Corp. An overwhelming defeat was given the company by the workers, who, the company said, "didn't want the union any more." The vote was 79 to keep the union with 5 voting against it. One of the five said he was for it but didn't understand the ballot.

Most of these workers were being paid around 40c per hour before an increase in the minimum wage took effect in January, 1950. They know what they had and what has happened since organization, voted as they knew was best.

Negotiations for new contracts are in progress at both firms now.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer along with Assistant Organizational Dir. R. J. Thomas was called into New York in connection with the Eagle Pencil Co. strike, and succeeded in bringing about settlement of the strike by getting a 12c an hour increase in wages and improvement in hospitalization, sickness and accident and death benefits. The writer was assisted by Reg. Dir. Pete Moselle, local Pres. Weitz, and his committee. Every one of the workers in the Eagle plant is a CIO member and CIO is proud of that membership.

Allan Haywood

Pres. Ralph Helstein, of the United Packinghouse Workers, CIO, advises the writer that the Packinghouse Workers recently concluded negotiations on behalf of their Local 580 with the National Sugar Refining Co. in New York. For the first time a guaranteed work week in the sugar industry has been established. This represents a tremendous forward stride in the sugar industry. Congratulations to all.

Labor continues to be a step-child in representation in Washington on various government boards. The CIO and other labor organizations are protesting being relegated to a secondary position. The latest stunt by certain industrial representatives in Washington is to grant meager wage increases to labor, while the cost of living, prices and profits are still skyrocketing. Labor is entitled to increases that measure up to existing conditions of cost.

It should be evident to all of the workers of our nation that they must organize into strong industrial unions.

To depend upon "pro-employer" public representatives will get us nowhere. We must continue to intensify our organizing activities everywhere.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation at the U. S. Envelope Co., Hartford, Conn., the workers voted in favor of the United Paperworkers-CIO by 107 to 78 for no union.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a representation election at the I. L. G. O. Rubber Co., Philadelphia, Pa., the workers voted for the United Rubber Workers-CIO by a vote of 41 to 5 against. Intl. Rep. John Horn was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the United Steelworkers-CIO won a representation election at the Drayer-Hanson Co., Los Angeles, by a vote of 43 to 2 for the AFL. Intl. Rep. Balt Yane was in charge of the campaign. In another representative election at Universal Ryers, Los Angeles, the vote was CIO 17, no union 7. Intl. Rep. Pat Nall was in charge. The Oil Workers-CIO retained the right to bargain for Richfield Oil Co. employees throughout California by a vote of 911 OWIU-CIO, 283 AFL. The entire staff of OWIU Dir. Charles Armin participated in this challenge by AFL.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers-CIO reports that URW Local 138, Noblesville, Ind., won a union authorization election by a 780 to 25 tally among workers in the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. plant. Employees in the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. plant at Topeka, Kan., represented by URW Local 307, voted 613 to 82 in favor of a union shop. The URW-CIO has also been certified by the Ontario Labour Relations Board as sole bargaining agent for the office workers in the Goodyear plant in Bowmanville, Ont.

Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports that in a representation election at the Pacific Northwest Alloys Corp., Spokane, Wash., the United Steelworkers-CIO won a smashing victory over the AFL by a vote of 178 to 69 AFL, 1 no union. All of those eligible to vote cast ballots.

Reg. Dir. William Smith reports that in a representation election among employes of the Apopka Fruit Co., Apopka, Fla., the workers voted in favor of the United Food Workers LIU 1758 by the following vote: eligible 62, CIO 27, against 21.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election, employees of the Anderson Mfg. Co., Denver, Colo., voted in favor of the Steelworkers-CIO by a vote of 16 to 8 against, with 2 challenged. Intl. Rep. Frank Richmond was in charge of this campaign.

Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett, IUE-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Photoswitch Co., Cambridge, Mass., the workers voted for IUE-CIO by a vote of 62 to 24 for no union.

Census Bureau Finds Rents Up 62% Since '40

City dwellers are forking out 62% more for rent than they did in 1940. The Census Bureau reports the average rent paid by non-farm dwellers was $24 in 1940 and was $39 in 1950.

These changes do not necessarily apply to the same rental unit because some apartments and homes have been built, and others taken off the market, since 1940. The average for city housing which was vacant and for rent in 1950 was nearer $60 than $39, according to the report.

Of the 15,400,000 rental units reporting on rent, about 13,100,000 were in urban areas and nearly 2,400,000 in rural non-farm areas.

U.S. Warned Of Danger Of Aiding Aluminum Cartel

By IRVING FAGAN
And CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

ONE OF THE key materials in the defense program is aluminum. Without it, you can't build air power, for they make airplanes of aluminum. In addition, a lot of aluminum goes into other military equipment and supplies.

So you'd better watch the aluminum situation, because the "white metal" is in tight supply. They've already cut civilian consumption by 25%, will cut it further in April. Meanwhile, they've got to virtually double the capacity to produce the stuff. And aluminum is the most monopolized of our domestic industries.

Now aluminum doesn't come from the mine in metallic form. They dig a gravelly substance called bauxite out of the ground and transform it into aluminum by a process consuming incredible amounts of electric power. Most of the bauxite in our aluminum comes from the northeastern coast of South America, although some is dug in Arkansas and a couple of other places. But the stuff is brought to the U. S. for processing.

In discussing aluminum there are two things to keep in mind—the present monopoly character of the industry, and the industry's need for vast amounts of cheap electricity.

Before the discussion proceeds too far, you'd better listen to Dewey Anderson, director of the union-supported Public Affairs Institute and a man who's given a great deal of scholarly attention to the aluminum problem. He reviewed the whole aluminum story the other day for the benefit of the House Committee on Monopoly Power.

ANDERSON submitted 50 pages of testimony, too much for us to tell you about in a column. But we can pick some of the highlights.

There used to be only one company making aluminum. Now there are three, but the big company still dominates the show, turning out about 50% of all the aluminum made in America. It sets the price, and can do about as it pleases with some 17,000 "independent" fabricators of aluminum products.

The big company is the Aluminum Co. of America (ALCOA). The other two are Reynolds Metals and Kaiser, who bought government built plants cheap right after the war. There won't be any more primary producers unless the government subsidizes them. The original investment is too great, and there's the power question.

But, says Anderson: "It is my belief, from years of study of the aluminum industry, that the 'light metals age' will be ushered in really when there are a half dozen or more medium to large sized non-integrated aluminum-making companies in the United States. Real competition will not be present in the industry until this happens . . .

"Some of us who had something to do with the postwar disposal pattern thought that real competition would be furthered by having three strong integrated aluminum companies. I, for one, am now convinced that this way leads to no real competition, that we should seek to establish such conditions as will provide a big source of raw materials for a large number of companies that are competing with each other in the market place, all assured of a common source of dependable raw material upon which to base their attempts to win public favor."

ALCOA doesn't see things quite the same way—and ALCOA has powerful friends in Washington where the agents of big business are taking hold of the defense program. Nor does the Aluminum Co. of Canada (ALCAN) which is owned by an outfit called Aluminum Ltd. whose ownership we'll tell you about further on.

Here's what ALCAN — a Canadian company — thinks the U. S. ought to do: buy aluminum which ALCAN proposes to make in a huge system of plants still to be built up in British Columbia some 80 miles from the Alaska line. It would take about five years to complete the plan.

ALCAN would have to build a city, docks, dams to generate power, bring bauxite from South America by ship through the Panama Canal and build rail connections to take out the finished aluminum. Meanwhile, ALCOA wants to develop a project of its own in Alaska not far from the ALCAN site. In the end, American taxes would pay for either project or both. So Americans had better be sure of what they want.

Now, take a lesson in monoply. ALCOA isn't pressing its own project very hard—and isn't opposing ALCAN's very hard, either. But this is no surprise to people who know the aluminum business, for ALCOA and ALCAN are virtually the same company.

ELEVEN persons who own upward of 50% of ALCOA also own upward of 50% of Aulminum Ltd. which owns ALCAN outright. (A recently announced court plan breaking up this dual ownership will take 10 years to complete and is viewed with suspicion.)

Secy. of Commerce Sawyer thinks we ought to consider the British Columbia idea that ALCAN has been trying to peddle here, although mobilization chief Charles E. Wilson appears to have been warned off. Anderson also thinks we ought to consider it—sometime in the 1960's.

For the present, says Anderson, we'd better expand the domestic industry unless we want to feed a world monopoly that eventually will drive U. S. aluminum makers out of business. He proposes "that we proceed with the utmost dispatch consistent with sound planning to expand the number of American producers and the size of the American aluminum-making plant, always keeping in mind that its survival value is vitally important.

"THEN if and when we find that circumstances and powers beyond our control determine that the ALCAN project is to be completed, we will have a healthy large-sized competitive American aluminum industry capable of meeting most of our own needs and of demonstrating what a competitive economy can contribute to economic stability and growth."

To do this, the government will have to make it attractive for new producers to enter the industry. New sources of power must be developed in the river valleys despite the protests of the private utilities (who probably would prefer to see the British Columbia plan adopted).

If the U. S. doesn't, ALCAN, which is a legal monopoly in Canada, will become the dominant producer in a world cartel which will be able to destroy any chance of a competitive aluminum industry in the U. S. —or anywhere else.

CWA Recommends 100% Excess Profits Tax

THE CIO Communications Workers, in a 17-page domestic policy statement, last week urged a number of tax law changes including a 100% tax on profits above the 1946-1950 average. In the statement which was approved by the CWA's nine-man executive board the union said that "our national leadership must recognize that the present struggle is not a fight to enhance the profits of Standard Oil, of American Telephone and Telegraph, of U. S. Steel and of other corporate giants that dominate our economic world." The statement recommended:

Congress modify or junk and replace the Defense Production Act with a workable system of wage-price controls based on experiences of World War II with appropriate modifications to meet changing conditions.

A system of rationing and ceiling prices at the end product rather than the present system of mark-ups and profit margins. Rationing should include effective use of priorities, quality controls, and limitation on the manufacture of luxury items.

Wage stabilization give full weight to increased living costs, wage inequities, sub-standard wages, productivity increases and other factors.

Insurance and pension plans being non-inflationary, not be included in computing living cost increases.

Manpower be utilized to the maximum point, thus encouraging women to reenter defense industries and training and utilizing fully the capabilities of physically handicapped workers and workers from minority groups.

The disparity between large and small incomes be corrected by skimming off a large part of the excessively high incomes.

Commenting on the policy statement, CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said:

"We in America must hammer out a domestic policy that will promote the maximum welfare of the ordinary working man and woman. By doing this we will show to the world that democracy can be made to work.

"That can't be done with big business in the saddle in Washington. They've taken over our defense efforts and have snafu'd the entire program. The situation can't be corrected until labor and other representative groups are given positions of real responsibility at policy-making and administrative levels in the defense effort."

C. Of C. Riles Sen. Maybank

THE sanctimonious chanting of a dirge of delay by a witness from the U. S. Chamber of Commerce so riled Chairman Maybank of the Senate Banking Committee that the South Carolina Democrat jumped to his feet shouting that the C. of C. was playing into Stalin's hands.

Norman P. Mason, chairman of the C. of C.'s Construction Committee, opposed the proposed $3 billion housing program for defense workers on the grounds that it is not needed now. He didn't think this the time to rush into any public building program.

It was Mason's repeated suggestions to take things easy that ruffled Maybank. "I wish that when the Chamber of Commerce comes before this committee it sometimes would suggest something advantageous for the good of the country and not always delay, delay, delay," the Senator shouted.

"We've delayed and delayed and delayed. Every time we delay we help one person and that's the fellow who lives in Moscow."

Much Unemployment In Michigan Foreseen

A prediction that 200,000 Michigan workers will undergo unemployment before defense production hits full stride was made last week by Harry Merkle, executive director of the State Unemployment Compensation Commission.

Joblessness will reach its peak in the fall, he warned, and then will decline so rapidly that by 1952 most employes in industry will be working a 48-hour week.

Senate Banking Unit To Probe Proposed Rent Increase At AEC's Oak Ridge

THE SENATE Banking Committee is going to investigate the Atomic Energy Commission's housing and rent policies at the request of CIO.

The inhabitants of the AEC's town at Oak Ridge, Tenn., have been informed that, effective Aug. 1, their rents will be increased, in some cases as much as 30%. They were not consulted in advance.

This comes on top of heavy increases imposed in 1949, about which the inhabitants also were not consulted. And it comes, apparently, at the recommendation of the AEC's peculiarly set up Oak Ridge Community Panel, established in 1950 to "make recommendations about the disposition of AEC-owned towns." The panel is composed of four real estate minded persons, none of whom is a resident of Oak Ridge.

FOR THESE reasons, the CIO Cas Coke & Chemical Workers and the CIO Housing Committee are more than a little suspicious that AEC, also at the recommendation of this panel, has quietly decided to "sell" its towns—not only Oak Ridge, but at Hanford, Wash.—to private interests.

These CIO groups therefore suspect that the purpose of the proposed rent increases is to increase the "take" and thus make the outright purchase of the communities more attractive to profit-minded investors.

(The Wall Street Journal reported last week that in Aiken, N. C., where Du Pont is building an AEC plant, housing plans "call for accommodating 70,000 in one trailer community.")

IF THE CIO suspicions, widely shared among Oak Ridge and Hanford residents, are borne out, it will fit right in with AEC's already announced policy of refusing to build any more government towns—a policy which already has resulted in wild land speculation in South Carolina, where the next big AEC plant is due to be constructed.

UGCCW Pres. Martin Wagner asked the commission to appoint four additional representatives to the Oak Ridge panel, all of them to be residents of the area and at least two of them to be union representatives.

He also hit the AEC policy of not consulting the persons involved when such decisions are made.

'No House, No Manpower, No Plane: Stalin In Command'—Calif. Mayor

Mayor Harley M. Knox of San Diego, Cal., who last Sept. 1, signed the city council's rent decontrol resolution, now wants the emergency housing bill passed in the worst way. CIO protested strongly when he signed the resolution and predicted the acute housing shortage, which Knox acknowledges now exists in San Diego.

He wired the House Banking Committee that the community, which contains important airplane factories and is the site of the largest southern Pacific naval base, was "unbelievably impacted" by the mobilization effort, and that the housing situation was worse now than in World War II.

He said that new employes of an aircraft company were sleeping in their automobiles, that rents had skyrocketed, that 260 persons had quit out of 750 hired at one plant in the past 60 days, because of the housing situation.. He added that the Navy alone needed 9,165 housing units immediately and that the entire community must have at least 20,000 units right away.

"This city builds airplanes," he wound up. "Airplanes require manpower. Manpower requires houses. No house, no manpower, no airplane. Joe Stalin in command."

Labor's Mobilization Role Snafued

(See Pages 2 and 3)

THE UNITED LABOR POLICY COMMITTEE takes its case to President Truman: AFL Pres. William Green makes a point after ULPC members leave the White House Feb. 19. They saw President Truman on his invitation after the labor members of the Wage Stabilization Board had resigned in protest over a proposed wage formula. Besides Green others are, left to right, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, one of those who resigned from WSB; Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Machinists, and Chairman George Leighty of the Railway Labor Executive Association. Labor's attitude is that big business domination of the defense scene means that labor is making all the the sacrifices. (See Pages 2 and 3.)

CIO Routs ILWU In Oregon

Cannery workers in Astoria, Ore., area chose CIO over the Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union by a vote of 789 to 291 in a National Labor Relations Board election. (See Page 6 for story and Page 11 for comment in the column of Allan S. Haywood.)

America Facing Housing Crisis

Proposals for defense housing now before Congress would help perpetuate a critical situation in housing for military personnel, defense workers, and middle and lower income groups. Such was the testimony of CIO housing experts, who also offered a solution for the crisis. (Page 7.)

United Labor Policy Committee's Statement

The following is the complete statement issued Feb. 16 by the United Labor Policy Committee which ordered the withdrawal of the labor members of the Wage Stabilization Board:

THERE IS NO group in America more alert to the dangers of Communist aggression against the free world than the 15 million American wage earners we represent. There is no mass group in the nation more definitely committed to all-out resistance against Communism than the members of our free trade union movement.

We have offered our full support to the defense program. We have accepted in advance our responsibility for making all necessary sacrifices. We have willingly volunteered to bear our fair share of the burden because our hearts are in this fight.

From the very beginning of the national emergency, American labor has led the fight for effective control of the cost of living and other measures necessary to insure economic stabilization.

We had hoped that our Government would take advantage of our earnest determination to cooperate to the fullest extent in advancing the national defense program. Instead, our offers of cooperation have been rejected.

This is not a question of an isolated incident. Our decision here cannot and must not be interpreted merely as a protest against an unfair and unworkable wage formula which is now being imposed. That formula culminated a whole series of shocking developments which we find insupportable.

These developments add up to nothing less than a crisis in our defense mobilization program.

That crisis must be quickly resolved if America's mobilization program is to move ahead with the speed which our national skills, techniques and resources make possible.

The crisis has developed because the men who are in control of the mobilization program have ignored the necessity for "equality of sacrifice" by all the people. Only through such equality of sacrifice can we fully and effectively win the voluntary cooperation and the intense will to win of every American citizen.

The unworkable and unfair formula adopted by the Wage Stabilization Board is both a symbol and a symptom of this crisis in our domestic affairs.

It is a symptom of unconcern for the needs and welfare of the plain people of this country. It is a symbol of ill-considered action, lacking an understanding of the problems and viewpoints of wage earners.

The withdrawal of the labor representatives on the Wage Stabilization Board did not create the crisis; it merely called public attention to the dangers which confront us.

That problem affects not only wages but prices, taxes, rent control, manpower and housing, and the general management of the defense program.

Wages

We insist, as we have always insisted, that wage stabilization must rest upon effective control of the cost of living.

The only aspect of the defense mobilization program in which representatives of labor have been in a position to influence policy has been in the wage stabilization program. But the marriage between public members and industry members on the WSB is complete.

Last night, our representatives on that Board were called into a meeting and presented with a proposal. Industry members had already been consulted and their approval obtained before the meeting.

From the beginning, the major effort of the public members has been directed at winning the approval of industry representatives in complete disregard of the interests of labor.

The wage stabilization formula adopted by the industry and public members of the Wage Stabilization Board manifestly fails to consider the serious and legitimate economic needs of America's wage earners.

It is, in effect, a formula to un-stabilize peaceful labor-management relations throughout American industry. Rank and file workers in industry—the men and women who produce and transport the equipment for our defense needs—will recognize it as a blow to their living standards and security.

The formula for wage control approved by the Wage Stabilization Board is not a means of securing economic justice for millions of American wage earners. It is, in fact, a series of penalties and restrictions—imposed at a time when prices are continuing their upward rise. The wage formula is inflexible, inequitable and unworkable.

More than that, it constitutes a repudiation of a pledge by the Government that the wage stabilization program would not result in the abrogation of union-management collective bargaining contracts.

Contracts between management and labor—many of them containing express provisions for cost of living increases or productivity improvement benefits and other provisions that contribute to stability—are threatened.

Any order that will deprive millions of workers of benefits accruing to them under existing contracts will create instability and will impose unequal burdens of sacrifice not only on union members but on the overwhelming majority of wage earners—white collar and industrial workers alike—who compose the great proportion of our lower and middle income groups.

The results of this wage policy can only be dissatisfaction and serious unrest in industry.

The formula blocks any fair adjustment of wage inequities now and in the future affecting millions of employees in the low income brackets. It freezes such injustice.

We are convinced that the wage order of the WSB was dictated by the Director of Defense Mobilization. The people, the Congress, and the President must act quickly to repair this damage before it ruins the entire defense production program.

Prices

In the past, the United Labor Policy Committee has repeatedly pointed to the serious shortcomings of the Defense Production Act, which serves as the basis for our anti-inflation program.

We warned that loopholes and deficiencies in the Act rule out any chance of its effectiveness as a barrier to inflation. The Act must be changed. Until it is changed, we can expect no fundamental improvement in our anti-inflation program.

The price stabilization program is a cynical hoax on the American people. A so-called freeze on prices was announced at a moment when prices were higher than ever before in history.

Although "frozen" prices are rising steadily, Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston and Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle have both announced that nothing they can or will do under the Defense Production Act will stop the cost of living from rising another 6% by next summer. We point out that from Mar. 15, 1950, to Dec. 15, 1950, living costs also rose 6%—without any freeze.

Profit margins are being guaranteed. Every consideration possible is being given by Government price agencies to enhance the position of business and to protect fat profits. Flexibility, which has been denied in the wage stabilization order, is being guaranteed by the price stabilization orders.

Rent Control

The present Federal Rent Control Act expires on Mar. 31. Large sections of the nation have already been exempted from rent control. No authority exists to permit the Government to control rents in defense areas. Instead of moving quickly to extend and to tighten the rent control law, the Government is moving placidly toward the Mar. 31 deadline, when all rent controls expire.

Taxes

Individuals already have received a stiff increase in their taxes. The Congress is now considering a program to raise all taxes in such a manner that people in the lower income brackets will be forced to bear a still heavier share of the tax burden.

In 1943, individuals and corporations paid an almost equal share of the expenses of Government. Today, individuals are asked to bear 68% of the expenses of rearmament. Among individuals, the Congress is considering raising income taxes another 20% on low income groups while the increase to families with incomes of $25,000 a year would be only 14%.

This proposal would lift tax rates on low income families 45% over pre-Korean rates. The increase on the highest incomes would be almost nil. Many industries are escaping their taxation through special privilege loopholes in the law. No serious attempt is being made to plug these loopholes.

Manpower

The utter lack of concern with the viewpoints and experience of American labor was clearly shown in the arbitrary decision of Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson to transfer control of manpower policies from the Department of Labor to his own agency.

There was no need for such a move. The Department of Labor, with its expert knowledge of manpower problems and its deep-seated belief in traditional American policies of voluntary cooperation, is ideally equipped to formulate and direct the nation's manpower policies.

There can be no justification for Mr. Wilson's transfer of the manpower functions to the Office of Defense Mobilization other than a desire for monopoly power in preparation for the possible imposition of compulsory job controls upon the workers of this nation.

Small Business

Small business, whose facilities played an important part in the success of armament production in the last war is being frozen out of rearmament contracts this time. No attempt has been made to revive the smaller war plants corporation which enlisted small business so successfully in World War II.

Participation in Government

So far, virtually the entire defense mobilization program has been entrusted to the hands of a few men recruited from big business who believe they have a monopoly on experience, good ideas and patriotism. Not a single policy decision so far has reflected in any way the recommendations of labor or any other group except big business. In many decisions, the considered recommendations of labor have been totally and arbitrarily disregarded.

Our defense program cannot succeed without the full and wholehearted participation of every group in the country. So far, it has succeeded only in disaffecting and disillusioning men and women who must do the real work and make the major sacrifices.

Let no one doubt that labor is willing to bear its share of sacrifice. But we cannot bear the whole load. We cannot be a party to any program so adverse to the interests of the plain people.

Questions And Answers On Wage Freeze

THE FOLLOWING questions and answers on the 10% wage increase policy recommendation (Regulation No. 6) of the Wage Stabilization Board were adapted by the CIO News, with some additions, from official WSB releases.

Q. Is the 10% policy in effect?

A. No. It is a recommendation made by a majority of the Wage Stabilization Board—the industry and public members—which must be approved by Economic Stabilization Administrator Eric Johnston before it has any effect whatsoever. Meantime, all wages are frozen until some policy is approved, except for such increases as are permitted under other WSB regulations.

Q. What increases are permissible under this recommendation?

A. The workers in an "appropriate employe unit" are permitted general wage increases equal to 10% of the wage or salary level of such unit in January, 1950. The 10% is calculated on the basis of a "base pay period" which is the first regular payroll period ending on or after Jan. 15, 1950. General increases since January, 1950, must be subtracted from the 10% in computing any allowable increase in the future.

Q. What is an "appropriate employe unit?"

A. For changes in wage levels, a group composed of all employes in a bargaining unit, or in a company, or in an industry, whichever preserves contractual or historical relationships. For changes in salaries, each plant or major division of an employer, or each certified or recognized bargaining unit.

Q. How is the wage or salary level of an appropriate unit during the base period determined?

A. The level is the average straight time earnings received by the employes in the appropriate unit. It includes wages, salaries, incentives, commissions, bonuses and shift premiums. It does not include overtime premium payments or "fringe" items, such as employer contributions to pension, insurance or welfare funds, or vacation or holiday allowances. Nor does it include increases due to merit, promotion, reclassification, length of service and the like, which are permitted under General Regulation No. 5.

Q. What is included under the "general increases" permitted in the future?

A. Increases in wages, salaries or other forms of compensation including the so-called fringe items, such as vacations, holiday allowances, pensions and welfare plans, overtime, shift bonuses, etc.

(Note—Vacations, holiday allowances, pensions, etc., are NOT included in the 10% permitted if they were legally put into effect before Regulation No. 6 becomes effective. They ARE included in the 10% if they are put into effect after that date.)

Q. How about contracts signed in 1950 providing for wage increases after Jan. 25, 1951, such as in a cost-of-living escalator clause?

A. Such increases come within the definition of "general increase," and are permitted only within the 10% general increase allowable.

Q. Must an application for a general increase within the permissible limits be approved before it can be put into effect?

A. No. Prior authorization is NOT required. However, a report showing the essential facts and the method used to calculate the increase must be filed within 10 days after the increase becomes effective. Reports for most categories of workers, including those in industry, transportation, mercantile and commercial establishments, must be filed with the nearest office of the Wage-Hour Division. Reports covering executive, administrative, professional and outside sales personnel should be filed in accordance with instructions not yet drawn up.

Q. Why didn't the labor members of the WSB approve the recommended policy?

A. They refused to approve any formula that keeps wage movements within such a limited range while the cost of living is, to all practical intents and purposes, virtually uncontrolled. In protest, they tendered their resignations to President Truman.

Q. Have the resignations been accepted?

A. As this edition of the CIO News went to press, they had not.

Labor Mobilization Role Still Cloudy

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

AMERICAN labor's angry protest against big business domination of the defense program and policies last week set off a chain reaction of comments and conferences.

In Washington, heads of the the United Labor Policy Committee plunged into a series of meetings.

On Monday, they met for 25 minutes with President Truman and with Charles Murphy, one of the President's top assistants.

On Tuesday, they met for a long talk with Eric Johnston, Economic Stabilization Administrator. Johnston had on his desk the Wage Stabilization Board's recommended Regulation No. 6—in protest against which the three labor members resigned from the WSB.

On Wednesday, the union heads conferred in the office of George Harrison, head of the AFL Brotherhood of Railroad Clerks, who was named about two weeks ago as Johnston's special assistant.

On Thursday, they met again with Johnston. And on Friday, as the CIO News was going to press, nine members of the policy group were in a long meeting with Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, with whom the unions had engaged in a heated exchange of letters. Johnston and Murphy also were present.

ECONOMIC STABILIZER ERIC JOHNSTON (third from the left) gets labor's grievance concerning the proposed wage stabilization formula. Left to right, AFL Pres. William Green, Pres. George M. Harrison of the AFL Railway Clerks and special assistant to Johnston; Johnston, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Machinists and Chairman George Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives Association.

TWO POSITIVE gains were noted from the action of the United Labor Policy Committee in blasting the conduct of the defense program and ordering its representatives on the Wage Stabilization Board to resign:

1. For the first time in weeks, labor was getting its message to the public. Earlier protests and statements had been ignored or played down by press, radio and defense officials.

2. Wilson finally offered to organized labor a top policy post in his defense set-up.

The United Labor Policy Committee—speaking for CIO, AFL, railroad brotherhoods and the machinists union—had said in its Feb. 16 statement that the nation is faced with "nothing less than a crisis in our defense mobilization program" that "must be quickly resolved. . . ."

"The crisis has developed because the men who are in control of the mobilization program have ignored the necessity for 'equality of sacrifice' by all the people," they said.

"The unworkable and unfair wage formula adopted by the Wage Stabilization Board is both a symbol and a symptom of this crisis in our domestic affairs. . . . (but) that problem affects not only wages but prices, taxes, rent control, man-power and housing, and the general management of the defense program."

WHILE THE labor group was issuing its statement, Wilson's office was insisting to reporters that the former GE president was simply waiting for labor to nominate a man to his top staff.

A CIO spokesman told reporters that no such message had come from Wilson "either by personal conversation, mail, telephone, telegram, wig-wag or smoke-signal."

On Feb. 17, however, letters did arrive from Wilson (dated Feb. 15 and mailed at 5 p.m., Feb. 16), claiming that he was waiting for labor's nomination. Monday, after a meeting of the Labor Policy Committee, a letter was sent to Wilson which said that "you must know that this is not true."

Recalling that labor spokesmen had proposed workers' representation on the Wilson top staff at a meeting in January, the letter said that "you manifested a negative reaction at that time . . . and stated only that you would give this matter consideration."

"Your belated invitation has now been received and will be given careful consideration," it continued.

"We would be remiss, however, if we did not restate that the issue is not merely the appointment of an individual to your staff. The issue goes far deeper than that. It goes to the basic policies underlying the entire defense mobilization program.

"THE MILLIONS of American workers we represent are becoming increasingly concerned and disturbed by accumulating evidence that our defense mobilization program is not being built upon the principle of equality of sacrifice.

"Instead we find it reflects only the philosophy of big business."

At the White House meeting with President Truman, four leaders represented the United Labor Policy Committee. They were CIO Vice-Pres. Emil Rieve (Pres. Philip Murray is recuperating from a recent attack of virus influenza); AFL Pres. William Green; Machinists Pres. Al Hayes, and Chairman George Leighty of the Railroad Labor Executives Association.

After the talk with the President, Leighty said the Chief Executive had listened sympathetically. He added that time would tell what progress is being made.

THE UNION leaders' complaints covered a wide range of grievances. Here they are, in a nutshell, with the progress, if any, toward correcting them:

1. Wage controls—"inequitable and unworkable." Wages are frozen on a temporary basis, and the disputed stabilization order was still under consideration by Johnston late last week. Union representatives have resigned from the wage board.

2. Big business control of mobilization agency—Wilson has now offered labor a top policy level position, though without yet spelling out the detailed powers and responsibilities of the job.

3. Rent control—expires Mar. 31. So far, no new legislation has been introduced, though Washington gossip says the administration has a bill about ready to be given to Congress. It will bring strong opposition from the real estate lobby.

4. Price control—described by labor as a "cynical hoax." No effort has yet been made to improve the Defense Production Act, which is the basic anti-inflation law. Various proposals under consideration by the U. S. price control agency will have effect of letting prices go even higher than at present.

5. Manpower program—labor wants it continued in Dept. of labor. But ODM Boss Wilson insists top policy commission on manpower problems should be kept in his office under supervision of Arthur Flemming. Labor spokesmen complain that with big business domination of that agency, voluntary manpower measures—as in World War II—may be given the sack.

6. Tax proposals—unions say say they would place the heaviest share of the burden on lower-income groups. Tax proposals are now under study by House Ways and Means Committee, and the CIO has urged closing of loopholes, higher corporation taxes, fairer distribution of income tax increases.

Labor Members Tell Why They Don't Like WSB Wage Policy

IN 13 PAGES OF well-chosen words, the labor members of the Wage Stabilization Board told last week why they had resigned rather than accept a wage formula which is "unjust, discriminatory and unworkable."

The document—formally described as the dissenting opinion of the labor members of the WSB to Regulation No. 6—was signed by all three labor representatives.

They are Emil Rieve, head of the CIO Textile Workers Union; Pres. Harry Bates of the AFL Bricklayers, who had been represented on the WSB by John Murphy, the union's secretary-treasurer; and Elmer Walker, secretary of the Machinists.

The trio withdrew from the WSB in the early morning hours of Feb. 16. They prepared their dissent on Feb. 19, and then submitted their resignations to the White House.

Meanwhile the proposed Regulation No. 6—supported by the industry and public members of the board—is being studied, for approval or veto, by Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston. And the three resignations are presumably awaiting action by President Truman.

The dissent was based both on general and specific criticisms of the majority group's proposed regulation.

It noted that the Defense Production Act passed last year, and the Dec. 18 statement of the WSB, both emphasized that wage stabilization was "intended to be only one prong of a many-pronged attack on inflation . . . wage stabilization was listed as one of the eighteen types of action necessary."

But, the trio said, the regulation approved by the six industry and public members of the board "deliberately ignores these basic principles."

". . . The restrictive and harsh provisions of the Regulation, in effect, place the primary burden of sacrifice involved in the current mobilization effort only on one segment of the population, those who depend upon wages and salaries for their living," they said.

"There is no single provision in the Regulation which is responsible for this result. Rather, the entire tenor of the Regulation is one of harsh restriction.

"No arrangement is made for handling cases involving hardships, inequities or sub-standards."

ANOTHER BASIC weakness of the proposed order, the dissenting members said, is that it makes no provision for helping to settle labor-management disputes.

No wage board, the statement said, "can hope to set a wage policy and then remain aloof from the controversies which might develop over its application or interpretation." Other government mediation boards can't do the job, "since only the Board can interpret the meaning of its policy."

The 10% pay rise permit proposed in the board regulation, the dissent said, will upset important union contracts, which have brought stability to many industries.

This provision is weakened still more by a clause that in figuring future living cost increases, the "new and revised" Consumers Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics will be used.

Hundreds of contracts based on the "regular" Consumers Price Index will thus be abrogated, the dissent said, and industrial unrest will follow.

Wholesale Prices Are Stratospheric, Except That Of Unrefined Sugar

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index edged into the stratosphere in the week ended Feb. 20 with a rise of 6c to $7.31, the second highest point it has ever reached.

The new figure is but 5c below the all-time high of $7.36 chalked up on July 13, 1948. It is 22.7% above the pre-Korean level of $5.96 and 25.4% higher than a year ago, when it stood at $5.83. The index represents the total wholesale prices per pound of 31 commonly used foods and usually is a tipoff on future changes in retail prices.

The U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics cost of living index for the month ending Jan. 15, normally due last week, will be delayed until the first week in March because of a long-projected overhauling. This will add to the items covered such things as frozen and baby foods, hospitalization costs, rent boosts and television sets.

One of the anomolies in the present era of high prices, the Wall Street Journal pointed out on Feb. 19, is the cost of sugar. In the past the price of sugar has always been sent zooming and shortages have been created by scare buying—it went to 25c a pound in World War I, and the lack of it often created a problem for the housewife during World War II.

But now, the Journal reported, the price is going down. A unit of 100 pounds of unrefined sugar which cost $6.35 in New York early last month now brings only $5.90—a mere 5% above a year ago, the paper said.

"The trouble with sugar is there's so much of it around," the Journal commented.

Labor Got Fed Up So It Took A Walk

Union Members' Walk-Out On Wage Stabilization Board Was Much More Than Protest Against Unfair And Unworkable Wage Policy

By ALLAN L. SWIM

RESENTMENT had been boiling up in the labor movement for weeks before union members finally walked out on the Wage Stabilization Board.

It was aimed at those who expressed a "labor be damned" attitude and ignored the unions' pleas that there be equality of sacrifice in the nation's mobilization effort.

The walkout wasn't aimed alone at an unfair and unworkable wage policy worked out by the industry and "public" members of WSB. It was aimed also at those in the mobilization effort who have been pushing labor around.

The United Labor Policy Committee stated the matter in simple and understandable terms when it issued a statement saying:

"Our decision here (to leave WSB) cannot and must not be interpreted merely as a protest against an unfair and workable wage policy which is now being imposed. That formula culminated a whole series of shocking developments which we find insupportable.

"These developments add up to nothing less than a crisis in our defense mobilization program.

"The crisis must be quickly resolved if America's mobilization program is to move ahead with the speed which our national skills, techniques and resources make possible.

"The crisis has developed because the men who are in control of the mobilization program have ignored the necessity for 'equality of sacrifice' by all the people.

"Only through such equality of sacrifice can we fully and effectively win the voluntary cooperation and intense will to win of every American citizen."

THERE HAS BEEN no equality of sacrifice—or anything even approaching it—since the war started in Korea.

Prices and profits have been climbing steadily for nearly seven months. In some instances they have skyrocketed.

The purchasing power of the nation's wage earners has dropped with each price increase. Lowered purchasing power means a lower standard of living.

But that's only part of the picture:

No real effort has been made to establish effective rent control or to provide adequate housing for defense workers.

TAX LEGISLATION which has been proposed or enacted since the beginning of the crisis was designed to place an unfairly heavy burden on those least able to bear it.

And labor's participation in the whole mobilization program up to date has been little more than "window dressing." It has been given little voice in the making of decisions which really count.

Labor's complaint isn't merely that nearly all of the top jobs in the mobilization effort were given to men recruited from big business.

Labor is burned up because these men have been behaving as if they believed they had a monopoly on experience, good ideas and patriotism.

Policy decisions made up to date have reflected only a big business viewpoint.

Labor—and other groups—have been generally ignored. Recommendations of labor have been completely disregarded in many instances.

So, why shouldn't labor be hot under the collar? Why shouldn't it complain?

So there won't be misunderstanding on an important point—

LABOR DOESN'T want to run the mobilization show. It doesn't want all the top jobs for its men. It doesn't want to place big business completely on the sidelines.

Labor doesn't want to confiscate fair profits and it doesn't want to tax business out of existence.

It merely wants a mobilization program which will provide for the greatest possible equality of sacrifice and in which the important segments of our population will be given a real policy-making voice.

DANGEROUS TREND

It seems that nearly everybody wants to get into the act.

Trouble is, however, that many of the "amateurs" can't or won't differentiate between witch hunting and Red hunting.

There was a time—not so long ago—when we had only two big groups investigating the Commie situation. One was the FBI and the other was the House Un-American Activities Committee.

The latter frequently made a mess of things. It smeared innocent liberals and it fell into disrepute with those who believed in full exercise of civil rights.

But now there are "un-American activities" groups all over the place.

The Senate now has one—a Judiciary subcommittee headed by Senator McCarran. It apparently intends to reopen a number of cases previously handled by the House "Red hunters."

A number of cities have enacted "anti-subversive" ordinances and several states are preparing to set up machinery to battle the Commies.

The federal government has a loyalty set-up for its own employes and the President recently appointed a group, headed by Admiral Nimitz, to investigate both loyalty and preservation of individual rights.

As the situation now stands, it's likely that sleuths—some of whom hardly know the difference between communism and rheumatism—will be falling all over each other.

And their antics surely will make more difficult the already hard FBI task of keeping tab on our real subversives.

THERE IS REAL DANGER IN IT

It might appear on the surface that all the probing in process or contemplated as a result of so many agencies would cause the Commies to go running lickety-split to their rat holes—or wherever they hide when the "heat" is on.

But such is not the case. Far from it..

Such a set-up can result only in the type of confusion which helps the Reds.

There is another danger with which everybody should be deeply concerned.

Politically-minded investigators, looking for headlines, already have demonstrated callous disregard for the rights of persons called before them.

Most "un-American" probe groups seem to think they have a perfect right to use the guilt-by-association theory and to deny the accused a fair opportunity to clear themselves.

To a number of persons who are checking on subversives there is no difference between extreme liberalism and communism. Yet many of the extreme liberals are among our most potent Commie fighters.

Real subversives should be dealt with sternly—but at the same time the civil rights of our people must be protected.

We cannot afford to drift toward police state methods in an effort to combat those who would impose a police state on us if they could.

Is Sen. Taft Eisenhower Or Napoleon?

THE WRITERS of PAC Pipeline often drive important points home by using only a few words—punchy, sometimes sarcastic, ones. For example, the following from a recent issue of Political Action of the Week.

The great debate in Washington is no longer on whether we should join Europe in preparing ourselves for possible aggression. It is whether Senator Taft thinks he's General Eisenhower or Napoleon.

The recent atomic bomb tests in Nevada shattered some windows in Las Vegas and, we hope, some delusions in Moscow.

Net income of U. S. Steel in 1950 was over $215 million, the highest since 1917. Sen. Mundt (R. S.D.) has called for Southern Democrats and Republicans to stand together in the battle against "the trend to socialism."

Rep. Katharine St. George (R. N.Y.) told the House of Representatives the other day, "There is no reason why a woman should not have maternity benefits any more than that a veteran should not have a bonus. She is doing just as much for her country as the soldier and in both instances they are each doing something the other could not do."

The line of women veterans forms at the right.

A New York firm is now producing a synthetic chamois skin said to wear three times longer and cost one-third as much as the real thing. Thus technological unemployment comes even to the goats.

Rep. Vail (R. Ill.) wants laws to hamstring the American Newspaper Guild (CIO), claiming union members cannot be unbiased in reporting news. Non-union members, of course, can be just as unbiased as Rep. Vail.

Rep. Brown (R. O.) is screaming because the House Un-American Activities Committee won't make public the "testimony" of an ex-inmate of a mental institution who has been convicted of crime and of giving false testimony under oath. Anything for a headline, is Brown's motto.

No Jim Crow, No School Funds

THE GEORGIA Legislature last week shook its fist at the growing tendency of federal courts to outlaw segregation in education and passed a law which can easily precipitate a real education crisis in the Peachtree State.

By a nearly unanimous vote, the Legislature said that if any court ordered a Negro admitted to a Georgia public school or college, and if the school followed the order, the school would stop receiving state support. And further, if the court said such withholding of funds was unconstitutional, then none of the schools in the entire public school system would receive any money.

Involved is a $93 million State education budget, every penny of which could be frozen, say, if the Univ. of Georgia were ordered to admit a Negro, refused because of the state law, and the law was declared unconstitutional.

This is the same Legislature which not so long ago passed one of the toughest laws against the Ku Klux Klan which is on the books anywhere.

John W. Popham, writing Feb. 18 in the New York Times, commented:

"TO THE seasoned observer of Georgia's politics, there was nothing strange or conflicting in these legislative developments. . . . When the (anti-Klan) law was passed, observers at the State House were convinced that the Talmadge forces had sensed that the Klan no longer was a political power, and that there was even ample evidence that reluctance to stand firm against masked bands was becoming a political liability in small towns where Talmadge strength always has centered. . . ."

(Gov. Herman Talmadge, son of "red-gallus" Gene, was elected on a white supremacy platform.)

"At the same time," Popham continued, "these political analysts held that the Talmadge forces were showing an equal alertness in respect to the white supremacy issues that could be developed in connection with the recent federal court ruling. . . . Some critics of the governor pointed out . . . that the Talmadge segment has in mind that the governor would stand to benefit in a political way in a campaign with a beclouded school issue marked by a crisis."

Ohio CIO Council Holds Institutes

The Ohio CIO Council has launched a series of Legislative Weekend Institutes aimed at acquainting CIO leaders with the mechanics of the legislative process and the major issues affecting labor which are due to get before the Legislature.

The first was held at Portsmouth. Others have been scheduled for Columbus, Dayton and Cincinnati. Participants also get a refresher course in the techniques of getting accurate and timely information on legislative activities into the hands of CIO members, and a course in basic public relations for winning outside support for the CIO program.

Noisy Machinery Brought Wage Offer

THIS IS a story about a plant manager who kept saying "no" but changed his mind suddenly as an indirect result of some noisy machinery.

The machinery was in a small plant in the "deep" South, which employed about 50 men, all of whom were Negroes.

All of them belonged to a CIO union—and the man to whom the manager kept saying "no" was a CIO representative sent in from a nearby city to attempt to negotiate a contract.

Here is how it happened:

THE PLANT, in an area where there were few unions and considerable discrimination against Negroes, paid only the minimum required by the Wage-Hour Law.

The union wanted more and asked that a white man be sent in to negotiate a contract renewal which would include a wage increase.

The CIO man arrived on the scene, talked to local union officers about their situation and then called on the plant manager.

The company official was told his pay scale was substandard and that it should be increased under terms of a new contract.

He said "no" and he didn't budge a bit—no matter how long the CIO representative talked.

THE CIO representative didn't want a strike because he feared its consequences—and he felt that a majority of the workers didn't want to walk out on their jobs.

So he kept negotiating.

But, finally, he decided more drastic measures would be in order.

He called a meeting of the union and explained what had happened so far.

"All the boss has said up to this point is 'no' and I think he'll keep right on saying it unless you demonstrate that you mean business," he said.

After considerable discussion, the group voted to authorize a committee to call a strike whenever it considered such a move necessary.

THE CIO representative called on the plant manager a short time later and told him about the strike vote.

The company official, convinced that a strike would never materialize, said "no" again—and again.

The unionist argued—and then he said he guessed he'd just have to "pull the men off the job."

Still the plant manager said "no."

He obviously felt that the union representative was bluffing.

The union man didn't want a strike if one could be avoided—but he didn't know whether it could be avoided.

He decided as he left the company office that he should report quickly to the men in the plant—so he walked toward the place where the production men worked.

INSIDE THE PLANT he began talking—with difficulty—to a union officer. The machinery made so much noise they had difficulty talking.

"Call the men out on the sidewalk for a couple of minutes so I can report to them on what happened," the union representative said.

The men left their jobs and walked outside where it was quiet. The CIO negotiator made a brief report on his meeting with the manager.

And while this was happening the manager looked out his window and saw the men. He obviously thought the strike had started or certainly was not far away.

The next day the company official offered the union a pay raise of 5c an hour and an improved vacation clause. A.L.S.

'Enlightened' Soviet Program Blights Austrian Workers

FIFTY-THREE members of a Communist union in the Russian zone of Austria lost their jobs recently.

They made the mistake of criticizing their working conditions, and had the unmitigated gall to ask for their premium pay for dirty work—and squawked when they didn't get it. Every last one of them was fired, including 35 who were members and functionaries of the Communist Party.

The dispute and its result were aired in a recent issue of the Arbeiter Zeitung, the official organ of the Social Democratic party in Austria.

The paper reported that disgruntled workers at the "Bau und Montage," a Soviet-controlled mineral oil construction enterprise, complained of failure to collect extra pay for hard labor and dirty jobs.

One of the stop stewards said "heavy fights" were always necessary to make the Russian managers pay supplements for undesirable work.

THE WORKERS complained of toiling in oil up to their knees. One said his Communist manager writes down on the blackboard the names of workers who do not meet the scheduled output figure, and then threatens them with immediate discharge.

Still another victim of the Soviet-boasted "enlightened program for the world's workers" described how a group had been obliged to work on the construction of a dam, standing up to their stomachs in icy cold water with rain pouring down. The company had only two pairs of waterproof boots.

The reason given by Communist officials for the 53 dismissals was "reorganization of the plant."

WHEN the sacked workers complained to party functionaries at Communist Party headquarters, they were given the brush-off, according to the Arbeiter Zeitung.

The workers' delegation had no success in winning their jobs back from the Communist chieftains.

The charge still stands: 53 Austrian workers lost their jobs because they dared to open their mouths.

If You Beef Loudly About Job You're Likely To Succeed, University Survey Shows

Sneer at the foreman. Snap at the superintendent. Beard the big boss in his walnut-panelled den and wave your fist under his nose, with sound effects.

That's the way to get ahead. Or, at least, that's what can be concluded from the results of a four-year study at the Prudential Insurance Co. by the Institute of Social Research of the Univ. of Michigan. What the investigators found out boils down to this:

The man or woman who beefs longest and loudest about his job, his boss and his employer usually makes the best worker. And the guy who buzzes about his job happy as a bee in a clover patch doesn't produce as much as the man who grouses.

"While this type will often spend a lunch hour denouncing his job," the report said of the beefer, "the driving urge to succeed will send this same subject back to work fired with more productive energy."

The survey also disclosed that no visible increase in production can be traced to costly athletic and recreation programs some companies stage for their employes; that the prodding of slow workers by foremen isn't much help, and that the suggestion box is of little value.

The investigators found a good word for unorthodox foremen.

"The heads of the best working sections were highly critical of management," they said, "didn't keep a close check on the production of those under them, and, as a matter of fact, give their workers a free hand."

The Prudential Co. appeared slightly disconcerned by the results of the survey.

"On the basis of the study," said a spokesman, "it may be that instead of firing a guy who threatened to punch his boss in the nose we should have promoted him."

Murray Pays Tribute To German Union Leader

Pres. Philip Murray expressed the regret of the CIO to the German Federation of Trade Unions last week on the death of its president, Hans Boeckler.

A life-long Social Democrat who fought Nazi and Communist with equal vigor, Boeckler died in Cologne Feb. 16, a few days before his 76th birthday and just after winning the greatest victory of his career, the right of unions to a share equal to that of management in supervising the coal mining, iron and steel industries.

He was probably more responsible than any other individual for the rise of a unified democratic labor organization in Germany with no political or church affiliations.

CIO Routs Longshoremen In Oregon Fish Cannery Poll

By WILLIAM MILLIS

FISH CANNERY workers of the Pacific Northwest are sticking with CIO, joining in the nation-wide march of members of CIO-expelled Communist-dominated outfits who are returning to CIO.

First major election test came in the Astoria, Ore., area with CIO Columbia River Cannery and Allied Workers Local Industrial Union 1747 defeating a local of the Longshoremen's Fishermen's division by a two-and-a-half to one vote.

The NLRB representation election covered 1600 workers in Astoria and Warrenton-Hammond, Ore., and Ilwaco, Wash., biggest Northwest fishing center, on the lower Columbia River.

The ballot count was 789 for CIO LIU 1747 to 291 for ILWU Local 3-5, the Columbia River Fishermen's Protective Union, with 74 challenged. Although several plants were closed, 1160 or 70% of the eligible workers voted.

The Feb. 15 balloting in the Astoria area was the first in the Northwest since CIO expelled the Longshoremen and Fishermen for putting Communist Party politics above U. S. trade unionism.

Since that expulsion, a number of former Fishermen's Union cannery locals have swung over to CIO—with the Aberdeen, Wash., local transferring 100%—and CIO petitions for representation elections are pending at Aberdeen, Bellingham and other points on Puget Sound.

(Earlier, two former IFAWA locals in Alaska, the United Trollers of Alaska and the Bristol Bay resident cannery workers, rejoined CIO and have established bargaining rights.)

OUTCOME of the Astoria election was hailed by Chester Dusten, CIO regional director for Oregon, who was in charge of the organizing campaign which reached a peak in the final week.

Dusten pledged full CIO assistance to the cannery workers' local in forthcoming negotiations. Low wage rates (the lowest in West Coast fish canneries) and failure to win health and welfare plans under the former ILWU organization were major issues in the campaign.

The Astoria CRFPU, including both cannery workers and fishermen, originally had voted 4-to-1 in referendum against merger of IFAWA and ILWU. After the merger was carried out, the cannery workers attempted to vote to quit ILWU, but were blocked by court action by the latter organization.

Formation of CIO Local 1747 came last summer after a quick card sign-up drive and filing of an election petition. But the NLRB delayed the election until last week, about six weeks before expiration of the old union's contract.

Officers of the new CIO union are Carl McCormack, president; Sophia Urell, secretary, and Florence Kruse, business agent.

Nearby locals of the CIO Woodworkers backed CIO Local 1747 in the campaign.

Assisting in the campaign were CIO Field Reps. John Brost, Portland; Barney Engelking, John Glenn. and Harry Tucker, Seattle; and George B. Roberts, CIO-PAC Western area director, of Los Angeles.

Is Winnipeg C. Of C. Drifting To Socialism?

The Chamber of Commerce is starting "a dangerous trend toward socialism," charged 600 insurance underwriters at Winnipeg, Manitoba. The Chamber's sin: sponsorship of an insurance scheme covering hundreds of small business firms in a city-wide group insurance plan. The Chamber intends to administer the plan, to be underwritten by the Great West Life Insurance Co.

The group plan has been adopted in many eastern Canadian cities, including Hamilton and Brantford, and the west coast city of New Westminster. Costs would be shared equally by employers and employes. The plan would provide life insurance, accidental death and dismemberment benefits, hospital and surgical benefits for employes and dependents, and weekly indemnities for accidents and illness. That's "socialized insurance," say the insurance men.

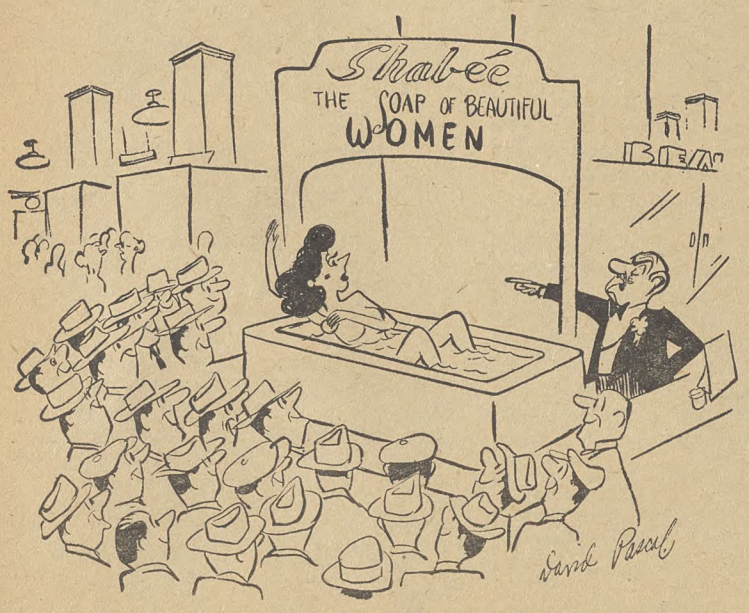
Weigh Lesser Nations' Need, Planning Association's Plea

ANY PROGRAM to help the lesser nations of the world must be patterned to the needs and aspirations of the countries to be helped if it is expected to succeed, according to a statement of principles drawn up by the steering committee of the National Planning Association.

The association is a non-profit, non-political organization formed for planning in agriculture, business, labor and the professions. Labor is represented on the steering committee by Clinton S. Golden, formerly vice president of the CIO Steelworkers and now consultant to the Economic Cooperation Administration, and Louis Stulberg, vice president of the AFL Ladies Garment Workers.

Paramount in the success of an aid program, the NPA group maintained, is its political acceptance and cooperation by the host government.

Other considerations necessary to determine the degree of success, it added, are proper balance among various types of activities that are undertaken, the extent and rapidity of the changes in cultural practices and patterns that may be required, and the methods used to make it effective.



"Your hands and face would have been sufficient for demonstration purposes, Miss Simpkins."

Arrest Of 2 Organizers Is Protested

THE ARREST and jailing of two CIO organizers during a meeting with a group of Negro lumber mill workers at Dublin, Ga., has been protested to U. S. Atty. Gen. McGrath.

Held incommunicado in a dirty jail for 22 hours and finally freed when their release was forced by a writ of habeas corpus were C. H. Gillman, Georgia director of the CIO Organizing Committee, and Clyde Brock.

The protest to McGrath was made by Robert S. Cahoon, attorney for the CIO Textile Workers. He pointed out that the incident was not an isolated one and "indicates that the laws relating to civil rights and to labor relations, and their enforcement, are shockingly inadequate."

Gillman and Brock were seized by Sheriff Carlos Gay during a meeting with 45 Negro workers at a store. Gay said he went to the establishment to execute a whisky search warrant.

"The first thing that come to my mind was that they might be Communists," Gay said later. "I didn't know who they were or what they were doing. I suspected communism and I arrested them and put them in jail until I could find out."

Until released through the habeas corpus procedure, Gillman and Brock were denied counsel, the use of a telephone and all contact with the outside. The two are citizens of Georgia and had identification papers, so Gay could have found out who they were and why they were there, had he wished, at the time he arrested them, Cahoon said.

Gay gave no excuse for driving away the Negro workers, who had joined the CIO and were being advised on collective bargaining by the organizers when Gay swooped down.

Irving Levy, Auto Workers Counsel, Dies

A GREAT friend of the labor movement and a fighter for civil rights was lost at Washington, D. C., Feb. 16 with the death of Irving J. Levy, general counsel of CIO Auto Workers. Levy, 46, plunged from a bridge in Washington.

"Irving Levy made a great contribution to our union during the three years he served it as our general counsel," said UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther. "During a long period of years prior to his association with UAW he had been a staunch and courageous fighter for labor and the cause of civil rights.

"He was a man of great integrity and sincere convictions. He had been ill for some time before his tragic death. UAW and the whole labor movement and the cause of democracy itself suffer a severe loss with his death."

AMONG THE causes in which Levy was most interested was the fight to end racial segregation. He was prominent in litigation for equal treatment of Negro railroad firemen, and in ending the segregation rules of the American Bowling Congress.

A graduate of City College of New York, Levy entered private practice in that city. In 1934 he went to Washington as an enforcement attorney for the NRA. Later he was with the Resettlement Administration and the Agriculture Dept., and was general counsel of the Farm Security Administration.

He joined the Labor Dept. in 1938 as assistant general counsel of the Wage & Hour Division. In 1940 he was named assistant solicitor of the Labor Dept. and later associate solicitor. In 1943 he joined the Justice Dept.'s War Claims Division and later participated in prosecution of war claims cases in Germany.

Levy left a wife and two children, John, 11, and Susan 15.

TV Reported Cutting Size Of Adult Classes

In 50 cities that have television facilities attendance at adult night schools has dropped, while in cities without TV adult education grew. Of TV set-owners, 58% read fewer books after they bought a set.

That's what Frieda B. Hennock, a member of the Federal Communications Commission, told the Adult Educational Council at Philadelphia in calling for establishment of more than 500 educational TV stations. The FCC has been urged by education groups to set aside for educational purposes a fourth of the 2000 TV channels available. Who opposed the move? You guessed it, the TV industry.

Leadership Institute Planned At FDR Center

The eighth annual CIO leadership training institute, sponsored by the Michigan CIO Council and the education departments of international unions, will be held in the FDR-CIO Labor Center, near Port Huron, Mich., from June 24 through July 20.

Dates for the school were moved ahead so as not to interfere with union participation in next fall's election campaigns. Classes will be held Sunday evenings through Friday evenings.

Leadership School Set For May 6-12

THE FIRST of the 1951 series of CIO summer leadership training schools, conducted by the CIO Department of Education and Research, will be held May 6 to 12 at the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

Cost per delegate to the one-week session will be $40, plus transportation. It will be the fifth summer school conducted for the South, and is jointly sponsored by the CIO Southern Organizing Committee.

Instruction will include legislative issues, labor history, economics, union-building, farm-labor relations, public speaking and parliamentary procedures.

The staff will consist of Stanley H. Ruttenberg and George Guernsey, of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research; Lucy Randolph Mason, Paul Christopher and John Ramsey of the CIO Southern Organizing Committee; Joe Glazer of the Rubber Workers, and Lou Krainock of the Packinghouse Workers.

The Highlander school, high in the Cumberland mountains of Tennessee, was founded some 20 years ago as a cooperative center for farmers and industrial workers. It is run on a non-discriminatory basis and has been a center for many CIO schools in the past.

THE SUMMER session will be precceded by a series of two-day conferences, held at different locations, at which the Education and Research Dept. will give briefings to local leaders on subjects of current importance such as the mobilization problem and international relations.

One was held at Roanoke, Va., Feb. 23-24. Others are scheduled as follows: Richmond, Va., March 16-17; Wilmington, Del., April 6-7; Norfolk, Va., April 13-14; for North and South Carolina, April 21-22; and at New Orleans, La., April 27-29. The three Virginia sessions are being jointly sponsored by the Virginia State CIO Committee on Education and Discrimination.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington, D. C.

Camden, N. J. Group Asks CIO Affiliation

Another advance was scored recently by CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee when employes of the Equitable Beneficial, Life, Health & Accident Co., Camden, N. J., decided to ask for affiliation with the committee.

This group has been represented by the Distributive, Processing & Office Workers, which absorbed the discredited United Office & Professional Workers, who last May negotiated a contract containing neither pay increases nor other improvements.

Lithographers Union Issues Short History

The CIO Lithographers have issued a new booklet, "Thumbnail History," which describes the progress of the union from the time it was founded in 1882 until the present. The booklet, prepared by Secy.-Treas. Martin Grayson, may be obtained without charge by writing to the union at 143 West 51st St., New York 19, N. Y.

CIO Gives Senate Group Facts Of Life On Housing

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

"THE SITUATION is so crucial that our organization feels that not a single day of a single construction worker who could be producing housing should go wasted because of the failure to provide an opportunity for employment of his skills to meet this critical need."

Thus Leo Goodman, secretary of the CIO Housing Committee, told the Senate Banking Committee on Feb. 19—and the committee sat up and listened.

Jointly with John Edelman, legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers, Goodman presented testimony showing:

—That a sizable proportion of our population is paying 35% or more of its total income for shelter alone, and that this proportion comes from the middle and lower income groups.

—That the military housing situation is so snafu that the armed forces are wasting staggering amounts of money training new personnel because they cannot get trainees to re-enlist.

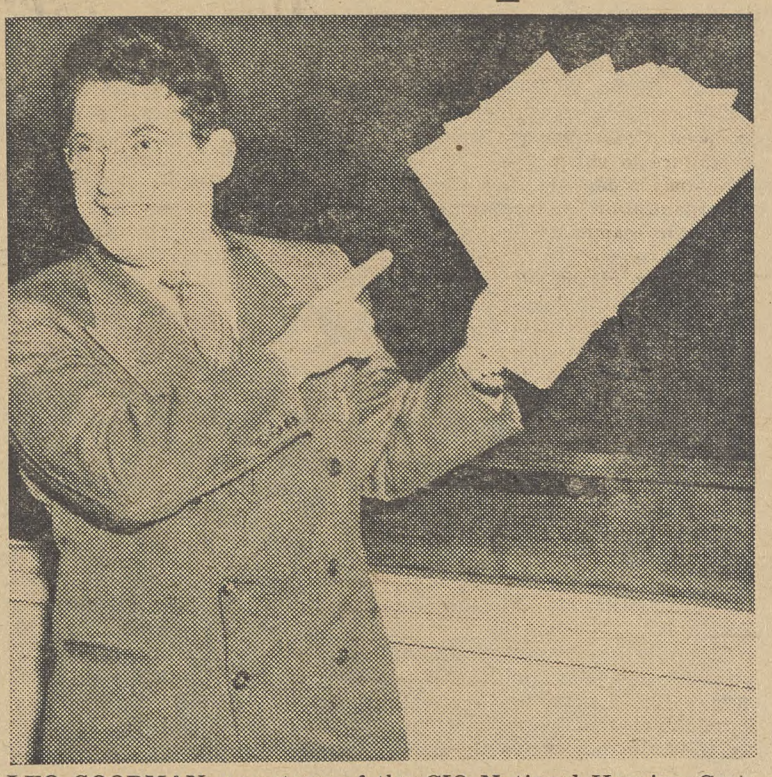
—That housing around defense plants is so unsatisfactory that the quit rate is alarming and that recruitment of skilled labor is getting more and more difficult.

—That the government, particularly the Atomic Energy Commission, is backing away from this problem instead of squaring up to it.

—That a truly impressive housing program could be started almost at once, at no additional expense to the taxpayer, if the government would simply sell some of the housing it now owns to the people who are now occupying that housing.

—That the credit restrictions recently put on purchases of new housing, far from being anti-inflationary in effect, have made it impossible for middle and lower income groups to buy housing. At the same time they do nothing to prevent the wealthy from bidding up prices on existing luxury housing.

—That the government's housing agencies have been complacent, if not worse, in the face of concerted pressure by the real estate lobby. They have consented to artificial limitation of upper-crust housing starts, in order to keep up the price; over-pricing of rental housing built under government-guaranteed mortgage plans; and almost complete lack of action in the lower-priced housing field where the need is worst.



LEO GOODMAN, secretary of the CIO National Housing Committee, holds aloft a sample of the evidence on the national housing crisis as he testifies before the Senate Banking Committee.

—That the result has been a bonanza to private builders, at public risk.

—That proposals for defense housing now before Congress seek to perpetuate this situation, since they merely call for further federal guaranteeing of mortgages issued by private builders.

"THE CONGRESS," Goodman declared, "should determine that the best possible use of materials and of the available manpower should be so channeled as to produce as many homes as possible in the places and at the prices where the need of the national defense shall dictate.

"If the materials do not flow to the areas of greatest need, an allocation program must correct the situation. We must produce at least 200,000 units of housing for military establishments, 100,000 units of public housing for low income groups who cannot afford an economic rent at their present frozen wages, and as many additional homes for those now doubled up or living in places distant from their work as the materials and manpower make possible."

Goodman and Edelman both told the committee they thought the present program amounted to no program at all.

ON THE MILITARY front, the Federal Housing Administration has made the already bad housing situation worse, Goodman charged, by refusing to approve mortgage insurance for privately built housing at or near military establishments.

One of FHA's excuses is that the government can't guarantee the risk to a builder if the defense establishment can't guarantee that the military base is permanently located where the building is needed.

Another variation of this excuse is that FHA policies forbid guaranteeing mortgages in "single-industry" areas, because the single industry might fold up and leave the government holding the bag on the housing.

The excuses seem reasonable. But the fact remains that because of this policy, and in the absence of a more sensible method of getting military housing built (such as just going ahead and spending some federal money to build it), the situation around defense establishments is truly desperate, and the FHA still refuses to approve much if any private building, even near permanent bases.

If Congress adopts the proposals now before it, Goodman and Edelman added, it will not break this bottleneck, since all that is proposed is to give FHA more money to refuse to use to guarantee mortgages near military bases!

THE SAME GOES, they pointed out, for housing now desperately needed in and near defense production areas. In this category, FHA has gone a step further than simply going very slowly on mortgages. In cooperation with the Federal Reserve Board, it has refused to relax the new and extraordinarily severe housing credit restrictions for these areas, although the law permits this to be done.

The effect is that, on top of holding down the building of new housing, the government is preventing most people from buying what already exists. And the rent situation comes right into this picture such new housing as has been built for rental is out of sight for most defense workers, because it is exempted from rent control if totally privately built, or the rent is too high in many instances if the government has guaranteed the mortgage and thereby approved the rental figures.

(The credit controls work this way: in order to buy a house, the purchaser must make a certain down payment and undertake to pay off the balance in a certain length of time. Recently these requirements were marked way up, as an "anti-inflation" move. Now, according to the Federal Reserve Board's own figures, roughly half the families with incomes of $5000 a year or less—which is 80% of all families—have liquid assets of $500 or less. And yet, these are the very families which now are required to make down payments of up to $3000 to buy a home.)

Three GI Families Pay $100 Rent For Shacks Near Camp

Here's an example of what Leo Goodman meant when he talked about the military housing situation as "the greatest failure in the housing field since World War II:"

Since Ft. Leonard Wood, Mo., was reactivated with "upwards of 20,000 men" last fall, GIs have become prey for unscruplous owners of transit cabins, rundown homes and chicken coops.

John J. Spano, staff writer for the St. Louis Star-Times, found three GI families splitting the $100 rent on a shack seven miles west of Ft. Wood which has no hot water, toilet or sink and is heated with a wood-burning stove.

Army Chaplain Frank O. Vavrin pays $100 a month for a house with a leaky stove and broken furniture—and an additional $50 to heat his place and the landlord's place next door.

Sgt. Richard Price of Trenton, Mich., tramped the streets for two months before finding a two-room tourist cabin for his wife and two babies for $100 a month. He gets a total of $225 a month from the government.

Even people with trailers are stuck unless they are lucky enough to get government space at Ft. Wood for $5.80 a month or at Virgil Eads place for $15. Other camps charge $20 for trailers, plus $10 for electricity.

Some, like Cpl. Joseph Runyon of Eldon, Mo., rent drab rooms with the wallpaper hanging down in strings, for $10 a week and up. Runyon's wife and 20-month-old son share his room, which is warmed by a pot-bellied stove. Twelve other families share the toilet and an outdoor pump for water.

Millions Of Americans Pay Over 1/3 Of Income For Rent

Here are some of the figures, from the 1950 Housing Census, showing that millions of Americans pay one third or more of their total income for rent, instead of the one-fifth or so which most people think is "average."

The percentages given here show what proportion of the renters in the following cities pay 35% or more for rent.

15.6%	Norfolk, Va.	13.8%	Portsmouth, Va.
16.6%	Wilmington, Del.	13.1%	East St. Louis, Ill.
15.2%	Camden, N. J.	12.2%	Phoenix, Ariz.
16.1%	Dallas, Tex.	11.9%	Detroit, Mich.
14.8%	Hartford, Conn.	11.5%	Trenton, N. J.
14.5%	Savannah, Ga.	10.5%	New Orleans, La.
15%	Knoxville, Tenn.	10.3%	Cleveland, O.
14.3%	Benton Harbor, Mich.	9.2%	Louisville, Ky.
14.1%	Los Angeles, Cal.	7.5%	Sacramento, Cal.
14.1%	Boston, Mass.	6.9%	Jersey City, N. J.
14.1%	Huntington, W. Va.	6.7%	Aliquippa, Pa.
13.8%	Atlanta, Ga.

If you stack these figures up against income levels, there is an almost exact relationship: the people paying that much out are the one who have the least money.

And if you go on making comparisons, you find that the people who pay out 35% or more of income for rent are the ones whose rents have increased the most sharply where rents have been decontrolled.

More Rubber Supplies To Cut Unemployment

FACED WITH unemployment in the rubber industry because of curtailed rubber supplies, the CIO Rubber Workers have received assurance from the government that by the end of 1951, synthetic and natural rubber exceeding last year's consumption will be available, according to URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

Meanwhile, unemployment was expected to rise. The B. F. Goodrich Co., Akron, O., last week was planning to lay off 1500 of its 15,000 workers, and URW estimated that within the next two weeks as many as 10,000 may be temporarily out of work in the entire rubber industry.

However, Firestone by agreement with URW will not lay off 2000 employes, as it had planned to do.

Employees of Akron rubber companies, who used to be employed six days a week, are sharing the work by working shorter weeks.

Buckmaster said that large synthetic plants, which are operated by rubber companies for the government, have not been in use since World War II, and some of them require extensive renovation before they can be fully operated.

Court To Rule If Civil Rights Loss Is Suable

THE U. S. Supreme Court is expected to decide soon if private citizens can be sued for depriving other citizens of the civil rights accorded them in the Constitution.

The action grew out of an attack in 1947 on a meeting of the Democratic Party Club of Glendale, Calif., by members of the American Legion, who broke it up because of rival stands on the Marshall Plan. A discussion of the plan had been scheduled for the meeting, with the idea of sending a resolution to President Truman and Congress.

HUGH HARDYMAN, Mrs. Emerson Morse, Mrs. Tosca Cummings and Mrs. Mabel Price, the officers, said they were unable to carry through the discussion because of threats and assualts. Specifically they charged Orville Collins. H. D. Burkheimer, Stanley Lord, James E. Daggett and Ralph Baker with depriving them of their civil rights and asked damages.

The five were convicted and fined for breaking up the meeting. The damage suit was based on a law passed by Congress in 1871 which says, in part, that if "two or more persons in any state . . . conspire . . . for the purpose of depriving . . . any person . . . of equal privileges and immunities under the laws," and if the persons involved do or cause to be done any act "whereby another is . . deprived of having and exercising any right or privilege of a citizen," then the persons so deprived "may have an action for the recovery of damages."

A U. S. DISTRICT Court ruled against the club leaders, claiming that the law applied only where state authorities—not individuals — interfered with federal rights. However, a Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the the lower court and found that the law applied to an attack by any person.

"The rights to assembly for the purpose of discussing the policies of the federal government and petitioning that government for redress or grievance," said the circuit court, "are within the narrow area of rights which Congress has constitutional power to protect from individual invasions."

The case was then appealed to the Supreme Court.

Emancipated Women Are Miners, Bricklayers And Longshoremen

THE "emancipation" of women under Communism has given them "equal status" with men to perform some of the heavy physical labor that the western world has traditionally allotted to men, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions reveals in the current issue of its monthly publication, Spotlight.

"While their access to some professions may be easier than it was 30 years ago—as it is of course elsewhere—for most Russian women this theoretical equality entails the practical necessity of going out to work in order to supplement their husbands' inadequate earnings," says Spotlight, which gives data on economic and social affairs behind the iron curtain.

"AS A NON-MEMBER of the Intl. Labour Organization, Russia has never been bound by any international conventions on the employment of women in dangerous or unsuitable occupations. In Russia they have always been so employed, and the practice is now spreading to the satellite states."

In support of its contention that assignment of women to the heaviest work is spreading to Soviet satellite states, Spotlight cites a speech by Vice Premier Rakosi of Hungary, printed in the Workers Party Information Bulletin for November, 1950. Rakosi said that in the old days women weren't allowed in the mines because the capitalists "had enough men to exploit."

"But now women come forward, and we welcome them gladly," he is quoted as saying. "These women comrades complain that at first they were often sent back to the kitchen stove . . . It took some time before they won the place due them."

IN THE OCTOBER-November, 1950, issue of Building & Pottery Workers, a Polish trade union publication, the increased use of women in the building industry is described, according to Spotlight.

"Women have ceased to be an unusual spectacle on building sites," the article says. "They have shown that they know how to wield the trowel and the hammer. They have won praise for their hard work, skill, agility and efficiency."

An estimated 26,000 women were employed in manual work in building in August, 1950, an increase of 1000 in a year, according to the article. And if there were enough child care centers for their children under three years of age, it adds, there undoubtedly would have been more.

Spotlight also recounts the publication of figures last month by the German Social Democratic Party showing that more than 100 women are working underground in East Zone mines, and that at Wismar the number of women dock workers increased from 380 to 940 in a year.

WOMEN LONGSHORE workers have long been noted in Russian White Sea ports by seamen from other parts of the world. Spotlight prints extracts from the letter of a Norwegian sailor recently engaged in the timber trade which said in part:

"The longshore gangs consisted mainly of women. Work started at 6 a.m. and finished at 7 p.m. with one hour's break at 1 p.m. for lunch. No separate place was available where the workers could sit down and rest during their break. They simply sat on the cargo to take their meal—in most cases a few slices of dry, black bread. They rarely were seen to drink tea.

"Armed guards were posted along the quays, and as it was forbidden to speak to the workers it was impossible to find out what they were earning. In any case, it was observed that they hardly ever spoke to each other, even the women. The impression they created was more of 'automatic dolls' than ordinary human beings."

Army Reduces Sentences Of Negro GIs

THE SENTENCES imposed upon 21 Negro servicemen courtmartialed in Korea have been sharply reduced, the Army Judge Advocate General's Office last week advised the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Lawyers for the association represented the soldiers, who were among 39 who had appealed for assistance.

Four men who had received 10-year sentences were exonerated, the one-year sentence given another was suspended, and the life term imposed upon another was cut to five years and suspended. Six life sentences were reduced to 20 years, another to 15 years and still another to 10 years. Two 25-year sentences were cut to 15 years each. Four men who had received 20-year sentences received reductions to 15 years, and another to 10 years. One 10-year sentence was upheld.

The cases were among those investigated by Thurgood Marshall, NAACP special counsel, on a trip to Korea and Japan which ended last week.

South Bend, Ind., Wins Award For Good Relations Among Racial Religious Groups

THE CITY of South Bend, Ind., was awarded the 1951 Community Relations Award of the National Conference of Christians and Jews as part of the observance last week of Brotherhood Week.

The award was instituted in 1949 and is presented annually to an American city "for outstanding improvement in relations among its religious and racial groups." The Twin Cities, Minneapolis and St. Paul, shared it in 1949, and Portland, Ore., won it last year.

"The award is not given on a competitive basis," said Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, NCCJ president, "nor does it intend to overlook the high level of good will in many American communities. It recognizes, however, the noteworthy progress of a community toward a standard which is in keeping with the democratic ideals of the nation."

He described South Bend as a "heavily industrialized" city. The CIO Auto Workers have three large locals there, Studebaker Local 5, with about 22,000 members, and Bendix Local 9 with 10,000 members. The city is the home of Notre Dame Univ., and St. Mary's College, Catholic institutions which accept Catholic, Protestant, Jewish and Negro students without discrimination.

Segregation is non-existent except in a dwindling number of restaurants, and may well have been ended there by the recent victory of a Negro who won a suit against one such place because he was denied service. Negro teachers have been employed in public schools since last September, and there is no segregation or apparent discrimination in any church or in the public health, welfare or hospital services.

The practical elimination of racial and religious tensions in South Bend is the result of six years of intergroup education in the public schools, and the wholehearted effort of the community along other lines, Dr. Clinchy said.

Jobless Problem

State employment offices at New Orleans, La., report 217 jobless gamblers have applied for unemployment insurance. The men complain they were thrown out of work "through no fault of their own" after a Senate Crime Investigating Committee directed Sheriff Frank J. (King) Clancy to close New Orleans' gambling houses.

Recreation Plan Aim Of Measure

Sen. Langer (D. N. D.) last week introduced a bill creating a federal corporation to operate a supervised recreation program for federal employes. It was introduced on behalf of himself and Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) and Sen. Morse (R. Ore.).

The measure is a revised version of a similar bill he introduced last year modified by suggestions made by Richard Shoemaker, legislative representative of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee. The GCEOC also was instrumental in lining up bipartisan support for it. Similar bills have been introduced in the House by Rep. McCarthy (D. Minn.), Rep. Klein (D. N.Y.) and Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.).

Bi-Racial Cooperative Formed To Build Homes In Maryland

FOURTEEN small homes erected cooperatively for Negro members of St. Joseph's Catholic Church at Morganza, in agricultural Southern Maryland, have attracted so much attention from white parishioners that a bi-racial cooperative to erect additional dwellings has been set up.

The original venture was inspired by the pastor, Rev. Michael F. Kavanaugh, S. J., in an effort to ease overcrowding among Negro parishioners which was so great young couples could not marry because they had no place to live.

He formed St. Joseph's Welfare Club to supply the need. The Negro families bought small plots of land, and helped each other build their dwellings from materials supplied through the club.

The club now has purchased a 115-acre farm for additional homes for both white and Negro parishioners. During the initial stages it will be operated as a cooperative to build up a cash reserve, with club members devoting evenings to clearing the land and planting it to corn and tobacco.

When enough money has been accumulated, the land will be divided into small plots on which dwellings will be erected, with the club members helping each other on construction.

The original experiment attracted considerable attention outside the community, which is about 100 miles from Washington. White neighbors and workers of different faiths, as well as Negroes, contributed materials and time to help it succeed.

FTC Serves People —Even Dead Ones

The Federal Trade Commission tries to protect the consumer not only in life but in death.

It induced the Ever-Lasting Products Co., of Chicago, to stop misrepresenting that the caskets it sells will last forever and assure perpetual protection, and dismissed its complaint against the firm without prejudice to its right to make new charges in the future should it feel them warranted. The commission's action was softened by the fact that the company advertised in publications circulated only to the "trade," and "did not cause the purchase of respondents' caskets by any of the members of the public ultimately buying the said casket."

". . . and the best part of it all is that it didn't cost us a cent! I paid for it with the odd pennies left over each week after buying groceries."

One Agency Should Set Phone Rates: CWA

THE EXECUTIVE board of the CIO Communications Workers called on Congress last week to order hearings before the appropriate committees as a preliminary to placing the regulation of all telephone rates in the hands of a single federal agency.

At the same time the Federal Communications Commission, which on Jan. 19 had boldly called upon the companies to tell why interstate phone rates should not be cut, showed signs of something resembling timidity.

The FCC had directed the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and 22 associated Bell System operating firms to show cause by Mar. 23 why the cut shouldn't be made, and scheduled hearings to begin April 16. Now it has changed the show cause date to July 16, nearly four months after the original, and set the start of hearings for Aug. 20.

The CWA executive board action came at a meeting in Washington. The members passed a resolution pointing out to Congress that both the CWA and National CIO conventions have endorsed the principle of entrusting all phone rate matters to a single federal regulatory body.

"This step has been recommended," the resolution said, "in the public interest and to eliminate the injustices and confusion existing under present regulations whereby rates for telephone service in 46 states and the District of Columbia are regulated by completely separate agencies having no connection with each other or with the FCC, which regulates interstate telephone business."

Two states, Iowa and Texas, leave regulation to the municipalities.

"This hodge-podge of regulation results in fantastic differences in rates for telephone calls made over identical or almost identical distances," the resolution added, "and . . . this discrimination will exist so long as telephone rate regulation is under control of so many different agencies, each working independently of the others."

The union also sent along a sampling of some of the pointless variations in rates for phone calls over comparatively equal distances.

The FCC has been under some fire since its order of Jan. 19. Among those who took pot shots at it was Sen. McFarland (D. Ariz.), Democratic majority leader, who claimed big business, which can afford the higher costs, makes most of the long distance calls, and that cuts in the cost of interstate long distance calls send up the price of local calls.

THE COMMISSION responded in a letter in which it said that only half the revenue comes from business, both large and small, with home and public telephones accounting for the rest. One of its long-term objectives, it said, "has been to take interstate long distance calls out of the luxury class."

Telephone users are saving $200 million a year by virtue of the eight cuts the FCC ordered between 1936 and 1946, it said, without any increase in the cost of local calls.

The commission intends to use the four months between the original date set for its action and the new date in getting together with the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners to see if they can work out a way to eliminate disparities between interstate and intrastate long distance calls.

Dr. Brand Medical Director Of Hillman Health Center

DR. MORRIS A. BRAND associate medical director of the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York, was named medical director of the new Sidney Hillman Health center in New York last week.

The center was named in memory of the late president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and will provide medical services for 40,000 union members in the New York metropolitan area. It will be dedicated April 14 and opened for service two days later. It is located in E. 16th st., just off Union Square, in the heart of the clothing district and a short distance from the union's international headquarters.

OFFICIALS of the health center also announced appointment of James J. Shoaff, manager of the Amalgamated Life Insurance Co., as lay director, and made public the names of the medical advisory council. The council includes:

Dr. Ernst P. Boas, assistant clinical professor of medicine at Columbia Univ., who will be chairman; Dr. Martin Steinberg, director of Mt. Sinai Hospital; Dr. John J. Wittmer, vice president in charge of medical supervision of the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York and vice president of the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York; Dr. Leonard J. Goldwater, professor of industrial hygiene at Columbia, and Dr. Mario F. Tagliagambe, assistant attending surgeon at Reconstruction and Columbia Hospitals.

Jacob S. Potofsky, now president of the ACW, and Isadore Goodman of the New York Clothing Manufacturers' Exchange, are members of the health center's board of directors.

Officers are Louis Hollander, president; Anthony Froise, vice president; Abraham Miller, secretary-treasurer, and David Drechsler, general counsel.

CIO Neutral On Canyon Project

The CIO has decided to take a neutral position on the Arizona Bridge Canyon Project.

CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood said in a letter to CIO councils and regional directors that a number of "conflicting issues" are involved in the proposed project and that it is CIO policy neither to endorse nor oppose it.

The project would include a dam on the Colorado River above Bolder Dam, which would generate electric power to pump water from the lower Colorado over the mountains into Central Arizona.

UAW Charges U. S. Reneges On Upholding Escalator Clause

THE CIO Auto Workers is prepared to fight as hard to protect its "escalator" clauses as it fought to obtain them, the union's executive board declared Feb. 17 at a meeting at Detroit.

"That means, in plain language, full use of the strike weapon if such a course of action is forced upon us," the board announced, adding that the UAW convention, to be held in Cleveland Apr. 1-5, would be urged to endorse a strike policy.

WHAT STIRRED the UAW's leaders was the Feb. 16 recommendation of the Wage Stabilization Board to hold wage increases to 10% above the Jan. 5, 1950, level and to include escalator raises within the 10% figure.

Escalator or cost-of-living clauses authorize wage adjustments when the consumer price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics rises — and in some cases when the index falls.

The wage board, whose three labor members dramatically walked out when the six industry and public members agreed to the 10% policy, said that it would review its decision after the April 15 consumer index was published.

The UAW leaders charged that the wage board was actually ducking the issues raised by the escalators, since they would allow the adjustments to be made during the quarter beginning Mar. 1 but make subsequent adjustments subject to review. The wage board was accused of "timidity and equivocation."

Meanwhile, the UAW leaders said, the government had failed in its "obvious first responsibility" to control the cost of living. "It has failed," they insisted, "to step squarely and forthrightly up to the problem and take the necessary steps to solve it."

They contended that "to attempt to stabilize wages in the absence of any effective rollback on the cost of living and in the face of continued skyrocketing prices is unfair, unworkable and dangerously unrealistic. Such an attempt will damage morale, disrupt our economy, and be of incalculable cost to our defense mobilization program."

THE UAW board members announced appropriation of $100,000 "to help bring the facts to the American people through every means of communication possible." Stressing that more appropriations would be forthcoming if required, they said the American people must be "mobilized" to force the government "to take positive and immediate action to avert disaster through continued and increased cost of living."

The union leaders said the UAW was "promised by highest government officials that our contracts will be permitted to remain intact." If Regulation 6 were allowed to stand, that promise would be broken, they declared.

(Meanwhile, in Washington some doubted that the Wage Stabilization Board could function legally since the labor members had sent their resignations to the White House.)

The UAW board expressed confidence that the union's contracts could be maintained, and proposed "creation of a joint defense fund by all organized labor for the purpose of defending and maintaining the integrity of union contracts." The UAW would support such a fund to the limit of its ability, the statement said.

"We have contracts that create industrial stability," the UAW spokesmen said in speaking of their escalator and equally controversial improvement agreements.

"If the government in any way tampers with, abrogates, or modifies those contracts, then the government must assume responsibility for the chaos, the confusion, and the breakdown of production that will inevitably result." If the government can tear up contracts, can't anybody tear them up, they asked? LPA

Phila. Labor Forms United Policy Unit

ORGANIZED labor in Philadelphia, one of the country's major industrial centers, has banded together in a local United Labor Policy Committee to represent the city's trade unions in all matters growing out of the mobilization program.

Formed by representatives of the CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods with the approval of the respective central bodies, the committee speaks for some 400,000 workers on things like prices, wages, manpower and other defense problems.

Its first step, the committee said in a statement accompanying formal announcements of its establishment, "will be to actively seek representation on all policy and administrative levels of defense mobilization. . . . and to urge the creation of advisory boards to consist of representatives from labor, management and the public."

In commenting on prices, the committee said:

"We consider current orders, freezing prices at their highest levels, as an outright national scandal legalizing emergency profiteering and increasing the cost of the defense effort while at the same time placing greater financial strains on lower and middle income families already hard hit by inequitable tax burdens."

IT CALLED for adequate and equitable inflation controls by amendments to the Defense Production Act and claimed that "formulas for wage controls, no matter how easy they might appear administratively to handle, cannot be justified as long as the nation remains without an overall inflation control system."

"Any program evolved by the Wage Stabilization Board," it went on, "which fails to take into account the many inequities in the wage scales of American industry and which is not flexible enough to mitigate the diverse circumstances giving rise to such inequities will only serve to create labor unrest, slow down the efforts to attain maximum production and breed further inequities and problems more difficult to solve.

"Since we are entering a period of emergency, whose duration is unpredictable, it is most necessary that substandard conditions be eliminated if this nation is to achieve the maximum production goals necessary not only for our own survival, but for the survival of those nations yet free of the Red yoke.

"Any wage stabilization program must supplement collective bargaining and not be a substitute for it."

CO-CHAIRMEN of the committee are Pres. Henry F. Shipherd of the Philadelphia Industrial Union Council, for the CIO; Albert Sabin, president of the Philadelphia branch of the AFL, and Judson Swan, representing the railroad brotherhoods.

The committee has asked Eric Johnston, director of the Economic Stabilization Agency, and George M. Harrison, his labor adviser and president of the AFL Railway Clerks, to advise it prior to the appointment of a chairman of the Regional Wage Stabilization Board to be set up in Philadelphia.

CIO TEXTILE WORKERS from North and South Carolina and Massachusetts take time out for singing while attending the TWUA Washington Legislative Institute last week. They are being led by Ben Segal, assistant TWUA education director. At his left is George Guernsey, assistant director of the CIO Education and Research Dept. Institute delegates visited their congressmen, attended sessions of the House and Senate and heard a series of speeches by CIO union and PAC officials, and others. Additional institutes are planned.

Cornell Dean Says:

The Country Needs Chiselers To Push High Prices Higher

WHAT THIS country needs is more chiselers who can push up prices. This unusual approach to the economic situation is that of W. I. Meyers, dean of agriculture at Cornell University.

Meyers is being considered as an agricultural advisor to Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson.

Washington observers predict that when the advisor is named, Agriculture Secy. Charles Brannan will be put in the deep freeze alongside of Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin, who was tucked away there so that the manpower program could be handed over to Wilson's man.

In the February issue of Farm Policy Forum, Meyers gives some idea of what to expect if he's given any power over important farm policy. His name appears with those of F. A. Pearson and S. W. Warren as co-author of an article called "Prices and Communism."

His theory is that high prices are the best defense against communism. "During the war rising prices of certain products are highly beneficial," says the article. "They stimulate production and curtail consumption."

MEYERS AND his colleagues then go into their theory of how we'll lick the Kremlin by charging 79c a pound for hamburger. They give rubber as an example:

"High rubber prices retard any designs that Russia may have in Communizing the Malay peninsula. At three to five cents a pound rubber producers are ripe subjects for communism, at 20c they're well-to-do conservatives, and at 40 to 60 cents they're princes of privilege, economic royalists, free enterprisers and ardent foes of communism."

"In fact," they go on, "it would be good economic warfare to curtail our synthetic rubber production—for the United States gradually to force up the price of natural rubber. Higher prices for pepper, tin, rubber and all the major exports of the Malay Peninsula are the cheapest way for the United States to fight communism in Southeastern Asia.

"What this nation needs is more of the so-called chiselers who know and understand how high prices stimulate production, create opposition to communism, divert resources from Russia and her satellites and reduce civilian consumption.

"They understand that these results are of more importance than the screams of the generals, bureaucrats and professors who must then pay $16 for a tire for their personal autos, that formerly cost $10.

"THE CIVILIAN population has been told by some public officials that it can't have both 'butter and guns,' both automobiles and tanks, both television and radar and both this and that. It's unfortunate that so many people in public life make such statements and that millions believe them.

"The old method of transferring goods from consumers to the fighting forces was through rising prices. Rising prices curtail civilian purchasing power, making products available for the military forces. For instance, the price of paint rises relative to the salary of the bank teller and the postponed painting of his home transfers lead to the soldier. This method of obtaining bullets for the army costs nothing in terms of human labor.

"The modern method is through priorities, followed by price fixing, rationing and subsidies, in that order. Someone decides how much paint shall be made and how much shall be used in the building industry. Still others decide what the price of paint shall be and still others, by ration tickets, decide who shall get the paint. This method of obtaining bullets for the army is wasteful of human labor, which is always scarce in times of war.

"Which of these methods to use may be considered from either an economic or political point of view. Rising prices are the cheapest way to get the job done since neither manpower nor materials are needed to regulate the machinery. Under this system, no questions are asked as to whose standard of living is to be reduced, nor by how much. The chips fall where they may. This method, however, may be politically undesirable if it invokes the displeasure of powerful minority groups." LPA

Aid En Route For Unionists, Other Koreans

IRVING Abramson and Leo Perlis, chairman and director, respectively, of the National CIO Community Service Committee, have announced that the first installment of CIO aid is on its way to Korean trade unionists and needy refugees.

The aid consists of $2500 worth of CARE food and textile packages. The money was contributed by a number of CIO local and international unions and industrial union councils.

Stressing that the money so far contributed was sufficient to purchase 51 of CARE's special Korean food packages, a like number of underwear and socks packages, and 101 each of CARE's woolen blanket and Far-Eastern cotton packages, Abramson declared:

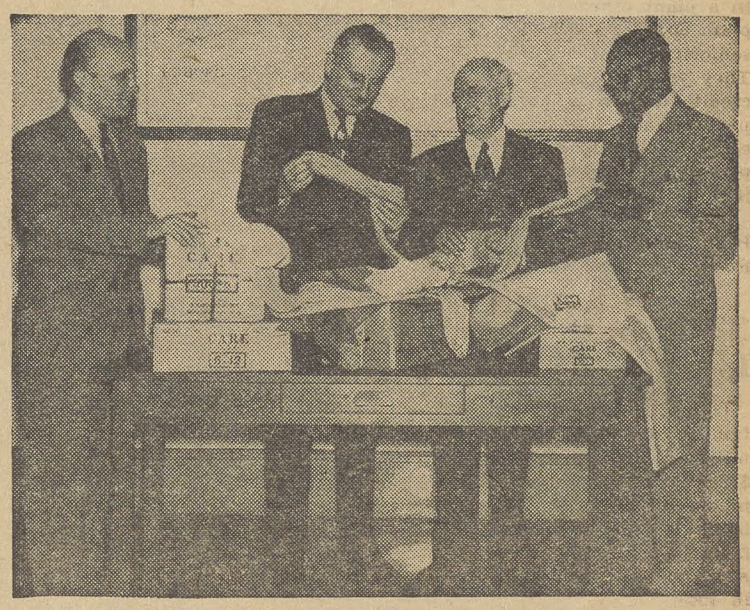
"THE HELP we are extending through these CARE packages to needy Korean trade unionists, their families, and to others in need among the unfortunate Korean people, is in fullest accord with the CIO policy of aiding trade unionists abroad to retain and build their free, democratic trade union movement as the best bulwark against aggression and with it the best guaranty for peace."

Expressing his confidence that "the urgent need for the continuance of the CIO Campaign for Korea is generally understood by the CIO membership," Abramson urged local unions to aid the campaign by contributions from their treasuries and by asking their individual members to contribute.

Internationals and industrial union councils are likewise urged to contribute either directly or through their affiliates. Contributions in any amount, earmarked "CIO Campaign for Korea," may be forwarded to the National CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19.

Another Cure-All Isn't

From now on CSA Tablets will advertise only that they "help to relieve and control muscular aches and pains." Under an agreement with the Federal Trade Commission, the firm will stop saying its product is an "adequate, effective and reliable treatment for arthritis and rheumatism."



CONTENTS of the first CARE package purchased by the CIO in its current campaign for the relief of Korean trade unionists and other refugees are being inspected by (left to right) Leo Perlis, director, National CIO Community Services Committee; Irving Abramson, national chairman of CSC; John Brophy, North American representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and John Yeldell, CIO consultant with CARE.

Small Businessmen Being Played For Suckers

By IRVING FAGAN
And CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

A LOT OF small businessmen in the midwest are shelling out heavy dough to pay for a series of full-page newspaper ads promoting "free enterprise" and "the American way of life." They're suckers.

There must be a lot of suckers and the take must be good, for the outfit back of this propaganda campaign ran eight pages of advertising in the Jan. 6, 1951, issue of Editor & Publisher (the newspaper publishers' trade journal), promoting this 52-week campaign, and telling the publishers about the gravy. The bait is that "the complete campaign, now running in 17 states and reaching 10 million readers, has been paid for by local businessmen—90% of whom were non-advertisers."

Who's back of the campaign? The Small Business Economic Foundation, headed by DeWitt Emery of Akron, Ohio. He also heads the National Small Businessmen's Association, which he founded in 1937.

As E&P explained in a news story, the Association in 1946 "had to register as a lobbying organization" and so the Foundation was set up, as the "educational" arm. J. Raymond Tiffany is general counsel for both. The officers and directors of both are the same.

Emery gets $18,000 a year as Association head, and his letterhead firm gets a lot of the Association's business.

Purpose of the Foundation is "the collection, compilation, interpretation and dissemination of information, data and educational material relative to freedom for America and Americans."

How do they interpret "free enterprise"? Well, they're against labor unions, for the open shop, for lower wages and longer hours, lower taxes for corporations.

They think the Taft-Hartley Act is wonderful, and want it amended to forbid industry-wide bargaining. They want the federal minimum wage act repealed. They oppose FEPC. They oppose TVA and plans for other river valley authorities.

They oppose what they term "socialized medicine, federalized education, socialized farming and political housing."

In short, they are against virtually everything that the customers of small businessmen favor. Thus, in supporting this advertising campaign, the small businessmen are cutting off their own noses to spite their faces.

A House committee headed by Rep. Wright Patman (D. Texas) looked into both outfits and reported Feb. 21, 1950, that "their claim to represent small business is false" and that in fact they were fronts for big business.

EMERY, as the Foundation head, in a letter of Sept. 15, 1947, soliciting funds for this "small business group," listed 70 firms as contributors. Among them were five billion-dollar concerns: Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard of Indiana, U. S. Steel, Socony-Vacuum, and the Texas Co. Twelve others were $100-million concerns—Sears, Roebuck; Chrysler; Republic Steel; Goodyear Tire & Rubber; Firestone; American Rolling Mills; Inland Steel; B. F. Goodrich; Celanese Corp.; Hiram Walker; Borg-Warner; Marshall Field.

Other contributors included DeSoto; Dodge & Plymouth; Electric Boat; First National Stores; Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co.; Miller Shoe; Sheaffer Pen; Vick Chemical; Ft. Pitt Brewing Co.

IN A money-raising letter Feb. 21, 1949, the Association said: "If the labor bosses and their radical and communistic cohorts can be stopped or slowed down to a walk on labor legislation, then there is a good chance of stopping most, if not all, of the Administration's program of national socialism."

Tiffany, the lawyer for both the Association and the Foundation, in testifying before a Senate committee and pleading for restraints on labor, detailed a lot of labor "sins" and said "these actions by unions adversely affect small businessmen—affect them more disastrously than they do big business, because small businessmen do not have the financial strength to withstand the attacks—they are compelled to surrender or be put out of business."

So the Association and Foundation are crying their hearts out for the small businessman. But the Association's first program, in 1937, didn't even use the phrase "small business." Neither did the 1938 program. The 1939 program mentioned small business only in passing. The longest plank was anti-labor. Emery in 1948 said "small business does not need or want any special privileges or consideration."

Said the Patman committee report: "A large part, if not the larger part, of the Association's program has related to the demand for restrictions on labor unions. Very little of the Association's program has related to distinctively small-business matters. The Association's annual statement of objectives ordinarily does not even use the words 'small business'."

That's the outfit that is back of the Foundation that is selling "free enterprise;" that boasts "hundreds of school teachers and college professors have requested reprints of this series of ads for classroom use." That's the outfit small businessmen are supporting.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The betrayal of the workers of the Columbia River Cannery, Astoria, Ore., has been repudiated. The attempt to force them into the discredited Intl. Longshoremen and Warehousemens' Union was soundly defeated as the workers in a representation election voted 789 for CIO, 291 ILWU, 2 no union, 4 void, 74 challenged. This tremendous victory was won despite a vicious campaign waged by Harry Bridges and his group. This CIO victory is significant and indicates the degree of repudiation by the workers on the West Coast of the Communist line. The workers, there, as elsewhere, want true unionism as expressed by the CIO.

Allan Haywood

This victory among the cannery workers follows on the heels of the El Centro shed workers victory. Congratulations to CIO Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten and all the representatives of the Woodworkers, and those who rendered valuable assistance in this drawn-out campaign.

Bridges continues to make unsubstantiated statements, and because of his most recent he was taken severely to task. His lie about the railroad situation in which he said the CIO was raiding striking railroad workers was postively denied by Chairman John Green of the United Railroad Workers, and the writer.

The railroad workers themselves branded Bridges' statement as untrue. A few more of these irresponsible statements by Harry, and even his own membership will learn of his tricky makeup. He had absolutely no regard for the injury he might do the railroad workers in making such a statement.

Big business is still running amuck. Unwarranted excessive profits continue with no attempt to freeze this evil. All efforts seem to be directed toward freezing wages, while permitting profits and prices to continue to soar above the present excessive point. The Labor members of the Wage Stabilization Board resigned in protest against such a policy.

An attempt to force a wage freeze by granting an immediate 10% increase was a grave injustice to the workers and the public in general, and labor recognized the injustice and refused to be a part of it. The labor movement must fight against this and expose these machinations, and that we will do.

The American people, and our labor movement in particular, are for a fair deal and a square deal, and we will continue to resist industrial aggression.

The writer attended a Steelworkers Conference in Atlanta, Ga., this past week. In attendance were delegates from all the southern states. District Dirs. William Crawford and Rube Farr of the USA-CIO were in charge of the meeting. The delegates expressed their complete loyalty to their great union and to Pres. Murray. These delegates adopted resolutions supporting CIO policies and programs in their entirety. Congratulations to Dirs. Crawford and Farr, their staffs and to the entire delegation for an excellent meeting.

The writer was in New York on Feb. 20, and met with officers of Independent Local 1-S, which represents workers of the Macy Department Store. These conferences have been going on for several months. The executive board of Local 1-S (Macy's) voted 50 to 3, with 2 abstaining, to affiliate with the newly organized Department Store Workers Organizing Committee, on which the CIO Retail, Wholesale Department Store Union will also be represented. Assistant Organizational Dir. R. J. Thomas will be chairman of the committee, and Pres. Samuel Kovenetsky of Local 1-S will be vice-chairman and director of organization. Other officers and members will be announced later. This is a great step forward, and all those who want honest, clean trade unionism will have their opportunity to achieve this desire as other workers all over the country are doing. All CIO affiliates have assured us absolute cooperation in this endeavor in the department store field.

The Textile Workers, CIO, are on strike. We owe our every support and cooperation to this great union. Their wage demands are just and fair.

Organizational Dir. Robert Edwards of the Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers, CIO, reports that the UGCCW won a representation election at the Semet-Solvay Corp., Ashland, Ky., by the following vote: UGCCW 125, no union 120, void 1, challenged 1. This drive was conducted by UGCCW Rep. Joe Rice, assisted by L. T. Koletka and Wilford Coburn.

Reg. Dir. Ed McCrone reports that the Textile Workers Union, CIO, won a representation election at the Pond Lily Co., Woodbridge, Conn., by TWU-CIO 68, AFL 64, no union 2. Charles LaGrecca and Lillian Dodge, TWU representatives, were in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that the UGCCW won a great victory at the Linde Air Products Co., Speedway, Ind. In a representation election the workers voted in favor of the UGCCW-CIO by a vote of 329 to 315 no union. This drive was conducted by Sam Angelocci, UGCCW-CIO representative. This victory culminated a fight extending over five years.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sanders reports that the IUE-CIO Local 400 won representation elections in three units of the Federal Radio and Telephone Co., Nutley, N. J. The count: Unit A (engineering): 250 eligible, 1UE 100; UOPWA 61, neither 42, challenged 5; Unit B (clerical-drafting): 200 eligible, IUE 93, UOPWA 27, neither 7, challenged 3; Unit C (shop): 200 eligible, IUE 151, UOPWA 41, neither 8, challenged 7. The election was supervised by Milton Weihrauch, of District 4, IUE-CIO.

Adolph Germer, director of organization of the Intl. Woodworkers, reports two representation election victories: John L. Roper Lumber Co., Roper, N. C., IWA-CIO 78, no union 3, and Stevens-Hepner Co., Port Elgin, Ont., IWA-CIO 93, AFL 32.

Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports that employes of the Chesterfield Furniture Co., Williamsport, Pa., in a representation election voted 63 for the United Furniture Workers, CIO, and 16 for no union. Intl. Rep. William Dubin conducted the campaign, assisted by Harvey Lemon of the Lycoming CIO Council and CIO Rep. Fred Fudge. This is the first Furniture Workers Local in the Williamsport area.

UAW, Ford Sign Pact On Seniority

FORD MOTOR CO. and the CIO Auto Workers have signed an area-wide seniority agreement covering five plants in the Detroit region.

Ken Bannon, director of the UAW National Ford Dept., said the agreement gives protection to about 80,000 workers.

Ford, he said, agreed that "seniority employes who are laid off from any of the five Detroit area plants will be rehired into any other of the five plants where work is available before any new workers are hired. He added.

"Those workers who are hired in a plant other than their home plant will retain and accumulate seniority in their home plant. They will also accumulate service credits toward pensions, vacation pay, holiday pay and any other economic benefits provided in the present contract, in which seniority is a factor."

The plants covered are Rouge, Highland Park, Lincoln, Mound Road and Dearborn Engineering.

3 Million Rural Family Incomes Under $2000

Of the 6 million farm operator families in the United States, 2 million now produce less than $1800 each year in farm products, including products used in the home. Of the 8,531,000 rural nonfarm families, 1,500,000 had annual incomes of less than $2000 in 1948.

Those facts were revealed by Sen. John Sparkman (D. Ala.), before the National Farm Institute at Des Moines, Iowa, recently. The figures are part of the data contained in a staff report to the Joint Committee on the Economic Report on "Underemployment of Rural Families."

Pearson Gives Lie To Speech By McCarthy

ANOTHER skirmish in the McCarthy-Pearson battle has been fought. Here's what happened:

Sen. Joe McCarthy, the charge-hurling Republican from Wisconsin, told a Lincoln Day GOP rally at Flint, Mich., about Gustave Duran.

McCarthy said Duran, as a State Dept. employe, handled top-secret material and was fired after McCarthy revealed Duran was former member of the Soviet secret police.

The Flint Journal gave the McCarthy story a big play. So did the News Advertiser.

Marshall Boor, editor of the Flint Weekly Review, decided to check the story with Columnist Drew Pearson.

Pearson replied that Duran worked for the State Dept. from Jan. 30, 1943, to Oct. 3, 1946, and then resigned.

The resignation, Pearson said, came four years before McCarthy began his Communist "purge."

"The only advances these non-union guys ever make is when they get a hand out!"

Tax Where Money Is, CIO Tells House Unit

WE AGREE that new taxes are needed, the CIO in effect told the tax-originating House Ways and Means Committee last week, but we believe the proposals of Secy. of the Treasury Snyder completely overlook the principle of equality of sacrifice.

The proposals would force the lowest and lower-middle income groups in the U. S., including most CIO members, to start going without necessities while the more fortunate get off comparatively lightly.

This was the gist of the testimony given Feb. 21 by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research. Specifically, Ruttenberg said:

1 The CIO agrees that some $16 or $17 billion in new tax income is needed urgently.

2 Instead of increasing individual income tax rates by 4% in each bracket, as Snyder proposed, there should be an average 4% increase, resting more heavily on those with incomes above $5000, with no increase at all for the very lowest-paid.

3 There should be no increase in excise taxes—i. e., federal taxes on cigarettes, washing machines, gasoline, refrigerators, etc. Snyder proposed raising a considerable portion of new taxes in this manner, calling it "anti-inflationary." But, said Ruttenberg, this approach really sets up a form of rationing by ability to pay, not according to need, and is "wholly and highly" unfair.

4 Loopholes in the present tax law, if closed, would raise somewhere between $4.5 and $5 billion, and this should be done without delay. The most important is the split-income provision, which he described as "a $2½ billion handout to the well-off," which benefits less than 20% of all taxpayers at the expense of the other 80%.

5 New taxes on corporations should raise from $8 to $9 billion instead of the $3 billion proposed by Snyder. This should be done by tightening excess profits tax rules and by increasing normal and surtax rates.

Ruttenberg flatly told the committee he thought the Treasury Dept. had taken "the easy way out," by proposing only the flat 4% individual tax rate increase, increased excise taxes, and a relatively slight upward change in corporate rates.

"It is argued that all Americans ought to readily accept a lower standard of living," he said, as a contribution to meeting the needs of this emergency, and that therefore higher taxes on low-income families are now highly justified.

"THIS viewpoint—which is particularly attractive to the well-off—emphasizes that we must tax where spending is done, and that, since such large total sums accrue to the millions of low income families, here is where taxes should be greatly increased.

"Furthermore, taxes from wage and salary earners are easiest to collect—either by direct deductions from payrolls or by imposition of sales or excise taxes. Almost 100% enforcement can be assured.

"The injustice of this tax theory should be apparent to all. For millions of families there is no 'loose money' floating around which is bidding up the demand for goods in short supply.

"For millions of American families there is hardly enough income to support minimum standards of decent family life. To increase further the taxes upon these individuals simply will deprive them of the ability to buy goods that are essential to a healthy and decent existence."

Other tax loopholes mentioned by Ruttenberg included the famous provision in the present law which allows owners of oil producing properties to deduct a staggering amount of profits before computing their taxes, because the oil reserves are being used up all the time the fields are in production.

THIS IS known as a depletion allowance and is also applicable to natural gas fields and producers of minerals. The theory may be fair but the allowance is excessive. In fact, said Ruttenberg, the allowance is so big that "it is practically equivalent to allowing a businessman to recover the cost of his plant 13 times," tax-free.

"As long as we are going to play this game," he commented, "I suppose it is only fair to allow taxicab drivers to deduct the cost of their cabs 13 times for income tax purposes."

OTHER loopholes which should be closed, Ruttenberg said, include:

Loose provisions under which an estate can be passed from generation to generation and only be taxed once in 100 years.

Provisions in effect allowing a wealthy individual to give away about $250,000 without anybody's paying any taxes on it.

Tax-free dividends received by holders of over $20 billion worth of state and local securities.

The low rate (25%) on so-called capital gains, which should be increased, not to 37% as proposed by Snyder, but to 50%.

Ruttenberg said the excess profits tax rate should be jumped to 85% on all profits made above the average reached in the period 1946-50, and the normal and surtax corporate rates should be increased also, but by a lesser amount.

Woolen Industry 'Refused To Bargain In Good Faith'

THE CIO Textile Workers Union, with some 70,000 members out on strike, charged last week that the woolen industry "flatly refused to bargain in good faith."

The union said it notified employers in the woolen and worsted industry last Dec. 1, that it would seek contract improvements when agreements expired on Feb. 1.

"However," the union reported, "as the weeks passed we found ourselves unable to induce the employers to negotiate with us. The majority merely said they would follow whatever decision was reached with the American Woolen Co. But American Woolen Co. showed no interest in meeting with us.

"In the hope that this attitude would change, we extended our agreements to Feb. 15. There was no change. A brief meeting on Feb. 9, was little more than a courtesy call.

"On Feb. 13, the company served a number of demands on the union and left the meeting."

American Woolen, the union said, was "interested in bargaining only with the government, not with us.

"The company provoked this strike in an attempt to force a better bargain from the price administrators, who have already dealt generously with the industry."

CIO Launches Drive To Organize Department Store Employes

THE CIO has launched a drive to organize 1.5 million department store employes into a strong, nationwide industrial union under a new Department Store Workers Organizing Committee.

Announcement of the campaign was made in New York Feb. 20 by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, following a meeting with Samuel Kovenetsky, president of the unaffiliated Local 1-S, representing 8300 employes of the R. H. Macy store.

The local's executive board, Kovenetsky said, voted on Feb. 19 by 50 to 3 to re-affiliate with the CIO, of which it was once part through the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union. The members will get the issue at a meeting Mar 7.

Chairman of the new committee, Haywood said, will be R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant organizing director and former president of the CIO Auto Workers. Kovenetsky will be one of two vice chairmen.

The committee, in addition, will consist of a secretary and three more members, to be selected from the CIO, Local 1-S and the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union. Other members will be added as the drive is expanded.

HAYWOOD SAID the CIO had received numerous requests for CIO aid from employes of department stores who were either unorganized or members of the left-wing Distributive, Processing and Office Workers Union, which is made up of the dwindling remnants of three international unions expelled from the CIO because of Communist domination. About 40,000 New York department store workers are still unorganized, he said.

"We are going after any group ready and willing to cooperate and affiliate." he said. "We are going to organize the unorganized."

"I wouldn't mind being a dollar-a-year man, if I could clear that much."

Ship Workers Win Pay Increases

Pay raises for about 17,000 workers at East coast shipyards are provided in an agreement reached by the CIO Shipbuilding Workers and Bethlehem Steel.

Increases ranging from 18½c-an-hour for laborers to 23c for first class mechanics would be retroactive to Jan. 1.

The negotiated agreement was subject to union ratification and to approval by the Wage Stabilization Board.

Mexican Steel Mill Given 14% CofL Raise

The big La Consolidada steel mill in Mexico City on Feb. 21 announced it was giving its employes a 14% cost of living wage increase—the first time on record that a heavy industry in Mexico has raised the pay of its workers during the life of a contract.

The agreement still has a year to run. Union officials said they expected the unprecedented increase to set a pattern for employers throughout the country.

False Economy

Sen. Malone (R. Nev.), who frequently has called for economy in government, is using his Senate telegraph privileges to wire lengthy and unsolicited press releases to newspapers and radio stations all over the country at government expense, a story in the Washington Post revealed.

N. Y. C. Council Would Bar Bias On City-Aided Housing

THE CITY Council of New York last week unanimously passed a bill prohibiting—and penalizing—discrimination or segregation in private housing which enjoys complete or partial exemption from city taxes or gets direct or indirect financial aid from the city or any of its agencies.

The measure does not deprive such housing projects of their special status, but it does forbid discrimination against, or segregation of, any person because of "race, color, creed, religion, national origin or ancestry."

It makes each violation a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $500. And it gives anyone who is discriminated against the right to bring a Supreme Court action to enjoin the practice.

Before it goes into effect, the bill must be approved by the City's Board of Estimate, after a public hearing, and must then be signed by Mayor Impelliteri.

The bill applies to existing as well as future private housing projects, and was admittedly aimed at alleged discriminatory practices at Stuyvesant Town, the huge Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. housing project on the east side of downtown Manhattan.

(About five years ago, after a series of protests against the rental policies at Stuyvesant Town, the city council passed a law saying that any private project which practiced such discrimination would lose its favored tax status. The measure could not be made retroactive, so did not apply to Stuyvesant Town, which was already completed. The present bill gives would-be Stuyvesant Town tenants their first direct crack at its rental policies.)

A Real 'Byrd' Of A Coalition

Sen. Mundt (R. S.D.), wants a ticket of Republicans and Southern Democrats because the two groups "think alike, act alike, and their Senators and Representatives vote alike."

Addressing a Union League luncheon at Washington, D. C., the Senator suggested Sen. Byrd (D. Va.), to head up a national coalition in 1951 to lick the regular Democratic slate. He said Byrd could run as a Democrat in the South and as a Republican in the North.

Unionists Put On Ball Club Board

Presidents of five CIO Auto Workers locals here have been named to the board of directors of the Flint, Mich., Arrows baseball club. The club was reorganized after being dropped by the Detroit Tigers as a Class A farm club.

On the new board, along with businessmen and civic leaders, are Dave MacDonald, Cy Davis, Cliff Rock, Don Ellis, and Coburn Walker. In another unprecedented move, three Negroes were named to the board.

Policy Unit Pulls Out Personnel From All Mobilization Agencies

Joint Labor Statement On Mobilization Crisis

The United Labor Policy Committee on Feb. 28 issued the following statement on the defense mobilization crisis:

THE UNITED Labor Policy Committee decided unanimously today that all labor representatives of our respective organizations serving on existing defense mobilization agencies shall resign immediately.

We fully realize the gravity of this decision. It was arrived at only after exhaustive exploration of all the facts and after almost continuous conferences with the leaders of our Government and of the defense program during the past two weeks.

We have come to the conclusion that in no other way can we effectively impress upon the American people the great wrongs being perpetrated against them.

On Feb. 16 we announced that we had become thoroughly disillusioned with the conduct of the defense mobilization program. We made the deliberate charge that big business was dominating the program, that the interests of the plain people of this country were being ignored and that the basic principle of equality of sacrifice in the national effort to protect freedom against Communist aggression had been abandoned.

Since then, we have spelled out our indictment in detail to the President of the United States and to the heads of agencies under him. We have talked and we have listened. After full and complete exchanges of information, our original convictions have been more than confirmed.

We are today confronted with a price order which amounts to legalized robbery of every American consumer, together with a wage order which denies justice and fair play to every American who works for wages. The door has been slammed in our faces on the vital problem of manpower, which directly affects the workers we represent. We are offered the lame excuse that on other important policies the decisions must be made by a Congress which is not cooperating with the Administration.

There has been no affirmative action to meet our basic position—that equality of sacrifice must be the guiding and indispensable principle in the defense program in order to obtain full cooperation and maximum results.

We have also arrived at the inescapable conclusion that such representation which already has been accorded to labor in defense agencies and such further representation as is now offered are merely for the purpose of window dressing. There is absolutely no desire on the part of Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson to give labor a real voice in the formulation of defense policy.

Under these circumstances, we have decided that to continue to serve on defense agencies would bring about no constructive results and would merely delude the public and the wage earners we represent into believing that labor acquiesces in what is being done.

In the interests of our country and the cause of international peace and freedom to which it is committed, we stand ready to meet with responsible representatives of our Government to continue to seek a remedy for the insupportable conditions facing us.

List Of Those Who Left Mobilization Posts

Union representatives who submitted their resignations from posts in the mobilization setup in accordance with the decision of the United Labor Policy Committee:

From the Labor Advisory Committee to the Office of Defense Mobilization—CIO Pres. Philip Murray, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, AFL Pres. William Green, AFL Secy.-Treas. George Meany and Chairman George E. Leighty, Railway Labor Executives' Association.

From the Advisory Committee to the Economic Stabilization Agency—Pres. A. J. Hayes, of the Machinists, Murray and Green.

From the Labor-Management Advisory Committee to the Office of Defense Manpower in the Dept. of Labor—Murray, Green, Hayes; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, CIO Clothing Workers; Pres. Dan W. Tracy, AFL Electrical Workers, and Secy.-Treas. A. E. Lyon, Railway Labor Executives' Association.

From the Advisory Committee to the Defense Production Administration and the Secretary of Commerce—Carey, Green, Tracy, Leighty; Pres. Walter S. Reuther, CIO Auto Workers, and Pres. George M. Harrison, AFL Railway Clerks.

As special assistant to Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnson—Harrison; as special assistant to Assistant Secy. of Defense Anna Rosenberg—Hayes; as consultants of Defense Production Administrator William H. Harrison—Ted Silvey, CIO, and Joseph D. Keenan, AFL.

Wages

The Director of Economic Stabilization has signed a wage order which we know to be unfair, unworkable and unjust. Wages and salaries of all Americans are now bound under the most rigid controls in the history of our country.

Wage Order No. 6 has been given the force of law by Mr. Eric Johnston's signature. Yet, even as he did so, he admitted that this Order requires fundamental revision and improvement to correct some of the grave inequities apparent on its face.

Mr. Johnston's suggestions for correcting these grave injustices are inadequate. They do not meet the needs of American workers. Mr. Johnston's recommendations freeze injustice by denying less privileged workers the right to obtain through collective bargaining the benefits enjoyed in substantial segments of industry.

Labor's representatives cannot in good conscience return to the Wage Stabilization Board which voted Order No. 6, nor can we acquiesce in the unfair wage policy enunciated by Mr. Johnston.

We have, however, publicly stated, and we now reiterate, that we are now prepared to participate in a re-constituted tri-partite wage stabilization and disputes board which would administer a fair and equitable wage policy.

Prices

While wages and salaries are being brought under strict control the price freeze has been revoked. The Price Stabilization Administrator, with the full approval of the Director of Economic Stabilization, has assured a price order under which 200,000 stores will establish their own price ceilings on the basis of their own bookkeeping and on the basis of past margin of profit on each item sold.

By officially validating the margin of profit in effect on February 24, the order legalizes every illegal price mark-up since the Jan. 25 freeze order. Higher and higher prices are built into the price formula by its reliance on margin of profit for computing the legal price.

For example, the wholesale cost of a workshirt to the retailer was $2 and has now gone to $2.50. The retailer's price to the consumer was $3. Under the price order, the new ceiling price will be $3.75. In other words, an extra 25c of profit not reflected by cost has been added by the retailer with official sanction.

No customer will be able to check whether the retailer is selling his product at a price based on the regulation. There will be no such thing as a dollar-and-cents price ceiling for any commodity, except the price which the retailer sets. There will be no posting of ceiling prices. Enforcement is obviously impossible, even it it were intended.

At a time when fixed formulas are being applied to wages, business is being allowed to write its own ceiling prices. Wages are frozen. Nothing else in the economy has been frozen.

Manpower

During the past two weeks we have been unable to achieve an iota of progress toward the establishment of administrative machinery and policies on manpower that would most effectively help the nation's defense effort.

Control of manpower was seized several weeks ago by Mr. Wilson and centralized in his already-powerful Office of Defense Mobilization, without ever discussing the matter with his labor advisory committee. Both by correspondence and by several hours of discussion, we have sought to show Mr. Wilson that manpower policies would best be formulated in the Dept. of Labor. We pointed out that a labor-management committee in the Dept. of Labor had been functioning harmoniously and satisfactorily on manpower problems until its effectivness was arbitrarily and suddenly ended by Mr. Wilson's action.

Speaking for millions of wage earners who will be most directly affected as our manpower problems increase, we asked Mr. Wilson to reconsider that decision. He refused flatly and finally, and without attempting to offer any logical reasons for his refusal.

The United Labor Policy Committee is deeply concerned by Mr. Wilson's arrogant seizure of control over manpower and by his equally arrogant refusal to give more than the most superficial consideration to our plea for reversal of his action.

So long as the control of manpower rests in the Office of Defense Mobilization, no American wage or salary earner may feel safe that the Big Business clique in control of that agency may not suddenly seek to achieve a compulsory draft of the nation's workers. Such an action, under Big Business control and supervision, would endanger our traditional concepts of free labor and voluntary cooperation. We do not believe that free Americans want civilian labor to be conscripted.

Labor At ODM

Our conferences and correspondence with Mr. Wilson have demonstrated that he has little understanding of the needs of the plain folks throughout America. Mr. Wilson has clearly failed to recognize that voluntary cooperation among the various groups in our population has always been attainable in times of national emergency, and that such cooperation has been a foundation of our national strength. To the contrary, Mr. Wilson has demonstrated time and again that he considers the mobilization program his private preserve, in which he may order directives and ukases without consideration of the public need or the public wishes.

But our America is not a private corporation. Authority in our America does not flow down from the "front office"—it rises from the great common sense and deep patriotism of all the people. The Office of Defense Mobilization, however, is staffed at its top level exclusively with men from the executive offices of big business.

To give voice to the needs of the public, including all workers—on whom our defense production depends—we have asked Mr. Wilson for an opportunity for labor to participate at the top policy level of the ODM. That request was not voiced merely in order to provide a job for a leader of labor; it was advanced in the hope that labor's experience, skill and viewpoint could help to advance the interests of the total defense effort.

Mr. Wilson has made it clear by his actions that he wants no such broadening of the ODM structure. He does not want suggestions or advice from outside the ranks of big business. It is amply clear to the United Labor Policy Committee that Mr. Wilson does not want labor participation in the mobilization program; he now would accept window dressing, supplied by labor, to cover the back-room activities of the leaders of industry who staff the ODM. He will get no such window-dressing from the men and women of American labor. Under these circumstances, his belated offer to appoint a man from labor on his staff is meaningless.

Conclusion

Two weeks ago, the United Labor Policy Committee voiced alarm over the crisis in our defense program. The crisis has not lessened; it has become more acute.

The road is greased for higher prices. The present wage formula will act like a vise on the aspirations of Americans for decent living standards and equality of sacrifice in the defense effort. Rents are climbing steadily upwards while effective rent control legislation lags in Congress. An unbalanced tax program, which would place its heaviest burdens on the lower income groups, is in the process of enactment. Nowhere in the defense mobilization program is there evidence of enlightened and militant leadership to meet these problems, act upon them, and help the country develop the strength necessary to meet the threat of Communist aggression.

We of the United Labor Policy Committee have voiced these criticisms not to impair our defense program, but to improve it. We seek, actively and earnestly, an effective mobilization program which is imperatively required for the defense of our free institutions, and of our great democratic traditions.

We shall continue, with all the strength and persuasion at our command, to work toward our goal: the presevation of human liberty throughout the democratic world. We believe that in that American effort, the aims and aspirations of free labor—which has never faltered in its opposition to Communist aggression—can play a major, constructive part.

Labor Quits All Mobilization Agencies

BY HENRY C. FLEISHER

ORGANIZED labor this week awaits new developments in its campaign to win equality of sacrifice in the nation's defense mobilization effort.

As the CIO News went to press, the news wires were humming with reaction to the dramatic move of the United Labor Policy Committee — representing CIO, AFL, railroad brotherhoods and the Machinists — in withdrawing all labor representatives from defense agencies.

"We fully realize the gravity of this decision," the committee declared in its Feb. 28 statement. "It was arrived at only after exhaustive exploration of all the facts and after almost continuous conferences with the leaders of our government and of the defense program during the past two weeks.

"We have come to the conclusion that in no other way can we effectively impress upon the American people the great wrongs being perpetrated against them."

The union's decision came at the end of another hectic round of conferences with government officials.

In the days prior to the proclamation, the United Labor Policy Comimttee had talked at length with both defense mobilization chief Charles E. Wilson, and with Eric Johnston, director of economic stabilization.

Wilson, in the course of his talk with the top labor spokesmen, made clear that he was standing pat on his decision to take control of manpower away from the Dept. of Labor. And, as the union statement made clear, Wilson "wants no . . . broadening of the Office of Defense Mobilization" structure to give the general public a voice in setting up defense policies."

The ULPC decision to pull out of various defense advisory committees and a few staff positions in the defense structure also came on the heels of Johnston's approval of the wage formula voted two weeks earlier by the Wage Stabilization Board, and of a wide-open order permitting retail price rises.

THE THREE labor members of the three-section wage stabilization agency had resigned in protest against the wage formula, which they branded as "unworkable" and "unjust."

Though Johnston's statement of approval of the formula contained a number of recommendations to the Wage Board, the Labor Policy Committee said the proposals for "correcting these grave injustices are inadequate. They do not meet the needs of American workers.

"Mr. Johnston's recommendations freeze injustice by denying less privileged workers the right to obtain through collective bargaining the benefits enjoyed in substantial segments of industry."

The committee added, however, that "we are prepared to participate in a reconstructed tri-partite wage stabilization and disputes board, which would administer a fair and equitable wage policy."

CIO representatives at the meeting at which the statement was prepared were Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, Secy.-Treas. Joseph Childs of the Rubber Workers, and General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg. Pres. Philip Murray, recuperating in Florida after a serious illness, kept in close touch with the situation by telephone.

What would develop next on government wage policies was not altogether clear.

WSB, set up to represent industry, labor and the public, has not functioned since the resignation of its three union members —Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, Pres. Harry C. Bates of the AFL Bricklayers, and Vice-Pres. Elmer Walker of the Machinists.

PRESUMABLY a reconstituted wage board and an improved wage formula, with provisions adequate to care for hardships, inequities and other fringe items —plus machinery for handling labor-management disputes arising under the formula—might provide the basis cited as necessary by the United Labor Policy Committee.

But no moves in this direction were yet visible.

One significant advance was recorded in Johnston's statement allowing cost-of-living and productivity increases in contracts like those of the United Auto Workers, the CIO Electrical Workers and other unions.

But, though Johnston offered a few concessions, Defense Mobilizer Wilson offered none.

ULPC said the former president of General Electric Co. showed "little understanding of the needs of the plain folks throughout America. . . .

"Mr. Wilson has demonstrated time and again that he considers the mobilization program his private preserve, in which he may order directives and ukases without consideration of the public need or the public wishes. . . .

"It is amply clear that Mr. Wilson does not want labor participation in the mobilization program; he now would accept window dressing, supplied by labor, to cover the back-room activities of the leaders of industry who staff the ODM.

"He will get no such window dressing from the men and women of American labor."

Wilson had no immediate comment. It is known, however, that in private talks with newspapermen, he has belittled the effectiveness of union leaders and has said he saw no particular need for them in his top defense agency.

President Truman, asked about the dispute at his press conference, said he still had confidence in Wilson, and hoped that a solution could be found in coming weeks of the dispute between labor and the defense agencies.

But equality of sacrifice did not appear to be visible anywhere on the horizon.

The government's retail price order has been described as "legalized robbery," and a manufacturers' price order now in the works in Washington may similarly permit that group to pass along the burden to the ultimate consumer.

MEANWHILE, rent controls are due to expire March 31, unless Congress gets a move on; and a tax program sharply criticized by the CIO is under consideration on Capitol Hill.

If rent controls are not extended, and the new tax program is adopted without major changes, low-income groups will be hit still harder.

As the United Labor Policy Committee said, "nowhere in the defense mobilization program is there evidence of enlightened and militant leadership to meet these problems, act upon them, and help the country develop the strength necessary to meet the threat of Communist aggression."

Carey: Wilson Alienates Much Of Labor From Administration

Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson—former head of General Electric—has "alienated large sections of labor from the Administration," CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey said last week.

In a speech prepared for delivery to a Rubber Workers district convention at Akron, Ohio, Carey added that Wilson "wittingly or unwittingly is doing a highly effective job of undermining Pres. Truman's chances of being re-elected next year."

He told the rubber workers:

"I feel sure that labor will not return to the Wage Stabilization Board until the board is reshuffled to give genuine public representation, until it has been given power to handle disputes, and until there is established a fundamental wage stabilization that gives justice to the 45 million American wage earners."

Carey, who heads the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, lambasted General Electric for attacking cost-of-living escalator clauses. The GE statements have been contained in recent issues of its own management news letter.

Last year, Carey said, Wilson, as head of GE, signed the escalator pacts with the IUE. "Now GE is asking Defense Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson to sanction the destruction of a union contract signed by GE Pres. Charles E. Wilson," Carey said.

Profit Mark-Up Order Suggested By Retail Merchants

By GERVASE N. LOVE

RETAIL PROFITEERS in most fields were given virtually unlimited license last week to hunt down the last elusive dollar in the wallets of the consumers.

They got this right on their own terms when Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle "froze" the percentage margins of mark-up over wholesale prices that they had in effect on Feb. 24. The terms of the built-in gyp were approved by the Task Committee on Price Controls of the Retail Industry Committee at a meeting in New York on Dec. 8, 1950, and presented as recommendations to DiSalle and former Economic Stabilizer Alan Valentine on Jan. 15.

The freeze of percentage mark-ups—not dollars and cents mark-ups—means that outrageous but perfectly legal price boosts they had put into effect between the outbreak of hostilities in Korea and the general price freeze on Jan. 25, along with the equally outrageous but illegal increases foisted on the public after the freeze date, are now guaranteed for duration of the emergency.

It also means that whenever a retailer covered by the order pays a higher price for something he sells to the public, he will make a greater profit in dollars and cents, though percentagewise it remains the same. For example: If a retailer pays $2 for a shirt and sells it for $2.50, he makes a profit of 50c in cash, or 25%. But if the price he pays rises to $3, he makes 75c instead of 50c under the new order by marking it up the 25% he is allowed.

DiSALLE'S order covers more than 200,000 items on which Americans spend more than $30 billion a year. It includes:

Clothing for men, women and children, including house dresses and work clothing, men's furnishings and all women's and children's ready-to-wear items and accessories, except fur garments; all footwear, including that made of rubber; all household textile commodities (sheets, towels, blankets, curtains, etc.) and yard goods; all furniture, rugs and lamps.

Not included are food, beverages, auto equipment and supplies, gasoline and oil, lumber and building supplies and hardware, fuel, jewelry, large appliances and housewares, and small wares such as notions, stationery, etc.

At the meeting Jan. 15 with Valentine and DiSalle, the retailers made four specific suggestions as to price controls affecting them. The DiSalle order embodies three of them:

"If and when price control is imposed at the retail level, it should from the outset be in the form of mark-up freeze type regulations."

"That the base period to be used in applying regulations . . . should be as near as possible to the effective date of the regulation."

"If retail prices are controlled from the outset by margin type regulations, the problem (of the lag between retailers' prices and replacement costs) is not too serious. . . . However, if there are dollars and cents freeze type regulations, retailers can be severely penalized by failure to recognize the lag."

The fourth recommendation concerned price regulation at the manufacturing level, which has not been acted on thus far.

Meantime housewives, balking at fantastic meat prices, appeared in the midst of an increasingly effective boycott from one end of the country to the other.

There's Wide Split In Republican Party Ranks

GOP Big-Wigs Don't See Eye-To-Eye On Foreign Affairs—Rift Could Be Step Toward Nationwide Political Realignment

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THERE IS mounting evidence that the split in the Republican Party may be as deep and as serious as the one which has plagued the Democrats.

Members of the GOP lack a lot of seeing eye-to-eye on foreign policy. Some party leaders are miles apart in their approach to international affairs.

For example, Gov. Tom Dewey of New York appeared recently at a Senate hearing and gave testimony supporting the Truman program.

Regarding this Sen. Kenneth Wherry of Nebraska, the Republican whip, said, "I think he was called here as an Administration witness to smear anyone who would protect American boys."

And at the hearing Dewey looked directly at Wherry and said, "The most terrible thing that has happened to this country and the world is the defeatism evidenced by some of the questions asked here as to whether we could hold Europe."

THERE ARE TWO opposing schools of thought within the Republican Party regarding the role the U. S. should play in foreign affairs.

One group, for which Herbert Hoover appears to have assumed the role of spokesman, would have us pursue a course bordering on old-fashioned isolationism.

The other would make full use of our resources to help weld into one big, powerful team all of the free countries of the world.

The latter group agrees, at least broadly, with the Administration's approach to solving our international difficulties.

Its members believe that we must step up our armament program, send troops to Europe and do whatever we can to strengthen our allies without weakening our own individual position.

Even the smart guessers are not guessing publicly at the eventual result of the GOP split.

But it's an interesting development—one which might lead to a realignment of political forces on a national scale at some future date.

The rift among the Democrats—over civil rights and other domestic issues—is not one which can be mended easily or quickly. Maybe it cannot be mended at all.

SOME TIME ago Southern Democrats and elements of the Republican Party formed an effective coalition.

It's not impossible that another—but different—coalition may be formed before Congress is able to set a steady course in foreign affairs.

If this should happen, voters would find it very difficult in 1952 to follow the "party label" method of voting.

IT HAS BEEN apparent for a long time that the differences within our major political parties are often as great as the differences between the parties.

A vote for a Democrat in the South, for instance, can be a vote for liberalism, conservatism or reaction.

And a vote for a Republican can mean many different things in other parts of the country.

So we have a confused and confusing political situation. It may lead only to more confusion.

But it could lead to a political realignment which would create two strong parties—one liberal and the other conservative from top to bottom.

And that wouldn't be a bad idea.

Let's Get The Facts Straight

Columnist David Lawrence, who hasn't been right about labor in years, called it a "strike" against the government.

Some government "spokesmen" were busy explaining that the "labor boys" had just gotten sore-headed. After a good night's sleep, these spokesmen indicated, everything would be all right.

A big news agency rushed out an alarm that industrial strikes were almost sure to paralyze the nation any day now.

All three of these so-called "usually reliable sources" were quite unreliably wrong in their estimate of the action of the United Labor Policy Committee in withdrawing its representatives from the defense mobilization agencies.

That action was neither an "insurrection" nor a "strike against the government"; and it was not a disguised way of calling upon the boys back home to break their contracts and hit the bricks.

No, the action of the leaders of American labor was just what they said it was:

"We have come to the conclusion that in no other way can we effectively impress upon the American people the great wrongs being perpetrated against them . . . the basic principle of equality of sacrifice . . . has been abandoned."

There's nothing new about that statement. Labor has been saying it for months.

And while the people's grievances mounted, the indifference in high government circles also grew.

Prices rose, and the price "controllers" competed on methods of widening loopholes for manufacturers and distributors.

WILSON GIVES LABOR 'BRUSH'

Charles Wilson of GE came to town, a trail of big business executives in his wake, and gave union representatives just about the most contemptuous treatment they'd received since the days of Herbert Hoover. He told reporters he didn't need labor's advice—on manpower or any other phase of the defense program.

The Wage Stabilization Board came up with a formula built like a vise to keep wages down while the cost of living went up.

Labor protested, and withdrew its members from the Wage Board. There was a flurry in government circles. In conference after conference, the United Labor Policy Committee tried to work out agreements on these complex problems.

Instead, it found itself at the end of a dead-end alley, a high brick wall of smug indifference.

It was then, and only then, that the leaders of our unions decided to withdraw from the various defense advisory committees—where their advice was rarely heeded, anyway.

This crisis need not be long extended. It can be pened if the heads of the defense effort had paid more heed to the needs of the people, and devoted less attention to the interests of big business.

This crisis need not be long extended. It can be settled by some long-needed changes in policy and outlook in Congress and in the defense agencies. In other words, it's time the American people—rather than some special profit interest—got a little consideration.

Atomic Bomb Insurance Act Sought

A NATIONAL insurance act to provide benefits for workers of the nation and their dependents in case of an atomic attack on industrial areas was demanded last week by the California CIO Council.

John A. Despol, council secretary-treasurer, said the insurance plan was one of the points which received top attention at the council's executive board meeting, held recently at Santa Monica.

A resolution adopted by the board pointed out "an effective atomic attack on one heavily populated area, or even a single large industrial plant could result in so many industrial injuries as to exceed the resources and ability of a self-insurer or an insurance carrier of workmen's compensation insurance . . . and might well exceed even the power of an entire state to provide such benefits."

The council said that the "immediate urgency of this threat to the safety and security of the workers" will be called to the attention of the President and Congress, and requests be made that "appropriate legislation on a national scale be prepared and adopted without delay." The CIO asked that such federal legislation include financial protection and medical care.

In other actions, the CIO body hit sharply at the Defense Production Act of 1950 and bypassing of organized labor in the national defense set-up.

Utility Workers Win 11c Raise

Faced with the threat of a strike by 300 CIO Utility Workers, the California Water Service Co. has signed a contract with the union providing for a wage increase of 11c an hour, retroactive to Jan. 1.

The new agreement covers workers in Concord, Chico, Marysville, Oroville, Petaluma, San Mateo, South San Francisco, Stockton, Bakersville, Visalia, Hanford, East Los Angeles, Redondo Beach and Hermosa Beach.

A committee from the California Water Utility UWUA Council, headed by Pres. Carl Stahlecker and Harold Doyle, UWUA executive board member, conducted the lengthy negotiations leading to the settlement.

Ruttenberg 'Hits' Bosses

IF EMPLOYERS' groups were smart they'd swing into the fight for low cost housing, better minimum wage and social security laws. They'd show concern over the predicament of aging workers, over racial discrimination on the job and other matters of vital concern to their workers.

That is a point made by Stanley Ruttenberg, the CIO's research and education director, in a critical discussion on "The Social Responsibility of Management."

Given originally as one of the 1950 lectures sponsored by the Edward L. Bernays Foundation, the speech has now been published by New York University along with three others giving the points of view of the social engineer (Stuart Chase), the economist (Edwin G. Nourse, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers), and management (William B. Given, Jr., an official of the American Brake Shoe Co.).

Ruttenberg says management has four main social repsonsibilities: To improve local community conditions, to accept the principles of collective bargaining, to understand the fears and prejudices of workers toward scientific management, and to engage in business practices to assure job opportunities for all workers.

"Unions have become a part of the American way of life," he states. "They are as much part of our society as any other component. It is the responsibility of management to deal and work with them."

Employer groups on the whole have shown a complete lack of understanding of workers' quite justified fears and prejudices against scientific management, which they have come to associate with the speed-up, Ruttenberg maintains. Too often workers have found that time and motion study, for instance, has ended up in more work for them at less pay.

Ruttenberg says management should work out programs and policies "which will lead to an ever-enlarged national economy," and give jobs to the million or so new workers who enter the labor market each year.

There is little clash between management's point of view as expressed by Given and Ruttenberg's critical appraisal. Given's dissertation is mostly a puff for the policies of his own company. But one remark particularly would agree with labor's experience:

"Old-school business managers felt that everyone who worked for them was in their debt. Some even felt that the pay check was, at least in part, charity."

In giving the viewpoint of the social engineer, Stuart Chase says that the manager today "needs to become something of a social scientist to get the most out of the new findings now pouring in."

Nourse urges management to use "tolerance, frankness and objectivity in dealing with labor as a partner."

Reappointment Urged

Milton Rosenberg, manager of the Greater New York Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers, has been recommended for reappointment to the advisory board for vocational and extension education of the New York City Board of Education.

He Won Because He Knew About Stills

YOU NEVER know, said the CIO representative, when an odd bit of information will pull you out of a hole.

"There I was, arguing with the guy and getting nowhere when he started talking about rum and stills," he continued.

"It just happened that I knew a bit about both — and after he realized he'd made a mistake he started softening up.

"Finally I got a good contract out of him."

Following is the entire story, as told by the CIO representative:

A FEW YEARS AGO the employes of a sugar plant in Florida voted to disaffiliate from the union to which they had belonged and join the CIO.

After the new union was established a negotiator tackled the job of getting a contract with the operators of the plant.

He learned at his first meeting with the employer that the latter didn't intend to provide a wage increase unless he had to.

He argued that his 100 employes were making enough and that, furthermore, he couldn't give them a raise because he was losing money.

He continued this argument at several other meetings—and the negotiator decided he could use some help.

So, shortly, a CIO representative from Atlanta was sent to Florida to give him some aid.

THE SECOND CIO man on the scene soon learned that the first wasn't exaggerating when he reported the head of the sugar plant "is a tough nut to crack."

"When I sat down to talk with him he told me that he wasn't obligated to negotiate with the CIO because he wasn't engaged in interstate commerce and wasn't regulated by the National Labor Relations Act," the second representative said.

"Then he said it didn't make any difference anyhow because he wasn't making any money—that he'd been losing money ever since he started operating the plant.

"I asked him how he remained in business if he kept losing money. He didn't give a satisfactory answer but insisted he couldn't afford a pay hike."

The discussion went on for several hours and then a recess was called.

AFTER THE RECESS the CIO man and the plant operator picked up their discussion where they had left it.

"I decided to pin him down first on his claim that he wasn't affected by NLRB but didn't have any luck," he said.

"Then I switched back to the matter of his making money and really bore down.

"Finally he said that he meant he hadn't made any money on the sugar he handled but that he 'kept going' on the returns from molasses which the plant processed.

"I asked him if the molasses made pretty good rum and he said it did. Swore the rum made from it was better than that made from Puerto Rican molasses.

"I ASKED HIM IF most of his molasses was used for rum and he said it was.

"Then I knew I had caught him short. You see, I used to live in Florida and knew there wasn't a single still in the state that used molasses to make rum. And I knew he was shipping the stuff across at least one state line.

"I called his hand on this and he admitted he hadn't been telling me the truth. Then he started softening up—and before the session ended he had agreed to a pay raise of 22c an hour.

"All of which demonstrates that hard spirits aren't the root of all evil!"

JUMBO JUMBLE!

Vet Answers Recurrent GI Tales Of Selfish Workers

Again as during World War II stories are circulating among GIs about the high pay received by workers at home and about the latters' unpatriotic attitude when they strike. But this time there are some veterans of World War II who remember that they found these stories false. One such veteran, Mickey Levine, a member of the national administrative committee of the American Veterans Committee, wrote the following letter to the New York Times:

May I reply to the complaint made by the veteran in Korea against what he believes to be the selfish, unpatriotic attitude of labor in general, and the "switchmen" in particular.

I have heard such attacks before, and not so long ago either. As a veteran of World War II, only six years ago I listened to amazing stories spread in barracks, delivered through so-called "Information and Education" courses, and printed in biased newspapers about the perfidious activities of organized labor, all of whom seemed to be led in chains by John L. Lewis.

I remember with awe stories about astronomical take-home pay of "4-F" factory workers who were all buying black-market Cadillacs. And I recall reading about the unselfish giants of industry who were concerned only with production and more production—in an all-out effort to support the GI in the foxhole.

The actual story we learned and are learning now was quite different from the carefully prepared printed one. Organized labor in the United States performed nobly; our productive achievements were unequaled anywhere, and our record of man-hours lost was surpassed only in the Soviet Union. I don't think any of us care to emulate the labor system of Russia.

The enormous take-home pay was, of course, an exaggeration; much of it went into war bonds—and we recall now how quickly it melted away, since the high wages were due in the main to long hours of overtime.

On the other hand, the profits did not melt. We know now about those unselfish industrialists; the concentration of most of our wealth, resources and power in the hands of a few huge corporations; the hundreds of new millionaires (not one of whom paid dues or is in good standing in either the AFL or the CIO); the useless equipment sold to the Government.

Now we start again, and the propaganda machines will begin to roll once more.

Try to remember, good friend in Korea, that there are two sides to every argument we have at home, and that something is wrong if only one partisan argument reaches you. Again that is the Russian way.

Remember that profits have soared to new, unimaginable levels, greater than ever before; the cost of living is unbearably high for most of us; many workers, like the maligned switchmen, have long-standing legitimate grievances which were neglected by railroad managers, negotiators and incompetent officials like Mr. Steelman.

Also try to remember that most of the fathers and brothers of your fellow-comrades in arms are laborers; that those of us who preceded you in the defense of our nation are likewise laborers—and also veterans—who, too, are loyal and patriotic. All of us, laborer, and farmer and industrialist, are working hard to assist you in the accomplishment of the tough job you were given.

Housewives' Revolt Drops Meat Prices In Some Places As Controls Flop

What the weak-kneed price controls of the government failed to do, a housewives' revolt is accomplishing. Retail consumption of meat has dropped 30% in New York City because housewives have either stopped buying meat or are buying cheaper cuts.

Butchers have begun cutting the price of choice cuts, but the slashes have not been substantial enough, and the women just aren't buying. The slaughterers said they were not to blame for the high prices, were being "squeezed," and cried for relief. Warehouses and coolers were full of unsold meat. Slaughterers said they might be forced to close, and were laying off workers.

A grocery chain on Long Island cut top round roast beef from 83c a pound to 79, after cutting steak from 99c to 89.

A Chicago meat market cut porterhouse steak from $1.48 to $1.09. A suburban Pittsburgh market was selling "good" steaks at 89c, down from 98c two weeks before.

Wholesalers reported drops in meat volume sales of up to 60%. LPA

Uncle Sam: Family Of 4 Needs At Least $3453 A Year

THE U. S. BUREAU of Labor Statistics, like many a housewife, went shopping last October.

Like a lot of housewives who go shopping these days, it didn't buy anything. But it found out the prices of the items in its dubiously named "modest but adequate" family budget in 34 cities. And like the housewives, it found prices had gone up since the last time it went shopping—back in October, 1949.

The BLS learned that it costs more for a family of four persons, including a boy and a girl both under 15 years of age, to live in Milwaukee, Wis., than in any of the other 33 cities it shopped—$3933 a year, including taxes, etc., or $75.63 a week.

At the other end of the scale, the BLS reported, stood New Orleans, La., where it found $3453 a year, or $66.40 a week, was required.

Second most expensive city was Washington, a notch below Milwaukee with $3926, or $75.38 a week, needed to buy the goods and services that go to make up a budget stripped of anything remotely resembling a luxury and containing mighty few comforts. In 33d place, just above New Orleans, stood Mobile, Ala., where it was found the BLS family needed $3507 a year, or $67.44 a week, to get along.

PERHAPS it was just a coincidence, but in the same week the BLS disclosed what it found out on its shopping spree, another of the bureau's subdivisions reported that the average weekly earnings of industrial workers DROPPED 83c a week between December, 1950, and January, 1951, to $62.69.

Neither report contained any suggestion as to how an industrial worker with a wife and two growing children could make ends meet even in a comparatively low-cost city like Mobile, where the operating deficit of a family trying to live within the BLS budget would be $4.35 a week or $226.20 a year.

The family budget was first priced in June, 1947, and again in October, 1949. The annual costs in each of the 34 cities for all three years are given in an adjoining column.

A study of the figures leads to some interesting facts. The smallest percentage increase between October, 1949, and October, 1950, was 3.4% in Baltimore, the largest 7.9% in Milwaukee. The BLS gave no average increase for the 34 cities, either in dollars or percentagewise, but computation shows the unweighted average to be 5.66%. The cost of living increased less in the larger cities than in the smaller. The average for the five largest cities (New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles and Detroit) was 4.6%.

Seven cities besides Milwaukee showed increases of more than 7% during the year. They were: Birmingham, Ala., and Indianapolis, Ind., 7.8%; Portland, Ore., 7.7%; Manchester, N. H., 7.6%; Houston, Tex., 7.5%; Savannah, Ga., 7.2%, and Scranton, Pa., 7.1%. The increase in Pittsburgh was 7% flat.

The increase in the cost of the budget was less than 4% in four other cities. They were: Jacksonville, Fla., and Philadelphia, 3.9%; Chicago, 3.8%, and Cincinnati, O., 3.7%. In Washington it was an even 4%.

DURING the same year—October, 1949, to October, 1950—that the BLS "modest but adequate budget" was increasing an average of 5.66% for the 34 cities in which it was priced, the BLS consumer price index went from 168.5 to 174.8, an increase of but 3.79%.

The increases between October, 1949, and October, 1950, span the start of the Korean war and cover the period when prices were jumping at an ever-increasing rate. They do not show the further increases in prices that have taken place since October, 1950. Between the middle of that month and the middle of December the BLS consumer price index jumped another 2.17%.

Publication of the January figure, which normally would be available about the middle of February, was delayed by a revision, being made to reflect the addition of new commodities to those to those covered in the past.

A comparison, city by city, of the cost of living up to the budget last October again shows the folderol about it being cheaper to live in the South for just what it is.

Four of the eight cities where it proved most expensive to live are in the South—Washington, Richmond, Houston and Atlanta (the others: Milwaukee, San Francisco, Seattle and Boston). Five of the eight cities where it costs least are in the North—Kansas City, Scranton, Pa.; Indianapolis, Portland, Me., and Cleveland (the others: New Orleans, Mobile and Savannah, Ga.).

THE BUDGET was drawn up by the BLS in 1945 and 1946, with the aid of a staff of consultants, at the direction of the Labor and Federal Security Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, which wanted to know the total number of "dollars required for the average worker in overalls to live in these cities."

It is not an ideal budget geared to an ideal standard of living, but is based on what the BLS found were actual expenditures of families consisting of a husband who is a working man, a housewife not gainfully employed, and a son and a daughter both under 15 years of age and attending school.

The quantities of foods set up in the budget would require too much space to permit a thorough explanation here, but some of the other items are interesting.

The milk allowance, incidentally, is 594.9 quarts of fluid milk per year or slightly better than 1½ quarts a day in a family with two growing children, plus 67 lbs. of canned milk.

For instance, the tobacco budget allows for the purchase of 166.8 packs of cigarets, 38.5 cigars and 20.1 tins of tobacco a year.

The cigaret allowance means .457 of a pack a day, or 9.14 cigarets which husband and wife must divide between them—4.57 cigarets per day for each (the presumption is that the children don't cut in on this ration). But the husband can smoke one cigar about every nine days, and can indulge in the luxury of a 1.75 ounce can of tobacco about every 18 days (the presumption HERE is that the wife sticks to cigarets if she smokes at all).

THE HOUSEWIFE who has the thankless task of operating under the budget is allowed .6 of a permanent wave every year, or one complete wave every 16.8 months. And she must do with 4.2 haircuts a year, and 2.9 fingerwaves. The husband can get his hair cut 14.6 times a year, but he can buy only 1.7 shaves; the rest of the time he must shave himself at home with a fresh blade about every 9½ days—providing his shaving brush lasts out the required 10 years.

The wife can get a wool dress about every five years, but is also permitted cotton street dresses at the rate of 11 every 10 years, house dresses at a rate but slightly better, and 1.72 rayon dresses a year. Hubby can deck himself out in a new heavy wool suit only once in about 27 months, and must make a light weight wool suit last three years.

The Heller Budget, prepared at the Univ. of California and frequently cited by union negotiators seeking wage increases, is based on a higher standard of living which, while still modest, is regarded as preferable to that possible under the BLS budget. It was last re-priced in San Francisco in September, 1949. Covering the same size family, it called for total expenditures of $4040.54 a year by an industrial worker and $5134.89 by a white collar worker.

IUE Board Blasts Business Domination Of Mobilization

"THE STRANGLEHOLD of big business on America's mobilization program" is thwarting the nation's entire defense effort, the executive board of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers declared during a two-day meeting in Washington Feb. 24 and 25.

The report on defense mobilization was made by IUE Pres. James B. Carey and unanimously adopted by members of the executive board, holding their first meeting.

The wage stabilization formula was attacked because "it would rob workers of all wage gains made since the end of 1949, while in contrast prices have been pegged at their highest levels." Adoption of the wage formula, which forced labor members to withdraw from the Wage Stabilization Board, would reduce the living standards of millions of American wage and salary workers, IUE said.

THE UNION considered possible strike action against the General Electric chain which has started a campaign to prevent fulfillment of an escalator clause in its contract with the union.

An emergency meeting of the IUE-CIO GE Conference Board has been called for March 3 and 4 in New York by Chairman John Callahan. The members of the board will consider necessary action if GE tries to renege on its contract, he said.

Carey told the executive board meeting that GE management has embarked on a "union busting campaign" with the backing and support of its former president, Charles E. Wilson, now Director of Defense Mobilization. The company is encouraged in its campaign against workers' living standards by the complete control of the defense effort by representatives of big business, Carey said.

The IUE board renewed the union's demand that contracts for defense materials be withdrawn from plants where the Communist-dominated UE is the bargaining agent. IUE pointed out UE's threat to vital defense work at the GE plant in Schenectady, N. Y., and the electronic shops in the New York area.

The union announced progress in five major organizing drives which are now underway in General Electric, Westinghouse, and the radio and television and parts industry in the New York and Chicago areas.

A 1951 COMMITTEE on Anti-Discrimination was set up with Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett as chairman and Executive Board Member W. Richard Carter of Chicago, as secretary. Board Member Harry Block and representatives from each of the union's 10 districts will also serve on the committee.

Carey was named chairman of the IUE Political Action Committee and Joe Kelley, Philadelphia, was chosen secretary.

Support for the 70,000 textile workers striking against the woolen and worsted industry was expressed in a unanimous resolution of the executive board.

Interlocks: How Big Business Runs Economy

THE STORY of "interlocks" —the device by which big business dominates the American economic scene—is told in the 1950 report of the Federal Trade Commission.

It's an important story from the standpoint of labor and all other consumers because it reveals how the nation's business and industrial giants keep competition weak, and keep prices and profits high.

It also reveals—indirectly—why big business has been so anxious to dominate the mobilization program — domination against which organized labor has strongly protested.

In its annual report FTC summarizes "the interlocking relationships among the directors of the 1000 manufacturing corporations which are listed as 'largest' by the Office of Business Economics of the Dept. of Commerce, and also the interlocking directorates between these 1000 companies and a selected list of banks, investment trusts, insurance companies, railroads, public utilities, and distributive enterprises."

The report covers not only indirect interlocks among those companies but also interlocking relationships which are established through the presence of directors of two companies on the board of a third corporation.

After several pages illustrating examples of interlocking directorates, FTC concludes that while some of these are in violation of the Clayton anti-trust Act, many of them are not because the law does not cover them.

All of which may sound pretty technical. Columnist Thomas L. Stokes, however, reduced it to bread-and-butter terms when he said:

"This 'kissing-kin' relationship among the great units of our economy makes it a cozy family affair, with the result that big business can exert its influence through its representatives in the defense program in a sort of common front to protect its preserves —and even come out bigger and stronger as in the last war . . .

"The natural effect of a national emergency such as now exists is to freeze the economy through regulations and controls. Those who are in command see that their privileges likewise are frozen, that is, protected against tampering.

"These privileges include a lack of competition in many areas. That means to you and to me, as citizens, higher costs for all the things we use every day and, as taxpayers, higher costs for the things the government buys with our tax money for our common defense.

"We are less protected than normally since a law has been enacted exempting certain inter-industry agreements, normally illegal, from anti-trust statutes."

Let us consider a few examples of interlocking directorates which are exposed by the FTC:

"The food industry showed an extensive array of interlocking directorates which appeared to be significant, both for competition within the industry and for its relation with other industries.

"In the packing industry, for example, Armour & Co. was indirectly interlocked with the third and fourth largest packers; three of the largest meat packers had indirect ties with three of the largest bakers, while Armour and Swift & Co. had direct interlocks with equipment manufacturers . . .

"Four of the 12 largest canners had direct or indirect interlocks with companies producing competitive products. The direct interlocks between Libby, McNeil & Libby and the Minnesota Canning Co. is illustrative of the competition-reducing ties found in the industry."

The report said that six of 12 grain-mill-products companies had interlocking relations with competitors. The report said:

"General Mills, the largest, had a direct interlock with Best Foods and indirect interlocks with Pillsbury Mills, International Milling Co., and Russell-Miller Milling Co. Both General Mills and Pillsbury were directly interlocked with a large paper manufacturer. Pillsbury was also interlocked directly with a food container stock manufacturer."

The sugar industry proved to be a very, very sticky proposition, according to the report. "Sixteen of the 23 largest companies had direct or indirect ties with each other," FTC reported. "Six Hawaiian sugar companies were both directly and indirectly interlocked with each other, while sugar companies outside Hawaii were equally intricately interlocked.

"The sugar companies also had direct and indirect connections with the country's largest producers of dairy products, bakery products and beverages."

Beverage companies seemed to mix as well as whisky and soda, as shown by the fact that eight of the 23 largest beverage manufactures were directly or indirectly interlocked with each other. Canada Dry Ginger Ale, for example, had a direct tie with National Distillers, third largest whisky manufacturer in the country. National Distillers also was reported by FTC as having indirect ties with the largest corn products and sugar refining companies. It also had a direct connection with the nation's largest manufacturer of glass bottles.

So you can't eat—or have a drink of the bowl that cheers—without helping fill the coffers of large combines.

In the mobilization period, steel —as well as food—plays an increasingly important role. This is what FTC said about its steel's interlocking directorates:

"The interlocking relations within the primary iron and steel industry fell into four major categories. U. S. Steel maintained indirect interlocks with 11 other members of the industry—seven integrated steel companies, a non-integrated strip steel producer, a coke and chemical company, and two ferro-alloy companies.

"The second group of steel companies included Republic Steel Corp., Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Inland Steel, Wheeling Steel Corp., Jones & Laughlin, and National Steel Corp. These companies were all interlocked through a group of important Cleveland companies, including four ore companies and two Cleveland banks. The interlocks consisted of both stock ownership and common directors.

"The third group centered in the Mellon family and in a number of companies in the Mellon sphere of influence, including Mellon Bank & Trust Co., Gulf Oil Corp., Koppers Co., Pullman, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., and the Westinghouse Electric Co.

"Through these corporations, interlocking relations were maintained among Bethlehem Steel Corp., Armco, Crucible Steel, A. M. Byers, Superior Steel, Granite City Steel Co., and Vanadium Corp. of America.

"In addition Jones and Laughlin provided a point of contact between the Mellon group and the Cleveland group; and U. S. Steel was linked to the group through Pullman.

"Finally, Pittsburgh Steel Co., Alan Wood Steel Co., Follansbee Steel Corp. and Pittsburgh Coke & Chemical Co. were interlocked through ties among themselves and the Peoples First National Bank & Trust Co. (Pittsburgh).

"This group was interrelated with the Mellon group through Jones & Laughlin and with the Cleveland group through both Jones & Laughlin and National Steel."

The same coziness was provided by interlocks in the fabricated and primary metals industries, and in the nonferrous metals industries.

In the electrical machinery industry, the four big outfits—General Electric, Westinghouse, Western Electric and Radio Corp. of America—were shown to be closer than a bunch of grapes. All four were indirectly interlocked on a multiple basis through six large commercial banks, two of the largest life insurance companies, a public utility, a railroad and an industrial company, FTC said.

FTC reported this industry also presented a pattern of interlocking relations extending backwards to suppliers of metals, and plastics and forward to users of electrical equipment. Attention was called to the interlocking directorates between GE and the New York Central Railroad and between Westinghouse and the Pennsylvania and New Haven roads.

The leading petroleum companies—Standard of New Jersey, Socony-Vacuum Oil, Texas Co., Gulf Oil, and Standard of California and Indiana—"were closely tied together by indirect interlocking directorates or by joint ownership of affiliates." The Chase National Bank appeared to be the focal point in the setup. The report disclosed that on its board of directors were representatives of Standard of Indiana, Standard of California, Gulf, and Continental Oil.

The large automobile tire manufactures were shown to have oodles of connections with the smaller rubber companies. The most significant of the interlocking relations, the report points out, was that between General Motors and U. S. Rubber, resting on duPont investments in both companies and the presence of duPont directors on both company boards.

"Three of the big manufacturers —Goodyear Tire & Rubber, U. S. Rubber and B. F. Goodrich—had direct interlocking relations with chemical companies producing materials used in the manufacture of tires," the report pointed out.

The textile industry was found to have "an extensive interlock network with 39 of 85 companies connected with one another." A large number of interlocks appeared to be among companies that were producing competing products.

"Several of the textile mills had indirect tie-ins, principally through financial institutions, with retail outlets, largely chain clothing and department stores," FTC said.

FTC Asks Congress To Plug Anti-Trust Law Loophole

Chairman James H. Mead of the Federal Trade Commission recently told the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that the FTC is preparing a draft of legislation to amend Section 8 of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act so that it will no longer ignore important interlocking relationships which impair competition in manufacture and commerce.

He said the legislation is urgently needed not only during the present emergency but also from the long range view of strengthening the anti-monopoly laws.

"Section 8 has proved to be weak and inadequate to accomplish its purpose of preventing inter-corporate relationships which are destructive to competition and lead to undue concentration of economic power," he declared.

"The defect of the present law, as applied to manufacture and commerce is twofold: (1) The offense is so narrowly defined that the law is easily evaded and (2) various types of interlocking relationships which impair competition are not covered by the statute."

Gladys Dickason To Aid Japanese Unions

GLADYS DICKASON, first woman trade unionist from the United States to go to the Orient on an official labor mission, left Washington last week to fly to Tokyo.

Miss Dickason, a vice-president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, has gone to Japan at the invitation of Gen. Douglas MacArthur to advise members of his staff on ways of encouraging activities of Japanese women in the trade union movement and thus aid in promoting the growth of democracy in the country. A million and a half women belong to unions in Japan.

At the request of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Miss Dickason will attend the convention of the General Council of Trade Unions of Japan, meeting in Tokyo March 10-11. As a fraternal delegate from the CIO, she will deliver greetings from the American unionists in a brief speech in Japanese learned for the occasion. The GCTU has a membership of more than 4 million, according to Takeo Muta, chairman of the organization.

Miss Dickason plans to remain in Japan two months, then spend another two months traveling in the Far East, Among the places she will stop on her way home are Cairo, Tel Aviv, Istanbul and Athens. She will return to New York via Army transport from Bremerhaven.

Besides being an ACW vice-president, Miss Dickason is also an assistant director of the CIO's Southern Organizing Drive, and has led successful campaigns to organize the cotton garment workers in Georgia, Tennessee, North Carolina, Texas, Mississippi and Florida. She has served as the union's research director since 1935.

Born in Galena, Oklahoma territory, in 1903, Miss Dickason was taken in a covered wagon to Indian territory when she was a year old. Later her parents returned to Okemah, Okla., where she went to school. Her father is a cotton farmer in Okemah.

Miss Dickason took her A. B. degree at the Univ. of Oklahoma and did postgraduate work at Columbia Univ., New York.

OFF TO JAPAN: Vice-Pres. Gladys Dickason of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers boards a plane at Washington to fly to Japan where she will help instruct 1.5 million Japanese women on how democratic trade unions operate.

Sentencing Of Negro GIs Baffles Prober

THURGOOD MARSHALL, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has returned to the United States after a five-week tour of investigation in Korea and Japan—with his major question unanswered.

Marshall went overseas to investigate charges that Negro troops had been singled out for disciplinary action during the general retreat of United Nations troops which followed early U.N. victories.

"The question as to why so many Negroes were charged with misbehaviour before the enemy, and so few white soldiers, remains unanswered," he reported.

However, there was no doubt at the end of his tour that the number of Negroes so far convicted outnumbered the whites, and that the severity of the sentences handed out to the convicted Negroes was much greater than those received by the whites.

In a detailed report to Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Marshall reported that 32 Negroes and only two white men had been convicted. The white men received sentences of five and three years. Of the 32 Negroes convicted, one (Leon Gilbert, who asked the NAACP to investigate) was sentenced to death, 15 to life imprisonment, one to 50 years, and 15 to from five to 25 years. President Truman commuted Gilbert's sentence to 20 years at hard labor.

The trials, Marshall's report continued, were hastily conducted—two of the men who were sentenced to life took 50 minutes each, and two others so sentenced had trials lasting 44 and 42 minutes, respectively.

Marshall said he was convinced that the defense counsel assigned to the men had been competent, but said he was equally convinced they did not have enough time to prepare the cases. "We also have undisputed evidence," he added, "that in several instances the men were questioned about an alleged offense, dismissed with the admonition to forget it, sent back to the front line and then, after weeks of fighting the enemy day and night, pulled out of their foxholes, returned to the rear, and court-martialled."

CIO 'Light,' 3 Other Labor Papers Reject Freedom Foundation Awards

FOUR LABOR publications rejected prizes awarded them in the second annual awards made by the anti-labor Freedom Foundation, Valley Forge, Pa., on Washington's birthday.

They are: The American Federationist, official AFL publication; "Light" edition of the CIO News, published monthly by the CIO Utility Workers; Electrical Workers' Journal, monthly of the AFL Electrical Workers; and Machinists' Monthly Journal, of the AFL Machinists.

The awards were made "for outstanding defense and extension of the American way of life." But Freedom Foundation's version of the "American Way of Life" is the line peddled by the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, and groups like the Committee for Constitutional Government.

This is not the first time labor papers have turned down awards from the foundation, which is headed by E. F. Hutton, wealthy Wall Street broker who has been connected with a series of reactionary organizations.

Last year a first award made to the Paper Maker, published by AFL Paper Makers' Union, was rejected because officers of the union said they found themselves "right smack in the middle of what was simply just another group promoting propaganda spewed forth by the National Association of Manufacturers."

This year's reactions from labor run much the same. William Green, AFL chief, turned down the first prize for union publications given the American Federationist. Other editors involved termed the awards "embarrassing."

William J. Pachler, CIO Utility Workers' secretary-treasurer and editor of "Light," was blunt in his rejection of a second prize. In a telegram to Kenneth Wells, vice president of Freedom Foundation, Pachler said he had investigated the organization and found he couldn't accept the award.

"My research clearly shows me," Pachler wired, "that as a believer in the aims and aspirations of labor and as an elected officer in the Utility Workers Union-CIO, I cannot accept the medal or the award.

"Our information discloses the formation of Freedom Foundation was inspired and is sponsored by a group of individuals whose public record on economic matters has very little in common with labor's objectives.

"In addition, a number of the past awards indicate that there exists a very definite difference of opinion on economic matters between the objectives of Freedom Foundation and those of the UWA and CIO.

"This decision has been concurred by officers of my own unions and national CIO officials."

L. O. Thomas, editor of the Machinists' Monthly Journal, said he had only heard about his magazine's third prize in an unofficial way.

"Freedom Foundation has neglected to notify us," Thomas said. "Until we hear from them we cannot act, but you can rest assured that when we receive such notice we won't accept it."

"I'll have to survey my patriotism a little closer," Thomas continued. "If they put their stamp of approval on it there must be something wrong with it."

J. Scott Milne, editor of the Electrical Workers' Journal, also wired rejection of a second place award.

A glance at the sponsors of the organization quickly shows why labor groups have been loath to accept its awards. E. F. Hutton, "angel" of the outfit, is head of E. F. Hutton & Co., Wall Street brokerage house. He has backed such anti-liberal organizations as the Liberty League and the Crusaders.

Others on the five-man board of directors are: Don Belding, chairman of Foote, Cone & Belding, national advertising firm; Lewis H. Brown, chairman of Johns-Manville Co. and a director of American Telephone and Telegraph Co.; Fred Maytag II, president of the Maytag Co.; and Kenneth D. Wells, executive vice president of Freedom Foundation.

The same interests backing Freedom Foundation also are backers of the Freedom Forums, Fighters for Freedom, and other reactionary groups hiding behind flag-rippling names.

Ship Union Accepts Offer Of Bethlehem

MEMBERS of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Union employed in eight East Coast shipyards of the Bethlehem Steel Co. have voted by a 9 to 1 margin to accept a wage increase settlement reached Feb. 18.

The agreement, covering 18,000 workers, provides for a 15% increase with the standard first-class mechanic rate raised from $1.57 to $1.80 an hour. Laborers are to receive 18½c an hour more, and other categories are boosted proportionately.

The increases are retroactive to Jan 1, and will cost the company approximately $800,000.

The only group voting against acceptance of the company offer was Local 12, whose members are employed in Bethlehem's Staten Island shipyard. The final vote was disclosed by union officials as 16,900 for and 1,724 against.

The present contract with Bethlehem runs through Dec. 31. The negotiations, which started in November, 1950, were part of a contractual wage review.

Mishap Curb Held Vital To Survival

Frank Burke, CIO Steelworkers director of safety and health, told the recent 21st annual Safety Convention and Exposition of the Greater New York Safety Council that the importance of accident prevention in industry has gone beyond considerations of "good business" and "human suffering."

Terming accident prevention in in industry "a matter of national survival in this period of all-out production for defense," Burke offered a seven-point program which he said should be carried out by joint committees with representation by top management and union officials.

"In this day and age the saving of human lives takes on a new significance," he declared. "The most precious natural resource this nation has is its manpower. We are engaged in a world struggle for survival. Every brain, every pair of hands must be used to the utmost to defeat communism. Anybody killed, injured or off his job because of impairment of health is an asset to the Russian bear and a tragedy to the democracies of the world."

Protect GIs' Job Rights, Reuther Urges

PRES. WALTER P. REUTHER, of the CIO Auto Workers, on Feb. 28 asked Senate members to amend the Selective Service bill to include two proposals made by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Carey has asked that servicemen be given job protection and that the life of the bill be limited to two years.

In a letter to members of the Senate, Reuther urged that the bill be amended from the floor to give returning servicemen full seniority rights in their old jobs as those rights apply to reemployment, to promotion rights, insurance benefits and pension and medical benefits.

The CIO proposes, Reuther said, that the bill be adopted for a period of two years with the thought that its policies and methods be reviewed in 1953 in the light of international conditions then existing and the requirements of our national security.

As presented to the Senate, the bill from now on would commit eight years of the life of every male youth to service, two years active and six years in reserve.

"We need not and should not adopt as permanent national policy a system of universal military training and service that, in itself, would be incompatible with the programs of disarmament and collective security through such an agency as the United Nations to which our greatest statesmen have subscribed," Reuther said.

"We urge amendment of the bill before you to provide for two years of operation and the substitution of the original title. The defense production act is limited to one year and when renewed, will undoubtedly be labeled temporary emergency legislation and again limited for a short period. Certainly a law to draft lives should be no more permanent than a law to allocate and use materials."

Court To Act On T-H Dodge

WHETHER TOP officials of the CIO and AFL must sign non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act before member unions can use facilities of the National Labor Relations Board will be decided by the Supreme Court.

On Feb. 26, the high tribunal agreed to review a case involving the CIO Textile Workers and the Highland Park Manufacturing Co. of Rock Hill, S. C. The NLRB ordered the company to bargain with the union at a time when top CIO officers hadn't submitted anti-Red oaths. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals refused to enforce the order and government attorneys appealed.

Since then, officers of both the CIO and AFL have filed affidavits. However, 34 union complaints of unfair labor practices are now in the courts pending final judicial decision.

The Taft-Hartley Act requires union officers to submit affidavits before a union can use the NLRB. Whether officers of the national labor bodies are union officers within the meaning of the law is the point at issue. LPA

Rieve Has Not Endorsed New Anti-CP Organization

EMIL RIEVE, president of the Textile Workers and vice president of the CIO, last week denied endorsing the program of the recently formed Council Against Communist Aggression.

Publicity distributed by the new group after its organization conference in Philadelphia three weeks ago had listed Rieve as one who had "strongly endorsed" its program, which included a demand for U. S. aid for Chiang Kai-shek.

In a letter to Marx Lewis, secretary-treasurer of the AFL Hatters and chairman of the new council's executive committee, Rieve wrote:

"I must insist that you refrain from mentioning me again in connection with this organization. While I am most certainly 'against communist aggression,' I am not ready nor will I ever be ready to embrace discredited, reactionary regimes whose only virtue is anti-communism. I consider the Chiang government in this class.

"Any mention of me in connection with your organization was completely unjustified. My only action, in response to an invitation from Sal B. Hoffman, president of the Upholsterers' Intl. Union, AFL, and an old friend, was a personal letter explaining my attitude toward Americans for Democratic Action. I did not comment upon the prospectus of the conference or upon any of the issues discussed there."

ERP Advisers Say Keep Vital Materials From Soviet Area

THE TRADE Union Advisory Committee of the European Recovery Program, made up of representatives of European nations receiving Marshall Plan aid, at a recent meeting in Brussels called upon all Western European governments to keep all vital raw materials this side of the Iron Curtain.

The resolution pointed out that because of the threat of war "originating from dictators behind the Iron Curtain," the United States and the Marshall Plan countries must divert a large part of their strength and material resources toward building up defenses.

"This fact has far-reaching effects upon the countries of the Western World," the resolution continues. "Raw materials and manpower can no longer be used exclusively for peaceful reconstruction, but have to be diverted to an ever increasing degree to direct and indirect measures of defense. The consequences of this obligation are felt by all Marshall Plan countries.

"The ERP Intl. Trade Union Advisory Committee recognizes the need for new controls over raw materials and manpower . . . It urges, however, that all Western European governments take effective measures to put a stop to waste or leakages of vital raw materials to countries behind the Iron Curtain.

"It also urges that all governments concerned introduces such economic measures as to ensure the largest and most equitable distribution of supplies among the population, with special reference to the needs of the working class."

CIO Hits Plan For Potomac Hydroelectric Dams

THE PRESIDENT'S Water Resources Policy Commission brought together last week all the factors that must be taken into consideration in planning the development of 10 of the nation's major river valleys and made them public in the second volume of its report to President Truman.

A bulky, 800-page tome with many maps and charts, the report is the work of teams of experts assigned especially to their tasks by the government and other agencies concerned with the many phases of development and utilization of the resources in the various river basins.

The report is being studied in detail by the National CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation. Allan S. Haywood, committee chairman and also CIO vice president and director of organizations and councils, took prompt exception to the relative stress placed on the different factors to be weighed in drawing up a regional plan for the Potomac River Basin.

HE APPOINTED the CIO Potomac Valley Inter-Council Committee to prepare a regional plan for the Potomac which would take into consideration all of the factors involved. In announcing the appointments, he stressed the need for additional recreational facilities in the crowded metropolitan Washington area, and called hydroelectric development—upon which the stress appeared to be in the commission's report—of relatively minor importance.

Named to the committee were Harry Boyer, Ernest J. Moran, Albert D. Viller, Charles C. Webber and Glenn E. Watts, presidents, respectively, of the Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia and District of Columbia CIO Councils; CIO Reg. Dir. Anthony J. Federoff, Pittsburgh; CIO Reg. Dir. John B. Easton, Charleston, W. Va., and CIO Reg. Dir. Frank J. Bender, Baltimore. The territory of each includes part of the Potomac Valley.

"The CIO has been a leader for a long time in supporting sound plans in hydroelectric power development," he wrote them.

"NO ONE CAN question for a moment the progressive position the CIO has taken in such matters; however, we have also asserted that such development must be carried on within the framework of a proper respect for the other resources and human values which may be involved.

"In this case, the proposal to construct a series of dams beginning at the Chain Bridge and on up the river past Great Falls, which would necessarily destroy the scenery and recreational values of the gorge and falls, is in our judgment inexcusable.

(Chain Bridge and Great Falls are just above Washington.—Ed.)

"The only word which adequately describes this project is the word, 'Philistine.' The project represents a complete misjudgment of human values, and the assumption that the general living environment, including possibility of healthful outdoor recreation, are of no importance to human beings. With this judgment we most emphatically disagree.

"Moreover, the farmers of this region long ago made it very clear that they disapprove of plans to bury their fertile agricultural fields by reservoirs built for purposes of flood control or hydroelectric power.

"THERE ARE times and places in which sacrifices of agricultural land must and should be made in order to get electric power needed by industries and cities, and needed by farmers as well. But in our judgment, the tributary streams of the Potomac River are not the places for such development at this time."

Haywood asserted that in a proper plan for conservation and utilization of the river's resources reforestation would come first. Next in order of importance he listed soil conservation, recreational development and solution of the pollution problem. On the specific items he wrote:

"An adequate reforestation program for the basin would go a long way toward the complete control of floods. Such a program must include the enlargement of the George Washington National Forest and the Monongahela National Forest. It must include the establishment of comparable national forests in the Allegheny Mountains in Maryland and Pennsylvania.

"A broad gauge soil conservation program would be the second prime requisite. This river is constantly pouring into the Chesapeake Bay an immense tide of red earth washed from the farms and pastures in the region. It is imperative that this loss of resources be stopped immediately . . .

"The third element . . . would be recreational development. To a large extent such opportunities follow inevitably when a reforestation program is instituted, but a number of specific steps ought to be taken:

"There should be a large investment of public funds, Federal and State, in the acquisition of park lands along the margin of the Potomac and its tributaries, beginning at Chain Bridge, suitable access roads and trails, with boat docks and beaches, should be provided, so that the crowded population of this area can have real opportunities for healthful play.

"SHENANDOAH National Park should be enlarged and its land acquisition program, both interior and exterior, should be completed. There ought to be a great many more state parks in this area.

"The fourth major part of a comprehensive plan for the Potomac would deal with the pollutions problem. It is a disgraceful thing that a civilization which is as far advanced as ours permits pollution conditions to continue which make a river like the Potomac unsuitable for swimming, boating and other recreations, and which even makes the municipal water supply problem a difficult one. The practice of dumping industrial and municipal wastes into our rivers must cease. One good place to work on the problem is in the Potomac basin.

"This development should be tied in with the proposed dispersion of the city of Washington and its government agencies. That dispersion should be accompanied by a very extensive program for the provisions of housing and community facilities for the people employed in the agencies which are to be dispersed."

HAYWOOD dismissed the proposed hydroelectric development as something less than a major need. He wrote:

"The electric power facilities in this region can be easily and sufficiently supplied by steam generating plants. We are situated on the edge of one of the richest coal fields of the world well developed, nowhere near to exhaustion, and providing employment for scores of thousands of miners.

"We reiterate our position previously taken in other areas with respect to the development of hydroelectric power on TVA principles, but assert that such development is not the primary requirement from a human point of view in the Potomac Basin and that it would injure other primary resources irretrievably."

Other river valleys discussed in the commission's report were those of the Connecticut, Alabama-Coosa, Ohio and Tennessee Rivers in the east; and the Columbia, Missouri, Colorado and Rio Grande Rivers and the Central Valley of California in the west.

The St. Lawrence Seaway: Major U. S. Need In Peace And War

BY DREDGING, deepening and clearing 114 miles of the St. Lawrence River at what would ultimately be no cost to the U.S. or Canadian taxpayer, the two nations can open up a continuous, deep-draft, 2347-mile waterway from the Atlantic Ocean to the Great Lakes.

The effect in terms of national defense, in which both nations are vitally interested, would be: to supply a protected inland route for bringing vital supplies to inland industry; to provide an alternate wartime transportation route for other commodities; to stabilize the location of the steel industry and at the same time encourage decentralization toward the interior of the continent; to supply an inland repair base for ocean-going vessels, and to develop a tremendous block of extremely low-cost, steady electric power.

The long-term effect on the U.S. economy would be to retain industry in New England (where manufacturers now pay the highest power rates in the country), increase the use of electric power by New England, New York and Pennsylvania private consumers, save many dollars on transportation costs from the midwest to the Atlantic seaboard, increase prosperity and agriculture in the midwest, and make it possible for the steel industry not only to expand but to reduce prices by assuring economical import of high-grade iron ores from Labrador.

The necessary enabling agreements have been drawn up between the U.S. and Canada.

The project is known as the St. Lawrence Seaway and has been before every Congress since 1941.

Who's against it?

Mainly, the eastern trunk railroad lines and the private electric utilities and port interests of New York and New England.

The whole story is spelled out in the current Economic Outlook, prepared by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

HERE'S HOW the Outlook answers the arguments of opponents of the measure, who year after year have been able to prevent its passage:

"What reasons do the railroads give for their selfish stand against the development of a great natural resource? They claim the project constitutes subsidized water transportation in direct competition with them. . . . They say no one will use the Seaway. . . . (It) will be vulnerable in time of war. . . . There is no need for it, because the railroads are capable of providing all the transportation necessary. . . .

"Calling a self-liquidating project 'subsidized' is, to say the least, inventive. And claiming that no one wants to use a waterway which already carries millions of tons of freight is even more ingenious. But the height of self-delusion is reached when the railroads shudder with apprehension over a project which will actually benefit them. Middle western industry and agriculture will grow in the wake of the Seaway and that prosperity cannot help but be reflected in the railroads.

"IN ANY event, little of the anticipated Seaway traffic will be diverted from the railroads, because it is mostly new traffic . . . or traffic of a character which is not economically moved by rail, such as petroleum . . .

"The percentage of losses to Atlantic and Gulf ports would be so small as to be completely wiped out by the normal expansion which occurs annually . . .

"As to vulnerability in wartime, the Seaway would be no more vulnerable than any other large installation . . . Too much reliance on this argument would prevent any but minor development of natural resources. Secretary of the Army Pace has also testified that, with the Seaway, 'no substantial addtional expense would be required for protection of this particular area.'"

[The CIO supports no particular one of the many pending versions of the project now before Congress, the Outlook points out, because none of them is completely satisfactory from the labor point of view; they contain many deficiencies of policy and none of them provides a sound basis for labor-management relations. CIO would like to see the principles of the Tennessee Valley Authority adopted.]

Simon Elected

Vice Pres. Louis Simon of the CIO Clothing Workers was elected to the board of trustees of the National Urban League at the organization's annual meeting in New York recently.

Archbishop Boyle Emphasizes Importance Of Encyclicals

RENEWED efforts toward economic justice were urged upon American Catholics by Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle, of Washington, in his capacity as chairman of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, in a statement last week in connection with the anniversaries of the two internationally-known papal encyclicals on labor.

The 60th anniversary of the issuance of the encyclical "On the Condition of Labor," by Pope Leo XIII, and the 20th anniversary of its mate, "On Reconstructing the Social Order," by Pope Pius XI, fall on May 15.

"The importance of these two great encyclicals can hardly be exaggerated," said Archbishop O'Boyle. "Their tremendous influence for good and their enormous contribution to the cause of social reconstruction are universally acknowledge, by non-Catholics, indeed, as well as by Catholics. History will undoubtedly record that they were among the most important documents of recent centuries.

"American Catholics will want to do everything possible, through the medium of public forums and discussions, to revive their own interest and the interest of their fellow-Americans in the teaching of these two historic documents. They will take second place to none in publicly demonstrating their devotion to the cause of social justice on this important anniversary. . . .

"Now more than ever before, with almost half the world in slavery and the other half in constant fear of aggression, Americans, blessed by Almighty God beyond all measure, owe it to themselves and to all men everywhere to keep faith with the Christian tradition of social justice as the only possible basis for a lasting peace."

Free Choice Of Doctors Opposed By Indiana Medical Society

One of the chief reasons given by the American Medical Association for opposing the President's health program is that it would prevent patients from freely choosing their physicians, an argument that has been exploded by now.

The AMA has, nevertheless, clung to the argument.

In Indiana, where the State CIO Council is backing a bill to improve the workmen's compensation law, the Indiana Medical Society, which is affiliated with AMA, opposed an amendment which would allow a worker to decide which doctor he wants.

The society originally joined with the council in favoring the "free choice" amendment, but during the debate in the House allowed its name to be used in opposition to the amendment, according to Council Secy.-Treas. Claude Bechtell. Before the society reversed its stand, its president wrote the council that it has always favored free choice of doctors.

The measure has passed the House and will go to the Senate, which also will consider another House-approved measure, which would raise unemployment compensation benefits to a maximum of $27 weekly. The council is continuing its fight for improvements.

Carey Urges Congress Give Grain To India

THE CIO supports "without qualification" a proposal to send two million tons of grain to the people of famine-stricken India, Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey told the House Foreign Affairs Committee last week.

Carey denounced the "dangerous half-truths" and the "shocking and callous" efforts of opponents of the gift of grain to halt the move in Congress to provide help for the Indian people.

Noting disagreement with some of Indian Premier Nehru's recent statements on world affairs, Carey said he feels obligated to "try to understand Nehru's position."

"We cannot and must not tie political strings to our acts as they relate to the carrying out of world leadership that we have assumed," the CIO officer continued. "It would be an unforgiveable crime for us to make starvation in India a political pawn."

Much of the Indian grain crop was destroyed by a combination of heavy rains, cyclones, earthquakes and locusts. Most of the needed grain has been purchased by India, but two million tons are required to avoid widespread starvation.

Carey noted that American failure to deal "as intelligently" in the Far East as we have in Europe has aided the Communists.

"We can't meet the situation by speeches on the floor of Congress or editorials in the newspapers," he said.

Both as a practical matter and for reasons of "humanity and decency," we should "ship at once to the people of India two million tons of American grain, which we have and which they so sorely need," he said.

CIO Upheld As Supreme Court Outlaws Utility Strike Law

THE RIGHT of workers in interstate industries to strike was made clear again last week by the U. S. Supreme Court in a decision outlawing a Wisconsin law banning strikes in public utilities.

The decision was handed down in a suit by the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers against the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board attacking the validity of the state's Public Utility Anti-Strike Act. The statute forbade strikes among utility workers and substituted compulsory arbitration.

The National CIO acted on behalf of the union, with General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg making the argument before the high court. The opinion, written by Chief Justice Vinson, also covered a comparable case involving Div. 998 of the AFL Street Railway & Motor Coach Employes and the WERB.

Justice Vinson wrote that a state has no jurisdiction in a labor dispute involving an industry in interstate commerce where a federal statute—in this case the Taft-Hartley Act—exists.

The federal act, he maintained, confers the right to strike subject only to the limitations contained in the act itself, and where it has not limited or taken away this right, the states cannot do it.

"The decision again makes it clear that the right to strike is guaranteed by federal law in industries affecting interstate commerce," commented Goldberg.

"The Taft-Hartley Act modified and limited that right, but the decision again illustrates the fundamental principle that the states may not impose further or additional limitations.

"The decision has an effect far beyond its immediate impact on the Wisconsin statute. The statutes in such states as Kansas, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Nebraska which similarly prohibit or limit strikes in public utilities are now clearly adjudicated to be unconstitutional.

"In addition, there can be no question that other types of state regulation of the right to strike would be declared invalid. Congress has declared that the public policy of the United States is in favor of free collective bargaining. The decision of the Supreme Court makes it clear that the states may not pass legislation which runs counter to that policy."

LAWS prohibiting strikes in public utilities have been widely used against unions in states where they have been passed by reactionary legislatures. CIO unions affected by them include the Communications Workers and the Transport Workers, in addition to the UGOCW.

On the same day the Supreme Court handed down decisions in two other cases giving circuit courts of appeal greater discretion than they have enjoyed in the past in reviewing findings of fact by the National Labor Relations Board. In effect, the Supreme Court said it will not accept an appeal from an appellate court's ruling in such a case except in extraordinary circumstances, although an appeal in the same case might be accepted for other reasons.

The catch is that some circuit courts have consistently refused to see the facts as the NLRB sees them, and have refused to grant orders enforcing NLRB decisions. This has been especially true in the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, which has its headquarters in New Orleans and covers the South except for Arkansas, Tennessee, North Carolina, Virginia and Maryland.

One of the cases on which the ruling was based involved the CIO Maritime Union and the Pittsburgh Steamship Co. It dates back to 1944, when the union started to organized the crews of the firm's 73 Great Lakes vessels. The NMU filed charges of coercion and interference which the NLRB upheld. The company appealed, and the Circuit Court found the board's order "unsubstantiated."

Truman Lays Vote Apathy To Laziness

"LET GEORGE do it." That, says President Truman, is the attitude taken by too many potential voters in the United States today, and it accounts for the shockingly small turnout at the polls.

The President expressed his views in a letter to Rep. Javits (R. N. Y.), who has introduced a resolution asking for an investigation into why more people don't vote and what can be done about it. Javits is concerned because the "record off-year vote" of 1950 still turned out only 43.7% of potential voters.

Javits has been giving considerable publicity to the results of a small poll conducted by a national magazine, in which a great many of those questioned said they didn't vote because they didn't have enough information about the candidates or because there is too little choice between candidats.

APPARENTLY the President was not impressed by these reasons, which he seemed to regard as excuses. Here is what he said:

"I think one of the reasons for the lack of interest in the right to vote is fundamentally due to plain laziness and the idea of letting George do it. Voters who claim they have no hand in the selection of candidates, or those who take no interest in the political party, are like a great many people who do not like to take responsibility themselves but who find it much more pleasant to find fault with those who are willing to take the responsibility.

"I hope something may be done to wake the voters up to their responsibilities and their opportunities in this great Republic of ours."

Barbs Stir GOP To Action In Ohio

The Republican-dominated Ohio legislature, feeling itself thoroughly on the spot as the result of publicity about the unequal size of Ohio's congressional districts, has decided to take some action this year.

Eight bills to remedy the situation are before it—seven in the House and one in the Senate.

All the bills have the same idea in view—to set up 23 districts of approximately the same population, averaging 345,000. They differ on the details of just how it should be done. The only other items they all agree on is that there should no longer be a representative-at-large from Ohio.

Nationwide attention was called to the Ohio situation by President Truman, who asked the U. S. Congress to pass a law setting up standards which the states must follow in deciding how many Congressional districts to have and how to draw the lines.

The President pointed out that the Ohio districts had remained unchanged since 1913, in spite of vast population shifts within the state. As a result, the size of House districts in the state now varies from 905,000, the largest, to 166,932, the smallest.

Negro Bar Association Admits White Lawyer

The Mound City Bar Association, a Negro group at St. Louis, Mo., has admitted Attorney Edward T. Wright as its first white member. Wright, 27, received his law degree from Mercer University in 1949 and did research work in civil rights at Mercer and Tuskeegee Institute.

"There are many problems facing attorneys which involve the two races," he explained. "As the St. Louis Bar Association won't admit Negroes, I felt it would be a good idea for white attorneys to join the Negro group."

'Radio In Every Village' Campaign Succeeding

The "every village" campaign of the government at Bombay, India, to provide at least one radio per village has succeeded well during its first year, according to reports to the United Nations Economic, Social and Cultural Organization. Almost 700 villages have been equipped with receivers, usually installed in a public hall so that the entire community can listen in.

St. Louis Group Finds Negro Worker Slighted

Negroes haven't benefited from the increased demand for production in St. Louis, Mo., according to the annual report of M. Leo Bohannon, executive secretary of the Urban League of St. Louis. He cited statistics to show that by and large, employers consider Negroes only for common labor and unskilled jobs.

U. S. Unionists Are Again Offered Ruskin Scholarships

FOR THE FOURTH year in succession, three active U. S. trade unionists are offered a year's study at Ruskin College, Oxford University, England, through courtesy of the Transatlantic Foundation.

The scholarships are open to members of the U. S. labor movement between the ages of 20 and 35, who show promise of development and who show talent for further study in subjects of interest to labor.

Ruskin College was founded primarily to give a college education to British workers, and the curriculum therefore is chiefly concerned with social studies—history, economics, the theory and practice of government.

Both men and women are eligible. The amount of the scholarship is 250 pounds ($710 at current rates of exchange)—which covers tuition, board and room from October, 1951, to June, 1952, and leaves 125 pounds for personal use. Students furnish their own travel expenses and extra pocket money.

Selections are made by a committee of 11 persons, including Lawrence Rogin, education director of the Textile Workers, and Stanley H. Ruttenberg, educational director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research. The final application date is May 1, 1951. Inquiries should be addressed to the Committee on Ruskin College Labor Scholarships, Institute of International Education, 2, West 45th Street, New York 19, N. Y.

CWA Names Healy Legislative Aide

Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers last week announced the appointment of Thomas P. Healy as a legislative representative in Washington.

Labor Papers Barred By Minn. Legislature

LABOR AND cooperative newspapers with nearly 150,000 circulation and an estimated half-million readers have again been summarily denied press table space in both houses of the Republican-controlled Minnesota legislature.

Refused access to the floors of the House and Senate were Minnesota Labor, official publication of the Minnesota State CIO Council, with approximately 46,000 circulation; the Farmers Union Herald, a cooperative newspaper with about 48,000 circulation in Minnesota, and the Midland Cooperator, with approximately 50,000 circulation in the state.

Secy.-Treas Rodney C. Jacobson of the Minnesota CIO, wrote Gov. Luther W. Youngdahl, a Republican, on Nov. 28, 1950, asking his assistance in securing press table space in both houses for Minnesota Labor. Three days later the Governor replied that he was sending the request to Sen. Archie Miller, majority leader of the Senate, and State Rep. Roy Dunn, majority leader in the House of Representatives.

WHEN NO action was forthcoming, Jacobson renewed his request to the Governor early in January.

Eventually a reply came from Miller, who said the Senate had adopted rules "providing for only representation from the regular newspapers in Minnesota, whose credentials are approved by the Committee on Rules and Legislative Expense, and under present circumstances it is not possible to permit space for all of the newspapers and organizations from which such requests are received."

Miller wrote substantially the same letters to Harry J. Peterson, executive secretary of the Minnesota Association of Cooperatives, who had asked for press space for the two co-op papers.

Dunn, the Republican national committeeman from Minnesota, an ultra-right wing tory and reputed undisputed boss of both houses, hasn't bothered to reply to either Jacobson or Peterson.

Two years ago Dunn delivered one of the most impassioned speeches of his career on the floor of the House—a fantastic denunciation of visitors who took notes on House proceedings, coupled with a demand that they be made to stop.

There was some speculation among liberals as to whether he was aiming at Minnesota Labor. The CIO paper, then as now, had no access to floor press facilities, and its reporters were forced to take their notes in the visitors gallery.

EXAMINATION of the minutes of the House by Emil Kreig, editor of Minnesota Labor, showed it voted press facilities only to the Associated Press, United Press; the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth dailies, and radio stations operating at 5000 kilowatts or more. The Senate list was the same except for the addition of a Minneapolis daily which was folded by the owners early in 1948, and the specific identifications of the only two radio stations in the state operating at 5000 kw or better.

The kicker is that one publisher owns all the newspapers in Minneapolis — the Cowles interests—including the one that went out of business three years ago, and another — Ridder — has monopolies in both St. Paul and Duluth.

DRINK ON THE BOSS

Unable to get secretarial help, a Washington men's clothing store ran an ad promising cocktails at 5 p. m. and guaranteeing a husband in six months. Over 300 applied. Eleanore Nelson, who got the job, samples the first cocktail.

ADA Criticizes Taft For Aiding McCarthy

SEN. TAFT and other Republicans were sharply criticized at the national convention of Americans for Democratic Action at Cleveland for having "elevated Sen. McCarthy to the highest councils of their party."

The 500 delegates accused the "Taft-McCarthy axis" of attempting to capture political control "at the cost of this country's position in the world and the civil liberties of the people." They also criticized those Democrats who have "adopted or capitulated to" McCarthyism.

Francis Biddle, former U. S. Attorney General, was re-elected ADA chairman. Frank McCulloch of Chicago was elected secretary and Marvin Rosenberg of New York, treasurer.

"Today liberalism faces a new challenge," Biddle said, "the challenge of fear. We must not minimize it. It will, I believe, confront us for some time, as long as calculating men find political advantage in it. America must mobilize against the danger of totalitarian aggression. It must not, in doing so destroy the values which we are mobilizing to protect."

The foreign platform supported the United Nations, called for an aggressive military force, and the defeat of communism through the organized and united strength of the free world.

It urged foreign economic aid including continuation of the Marshall Plan, greater emphasis on the Point Four program for underdeveloped areas, support of Britain's Colombo plan for Southeast Asia, and economic development of the Middle East. "Any German armed force," it said, "must be free of domination by former German High Command generals."

THE DOMESTIC policy program called for a clear statement of military requirements "to permit intelligent and orderly mobilization." Once formulated, military requirements "must be kept under continuous review in the light of changing developments," it added.

The plight of labor and small business was acknowledged by the resolution which declared it "essential that all major economic groups in the conutry share appropriately in the policy making and operation of our defense program." LPA

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Walter H. Harris has been designated director of organization for the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, with headquarters at 718 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C. His job at present will be to coordinate the John Hancock campaign, where the workers will soon have the opportunity to cast off the shackles of Communist domination which have prevailed in this field for some time. The workers revolted against this domination right from the "grass-roots" up. The discredited and defunct organization has resorted to every possible trick, including legalism, to stall elections and to hold on. In some instances they have been aided by company connivance.

Allan Haywood

The United Railroad Workers, CIO, held a meeting last week, which the writer attended, at which the raiding tactics of the AFL Maintenance of Way Union on the Santa Fe were discussed. The AFL talks peace but continues to try to undermine the CIO Railroad Workers.

The labor members of the mobilization set-up have quit. For the labor members to continue under such a completely inequitable policy would have resulted in a betrayal of organized labor and the American people.

Defense Mobilizer Wilson acts and thinks big business, while profits continue to soar. Wages are frozen and prices rise, while profits soar. The labor movement will carry these facts to the people.

American labor is loyal and will make every sacrifice necessary, but it will continue to resist and object to the gouging tactics of big business and its representatives. Labor must continue to protect the interests of the American people.

Intl. Rep. Nick Zonarich reports that the United Steelworkers-CIO, won a victory in a representation election at the Kennecott Copper Co. refinery, Garfield, Utah. Out of approximately 550 eligible, 260 voted for USA-CIO, 232 Mine-Mill, 9 neither.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the Steelworkers won a union shop election at the Metalcraft Mfg. and Sales Corp., Kansas City, Mo., by a vote of 29 for to 6 against. Intl. Rep. Horace Brock was in charge of this campaign.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that in a representation election at the Southwest Die Casting Co., Jacksonville, Ark., the workers voted in favor of the Auto Workers, CIO, by a vote of 13 to 1 against. Intl. Rep. William Kimberling was in charge of this campaign.

Morris Pizer, president, United Furniture Workers, reports two representation election victories: Irwin Seating Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., UFWA 44, no union 24; and Stowe and Davis Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., UFWA 19, no union 11. Intl. Reps. Neil McCormick and Frank Hargrove were in charge of both.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election at the Service Products Corp., Indianapolis, Ind., the IUE-CIO was again victorious over the discredited UE by a vote of IUE 43, UE 24, no union 1, challenged 8. Intl. Rep. William R. Brewer was in charge.

Houser also reports that in a representation election at the Consolidated Processing Co., Indianapolis, the Rubber Workers-CIO were victorious by a vote of 35 to 0 for no union. Field Rep. H. C. Anthony was in charge of the drive. The Furniture Workers, CIO, won a representation election at the Knott Mfg. Co., Tell City, Ind., by a vote of 41 to 22 for no union. Field Rep. Joe Hood was in charge of this campaign.

Alfred T. Virgillo, president, Engineering, Technical and Clerical Federation, LIU 1726, reports that LIU 1726 has been chosen bargaining representative by three technical groups at the Ford Instrument Co. Division of the Sperry Corp., Long Island City, N. Y.: Publication Dept. (consisting of technical writers, draftsmen and clerks) 6 for, 5 against; Electronic Laboratory (design engineers) 14 for, 7 against; Engineering Dept. (blueprint operators, photographers, clerks and typists) 15 for, 4 against. Brother Virgilio gives credit to CIO Rep. Peter Flynn for his able assistance to this campaign.

Al Harnett, secretary-treasurer, IUE-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Federal Telecommunication Laboratories, Nutley and Belleville, N. J., two units voted overwhelmingly in favor of the IUE. The vote was: Unit B, IUE 93; UOPWA 27, no union 7; Unit C, IUE 151, UOPWA 41, no union 8.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election at the Delta Refinery Co., Memphis, Tenn., the Oil Workers were victorious by a vote of 39 to 2 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the National Auto Fabrics Co., Los Angeles, Calif., the Textile Workers-CIO won by a vote of 25 to 6 for no union. In a union shop election at the same place, the workers voted 26 to 5 in favor of TWUA. TWUA Dir. R. B. Gatewood, assisted by Reps. Ned Warner and W. H. Conn, was in charge of the campaign.

Emspak Is Given 6 Months In Jail

Julius Emspak, secretary-treasurer of the United Electrical Workers, was sentenced Mar. 1 to serve six months in jail and was fined $500 in Federal Court at Washington for contempt of Congress.

Emspak was convicted by Judge F. Dickinson Leetts, who heard the case without a jury and found him guilty of refusing to answer the questions of a House Un-American Activities Sub-committee investigating Communism in the UE. The union was expelled from the CIO at the 1949 national convention because of its Communist domination.

Thomas Quinn, formerly a UE organizer, also was convicted of contempt and sentenced to four months in jail, with a $1000 fine, by Judge James R. Kirkland in U. S. District Court at Washington. Judge Kirkland later reduced the fine to $500 when his counsel pointed out Quinn is now a $65-a-week factory worker, but said the sentence must stand.

Santa Fe Pays, Thanks To CIO

THE CIO Railroad Workers last week succeeded in clearing up a long-standing grievance involving thousands of section foremen and trackmen working for the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe—14 months after it happened.

The aggrieved employes will receive $40,000 in extra pay—the full amount due them as the result of a curious shift in company policy put into effect for one day —Saturday, Jan. 7, 1950—and then abandoned. The railroad, a multi-million dollar enterprise, has been trying to get out of paying the claim for that one day ever since.

Trackmen whose regular shift was Monday through Friday were called to work that Saturday and paid at straight time, in violation of the union rules. Foremen were in the same boat. On the other hand, trackmen on the regular Tuesday through Saturday shift worked only four days that week, and the union claimed a full day at straight time for them.

The railroad didn't try this curious system twice—but probably spent another $40,000 worth of high-priced lawyers' time trying to get out of paying for it before the CIO forced a settlement.

Senator Lauds Legion's Medical School Stands

In a letter to Miles Kennedy, director of the American Legion's legislative commission, Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) thanked the Legion for supporting his bill to provide emergency federal aid to medical, dental and nursing schools over a period of years.

The Senator urged the Legion to open an all-out campaign against the American Medical Association's "dreadfully wrong, stupidly wrong, dangerously wrong" instruction to AMA lobbyists to defeat the measure.

Congress Has Only 26 Days To Extend Rent Control

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE END of this month, rent control expires in some 1400 communities, including Detroit, Cleveland, Indianapolis and Kansas City—unless their governing bodies vote, between now and then, to ask continuation until the end of June.

Meanwhile, Congress is doing nothing about writing a new and stronger law, which is needed more badly with every passing day. It's not entirely Congress' fault: the Administration is still deciding how to go about getting some rent control. No White House proposal has been introduced as yet.

To fill the gap—and save hapless citizens of the 1400 communities in question—the Senate Banking Committee last week approved a resolution doing away with the March 31 deadline. The House Banking Committee presumably will consider doing the same thing.

But no CIO member acquainted with Congressional processes should sit back and take it for granted that Capitol Hill will save the situation, even to that extent, just because one committee has approved a resolution.

The resolution must get on the agenda, reach the floor, pass both houses, and—if the versions are different—go to conference, get the differences straightened out, be approved again in each house, and be signed by the President. All this in just 26 days from March 5. Nothing short of a declaration of war ordinarily stands much chance of final approval in that short a time.

Here is background on the present snafu:

Tighe Woods, administrator of the Office of the Housing Expediter, who runs the federal rent control program, has been pushing for a stronger law ever since the present one was passed last year, but has never been able to get the agreement of the White House and the Budget Bureau as to how to proceed.

THERE HAVE been two schools of thought. One plugs for putting in separately for a strong rent control law, holding hearings immediately, and taking a chance of congressional approval. The other school of thought says the only way to be sure of getting the present ultra-conservative Congress to approve a decent law is to tie it in with the whole mobilization program.

Up until two weeks ago, the first approach prevailed, to the point where hearings on a separate rent control bill were scheduled to start Feb. 19 and Woods had his testimony all ready.

Then the pressure for amendments to the overall mobilization law increased to such a point that the Administration experts changed their minds and decided chances of passage were much better if the rent proposals came in the same package with proposed strengthening amendments to the Defense Production Act. They are now getting the package ready—and meanwhile, the clocks tick steadily on toward Mar. 31.

For tenants in the 1400 communities involved, there are only two possible courses of action: put pressure on the local governing body to pass a resolution this month ordering continuation of controls till June 30; and write Congressmen and Senators asking (a) passage of the resolution approved by the Senate committee and (b) passage of a new and stronger rent control law.

Average Rent Increase 94.5% In Los Angeles

Rent controls went off in Los Angeles last month.

The Office of the Housing Expediter has since then received over 1000 letters from tenants, reporting the amount of rent increases handed out to them. An analysis of 300 of these letters shows an average increase of 94.5%.

This differs somewhat from the results of a Los Angeles landlords' "survey," reported recently in the Chicago Journal of Commerce. According to the Journal reporter, who gave no indication of the size of the sample quoted to him by the landlords, the average rent hike has been from 5% to 15%, and there has been "a steady increase in vacancies."

American Woolen Makes Less Acceptable Offer

THE GIANT American Woolen Co., pace-setter for the woolen and worsted industry, on Feb. 27 sought to take advantage of the wage stabilization mess by offering to "settle" the strike of the CIO Textile Workers on the basis of a simple 10% wage increase with no "fringe" benefits.

Seventy thousand TWUA members are on strike against American Woolen and other mills. The walkout began Feb. 16.

The Feb. 27 offer actually amounted to a withdrawal of parts of the unsatisfactory offer already turned down by the union, but it was couched in language making it appear that the company was patriotically abiding by "binding" decisions of the stabilization moguls.

The offer was made in the form of a telegram from Francis W. White, company president, to Emil Rieve, TWUA president. Rieve replied immediately that TWUA was ready to negotiate a genuine agreement, that negotiations meant meetings and discussions between parties, that in any case White had clearly misinterpreted an order handed down unilaterally by Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, and that after a bona fide agreement had been reached, it could be submitted to an appropriate government agency, if necessary.

The strike went on.

Meanwhile, TWUA told all its cotton-rayon locals to get ready to strike Mar. 15 unless a satisfactory agreement were reached by then. TWUA represents 200,000 workers in this section of the textile industry, working in more than 470 mills. About 110,000 of them are in the North and the remainder in the South.

TWUA is asking a two-year contract with the following provisions: a 12% increase at once, a cost-of-living adjustment payable quarterly, an annual 7% "improvement factor," a union wage scale establishing minimum standard job rates throughout the industry, company-paid pensions of at least $100 a month, and improved social insurance, holiday and vacation clauses.

Present average hourly earnings are $1.31 in the North and $1.21 in the South.

There has been no wage increase since 1948 except for a 10% raise in the North and 8% in the South, last September. Present northern contracts expire Mar. 15; Southern agreements have variable dates and some already have expired.

Negotiations have been going on in the southern mills for some time, with no noticeable progress. Talks with key northern mills began last week-end in Boston.

Unions Protest To Envoy On Venezuelan Labor Jailings

VIGOROUS protests against the jailing of Venezuelan labor leaders and repression of that country's union organizations were voiced to the Venezuelan Embassy in Washington last week by spokesmen for U. S. unions.

Calling on the Ambassador were Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin American Committee; Serafino Romualdi, of the AFL, and Anthony Boyle of the United Mine Workers.

In a letter presented to the Ambassador, the group said that reports from Venezuela indicate "a number of trade union leaders have been arrested and are being detained without any formal charges, and without having had the opportunity to appear before a judge."

One of those was Pres. Luis Tovar of the oil workers union, which represents 80% of the employes of Venezuela's fabulously rich petroleum industry.

Tovar was arrested while discussing demands for a new oil contract with a number of his colleagues.

The Venezuelan Ambassador promised to forward the protest to his government, which is one of the most dictatorial in Latin America.

Murray Endorses Red Cross Drive

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has endorsed the 1951 Red Cross Appeal to raise $85 million as "an investment in human welfare and national security."

"In this period of national emergency and international crises, the work of the American Red Cross deserves the full support of every American citizen," Murray declared.

"The American Red Cross merits our most wholehearted cooperation in these worthy activities . . . I feel confident that union members, like other groups in the population will give generously to the 1951 Red Cross Fund Appeal."

Goldfinger To Speak At Kansas College

Nathaniel Goldfinger, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, will discuss labor's attitude towards wage and manpower controls at Kansas State College's fifth annual labor-management round table, to be held April 6-7 at Manhattan, Kans.

The round tables are sponsored by the college department of economics and sociology, and feature presentation of management and labor points of view on subjects of current interest. This year the main subject is "Utilization of Manpower Under Emergency Conditions." More than 1000 persons attended last year's sessions.

Guild Wins Raises From United Press

United Press editorial employes won a $3 to $5 general wage hike in an agreement reached at New York City with the CIO Newspaper Guild. Commercial departments are also covered by the pact, which went into effect March 1, subject to approval by the Wage Stabilization Board. A new scale of pay minimums has been set for editorial workers.

Murray To Air Defense Stand

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will carry the criticism of organized labor of the mobilization program to the American people in a nationwide radio address on Monday, Mar. 5.

He will discuss the issues over the facilities of the National Broadcasting Co. between 10:45 and 11 p.m. His talk will be heard from coast to coast.

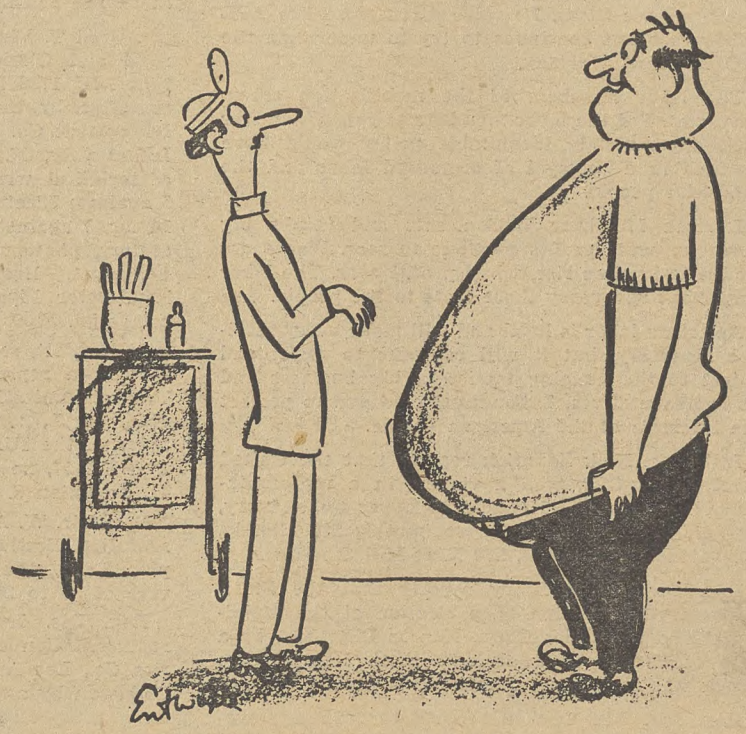
Executive Board Will Meet Mar. 15

The officers of the CIO—president, secretary-treasurer, and vice presidents — will meet in Washington on Mar. 14.

The following day, Mar. 15, the CIO Executive Board will hold a meeting at which the crisis in the defense mobilization and its effect on organized labor are expected to be major topics of discussion.

Four-Time Loser

For the fourth time the Supreme Court has rejected Louisiana's claim to submerged oil deposits off her coast. As a consequence, Louisiana must account for all money derived from offshore oil drilling since last June 5. On that date the court gave the federal government paramount rights to the underwater oil lands, but Louisiana three times asked for a reversal.



"It ain't that I want to lose weight because I feel bad—it's just that I have trouble keeping my pants up."

D&B Prices Drop First Time In 19 Weeks

Messr. Dun & Bradstreet seemed a trifle dazed by the sudden turn, but their wholesale food price index went into reverse last week for the first time in 19 weeks.

It dropped 6c to $7.25 in the week ended Feb. 26, the first decline since Oct. 10. It's still 21.6% above the $5.96 it registered in June, when the Communists touched off an apparently unending series of price increases by invading Korea, 23.9% above a year ago, and only 11c under the all-time high of $7.36 on July 13, 1948.

The week's decline reflected drops in 12 of the 31 foods included in the barometer—flour, wheat, corn, oats, barley, hams, lard, butter, cheese, potatoes, hogs and lambs. Four others advanced, the rest were static.

United Labor Widens Fight To Win Fair Play In Mobilization Setup

The fight goes on—for a halt in the rising cost of living and for what CIO Pres. Philip Murray described as "fair play in the defense mobilization program." These developments occurred last week:

● Prices continued to go up.

● Corporation after corporation reported record-breaking profit figures—with General Motors leading the profits parade. GM's 1950 net profits hit $834 million—over $2 million a day.

● Leaders of the United Labor Policy Committee held a series of meetings with Eric Johnston, head of the Economic Stabilization Agency, in an affort to find a wage stabilization formula that might meet workers' needs during the emergency.

● Defense Mobilization Chief Charles E. Wilson—under bitter criticism from unions for his "arrogant" attitudes and big business viewpoints—conferred with President Truman.

Emerging from his confab with the President, Wilson kept a straight face while telling reporters that "neither of us understands what all the excitement and the shooting is about."

● The United Labor Policy Committee—representing CIO, AFL, railway brotherhoods and machinists—charged Wilson with trying to "mislead the American people." Wilson had claimed that labor's complaints all arose when the unions found he had thwarted their efforts to "control" manpower.

The ULPC called this statement "shockingly untrue."

● CIO Pres. Murray, recuperating from a severe attack of influenza, went on an NBC hookup to demand effective action against the trend of higher prices.

"It is not just a 'labor' problem when consumer prices go up," Murray said. Criticisms of the mobilization program, he added, "are not those of labor alone, but millions of Americans in every walk of life."

He charged that the stabilization program "in the name of fighting inflation . . . is lowering living standards while safeguarding swollen profits."

● Other union officials, in a series of radio broadcasts throughout the week, gave voice to complaints about prices, unfair wage formulas, unequal tax burdens provided in current proposals and business domination of defense agencies.

Meanwhile the CIO Executive Board scheduled a meeting for Mar. 15, where a full report on the situation will be made. On Mar. 20-21, the United Labor Policy Committee has scheduled two meetings of state and community union groups in Washington.

CIO, AFL and brotherhood members from around the country will get together separately on the first day, then meet for an unprecedented joint session on Mar. 21. (See Page 3.)

Gas Company Net Rises 28% During Month

By S. Oliver Goodman

Washington Gas Light Co. yesterday reported consolidated net income of $603,044 for January, an increase of $134,233 or 28 percent over the same 1950 month.

Operating revenues of $3,559,053 showed an increase of $1,113,582 while operating expenses of $2,879,147 were up $980,465.

Excluding suburban subsidiaries operations, the gas company's net income for the month totaled $730,385, a gain of $199,152. The parent firm's net was bolstered by nonoperating income of $450,189, principally dividends from subsidiary companies.

The parent firm's operating revenues for the month totaled $2,623,825, up $738,200. Operating expenses of $2,214,756 showed a gain of $702,140.

Meters in service at the end of January numbered 176,820 in Washington, an upturn of 1852 from the year-age figure. Gas sales in D. C. jumped 40 percent, while the entire system's sales rocketed 55 percent over January, 1950.

Record Profits Reflect Price Increases

Murray Says Equality Of Sacrifice Is Program Of American People

CIO Pres. Philip Murray delivered the following speech on "Fair Play and the Mobilization Program" over the National Broadcasting Co. network Mar. 5:

GOOD EVENING. I want to talk to you tonight about the tremendous and complex problems that we, the American people, face at home and abroad.

Our America is caught in the web of a great international crisis—a crisis resulting directly from Communist aggression.

Tonight, as we sit in our homes, boys from our factories and farms and schools are fighting for freedom's cause in the snow and mud of Korea. Throughout the entire world, men and women who believe in freedom and human dignity are taking more effective steps to resist totalitarian dictatorship.

Here, in the United States, we have long since made our great decision. Together with the other peoples represented in the United Nations, we are resolved to mobilize our resources in defense of the democracy we love and cherish.

Our skills, our resources and our spirit have given us the leadership of all the democratic world. In that role of leadership, we must show intelligence and imagination, courage and boldness. Those are the qualities expected of leaders. And the American people have those qualities.

Confusion

On the field of battle against Communist aggressors, the men and boys from our cities and hamlets are showing intelligence and courage. But, on the home front, there is confusion.

Malignant inflation is feeding on the vitals of economic life. It affects each and every family; nobody ever escapes the effects of inflation.

You know that. Every salary and wage earner knows it. Every housewife meets the by-products of inflation on her trip to the grocer or the butcher. Prices have gone up too high. They are continuing to rise too fast, right now.

And there is no adequate mechanism at work to halt that terrible inflation, which steals food from the tables of our families and bullets from the arsenals of our armed forces.

Inflation must be stopped. Inflation can be stopped—if we meet this major problem of the home front with the same boldness, intelligence and courage that our armed forces are showing in Korea. Thus far, Congress and our mobilization officials have not met this problem head-on.

As president of the CIO, and a co-chairman of the United Labor Policy Committee, I can state with conviction that Americans are determined to halt the steady upward march of the cost of living. Certainly, the men and women of our labor unions have repeatedly shown their desire to stabilize our national economy.

Action Urged Before

Last summer, when the outbreak of war in Korea first began to place its burden on the American economy, organized labor called for prompt and vigorous government action to curb inflation.

We said then and we say now: let us defend ourselves against the economic fifth column that will destroy our standards of living.

We said then and we say now: let us meet this challenge of world conflict by the democratic principle of equality of sacrifice—let there be a sharing, by every group in the land, of the burdens and responsibilities which we, as free men, must assume.

This demand for equal sharing of our common burdens and responsibilities has been voiced by many segments of the population. Americans know instinctively that our defense mobilization program must play fair with all the people—with labor and with management, with the farmer and the consumer.

However, our mobilization program is not now being conducted with equity and justice for all. It is not drawing fully on the abilities and skills of all the people. Now, while there is time, it is essential that these basic defects be corrected.

The United Labor Policy Committee, representing 15 million workers, has made protest about this serious situation. We have done so, not to impair the defense mobilization program, but to improve it. And it urgently needs improvement.

Our criticisms are not those of labor alone, but of millions of Americans in every walk of life.

Prices Concern All

It is not just a "labor" problem when consumer prices go up, or an inequitable share of the taxes is imposed on the lower income groups. It is not just a "labor" problem when the future of rent control is in danger. Unions are not the only groups concerned when wages and salaries are threatened with a strait-jacket, while the dollar loses value.

We are supposed, for example, to have price controls. Yet, the consumers price index just published is at the highest point in our history and our price administrators tell that prices will continue to rise still higher.

The Consumers Price Index, published by the Government, provides ample proof that present price fixing policies are simply a hoax. The hyprocrisy of this present system of alleged price control demonstrates an utter lack of morality—for it provides bonuses to profiteers at the very moment it works new hardships, of a discriminatory nature, upon the working men and women of America.

Moreover, the latest so-called price regulation does not establish firm ceiling prices. Neither you nor any other consumer is protected by this order, which cannot—by its very nature—be effectively enforced.

This is not real price control with teeth in it. This is a license to charge whatever the traffic will bear. A change is needed—or the national welfare will suffer.

The tax program is the second example of unequal burdens. Your Representatives and Senators are considering tax proposals that will favor the high incomes and bear down on lower incomes.

Under this tax program, if you are earning $3000 or $4000 a year, you will have to pay the same amount of income tax you paid at the height of World War II. But if your income is $500,000 a year, you will be permitted to pay $40,000 less than in 1944—and you'll have additional loopholes to save you still more tax money. There's no equality of sacrifice in this type of tax program.

Another case in point is rent control. Under our present weak law, millions of families have been forced to pay much higher rents. Yet, no rent control law, with really effective provisions, is anywhere near passage in the Congress.

If nothing is done by March 31, tenants in every part of the nation will be confronted with the specter of rent increases of 10 or 20—or even 40 per cent.

People Burdened

On prices, on taxes, on rents—you, the ultimate consumer, are being asked to bear the heaviest share of this increasing burden.

On the other hand, corporation profits have reached an astounding all-time high. Nothing effective is being done to make those super-profits bear their fair share of our national burden.

At the same time, while you are carrying the extra-ordinary burden, a new unfair wage and salary formula has been promulgated by the Government. The net effect of this government order is to keep wages and salaries down. This combination of heavier expenses and restricted income will cause real hardship among millions of moderate income families.

Reverse Of Fair Play

Our complaint against the stabilization program is that it is not geared to curb inflation. Rather, in the name of fighting inflation, the program will lower living standards while safeguarding swollen profits.

On the one hand, flabby treatment of the wealthy and gingerly treatment of profiteers; on the other, severe controls over people in the lower and middle income levels.

That is the reverse of fair play.

Who is to blame for this lop-sided approach to our inflation problems?

First, the conservative coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats who dominate our Congress. They have given us a law that cannot effectively keep prices down and thus far, they have failed to improve the law to make it workable.

Second, an equally conservative coalition of big-business-minded officials who direct our defense mobilization program.

No one can object to the desire of businessmen—big or small—to serve their country. But we can and should object when representatives of big business monopolize the top levels of our defense mobilization program. That program is supposed to serve all the American people.

Representatives of labor, of agriculture and of small business thus are entitled to a significant place in the policy and operating levels of our mobilization agencies. These spokesmen for major groups in the American public would not serve narrow interests—they would contribute their skill and their viewpoints to building a defense program thoroughly attuned to the needs and the problems of every citizen.

This would help to insure a fair deal for every American citizen—rich or poor, city worker or rural farmer, housewife or school teacher, people at work and people who have been retired on meager pensions.

Americans want a defense program that will give our armed forces the supplies they need—when they need them and in abundant quantity.

Equality Wanted

Americans want equitable treatment for the millions of the civilian population. That means: price controls that work, and an equitable wage and salary policy.

Americans want rent controls extended. They want a tax program that will not permit any section of the public to avoid its share of the revenue burden. They want corporations to make reasonable profits—but not a license to profiteer at the expense of the people during an emergency.

The American people have shown time and again that they insist upon fair play.

Let us start now to get fair play in the mobilization program. Let us halt inflation and promote equality of sacrifice throughout the length and breadth of America.

That is labor's program. That is the American people's program.

Let us all work together to attain it.

We of labor stand ready to do everything in our power to achieve the equality of sacrifice needed in this time of crisis.

Carey: Show Run By Big Business

Here are excerpts from a radio speech given by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey over the Mutual network Mar. 6:

THE PRINCIPLE at issue is whether organized labor shall be a party, in official positions, to a mobilization setup which we believe cannot now do the required job . . .

I need only indicate the people who are running this program to have you understand what I mean. We have Charles E. Wilson, recent president of General Electric Company. His main assistants are General Lucius Clay, chairman of the board of Continental Can Co., and a member of the board of directors of the Newmont Mining Co.; Fred Searls, president of the Newmont Mining Co., and Sidney Weinberg, senior partner of Goldman-Sachs Co., Wall Street investment brokers . . .

The economic branch of mobilization is run by Eric Johnston, former president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and on leave as president of the Motion Picture Association of America. Production affairs are run by Gen. William Henry Harrison, recent president of the Intl. Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Wilson's Own Ticket

I call to your attention the fact that Wilson demanded the right to write his own ticket, giving him such power that he virtually controls the domestic economy of this nation.

Here we are presenting to America and to the world a group of high finance and big business men as the exclusive leaders of this world program to defend our democracy and way of life. We are trying to do it against Communist propaganda which declares that America is being run by Wall Street . . .

I believe firmly that the President would have been on sound grounds in putting people from organized labor on a basis of equality with those from business and then saying to the world: "Here we have labor and management in America united in this great struggle." Instead, any representation of labor has been offered by Wilson grudgingly, hesitantly, and only under considerable pressure.

How Labor Is Hurt

Labor has tried to assess what this actually means in terms of the direction our defense program would take. We have seen also an attempt to freeze labor into an unjust and unrealistic wage pattern which attempted to deceive the American people at the same time prices were allowed to skyrocket; a tax program was being proposed that would place two-thirds of the burden upon the low and moderate income groups; the great corporations were demanding and getting enormous tax amortizations and subsidies as a condition for expanding production.

And finally we saw that the problem of manpower—the only one in which labor had any vote through the Secretary of Labor—was taken out of the hands of the Secretary of Labor and placed virtually under the control of Gen. Clay. He is the man who in the last war was most determined to secure a National Service Act which would have robbed Americans of a great deal of their liberities . . .

We are not greedy and selfish but we believe in the doctrine of equality of sacrifice and we insist that this defense effort cannot succeed without it. We believe that if 10 people were in a lifeboat on a stormy sea and the owner of the lifeboat insisted that the other 9 people take up the oars, but that in the division of the food that he get one-half and the rest of the crew get the other one-half, there would be some considerable difficulty.

We are in that position today. Our nation is in a lifeboat on a stormy sea created by Communist imperialism. We are ready to pay our share, to work our share, to bleed our share, and if necessary to die our share.

Snafu Continues As Labor Takes To Air

"Let us start now to get fair play in the mobilization program. Let us halt inflation, and promote equality of sacrifice throughout the length and breadth of America. That is labor's program. That is the American people's program."

IN WORDS like these, CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week set forth the aims and goals of organized labor, whose criticism of the defense mobilization program has become a number one topic of conversation in Washington.

Making his first speech in several weeks—the CIO President is recuperating from a severe case of flu—Murray summed up defense mobilization policies with these sentences:

"On the one hand, flabby treatment of the wealthy and gingerly treatment of the profiteers; on the other, severe controls over people in the lower and middle income levels. That is the reverse of fair play."

And, he added—

"IT IS NOT just a 'labor' problem when consumer prices go up, or an inequitable share of the taxes is imposed on the lower income groups . . . Unions are not the only groups concerned when wages and salaries are threatened with a strait-jacket, while the dollar loses value."

But, as the CIO News went to press, the human eye could see no changes in the mobilization trend of policies and actions that had brought forth bitter criticism from the United Labor Policy Committee and its various leaders.

Those criticisms and suggestions for improvement had been voiced last December; again on Feb. 16; again on Feb. 28, when the ULPC asked labor representatives to resign from defense advisory and staff positions; again in a series of speeches by top leaders of the nation's unions on various radio networks last week.

While Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston met last week on alternate days with labor and business groups in an effort to find common agreement on a wage formula and disputes agency, Mobilization Boss Charles E. Wilson visited the President at Key West.

HE CLAIMED to reporters that neither he nor the President knew what all the shooting was about—though Edward R. Murrow, CBS broadcaster, who has reported the recent developments in brilliant fashion, said that he and millions of other Americans could understand them pretty easily.

Wilson, it was clear, was making no move even to try to compose his differences with the unions. Murray, though not mentioning Wilson by name, had pointed out Wilson's Office of Defense Mobilization—like the Congress—was dominated by a "conservative coalition."

The CIO Executive Board, which meets Mar. 15 in a session planned many weeks ago, will get a full report on current developments.

MEANWHILE, CIO state councils, major city councils, and regional directors, received letters from Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood calling them to a meeting in Washington Mar. 20. Next day they will join with "opposite numbers" from the AFL and the brotherhoods in the first such meeting in Washington history.

The Mar. 20-21 meetings probably will launch a nationwide campaign to bring about more effective price controls.

On the major complaints of the unions, nothing was happening.

No indication of action for a more fair tax program, or for speedier action on rent control extension, was visible. Rent controls now are due to expire Mar. 31, and sharp rent increases can be expected if the controls are not extended and strengthened.

WILSON made pretty clear, in his Key West interview, that the unions could expect no change in his decision to take over top control of manpower problems—which have been a matter previously handled by the Dept. of Labor.

Union spokesmen have made equally clear their fears that the big business clique in Wilson's office might one day launch a blitz legislative attack to get compulsory drafting of civilian labor.

Prices are still rising, statistics show, and each day's paper shows corporation profits running higher than at any time in history. While GM's record of over $800 million dwarfed the profits of many other firms, almost all of them were showing a lush margin over costs.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who as head of the CIO Electrical Workers, had contract dealings with Wilson—then head of General Electric—spoke bitter words of criticism in a Mutual network radio speech.

AFL Pres. William Green, in a CBS speech, said that "government policy is playing right into the hands of the profiteers."

Green said it was "tragic" that representatives of wage earners should be "rebuffed" in their efforts to help the defense program. At present, he said, the defense program is staffed "from top to bottom," with big business representatives.

Harrison Refused To Convert From Autos To Planes In 1941-42

Gen. William Henry Harrison, president of the Intl. Telephone and Telegraph Co. and chairman of the Defense Production Administration—No. 2 spot in the mobilization setup—is the same man who blocked World War II production for months.

Harrison was director of production for the Office of Production Management in 1941 when Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, with full CIO support, was demanding that the government convert the auto industry to the production of airplanes. Harrison refused to order civilian production cut back—in January, 1942, a full month after Pearl Harbor, only 5% of its production was going to the war effort. In addition, new models were coming out loaded as heavily as ever with increasingly scarce materials.

A House committee tried to get some explanation from Harrison. Chairman Tolan asked him if he would have ordered the industry to convert had he known that Pearl Harbor was coming.

His answer was that he couldn't see that anything had happened since August, 1941, which would make him change his mind.

This production genius did not meet once with the six labor leaders supposed to advise him from the time they were appointed some months ago until they resigned two weeks ago.

Auto Makers Get 3½% Price Rise

If you're going to buy a new car you should have done it last year, maybe. Or perhaps you're rich.

The manufacturers will be permitted to raise new passenger car prices 3½% above Dec. 1, 1950, levels, under a regulation issued by the Office of Price Stabilization Mar. 1.

Price Chief Michael DiSalle signed the order which amends the order outlawing a price rise just before Christmas. The 3½% is applicable to the prices dealers pay the auto workers. DiSalle said the order is "an interim measure" to be in effect 60 days.

In addition to the price boost, there are cuts in auto production.

BETTER PRICE CURB AIM OF D. C. MEET

Representatives of organized labor will come to Washington from all parts of the country on Mar. 20 and 21. They will set up the United Labor Policy Committee's plans for protecting all U. S. consumers by getting a realistic price control plank into the defense mobilization program.

They will represent CIO and AFL city, county and state councils and federations, and some international unions of both bodies; the railroad brotherhoods and the Machinists. CIO regional directors also will attend.

The different groups will hold separate meetings on Mar. 20, with the CIO session to be held in Barker Hall of the YWCA, 17th and K Sts., N.W. On Mar. 21 a joint meeting will be held in the Statler Hotel. It is expected the co-chairmen of the committee — CIO Pres. Philip Murray, AFL Pres. William Green, Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Machinists and Chairman George E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association—will speak.

Some Papers Flay ULPC, But Others Are More Reasonable

By BRADFORD V. CARTER

For Labor Press Association

THE anti-labor lads can't meet labor arguments so they're screaming—the editorial writers and the columnists. Labor wants to "rule or ruin"; labor was "striking against the government"; labor "won't play unless it can make the rules"; labor was trying to "coerce" the government.

The Washington Star said the attitude of the United Labor Policy Committee was one of "rule or ruin": that its fear of a move by Mobilization Czar Charles E. Wilson to draft civilian manpower was a phony argument.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, admitting that "valid excuses can be found for the disgruntlement of the union spokesmen," called labor's withdrawal of representatives from all mobilization agencies "a reckless, selfish course" and "a strike against the nation's effort to control the rising cost of living."

(How silly can an editorial writer get? Labor's concern over the very failure to control the rise in the cost of living was the basis of the step it took.)

The New York Times called the original wage "catch-up" formula, which was the last straw in forcing labor to walk out, "eminently reasonable." It agreed with President Truman that there was no crisis.

David Lawrence, syndicated columnist, said: "Labor union leaders have begun a strike against their own government," that labor was trying to dictate, that its walkout was "defiance," that labor was trying to "coerce" the government, that unless labor can make the rules it won't play, and that, he said, is a "tragic situation."

BUT although the N. Y. Times saw no crisis, the New York Herald Tribune called the situation "a crisis of the gravest proportions in the defense effort," said it had been "long in making" and went on:

"What labor wants, fundamentally, is the assurance of equal sacrifice and total effort . . . The doctrinaire demands of labor's spokesmen are a reflection of their profound concern at seeing prices dealt with by incantation rather than by straightforward and honest controls, at seeing taxes postponed, and so large a portion of the population as the farmers left virtually outside the call of duty.

"If Mr.Truman had been able to convince labor that inflation was being resolutely combatted and sacrifices fairly apportioned, the present crisis would not have arisen. Until he can convince labor of these things, it will not be put down."

The Washington Post admitted "a reexamination of the mobilization setup is absolutely necessary."

Doris Fleeson, a syndicated columnist of another complexion than Lawrence, pointed out that labor's complaint was not merely on wage policy but "on the broad charge that the stabilizers have failed to stabilize." She noted, as had labor, that prices were frozen at their highest levels, that adjustments have been in the direction of still higher levels; that food costs remain untouched, taxes lag and rents are relatively rising.

She also said that in addition to inflation, there may be unemployment in the consumer goods industries because the raw materials they need are being restricted to defense industries, which in themselves have not yet gotten up steam. This is already true in some industries, notably rubber.

BUT FOR the lowdown, Old Man Carter always refers to the newspaper for businessmen. The Wall St. Journal said that labor does not like the original wage formula but the break "also represented their dissatisfaction with the entire mobilization set-up."

And the next day, in its column called "Review and Outlook," the Journal took the whole controls program apart, and said there is no way to "control" inflation, but there is a way to stop it "by the simple process of not making two pieces of money where one was before. And once you stop inflating the currency, prices and wages will readjust themselves."

That's the Journal's line on inflation. But here's the way the editorial started out: "It is all very well to flay the labor leaders for walking out on the so-called stabilization program. But after you have done so, you have explained nothing, answered nothing and solved nothing. For the causes of this bit of chaos lie much deeper than any man's pique."

Old Man Carter stands on that.

Public Squeals, And No Wonder

The Meat Trade Institute, an organization of New York and North Jersey pork processors and packers, has managed to inflitrate the Office of Price Stabilization to a far greater degree than any other industry group.

Its Washington representative, Joseph Cohn, spent so much time at the OPS gathering data for a weekly copyrighted newsletter to members that he was finally given a desk and a telephone in the meat division.

The phone number is the same as that of OPS itself—Sterling 4200—and he can be reached at Extension 3908. Who pays for it has not been made clear. He has even hired a secretary and installed her at a desk near his own.

"It's handy, you know," he commented with refreshing candor. "I'm right here and whenever they want to know anything about pork, I can tell 'em."

Phone Firm Ordered To Refund $6 Million

Telephone subscribers in Massachusetts will not only pay lower rates but will also get a refund which may come to $6 million. The State Supreme Court has ruled that the rates of the New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. are too high. The rates, set in May, 1949, have meant $15 million more a year to the company. The company must now go to the State Dept. of Public Utilities and argue about rates.

Labor Withdrawal Protested Many Things

Union Representatives Left Defense Agencies Because Of Numerous Shortcomings In Operation Of Mobilization Program

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE STORY of labor's withdrawal from the mobilization agencies is a simple one—yet it has been badly distorted by many writers and commentators.

Labor, for example, is not on strike against the government. It is not staging a walkout merely because of the Wage Stabilization Board's wage program.

The withdrawal did not result from a sudden burst of anger on the part of union leaders. The protest is not aimed at securing jobs in the mobilization set-up for labor officials because they want to share in defense patronage.

Yet many of the editorials and much of the commentary have painted such a picture.

So, an effort is going to be made here to tell the simple story simply.

LABOR WAS among the first groups in the country to urge that the nation embark on a real mobilization program.

It pledged its support to such a program—and it meant what it said.

Labor said from the very beginning that any program which was to be successful must be based on the theory of equality of sacrifice.

To union officials this simply meant that those in charge of mobilization should make every effort to see that all segments of our population were treated as nearly alike as possible.

THEY DIDN'T want profiteering for the wealthy and new hardships for the poor. They didn't want industry to benefit at the expense of labor and agriculture. They didn't want agriculture to benefit at the expense of industry and labor.

And they didn't want—or ask for—special benefits for labor at the expense of other groups.

They said they wanted as much equality of sacrifice as was possible—and that's what they wanted.

To obtain such equality, the labor leaders said, it would be necessary for the important segments of the population to have a real voice in determining mobilization policies.

It would be necessary, they added, for Congress to enact legislation which would clamp down on chiselers and protect consumers from inflation.

Labor began telling this story soon after the outbreak of war in Korea. It has been repeating it ever since.

But what has happened?

There has been no equality of sacrifice or even anything which approaches it.

The upward surge of inflation has hardly been slowed down, much less halted.

The direction of the mobilization program is firmly in the hands of men recruited from big business and big finance.

Labor and other groups—such as agriculture and small business—have been denied a voice at the policy-making level.

The price orders issued to date give a real break to the sellers. The wage formula raps workers over the head.

LABOR WAS protesting against many things—not against just one thing—when it withdrew from the mobilization agencies.

It was protesting against what it considered to be a raw deal for the nation's consumers.

It was protesting against the making of the mobilization agencies into a private preserve for big business and those closely associated with it.

It was protesting against a Defense Production Act which was badly drafted—a piece of legislation which hasn't and can't stabilize our economy.

IT WAS protesting against the lack of adequate controls—and against plans for saddling an unfair tax burden on those in the low-income group.

It was protesting against a program which has not utilized the knowledge and skill of labor and the farmer.

It was protesting against lack of equality of sacrifice—against domination of defense machinery by one group—against being used as "window dressing" when it had no real voice.

It's a fairly simple story, isn't it?

Then why not tell it to your friends and acquaintances?

And to members of Congress?

IT'S EVERYBODY'S PROBLEM

Labor is taking its story direct to the people.

Or, perhaps it would be better to say that labor has decided to dramatize the people's own story for the people.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray launched the campaign last week in a radio address in which he declared that "it is not just a 'labor' problem when consumer prices go up, or an inequitable share of the taxes is imposed on the lower-income groups."

Other CIO officials and leaders of the AFL, railroad brotherhoods and the Machinists scheduled a series of broadcasts and appearances on radio forum programs.

The objective was to call sharp attention to problems which caused labor representatives to withdraw from the defense agencies.

One of the biggest of these problems is inflation, which affects every consumer and which has already added many millions to the cost of the mobilization program.

This part of the story that labor is telling is comparatively simple. Prices have been going up and up and up. Even the "freeze" didn't halt their climb. And they'll continue to rise under the "controls" which are now in effect.

This is a problem not only for those who belong to unions. It's the problem of every wage earner, every taxpayer.

We as a nation don't want inflation—and we as a nation can keep inflation from becoming worse than it is.

But we can't do it under the present set-up. That's certain. New legislation and a different approach to the problem are needed.

This will be spelled out in detail at labor meetings in Washington March 20-21. State and city union officials who attend will take the story back home.

And there they will tell it to all who will listen.

The idea, of course, is to gain support for labor's belief that our mobilization set-up must be changed so there is more equality of sacrifice—so nobody is permitted to profiteer from our defense program.

And it's a good idea.

RED FORCES LOSE GROUND

An encouraging piece of information is contained in a recent statement by a top State Dept. official revealing that the Communist parties of Western Europe have been steadily losing members—a fact already well known to American unionists who have visited that part of the world recently.

The United States can claim a measure of the credit—undoubtedly a large measure.

Economic hardship provides the best breeding ground for communism—and Western Europe was suffering such hardship at the end of the past war.

Then our country stepped into the picture with the Marshall Plan, which enabled the region to rebuild homes and factories and step up industrial and farm production.

Undoubtedly this prevented a broad swing toward the program of the Reds.

But we have a hunch that the Reds themselves were responsible for the loss of many party members.

Their support of aggression in Korea, their failure to make good on promises and their campaign of "Russian first, last and always" certainly had an effect.

So it seems that economic aid helps people spot Red lies and Red imperialism for what they really are.

Silence Is Golden Dept.

"BREAD PRICES have just been cut 15% in the Soviet Union," PAC Pipeline commented in a recent issue of PAC's Political Action of the Week. "Anyone caught spreading these joyous tidings in Czechoslovakia or Hungary, where bread and flour rationing have been re-imposed, will be punished as a saboteur."

Other Pipeline quips:

"A Senate subcommittee will start hearings Mar. 14 on a measure placing weather control authority under the Agriculture Department. And then, by thunder, if Agriculture Secy. Charley Brannan doesn't do something about it he'll be in contempt of Congress."

"A Washington newspaper headline reports 'Claire Booth (wife of Time Publishing Luce) Pops Up Plugging for Eisenhower, Hoover, Landon & Dewey.' Doesn't she know they're not speaking to each other these days?"

"Memo to investigators of the RFC: In February, 1932, a former vice president of the United States named Charles G. Dawes, was appointed by Pres. Herbert Hoover to head the RFC. Five months later he resigned to become chairman of the Central Republic Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago. Three weeks after that the bank got an $80 million loan from the RFC."

"Memo to editorial writers: The wool industry was on strike from Jan. 26 to Feb. 16, refusing to take military contracts or sell to consumers until price ceilings were taken off. They were taken off. Price ceilings have also been taken off cotton goods—for the same reason."

"A New Jersey grand jury has handed up 84 manslaughter indictments against the Pennsylvania Railroad as the result of a train wreck February 6. What page of your newspaper did you read it on?"

"President Truman has proposed increasing the mailing rates for newspapers and magazines so that the taxpayers can be relieved of some of the postage bills of the big publishers. This trend toward socialism has simply got to stop."

HST Renews 'Rights' Pledge

PRESIDENT TRUMAN has expressed hope that the 82nd Congress will enact his civil rights program into law. He renewed his pledge to fight for the program "with all the vigor I possess."

In a letter to the recent Fourth Annual Conference on Civil Liberties at Washington, the President said the program and bills to make it law are now before the Congress. "By strengthening the privileges of citizenship," he said, the program "will add greater substance to the American tradition of equality and equal opportunity. It is another step in solidifying the unity of our people."

Truman noted that the Congress is busy with mobilization legislation but said that the civil rights measures must also be passed. "I am not among those who take the view that in times of stress we must shelve all efforts and programs for the betterment of our people," he commented.

"The maxim, first things first, is entitled to its due; but it cannot stay the inexorable drive and inevitable progress of humanity in ridding itself of the inequalities and imperfections of our social and economic life."

Among the 100 organizations taking part in the civil liberties conference are the AFL, the CIO, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the National Farmers Union, and a number of individual CIO and AFL unions. It is sponsored by the National Civil Liberties Clearing House.

Speakers at the first day's sessions included Sens. Morse (R., Ore.) and Lehman (D., N.Y.).

The conference call warned that in the name of security, freedoms are being curtailed. "Legislation such as the McCarran Act abridges traditional rights of expression and association," it said, and it apes the Russian iron curtain in an attempt to insulate Americans from hostile ideas."

Jap Shipping Expansion Hit

A protest against "unwarranted expansion" of Japanese shipping and shipbuilding has been sent to President Truman by nine national maritime organizations.

The CIO Maritime Committee is among the group protesting, along with the Labor-Management Maritime Committee, Association of American Ship Owners, American Legion, National Federation of American shipping and others.

"We are not suggesting that Japanese shipping be barred from or improperly restricted in international trade," they said. "We feel her efforts should first be directed to the restoration of her domestic shipping, and thereafter Japanese shipping and shipbuilding could very properly be gradually and proportionately restored in harmony with the revival of other Japanese industries and of her import and export trade."

Her Knowledge Of Unions Made A Difference

THIS IS A STORY about a girl from a small Mississippi town who became very homesick after joining a women's branch of the armed forces.

She was stationed at Biloxi, not too far from her home, but she felt like an outsider.

The trouble was that she was in an outfit which contained a number of liberals from the North and East, including quite a few college graduates.

The other girls jumped to the conclusion that the Mississippian was a Southern reactionary.

MARY, AS WE shall call her, just didn't seem able to get into that little "inner circle" which dominated her group.

She wasn't treated badly—but she felt forlorn because she was treated as an "outsider."

There wasn't any improvement in her situation until one evening when the "inner circle" started a discussion of organized labor.

A number of the college grads who had studied the social sciences were in favor of unions—thought they were good for their members and the country as a whole.

There were some who argued that unions were no good—that they should be abolished.

The discussion eventually became rather heated.

IT WAS AT THIS point that Mary blurted out her strong endorsement of the organized labor movement.

"Why, Mary, what do YOU know about unions?" one of the girls asked. "You come from Mississippi."

Mary, her ire aroused a bit, replied, "Well, I know a lot about unions that I didn't learn out of books.

"My mother is chairman of her local union and I've heard almost nothing but union talk around our house for four years."

The group listened attentively as Mary continued:

"I've heard organizers tell about the struggles of the union here in the South and elsewhere.

"Why, I found unions to provide such fascinating talk that I could hardly do any studying at home at night.

"Sometimes I seemed to get contracts and strikes mixed up with my Algebra and Latin.

"And I know something about the Taft-Hartley Law, too!"

BY THIS TIME Mary had her audience in the palm of her hand, so to speak, and she went right on talking.

She told about her mother and her co-workers. Her mother and about 150 others, she said, signed a petition to the boss asking for a "little raise" above the 40c-an-hour they were receiving.

The boss, she continued, didn't like the petition one little bit so he fired her mother and the 150 other signers.

"They decided to do something about it and the only logical thing to do was to form a union," Mary said.

They formed a union—a CIO union—and Mary's mother became chairman.

"So, you see, I know a little about unions," Mary concluded—or thought she concluded.

HOWEVER, THE young women who had learned about unions mostly from books weren't passing up an opportunity to obtain some first-hand information.

They shot question after question at Mary and she answered as best she could.

She told them not about the theory of unions but about how they actually operated on the local shop level. She told about the difficulties of organizing and about the benefits that resulted.

Finally, after much talk, the discussion session ended.

And ended also was the homesickness of Mary. From then on she was "one of the girls."

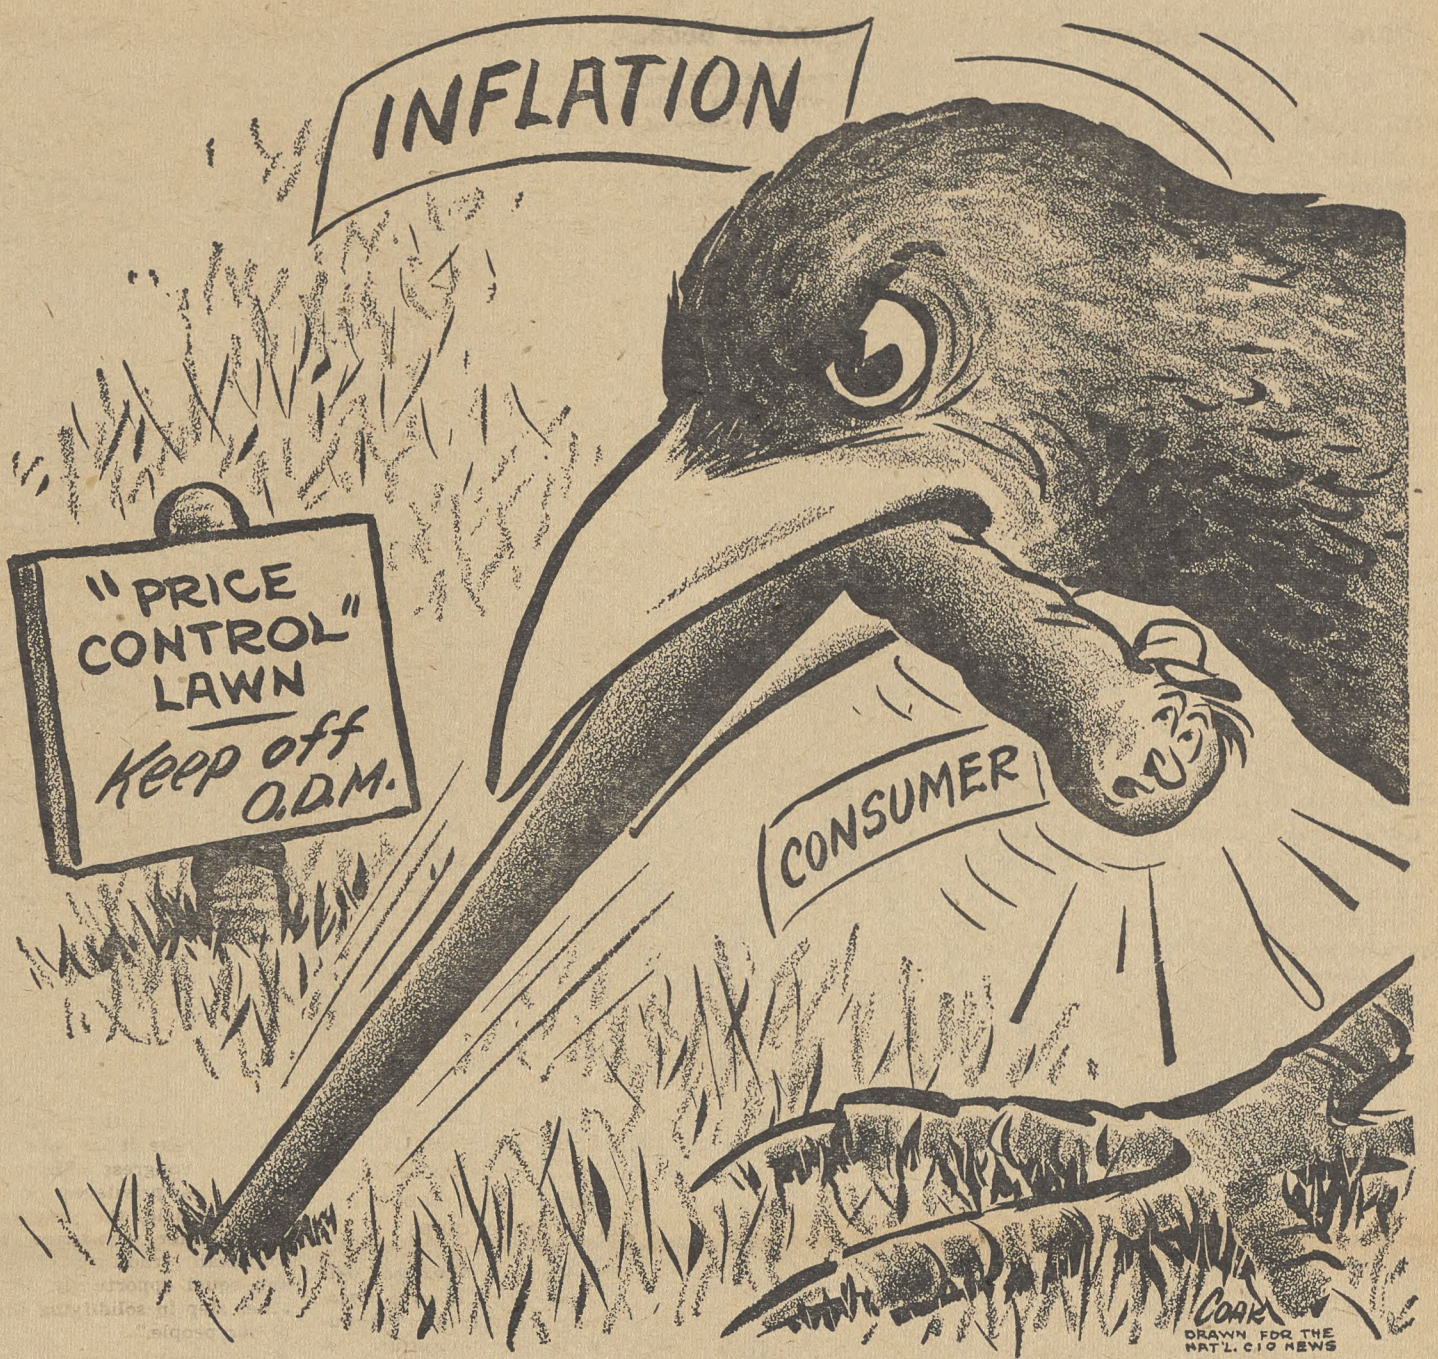
The First Robbin' This Spring!



A Story Of Piggy Bank Illustrates Our Economical Plight

Chances are that if you start this story of the piggy bank as related by Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey you will read every word of it to see how things turn out. Carey told it in a speech which he gave at the convention of District 1 of the CIO Rubber Workers at Pittsburgh on Mar. 2.

A YEAR AGO this month I was scheduled to address your District 1 convention in Mansfield, Ohio. You may recall that I was unable to be with you then because my little daughter, Patty, then nine years old, was struck by an auto and remained in a coma for 32 days. I'm happy to be able to tell you that although she was literally at death's door for more than a month, Patty is now completely recovered.

In thinking over what I would tell you here today my thoughts recurred to Patty for another reason. At Christmas time when I was selecting Patty's gifts I stopped at one department store counter covered with very attractive plastic piggy banks. I considered buying one for Patty then but decided to wait a bit.

Last week an item in the New York Times reminded me of my intention to buy the piggy bank for Patty. The New York Times story reported that Donald B. Woodward, a second vice president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, testified before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

Woodward, according to the newspaper, declared, "Junior's piggy bank stands as the symbol of America's strongest anti-inflation weapon and its best bet for continued economic well-being."

Well, you know, that statement sort of impressed me. I decided that if Patty's piggy bank could become "America's strongest anti-inflation weapon and its best bet for continued economic well-being" —well, I was going to make sure that Patty had her chance to make this enormous contribution to the United States.

Consequently, yesterday before taking the plane to Pittsburgh I hurried down to the same department store. I was pretty self-satisfied at the picture of how Patty would be saving money and saving the country at the same time. I got to the counter and there were the same piggy banks. I picked out one and started to hand it to the clerk when the price sign caught my eye.

So help me . . . the price of that piggy bank—in less than three months—had jumped from $1.50 to $3.91, an increase of 161%!

To tell you the truth I got so enraged I stalked out of that department store with my fists doubled up. How in heaven's name could I ever explain to Patty the economics of saving her pennies and nickels when the price of her very piggy bank had soared 161%.

Between you and me I don't think I could ever make Patty understand what Second Vice-president Woodward meant when he said that "Junior's piggy bank stands as the symbol of America's strongest anti-inflation weapon and its best bet for continued economic well-being." Patty would probably figure out very quickly that she could save more money by not buying the piggy bank in which to save money. But here, I'm afraid, Mr. Woodward wouldn't understand Patty.

Patty and her piggy bank, it seems to me, illuminate a great deal of the economic crisis that is enveloping us today. And the core of that crisis is the dizzy pursuit of profits by prices. I'd be willing to bet that the increase in net profits of that company which produced Patty's piggy bank rose practically as high as the 161% increase in the article's price.

Booklet Describes How The Marshall Plan Makes Jobs For American Workers

What the Marshall Plan means to American workers is told in a booklet just issued by the Economic Cooperation Administration describing the effect of the European recovery program in Pennsylvania.

The booklet shows that 34,000 pay checks went in 1949 to Keystone State workers on jobs made possible by Marshall Plan orders.

In the first four months of 1950, direct orders for $32 million worth of Marshall Plan goods went to 92 Pennsylvania cities and towns.

Included was $10 million for machinery and vehicles; $10 million for fuel (coal and oil); $5 million for food, feed and fertilizer, and $3.5 million for raw materials. The United Kingdom got $6.5 million worth of the goods ordered during the period, while $5 million worth went to Holland, $4.8 million worth to France and $4.6 million worth to Belgium.

U.S. To Philippines: Reforms Are The Price Of Aid

By JOHN McCARTHY
For Labor Press Association

PHILIPPINE politicians are trying to out-bluff Uncle Sam in a deal which involves the future of all the workers in the islands, but they can't bluff a man from a nation of poker players—they're going to have to ante up or the whole thing's off.

The deal is this; The Philippine economy has been sagging since the islands gained their independence five years ago. Money is needed and America is willing to advance it through the Economic Cooperation Administration if a minimum wage law and other reforms are passed.

The 20-man Senate promptly passed the legislation, but the House reasons that the United States will give aid under any conditions because of the threat of Communist infiltration and because of a 99-year lease for U. S. military and naval bases in the islands, in addition 76% of all trade is with America.

BUT THEY reason incorrectly. When the appeal was made, President Truman appointed a five-man committee under Daniel W. Bell to investigate. This group, consisting of a banker, a professional soldier, a public utility official, a research director, and a college president, found one of the great needs is a strong, independent labor movement.

They suggested that the CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods send representatives to advise and develop the small free labor group that has managed to lift its head above government interference, company domination and racketeers.

Paul Schuler of the national CIO is now on his way to see what can be done to help foster a movement which can become an active part of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, backed by the CIO, AFL and United Mine Workers.

Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, said that Schuler will advise the Filipino unions on organizational methods and what legislation to seek. Later he will try to aid the Indonesian trade union movement. Ross said:

"The Bell report recommended that American labor take an active part in developing a real trade union movement in the Philippines. We are desirous of having a good trade union movement in the Philippines which can become a part of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions to which both the CIO and AFL belong."

The Bell group found 20 million people living on 7083 islands scattered over a territory as far from north to south as it is from Cleveland to Dallas and as far from east to west as it is from Washington to Chicago. Only eleven islands have more than 1000 square miles. They range from Masbate, about the size of Rhode Island, to Luzon—as large as Ohio, which ranks 34th in area among the states.

THEY found great, fertile, well-watered fields between the towering mountains and the sea. Highly seasonal farm workers got 75c a day and their keep. In the towns common laborers averaged $1 to $1.25 a day and skilled craftsmen got from $2.45 to $3.80.

This they balanced against one of the highest cost-of-living areas in the world and declared that even a highly skilled worker can earn only half the estimated $2000 a year needed to support a family of five. American firms employ about 3% of the workers. They pay slightly higher scales, could pay more, but point to the disparity that already exists.

"Both industry and agriculture have been very prosperous since the end of the war, but little of this prosperity has seeped down to the working forces," says the Bell report.

It urged agricultural wages of $1 to $1.25 a day and industrial wages "based on the economic capacity" of employers to pay. The Senate bill calls for $1.25 for farm workers, $2 for industrial workers.

These rates will take care of only the lowest-paid; skilled workers will have to depend on "collective bargaining and enlightenment of management," the committee reports.

It says the union movement is "confused, haphazard and chaotic" but that "a struggling but honest" group shoud be given all encouragement possible because it "offers the one hope that management and labor will be able to work together through trade unions free from Communist domination.

"Even among sincere trade unionists there is a lack of experience in organizing and in responsible collective bargaining."

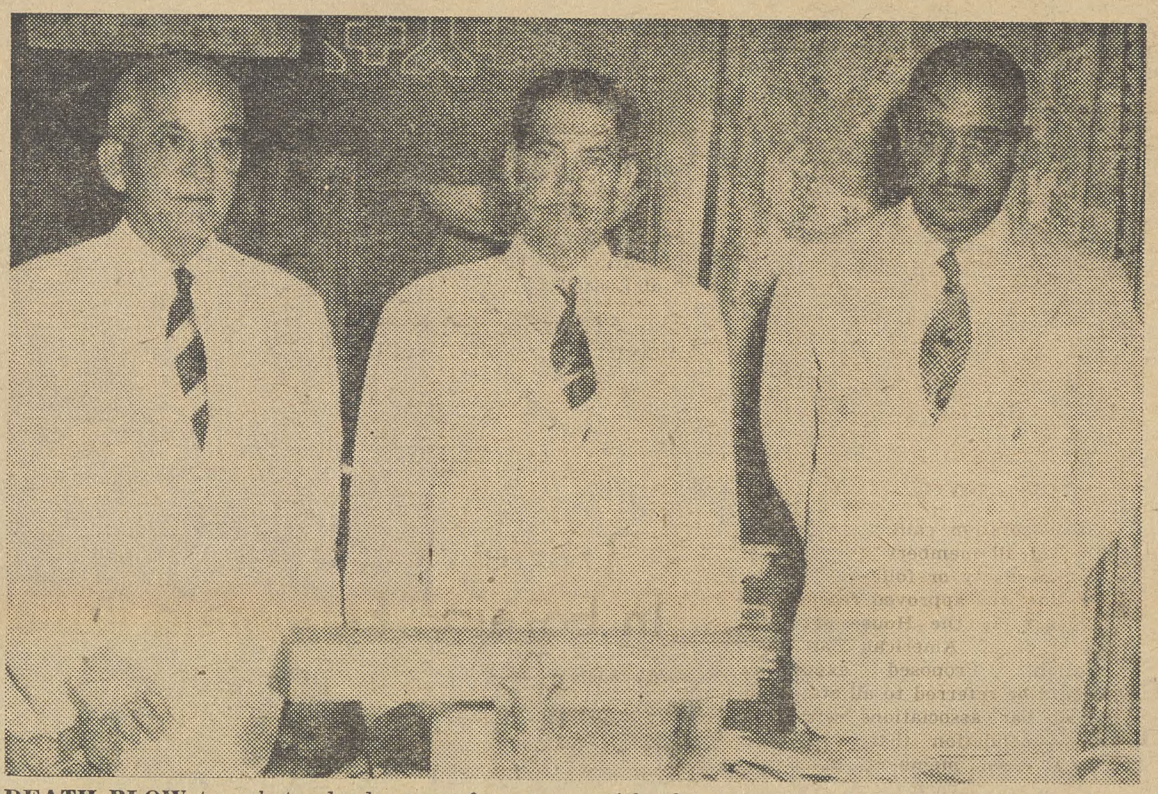
The report suggests American trade unionists help and advise workers' groups and that unions and management work out an apprenticeship program to provide skilled workers for the future.

THESE are some of the recommendations approved by President Truman as the price of getting U. S. aid, but the Philippine House Labor Committee still has the bill bottled up in committee and it adds damaging amendments every time it meets.

Pascual Espinosa, committee chairman who claims to be a friend of labor, is backing a version which sets up wage boards to revise wages down, not up, and which gives employers two years to reach minimums.

Plantation and factory owners are backing these delaying moves, waiting for America to send the money on an "emergency" basis, but this time Uncle Sam is playing for keeps—and with a stacked deck.

He's made the terms—help yourself and I'll help you—and this time he means to make them stick.



DEATH BLOW to substandard wages for native workers in Panama Canal Zone may have been struck by Pres. Arnulfo Arias (center) of Republic of Panama when he told CIO Intl. Rep. Ed. K. Welsh (right) that his government does not oppose pay boosts in the Canal Zone. Synthetic "fear" of interfering with the economy of the Republic has been used as an excuse for paying Panama Canal employes an average of 48c an hour. Mayor Alfredo Aleman (left), Panamanian Minister of Government and Justice, was present at meeting between Welsh and Pres. Arias. The Chamber of Commerce also favors raises.

McCarthy, Others Sued For $5 Million

THE SENATORIAL cloak of immunity which Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) has worn so well and to such advantage, may have slipped off his shoulders last Dec. 15. At any rate, the Wisconsin lawmaker recently found himself on the receiving end of a damage suit filed by columnist Drew Pearson.

Also named in federal court suits totaling $5.1 million, were radio commentator Fulton Lewis, Jr., columnist Westbrook Pegler of the Washington, D. C., Times-Herald, and Don Surine, administrative assistant to McCarthy.

Pearson sued McCarthy for $350,000, charging the Senator libelled him in a statement handed reporters on Dec. 15, 1950, before making similar remarks on the Senate floor. The statement said Pearson held an "important place" in the "Communist scheme on propaganda" and called him a "blackguard" and a "professional character assassin."

On another count the columnist sued McCarthy for $250,000 on the grounds the latter attacked him at a dinner party at the Sulgrave Club in Washington last Dec. 2. Pearson claims the Senator grabbed his neck "in a painful and paralyzing manner," and later kicked him in the groin.

In a third count, Pearson charged McCarthy, Pegler and Surine had a "preconceived plan" to injure him in his business. As the result he said, he lost a radio contract with a "certain sponsor" and "public officials" were intimidated so that they refused to supply him and his employes with news.

Panama President Favors Higher Pay For Native Workers In Canal Zone

THE OLD, old story that the United States Government, richest in the world, can't pay a living wage to the native workers it employs in the Panama Canal Zone lest it disrupt the economy of the Republic of Panama has been laid to rest by none other than the President of Panama himself —Arnulfo Arias.

He recently told CIO Intl. Rep. Ed. K. Welsh, assigned to the Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee, that his government has never opposed increased wages for the 14,000 or more native workers—10,000 of them citizens of the Republic—who work on the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad in the 10-mile-wide strip leased by the U. S. from the Republic in 1903.

His stand was made known at a meeting at which Welsh advised him that the Republic's alleged opposition to higher wages "has served as a serious obstacle in procuring better wage standards and living conditions for employes on the local rate forces of the Canal-Railroad organization."

Natives of the Caribbean area who work on the canal and railroad are paid an average of 48c an hour. Citizens of the U. S., in many cases doing the same work, are paid at the prevailing U. S. rate for their trades plus a bonus of 25%. The discrepancy has long been a sore point which the CIO has sought to correct since it went into Panama following the collapse of the Public Workers after its expulsion from the CIO because of Communist domination.

THE TROUBLE goes back to the time in 1903 when the Isthmian Canal Commission adopted as a principle the payment of wages to Caribbean natives "equal to or slightly in excess of the local native prevailing rates for similar work in the Republic of Panama."

However, in 1936 the U. S. signed a treaty with the Republic in which it agreed to "maintain as its policy, the principles of equality of opportunity and treatment . . . and will favor the maintenance, enforcement or enactment of such provisions . . . as will assure to Panamanian citizens employed by the Canal or the Railroad, equality of treatment with employes who are citizens of the United States of America."

GEORGE W. WESTERMAN, associate editor of the Panama Tribune, wrote on the basis of interviews with former Presidents of the Republic, and other present and former officials, that no Panamanian government for at least 15 years has reached any agreement with the Canal Zone Administration on pegging wages of the local rate workers at levels no higher than the Caribbean Wage Scale established in 1903 allows.

Pres. Arias' position that he "would view with pleasure" pay increases for the native workers was bulwarked by Federico Humbert, president of the Panama Chamber of Commerce, who stated flatly that his group has long favored better wages and working conditions for non-U. S. citizens.

World Living Cost Unsettled In 1950

Living costs in 1950 decreased 8% in Burma, 3% in Western Germany, 17% in Iran, 2% in Portugal, 14% in Sudan and 7% in Turkey, acording to the National Labor Office.

Living costs increased 12% in Australia, 7% in Austria, 2% in Belgium, 6% in Canada, 3% in Ceylon, 17% in Chile, 6% in Dominican Republic, 9% in Egypt, 21% in Finland, 12% in France, 14% in Greece, 2% in Hawaii, 5% in Italy, 4% in Luxembourg, 16% in Malaya, 7% in Mexico, 13% in Holland, 4% in Northern Rhodesia, 12% in Norway, 4% in Southern Rhodesia, 6% in South Africa, 6% in Sweden, 4% in United Kingdom, 6% in United States, and 9% in Viet-Nam.

U. S. Labor Dept. Seeks Skilled Men In Europe

A nine-man team from the U. S. Labor Dept. is at Frankfurt, Germany, to select the best skilled workers among displaced persons from Czechoslovakia, Eastern Germany, Poland and other Russian satellites.

Spurred by the threat of a shortage of craftsmen in America, the team is rushing qualified men through the DP processing machinery and shipping them to the U. S. Recruiting offices have been established in six German and Austrain cities. Farmers are most in demand because it is felt American farms will be drained of manpower as the defense effort gets up steam.

Steel Union Members Quiz Congressmen

SOME OF the men who work in the nation's steel mills, making steel, came to Washington last week to see for themselves how the men who work in the nation's capital, making laws, operate—and some of the things they saw and heard made them want to come back again soon.

The 35 CIO Steelworkers who attended the three-day Steelworkers National Legislative Conference had a full agenda planned for them by USA Legislative Director Frank N. Hoffman.

The first day at CIO headquarters, the visitors heard informal talks by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils; Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO and Steelworkers' general counsel; Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO education and research director; Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, and others.

The men, who were chosen by USA district directors to attend the conference on the basis of their outstanding records, were impressed by their visit to the Capitol. And they had plenty of questions to ask the lawmakers to whom they talked during the second and third day of their stay.

They wanted to know from Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), chairman of the House committee which investigated lobbying, how big business lobbies operate.

They talked to Ray Murdock, counsel for a Senate Labor and Public Welfare subcommittee which last week released a blistering report on the union-busting activities of Southern textile manufacturers. They heard from him how the Taft-Hartley Act has been used against the CIO Communications Workers by the Bell Telephone System.

LATER THE same day they called upon Rep. Blatnik (D. Minn.) and discussed the proposed St. Lawrence Waterway.

Hoffman said he was gratified at the amount of knowledge the delegates possessed regarding national affairs. When they called upon the various Congressmen, he said, they insisted on asking pertinent questions as to where that particular member of Congress stood on such basic subjects as rent control, food prices and the manpower situation.

When they left Washington, the delegates declared it was their intention to carry back to their respective districts the information they had accumulated during their brief visit to the Capitol. According to Hoffman, there is a strong possibility that in the future there will be more such delegations of Steelworkers asking Congressmen questions.

American Bar To Seek Expulsion of Commies

A resolution calling for expulsion of all members of the Communist Party or followers of the CP line was approved recently at Chicago by the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association. Proposed expulsions would be referred to all state and local bar associations with the recommendation that they also expel such members, and that they start disbarment proceedings at once.

Runoff Election Slated This Week At Ford Local 600

Runoff elections at Ford Local 600 of CIO Workers at Dearborn, Mich., will be held Mar. 13, 14, and 15.

On the ballot for president will be incumbent Carl Stellato, Reuther candidate who drew 16,205 votes in the first election, and Joe Hogan, left-wing candidate, who drew 9010 votes. Also running in the original voting was former president Tommy Thompson, who drew 7784 votes.

Pat Rice, who had the support of both the Communist and the Thompson forces, was re-elected vice president.

Two Stellato men, William R. Hood and Joe Rivers, were re-elected sergeants-at-arms. Defeated for the post by a margin of 786 votes was Andrew Dewar, a member of the executive board since 1941. Runoff for financial secretary will be between W. E. Grant of the Stellato slate and Virgil Lacey.

Delegates elected for the UAW convention in April at Cleveland were evenly divided between the right and left wings. A proposal to increase dues for the purpose of strike insurance was defeated 23,055 to 9860. Nearly 38,000 voted in the largest turnout in the history of Local 600. LPA

Mexico To Curb Prices

The Mexican government will soon set up a price control agency, with price ceilings on essential goods.

TWUA Bars Extension Of Cotton-Rayon Pact

MORE than 200,000 members of the CIO Textile Workers in the cotton and rayon end of the industry were poised last week to join 70,000 woolen-worsted workers, on strike since Feb. 16, in a walkout as the union "flatly and categorically" rejected management proposals to extend the present contract for three months.

George Baldanzi, TWUA executive vice president, told a mass meeting in Philadelphia that the union is prepared to "fight to the finish" for its goals.

"We are prepared to continue our fight until the leaders of the cotton and woolen industry who are hiding behind their swollen profits and ceiling-free government orders sit down and bargain in good faith," he said.

He termed "pure hypocrisy" the statement of some manufacturers that Washington directives make it impossible to meet the major portions of the union's proposals.

"This is a deliberate misrepresentation of the present wage order," he said.

The union has asked a 15c hourly increase, company-paid pensions of $100 monthly, a cost-of-living clause and improvements in insurance benefits, holidays and vacations for workers in both the cotton-rayon and woolen-worsted industries.

The first break in the woolen-worsted walkout occurred Mar. 8 when TWUA negotiators reached tenative agreement for a settlement with three New England companies.

The agreement, which must be ratified by the union's policy committee and the membership, and then be approved by federal stabilizers, calls for a 15c an hour increase.

This amount may be divided between direct wages and fringe benefits and a cost of living formula providing for a wage increase of 1c an hour for every 1.14 point rise in the Bureau of Labor Statistic price index.

The pact also provides for a two-year contract with an additional 5c an hour increase on Mar. 15, 1952.

The cotton-rayon agreement expires Mar 15.

TWUA Secy.-Treas. William Pollock meanwhile revealed that the union has agreed to comply with a Dept. of Defense request that finished goods for the use of the armed forces be released by woolen and worsted plants closed by the industry-wide strike. More than 240,000 yards of olive-drab serge and wool shirting were shipped out of the struck plants by the end of the week.

Pollock said TWUA agreed to release the goods because "we are not fighting the GIs, we're fighting the industry for better wages and working conditions."

IUE Group To Win Raises Via Escalator

THE IUE-CIO General Electric Conference of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, at an emergency session in New York last week, declared "it is our intention to fight to see that all GE workers enjoy the same benefits as will be obtained by workers led by IUE-CIO."

The board was referring to the cost of living escalator clause under which IUE members in GE will receive an adjustment in April based on the Mar. 15 Bureau of Labor Statistics index and retroactive to Mar. 15. Economists estimate that it will be at least 9c.

The smaller group of GE workers covered by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers has no escalator. IUE is determined they will not suffer because of their union's weakness.

The GE board had been called to meet when it appeared that GE had won its campaign to have the mobilization setup, headed by its former president, Charles E. Wilson, either wipe out escalators or hold them within the 10% formula.

The meeting heard a full report from Pres. James B. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, on what the United Labor Policy Committee has been doing. The board enthusiastically approved the committee's action in withdrawing labor representatives from defense agencies in protest against Wilson's policies.

The board also pledged eternal vigilance against GE's union-busting campaign. The board had been prepared to approve a strike to protect its contract.

'Trade Pacts An Important Cornerstone In Foreign Economic Policy'—Ruttenberg

CIO ENDORSEMENT of reciprocal trade agreements was renewed before the Senate Finance Committee on Mar. 7 by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the Dept. of Education & Research.

"The CIO has always regarded this program as a highly important, forward-looking step in achieving a sound framework of international economic relations," he said.

"The American worker has long recognized that his own welfare is intimately related to the welfare and living standards of workers elsewhere in the world. It is clear to the American worker that his own high standards of living cannot long remain immune to the pressure of low standards of living and economic frustration in the world around him.

"The reciprocal trade agreements program represents an important cornerstone in this country's foreign economic policy which is designed to stimulate world trade and production, economic development and ultimately to raise living standards everywhere. The CIO stands steadfast in its support of these objectives, and has constantly supported this and other programs for world economic development."

The committee has been holding hearings on a measure passed by the House with amendments which the CIO generally opposes.

In his testimony Ruttenberg stressed that in addition to the economic benefits from such a program, it has been an "inspiring symbol of the U. S. government's genuine interest in the economic welfare and development of the free world and of its determination to maintain world peace," and thus an important weapon in ideological warfare.

"Failure of the U. S. to renew the program," he said, "is likely to be construed abroad as evidence of this government's apathy—and perhaps even antipathy—to the basic needs of other peoples. It might therefore tend to undermine the trust of the free world in our willingness to assist them and jeopardize our ability to carry them with us as allies."

THREE CIO STEELWORKERS look on as Frank N. Hoffman, Steelworkers' legislative director, makes a point to CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan. The three were part of a USA delegation from all over the country who came to Washington to get a first hand picture of the nation's lawmakers in action. Standing, left to right: James E. Payne, District 35, Southern Atlantic states; Al Jordan, District 25, Western Ohio, and H. A. Rasmussen , District 30, Indiana. Housing, rent control, and price control were chief topics.

Story Of Exploitation Wins Broun Award

LEONARD Jackson reporter for the Bay City, Mich., Times, last week was awarded the 1950 Heywood Broun Award for a series of stories on the exploitation of migrant Puerto Rico farm workers imported to save the $14 million sugar beet crop.

The award is in memory of the founder and first president of the Guild and consists of $500 in cash and a Guild citation. Broun, a crusading liberal columnist, died in 1939. The 1950 award is the tenth in the series.

Wade R. Franklin of the Chicago Sun-Times, chairman of the Guild's Broun Award Committee, announced the winner in San Francisco, where the awards were judged. Judges were Dr. Chilton R. Bush, director of the Institute of Journalistic Studies of Stanford Univ., Joseph Henry Jackson, book editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, and Dick Pearce, San Francisco Examiner writer.

Brought in by an emergency airlift during an acute labor shortage 5300 Puerto Ricans reportedly saved the crop. Jackson was at that point assigned to the story.

THE WORKERS had been led to expect to make $10 to $15 a day. In Puerto Rico an estimated 26,000 depended on the wages of these workers. Jackson's stories said that after weeks of toil, migrants were collecting checks for $40 and $50 instead of the hundreds of dollars they had been promised.

The Puerto Ricans received subsistence allowances of $5 weekly.

Meanwhile, credits were cut off from the Puerto Rican families dependent on the checks, and many faced starvation.

Jackson's investigation stirred to action federal and Puerto Rican authorities and the Michigan Field Crops, Inc., which had hired the workers.

Weekly pay checks were established, better group housing, new contracts and better pay were provided, food was prepared by cooks brought from Puerto Rico.

The judges found the reporter's stories were fair, unemotional, well written, and the most outstanding newspaper job of the year "in the spirit of Broun."

Jackson, 30, is married and has a daughter. He is a veteran of the Navy where he won his wings as a pilot. He served as an ensign. He has been on the staff of the Bay City Times since 1946.

THE JUDGES declared that an entry which ran a close second was "the series of articles, editorials and cartoons of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch relating to the case of Mrs. Ellen Knauff. This German war bride was ordered excluded by the U. S. attorney general, on recommendation of immigration service officers, without a hearing." The statement of the three judges added:

"The judges feel the Post-Dispatch is to be commended for its analysis in editorials of the principles of constitutional law (written by Irving Dilliard), for the persistence of its Washington and New York reporters (Edward A. Harris and Alvin R. Goldstein) in following through on their contacts with certain congressmen, officials and attorneys, and for the power of the cartoons drawn by Daniel R. Fitzpatrick. When the case has terminated, the Post-Dispatch will contain a detailed narrative of what may eventually be a classic case of civil liberties in this country."

THE JUDGES also commended a series of articles by Mrs. Joy Reese Coleman, of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Journal, which exposed alleged kickbacks in the school building program, and led to the indictment of two school officials and five other persons.

Two other entries also drew high praise of the judges. These were Ed Reid's exposure in the Brooklyn Eagle of police protection of rackets and gambling, and Ray Brennan's articles in the Chicago Sun-Times which had the effect of defeating Police Capt. Dan Gilbert in his campaign for sheriff of Cook county.

Eisenhower Denied Spot For Quarters

Marcel Boussac is a big French textile baron. He also owns the largest racing stable in Europe. A fifth of all the cotton mills in France belong to him. His mills use 12% of the raw cotton imported into the country, and two-thirds of this come from the U. S.

Thanks to the generous imports from the U. S. made possible under the Marshall Plan, Boussac's mills have been able to run full time, and his profits are reported to have been huge.

Americans in France think Boussac has plenty to be grateful for to the U. S., and they were pretty peeved, according to a news dispatch from Paris, when he refused to sell a piece of property near Versailles for use as headquarters for Gen. Dwight Eisenhower.

Carey Will Speak At Philadelphia Forum

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey has been chosen as a speaker at the annual Philadelphia Bulletin Forum to be held at Philadelphia Mar. 13.

Other members of the panel include Benjamin Fairless, president of U. S. Steel, who will speak for management, and Alan Valentine, who recently resigned as Economic Stabilization Administrator.

The discussion will be broadcast over nationwide hookups of the Columbia and Mutual radio networks, will be televised on several eastern stations and will be rebroadcast all over the world by the Voice of America.

Free Labor's Role In Crisis On ICFTU Congress Agenda

THREE MAJOR points of interest to workers throughout the world were placed on the agenda for the Second World Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at a recent meeting of the Emergency Committee in Brussels, Belgium.

They were: the aims of free trade unionism and its struggle against the totalitarian menace; the role of labor in the international crisis, and the conditions for the establishment and maintenance of world peace.

The congress will be held in the Palazzo del Ghiaccio in Milan, Italy, beginning July 4. Resolutions submitted by affiliated organizations and reports of officers also will be discussed.

THE COMMITTEE meeting suspended its sessions on Feb. 21 to travel to Cologne for the funeral of Hans Boeckler, president of the German Trade Union Federation and an ICFTU vice president.

The Emergency Committee voted to expand ICFTU regional activities over the next three years and to launch an appeal to affiliated organizations for a special fund of $750,000 to finance it.

The recommendations of the Inter-American Congress, held in Mexico City Jan. 8-12 and of the European Regional Council, held in Brussels Jan. 29-31, for the appointments of Francisco Auguirre and of Walter Schevenels as regional secretaries respectively, were approved.

HANS BOECKLER
Honored In Death

The committee also discussed the effect on workers and their living standards of the rearmament programs the democratic nations have been forced to adopt in the face of Soviet imperialism. It was agreed the free trade union movement must endorse expenditures required for legitimate defense measures such as the Atlantic Pact, but it was emphasized that really effective support could only be achieved through union representation in international defense planning agencies.

The committee maintained that the workers are entitled to guarantees, on both national and international levels, of "a just and equitable distribution of the burden for the rational organization of the defense economy which will reduce this burden to a minimum."

ARRANGEMENTS for ICFTU schools in Europe were approved. The first will be held in Paris Apr. 21-29 on "The Economic Integration of Europe and the Schuman Plan," and the second probably in Innsbruck from July 29 to Aug. 11 on "International Trade Unionism."

A conference of free trade unions in West and Central African preparatory to a full scale meeting under the auspices of the ICFTU was held last week in Douala, Cameroons, Africa.

Unions have several thousand members in the Belgian, French and British territories in West and Central Africa. Many of them are handicapped, however, by lack of funds due to the inability of poorly-paid workers to pay even small dues. Most are 10 years old or less, and receive guidance and financial aid from the labor movements in their home countries.

Ohio CIO Puts Spotlight On Legislature

THE OHIO CIO Council is conducting a series of 10 "Legislative Action Weeks" with the twofold purpose of acquainting members of local CIO unions with what the state legislature is doing, and the state senators and representatives with the views of CIO members.

It will be the task of the delegates to serve as liaison for the members of their locals and for the legislators. The council set up the program because it is alarmed by the overwhelming conservative majority in the legislature and the threat it poses to liberal, pro-labor legislation. Here's how the program works:

The delegates, who represent CIO local unions in neighboring counties, meet in Columbus on Monday afternoons. In a brief session, they receive a fill-in on important issues and up-to-date facts on what has happened to measures important to labor.

They continue these discussions at dinner and then adjourn to the state capitol, where the legislature convenes on Monday evenings. Here they see the general assembly in action and contact their own representatives and senators, making appointments for the following day.

On Tuesdays they confer with the legislators, acquainting them with the feelings of CIO members on important measures and carefully recording the reactions of the legislators. They also attend committee hearings and the Tuesday afternoon session of the legislature.

Late Tuesday afternoon, they reassemble to report on their conversations with representatives and senators and on the lawmakers' reactions to CIO's point of view. They also exchange opinions on the best way to impress these legislators with the need and value for bills CIO is backing.

TUESDAY night they again dine together, with the representatives and senators as their guests, and then attend committee hearings on important issues.

Wednesday noon, after a morning spent in more conferences with legislators or at committee hearings, they reassemble for lunch and a closing session. At this time they conclude their reports and discuss the methods that can be used to bring home to their own members the full story of what's going on in the legislature.

CLASSROOM SCENE at Columbus as the Ohio CIO Council launches its first "Legislative Action Week" designed to bring the legislative battle home to the grass roots. Council Secy.-Treas. Jacob Clayman is standing at the right rear with hand pointed. This first session was attended by Steelworkers, Glass Workers and Utility Workers from Steubenville, Zanesville, Cambridge and neighboring communities. Ten such sessions are scheduled.

European CPs Down A Third Since 1946

THE SHADOW of communism, which hung like a threat of blight over western Europe for so long, is definitely shortening, a roundup showed last week.

Some of the highlights:

1 The Communist Parties of western Europe have lost a third of their membership since the end of World War II, Homer M. Byington, Jr., director of the Office of Western European Affairs in the U. S. State Dept., reported in a television broadcast.

2 In Italy, home of the largest Communist Party in the world outside Russia, the tide of withdrawals from the party was growing to flood proportions.

3 The French Press Service issued a detailed breakdown showing where the party has lost strength since 1945.

4 In Norway, a survey of newspaper comment showed general agreement with plans for expanding and speeding up the country's program of preparedness to meet Soviet aggression.

5 A Communist attempt to mouse-trap Pope Pius XII into supporting the Cominform's current "peace offensive" flopped miserably.

Byington produced facts and figures to buttress his claim of widespread defections from the party in western Europe.

"Moscow is losing the battle to take over western Europe by boring from within," he declared.

"The followers of Stalin are losing ground despite the glitter of their false promises, strong-arm tactics, threats and pressures of all kinds."

The "remarkable change" since 1945, when "international communism seemed ready to take over," he said, "justifies our confidence that in the next five years the picture will be correspondingly better than it is today."

IN 1946, Byington went on, there were 1,673,000 party members in western Europe outside Italy. Two years later Italy had 2.3 million. Last year, he asserted there were 2,678,000 members, a drop of 1,295,000. The drops ranged from 31% in Italy (not counting the thousands who have withdrawn this year) to 84% in tiny Luxembourg. His figures follow:

Country	Membership in 1946	Membership in 1950	% Reduction
Austria	150,000	100,000	34
Belgium	100,000	35,000	64
Denmark	60,000	22,500	63
France	850,000	600,000	30
Italy (1948)	2,300,000	1,600,000	31
Luxembourg	3,000	500	34
Netherlands	50,000	33,000	34
Norway	40,000	14,000	65
Sweden	60,000	33,000	45
Britain	60,000	40,000	34
W. G'm'ny	300,000	200,000	34
Total	3,973,000	2,678,000	33

The flood of party defections in Italy is pointing toward formation of a nationalist Communist party in that country based on the principles of Karl Marx — not those of Stalin. The Italians are refusing, in ever-increasing numbers, to continue to subscribe to the orthodox Communist belief that no party member can bear arms against Russia under any circumstances, even invasion.

The movement bears much resemblance to the Jugoslavian version of Communism set up across the Adriatic Sea by Marshal Tito. However, there seems to be no relationship between them, direct or indirect. In fact, most of the Italians who left the party have no more regard for Tito than the Russians have.

INCREASES IN party membership in agricultural southern Italy, which for a time offset losses in the industrial north, have been slowed down to a walk by the action of the government in putting its land reform program into effect. That deprived the Communists of their major appeal to the landless peasants.

An official French document notes that when the voters elected 623 deputies to the National Assembly in 1946, the Communists were able to claim 167 members and six sympathizers. They got approximately 5 million votes, of which about 600,000 came from party members—250,000 fewer than the Byington estimate for that year.

In 1946 the Communists won 73 of 315 seats in the Council of the Republic, the upper house of Parliament. Two years later they captured only 15 seats out of 320. In 1945 the voters named 184 Communist or Communist affiliated candidates to departmental general councils; in 1949 they chose only 37.

ON THE labor front, it was noted that while the Communist-controlled General Confederation of Labor (CGT) is still the most powerful union organization, its vote in 1950 elections of social security representatives fell off 2.45%. Its strength in the southeastern departments — formerly Communist strongholds — has declined sharply: 28% in Marseilles, 17% in Arles, 30% at Martigues-Port de Bouc.

Independent unions, completely without any political tie, are growing in number. Political strikes are less frequent and less effective.

The circulation of the three Communist newspapers in Paris has dropped abruptly: L'Humanite (daily) from 380,000 in 1947 to 230,000 in 1950; L'Humanite Dimanche (weekly) from 550,000 in 1947 to 480,000 in 1950, and Ce Soir (weekly) from 400,000 in 1947 to 210,000 in 1950.

The government publication recalled that the party's Central Committee acknowledged its growing weakness in three fields at its meeting in December, 1950.

These fields were the "struggle against war," with 110,000 tons of U. S. war material under the Military Aid Agreement landed in French ports without incident despite Communist sabotage attempts; politics, in view of heavy losses in local elections; and the "struggle against diversionists," which has failed to squelch Trotskyites and Titoists who continue active among French Communist intellectuals.

THE STATEMENT also commented that neutralism—the belief that France should stay neutral in any struggle between east and west—is a "negligible influence" and wanes as the strength of the west increases.

In Norway, a survey of editorial comment showed general agreement — aside from Communist newspapers—with plans for expanding and speeding up the country's program for meeting Soviet aggression.

The Labor organ, Arbeiderbladet, pointed out that the Atlantic Pact has given Norway "the opportunity to safeguard its security on a par with other Western European nations, despite the extreme limitations of its economic resources."

The general agreement that political unity and cooperation are needed in support of the defense plan is commended by the Conservative Aftenposten, largest evening paper in the country, which added: "And that is, perhaps, the most valuable aspect of our preparedness."

Other newspapers made similar comment, stressing the defensive nature of Norway's military policy. Vaart Land, organ of the Christian People's Party, added that "that applies to the other Atlantic Pact nations as well . . . its (the pact) sole objective is defense."

THE CATHOLIC Church was asked to put its imprimatur on Communist peace propaganda in a letter from Frederic Joliot-Curie, president of the World Peace Council which recently met in Berlin.

Joliot-Curie, stripped of his post on the French Atomic Energy Commission because of his communist views, asked Pope Pius XII to support "disarmament," which was described as the "final objective of the partisans of peace." The reply was tinged with irony. In it the Vatican Secretariat of State, which answered, expressed pleasure at seeing recognized "the fact that the sovereign pontiff has always pronounced himself in favor of peace—a true and just peace."

"The words and acts of the Holy Father on this point," it added, "have been travestied, so that powerful organizations that pretend to work for peace have gone so far as to try to make the masses believe the absurd calumny that the Pope desires and favors war."

Third Trial Of 'Trenton Six' Since 1948 Off To Slow Start

THE THIRD trial of six New Jersey Negroes charged with the murder of a shopkeeper in Trenton in January. 1948, opened last week in Superior Court at Trenton.

At the close of the third day of the trial, only five jurors had been accepted.

The New Jersey CIO Council and various locals have called for moral and financial support to see that the defendants get a fair trial this time. The death verdict handed down for all six at the end of their first trial in 1948 was overthrown by the State Supreme Court in June, 1949, and a new trial ordered.

The second trial, which opened last month, ended abruptly when the prosecutor was suddenly taken to a hospital. The third trial began Mar. 5 before judge Ralph J. Smalley. Attorneys from both the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are aiding in the defense.

The defendants are Ralph Cooper, Collis English, McKinley Forrest, John McKenzie, James Thorpe and Horace Wilson. They have been in jail for more than three years, charged with the $35 robbery and the murder of a 72-year-old used-furniture dealer, William Horner, on Jan. 27, 1948.

There were no known witnesses. However, defense attorneys were informed that a "mystery woman," known to the prosecution, had seen part of the affair and could have testified, had she been put on the stand, that the defendants were not the killers she saw. The prosecution claimed to know nothing about such a woman.

At the first trial the defense charged that the defendants were picked up more or less at random in an hysterical police roundup right after that murder; that evidence in their favor was suppressed, and that racial prejudice made a fair trial impossible.

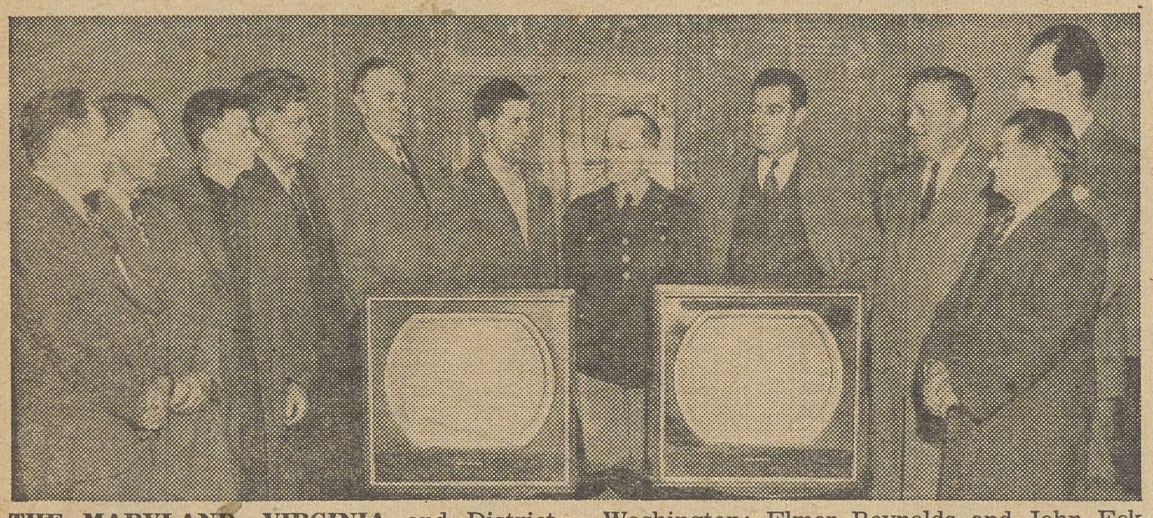
Rubber Union Ends Goodyear Co. Pact

Notice of termination of the contract between the CIO Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Rubber Co. was given by the union last week after seven weeks of negotiation had failed to produce a satisfactory agreement on any major issue.

The contract, under its own terms, will expire Mar. 31, after which the union may strike. Negotiations were continuing in an effort to head off a walkout.

FTC Squeezes Goo From Television Ads

The Federal Trade Commission has accepted written promises from 22 makers of television sets and their advertising agency that they will not use "child appeal" ads.



THE MARYLAND, VIRGINIA and District of Columbia Council of the CIO Brewery Workers present two television sets to Maj. Gen. Paul H. Streit, who accepts them in behalf of Walter Reed Hospital, Washington, where many GIs wounded in Korea are patients. Left to right, M. A. Dunn, Washington; John Spry, Norfolk, Va.; W. E. Wilson, Washington; Elmer Reynolds and John Eckmeyer, Baltimore, the latter council president; John Hager, Cumberland, Md., council's executive secretary, Gen. Streit, James Regan, Edmund C. Moore and Henry Strickler, the latter three of Baltimore, and J. L.. Apperson, Washington. All except Gen. Streit are officers of the council or of local unions.

Unchecked Use Of Rubber Blamed For Unemployment

THE "UNDISCIPLINED" use of rubber by manufacturers and ineffective policing of the industry by the federal government have cost thousands of workers their jobs and put others on short work weeks.

That was the charge of representatives of the CIO Rubber Workers and nine locals in the Akron, O., area.

The union representatives, at a meeting in Akron, accused the employers of expanding operations in the latter part of 1950 despite government warnings that supplies were to be slashed, and with continuing to hire new workers and boost production after they had been asked to cut back.

"In the last months of 1950," a union spokesman said, "the companies grabbed every pound of rubber they could and used it for the manufacture of non-essential civilian goods in order to pile up large profits. Financial statements published in the last three weeks show rubber manufacturers have broken practically all records in sales and net earnings."

The meeting was held to examine the results of Washington conferences between government and union officials growing out of the union's investigation of "the shortened rubber supply and manpower problem."

IT WAS disclosed that the union committee asked the government to increase allocations during the present period of transition, so as to stabilize employment, with the additional amount to be paid back when synthetic production reaches full capacity. Manpower dislocation now will mean a lack of trained workers when the synthetic rubber becomes available and will result in wasted time and money, the committee said.

Represented at the meeting in addition to the international were Goodyear Local 2, Goodrich Local 5, Firestone Local 7, RCA Local 8, General Local 9, American Hard Rubber Local 15, Ace Rubber Local 55, Eclat Rubber Local 59 at Cuyohoga Falls, O., and Local 18 at Seiberling.

Senate Unit Finds Evidence Of Dixie Plot To Kill Unions

FOR SOME time the CIO Textile Workers have maintained that there is a highly organized and effective union-busting campaign operated in the southern textile industry by employer groups and aimed at destroying labor unions.

A subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Welfare Committee last week issued a report—based on hearings held last year—which, in effect, substantiated TWUA's contention.

The subcommittee found that "there is one notable fact emerging from the total mass of material which has been studied: The almost identical methods and techniques which are used throughout the southern textile area to prevent or destroy labor organizations and collective bargaining . . . the evidence goes far to reveal a widespread conspiracy to evade and nullify the Taft-Hartley Act."

THE REPORT was based on testimony, heard by the committee, concerning the relations between TWUA and American Enka Corp., Morristown, Tenn.; Anchor Rome Mills, and the Celanese Corp., both of Rome, Ga.; American Thread Co., Tallapoosa, Ga., and the Anderson, S. C., Citizens Committee.

The report was an indictment of the Taft-Hartley law as an instrument to protect the rights of workers. It declared: "The rights of workers to self organization and collective bargaining are guaranteed by federal law, and yet thousands of workers in the southern textile industry who have sought the protection of the law have failed to obtain it."

Pointing to the fact that nearly all New England textile workers are organized into unions, the subcommittee charged that "the ability of southern employers to avoid collective bargaining agreements has afforded them a substantial competitive advantage over their northern competitors through substandard working conditions and lower wages."

The report added that "millions of dollars have been spent for organizing since the end of World War II, and yet Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers, testified before the subcommittee that membership in his union has declined in the South from 20% of the textile employes to 15% in the last few years . . ."

"This retrogression of collective bargaining does not appear to have come as a series of isolated instances," the report said.

IN PATTERNS designed to prevent union organization, employers were found to have used methods which included surveillance of organizers and members, "propaganda," denial of free speech and assembly, community organization for "anti-union activity," "espionage," "violence and gunplay," firing of union sympathizers, and "endless litigations."

If these measures fail, the report said, employers stall proceedings and "few organizing campaigns survive this type of onslaught."

Other methods cited by the subcommittee as used by southern textile employers include breaking down grievance machinery, stalling negotiations, anti-strike injunctions, eviction of strikers from company-owned houses in mill villages and blacklists.

"The easy granting of injunctions and prompt and vigorous enforcement of them by the loose issuance of contempt citations appear to be peculiar to many southern states," the report said.

It said appeals to racial and sectional prejudice were sometimes made to combat unions and that "churches often play an anti-union role."

The subcommittee said it had been informed that "standardization of techniques" could be attributed in part to several legal firms which have state-wide or regional practices representing employers in labor relations.

IN A REVIEW of the strike at American Enka last year, the subcommittee said, the sheriff's office, the State Highway Patrol and finally the Tennessee National Guard were "in fact, breaking the strike."

The subcommittee also said the "ponderous and snail-like pace" of the National Labor Relations Board in processing cases almost completely destroyed the effectiveness of administrative action. The time consumed in processing an unfair labor practice charge from the date of the filing of the charge to the board decision averaged 480 days, according to the report.

The subcommittee:

1 Proposed that the "free speech" provision of the T-H Law be repealed on grounds that it encourages employers to use "captive audiences" to express opposition to unions and to make implied threats.

2 Urged repeal of the T-H provision that "economic" strikers who have been replaced are barred from voting in union representation elections.

3 Objected to the T-H provision requiring a person to be the legal "agent" of an employer before he may be barred from committing unfair labor practices.

4 Proposed that labor "espionage" be outlawed in line with a bill recently introduced in the Senate.

5 Suggested that Congress consider ways to establish the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government over labor disputes affecting interstate commerce.

6 Criticized the T-H definition of bargaining (employers are not required to make counter-proposals).

February Jobs At Record High

In February, 58,905,000 persons were at work, slightly under January but "much the highest ever recorded for this time of year," the Census Bureau said last week.

The unemployed total was 2,407,000, slightly under the January figure. Farm employment at 5,930,000 was under the 6,223,000 figure for February, 1950. Industrial employment was 52,976,000 or 2,250,000 above February, 1950.

Rubber Union Officer New Coop Group Aide

Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs, of the CIO Rubber Workers has been elected co-chairman of the Council for Cooperative Development, which links the co-op and labor movements of the U. S.

He replaces Victor Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, who is now CIO representative in Paris. Arnold Zander, president of the AFL State, County and Municipal Employes, was re-elected co-chairman.

"If you want to read me a real bedtime story, Pop, read one of those Big Business press releases!"

Policemen's Organizing Drive Opens

THE 19,000 members of New York City's "finest" may soon be card-carrying CIO members if a current organizing drive by the CIO Transport Workers continues its successful start.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill said that more than 5500 policemen belonging to the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association have already indicated they would be interested in changing affiliation to the CIO union.

He charged that poor pay, long and uncertain hours, inadequate pensions, unjust and outmoded conditions of work and lack of fair and reasonable job security were responsible for the policemen turning to the CIO.

A recent TWU executive board resolution said:

"The present plight of New York City policemen can be remedied only by effective, democratic and fearless union organization, completely divorced from manipulation, interference and control by the higher echelons of command."

Quill declared that the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association and other organizations in the department were "under the thumb" of top officials and were not free to act in the best interests of their members.

He said the drive would be conducted by a Police Dept. organizing committee of TWU and the union preferred the policemen to join as individuals rather than in groups.

Puerto Rican Rate Upped From 24c to 35c

A minimum wage of 35c an hour for the men's and boys' clothing and related products industry in Puerto Rico has been set by Administrator William R. McComb of the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Division under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The rate was recommended by a special industry committee and replaces a 24c minimum formerly in effect. Minimums less than the statutory 75c are permitted for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Need Of More Funds For School Lunches Spelled Out

AN INCREASE in school enrollments and higher food prices mean that it will take more money this year than ever to operate an adequate school lunch program, a CIO spokesman told the House Appropriations Committee.

George Guernsey, CIO's associate director of education, urged allocation of $150 million for the school lunch program.

He said that some two million more children had been enrolled in school during the past two years, a 24% increase, which "obviously requires an increased budget."

ALLOCATION of federal funds for the past two years has been about $83.5 million annually, Guernsey said, but if the value of price-supported surplus commodities provided for the school lunch program is included, federal expenditures for 1950 totaled around $120 million.

Some 8½ million school children, or nearly a fourth of those enrolled, benefited by last year's program, an increase of 800,000 over the previous year, Guernsey said.

Besides the big increase in the school enrollment, and the added cost of maintaining the program because of higher food costs, most of the surplus foods will not be available, cutting $36 million worth of food out of the program, Guernsey said.

Of special significance to the school lunch program, he told the committee, is the fact that the number of working mothers is increasing. More than a fifth of all mothers of children under 18 work.

He said that 47% of the school age children come from families making less than $3000 a year, with half of these in the group below $2000 a year.

"While there are many who will shout 'welfare state' to the suggestion that every child of school age coming from a family with an income of less than $3000 a year should be provided with a federally supported hot lunch once a day," Guernsey declared, "millions of Americans believe in this type of government service.

"They realize, as do the members of the CIO, that in the long run, one good measure of our democracy is the size of the federal allocation for the school lunch program."

Federal assistance in providing lunches for school children first became available in 1933, but it was not until the National School Lunch Act became effective in June, 1946, that the program was put on a permanent basis. Under the act, federal funds for school lunches are apportioned among the states, depending on the number of school-age children and the per capita income of the state, and must be matched with funds from sources within the state.

U. S. Moves To Check High Rents Near Camp

Two more men have been assigned by the federal housing expediter's office to combat rent gouging of GIs stationed at Ft. Leonard Wood., Mo.

The action followed an expose in the St. Louis Star-Times which revealed that soldiers were paying as high as $122 a month for shacks near the military camp. Most of the complaints have come from Wanesville, Mo., where most of the off-the-post personnel live. Other towns reported are Rolla and Lebanon.

Public Relations Group Raps Truman, Wilson

President Truman and Mobilization Czar Charles E. Wilson were assailed recently by the National Assembly for the Advancement of Public Relations for their "cavalier treatment of the views of labor and small business and of 94% of the citizens of America."

Assembly Vice Pres. Eli Greifer at Washington called for public opinion throughout the nation to get behind labor's protests against giving big business "an absolute monopoly of the shaping of mobilization policy in the administration of mobilization activities at the top levels."

"The present mess is the sole result of utter ineptness in elementary human relations," said Greifer. "No one who lacks an elementary grasp of human relations is qualified for any high office in the United States in the year 1951."

Washington Fails To Grasp Housing And Rent Crises

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

UNION MEMBERS all over the nation are being alerted to write their congressmen and senators at once, exressing their opinion of the involved and merciless housing squeeze the current situation is rapidly plunging them into:

—Rent controls expire March 31 in over 1400 communities, and will expire altogether on June 30.

—There is as yet no sign of further action on the Senate Banking Committee resolution which would at least lift the March 31 deadline—and the administration still has not put in a bill for badly needed stronger controls including the power to reimpose ceilings where they have been lifted.

—The government low-rental housing program is completely bogged down and efforts are being made to kill it entirely.

—The administration's approach to the new and growing problem of how to house defense workers has so far been to recommend handing it over to the private builders to build at government risk, with low standards and high prices or rentals.

—The House Banking Committee made this situation worse by approving the administration housing bill and adding to it some 30 real estate lobby amendments, including one which would have the effect of allowing builders to charge $1,000 more for no more house.

THERE IS increasing evidence that deliberate or not, Federal Housing Administration policies are directed toward forcing people out of low-rental government owned projects into exorbitantly priced, privately built government-guaranteed dwellings.

—Men hired to work in essential industries are sleeping in their cars, doubling up families in unsanitary dwellings at exorbitant rentals—or staying where they are and hoping against hope that the rent won't go up.

—More and more workers are simply refusing to shift to defense jobs if the shift involves moving to another city or community. The main reason for this is not lack of patriotism but absolute inability to cope with the financial and psychological problems into which they are 99% sure to be plunged by the housing situation at the new location.

—And there is an alarming lack of understanding of the seriousness of this situation, both on Capitol Hill and in mobilization headquarters.

THIS IS WHY housing and rent control are major preoccupations of all the union legislative groups which have been meeting lately.

The CIO Legislative Committee devoted almost its entire last Legis-Letter to the question, and is urging all CIO internationals and councils to get on the ball about it at once.

Several of the internationals, including the Steelworkers, have called special legislative conferences and put this question at or near the top of the agenda.

The subject will be one of the main ones considered at the scheduled meeting of 700 or more labor leaders, called for Mar. 20-21 to air labor's beefs about the mobilization picture.

Said the Mar. 1 Legis-Letter:

"The real estate lobby is attempting to cash in all of its chips, and yours too, in amendments to the defense housing program pending before the House and the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate.

"First and foremost, they are seeking an increase in mortgage insurance that would permit them to raise the price of houses for sale by another $1,000.

"Secondly, they are seeking an amendment to end the low rent public housing program. After spending millions of dollars to halt, delay, or impede public housing city by city, they now charge that the program has failed. They have infiltrated local housing authorities, redevelopment agencies and city councils to defeat the program from within. This tactic was aided by timidity and hesitancy in the federal housing agencies.

"The housing bill reported out by the House Banking and Currency Committee on Feb. 27 is nothing less than a gravy train grab for the real estate interests.

"The Senate Banking and Currency Committee on Feb. 27 reported out S. J. Res. 39, extending the present Federal Rent Control Act through June 30, 1951. The whole question of rent control has been lagging around and has not received the early attention by this Congress to which it was entitled.

"As a result, the shortness of time remaining before the present law expires makes a temporary extension necessary until an adequate effective rent control law can be enacteed.

"Such an extension will not, of course, meet the accumulated problems resulting from the present ineffective act, does nothing about the need for recontrol in various areas, and offers no solution for the outrageous rent gouging in or near military establishments and in new communities. What is really needed is a truly effective rent control law at an early date."

The committee summed up CIO recommendations as follows:

1. Construction of as many homes as possible with available manpower and materials.

2. Top priority to construction of housing on military establishments and at least 100,000 units of low-rent public housing.

3. New civilian housing should go to those who need housing most.

4. Congress must enact a middle-income housing program so that workers not eligible for public housing may solve their housing problems.

5. For the duration of the emergency, Congress should enact an adequate rent control law effective in all areas of housing shortage.

2 Towns Recontrolled

Two New Jersey towns have found that rent decontrol doesn't work. The towns, Millville and Woodbine, asked, and got, Federal rent controls reinvoked after rents rose too high and too fast. Housing Expediter Tighe Woods reimposed federal ceilings, but will allow landlords to ask for a 15% rent hike if they have received none while the two towns were decontrolled.

'Equality Of Sacrifice' Is Urged By La. CIO

By JOHN CARMICHAEL

THE LOUISIANA CIO Council at its recent convention at New Orleans called on President Truman to give the working people of the United States an equal share in the planning and execution of the defense effort.

Delegates demanded that the president take the control of mobilization out of the hands of "big business, which is interested only in more and bigger profits."

"If we are to have equality of sacrifice, let's have it, and let's not have all of the sacrifice come out of the hides of the working people," a resolution passed unanimously by the convention said.

Assistant Secy. of Labor Robert T. Creasey warned that "there are some who have already raised a hue and cry against the time and a half payments under the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Public Contracts Act."

But, he declared, there is no necessity for the relaxation of such basic labor standards either in times of peace or in times of emergency.

John V. Riffe, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, told the delegates that a million new workers were organized in 1950, predicted that this record would be equalled or topped in 1951.

R. J. Thomas, assistant to CIO Vice President Allan S. Haywood, told the convention that labor must be recognized as a working partner—with an equal voice—in mobilization.

Father Vincent O'Connell, mediator in the recent sanitation workers strike in New Orleans, drew vigorous applause when he accused the city of "knowing absolutely nothing about labor relations."

Other speakers included A. T. Jones, vice president of the Communication Workers, John F. Lebus, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board; Fred J. Cassibry, attorney, and Darrell Smith, representing the CIO Political Action Committee.

Antoine J. Songy, of Reserve, La., president of Local 1124, United Packinghouse Workers, sugar division, was reelected president. Also reelected was Paul G. Fourcade, New Orleans, representative of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, treasurer.

New officers are Roger L. Travis, president of Shreveport Local 411, Communication Workers, and Roy E. King, trustee of the Local 201, Chemical Workers, recording secretary.

Federal Pay Raise Urged By CIO Unit

Federal workers should get at least a 20% pay increase, the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee was told March 7. The plea came from Richard E. Shoemaker, legislative representative of the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Shoemaker said the majority of government workers do not get enough to provide even a minimum standard of living, by the yardstick of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. He noted that the BLS found that to maintain a "modest" level for a family of four, a worker today must earn $3833 in Atlanta, $3789 in Los Angeles, $3779 in Pittsburgh and $3926 in Washington.

He said these rates are slightly above the average salary of federal workers. The entrance salary for federal classified service is $1510, he pointed out, which is less than 73c an hour, whereas the Fair Labor Standards Act calls for 75c an hour.

He also urged that the government meet the standards of private industry, provide time and a half for all overtime and Saturday, and double time for Sunday and holiday work. He asked that the present provision for taking compensatory time off at the "option" of the employe be abolished. In practice, he said, the employe, because of pressure from executives, has no "option." LPA

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer had the honor this past week of attending a fine tribute to a great labor man, Jack Kroll. The occasion was his 25th anniversary as manager of the Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the Cincinnati area. He was presented with a beautiful portrait as a token of the appreciation of those he has worked with and for. Those in attendance and many other well wishers wanted to thank Jack Kroll for the many things he has done on their behalf.

The writer addressed a Steelworkers' staff breakfast this past week in Buffalo, N. Y., which was attended by Dist. Dir. Joe Maloney and his staff. Later I met with the Executive Board of the Greater Buffalo CIO Council and addressed the council meeting in the evening. The meeting was presided over by CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson. It was well attended and was a splendid affair. The writer spoke on the issues that face the CIO in Washington, the seriousness of the wage and manpower problems facing the CIO and the American people. It was explained why the labor members of the Wage Stabilization Board were forced to quit.

Mobilizer Wilson seems to be the big fly in the ointment. After his recent conference with the President in Key West, Mr. Wilson misstated the facts. The CIO or labor in general has never asked for a voice in manpower allocations to the armed forces. Mr. Wilson also speaks of a "neutral body" having control over manpower allocation. Just where is Mr. Wilson's neutrality?? What does he mean by the term "neutrality"? He implies that the Dept. of Labor and Secy. Tobin are not to be considered a neutral body. Mr. Wilson's own neutrality evidently lies with the General Electric's sky-high profits. Where is the "neutral" body to control the excessive and gouging profits such as Mr. Wilson's own GE?

Our job is to bring the true facts before the American people. We must continue to strengthen our unions by more and more organizing. Through our organizing activities, we can more effectively bring the true facts to more and more American workers.

Food Prices 'Weight' Cut In New U. S. Index

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE BUREAU of Labor Statistics' cost of living index went up again between Dec. 15 and Jan. 15—and a million American workers protected by escalator clauses in their contracts received pay boosts of 5c an hour.

Appearance of the index, two weeks later than normal, marked the debut of the bureau's revision. It was published in two versions—the new and the old—and the significance was not immediately apparent.

On Dec. 15 the index stood at 178.8, old style. A month later it registered 181.5 old style and 181.6 new style. The bureau said the December figure under the new version would have been 178.8, and it figured the increase during the month at 1.5%. The increase under the old style readings was somewhat higher—1.73%. The increases, regardless of version were achieved before prices were "frozen" on Jan 25.

THE VARIOUS items of expenditure that are priced to determine changes in the index are assigned different weights. The change in weighting has caused the new figure to lag behind the old. This lag is larger than the January figures reveal, since the BLS added 1.3 points to the new index and not to the old as a correction for rents (based on higher prices charged for newly constructed rental units) up to January, 1950.

If it had not been for the addition of this 1.3 points, the new index would have lagged 1.4 points behind the old in the period from January, 1950, to January, 1951.

"The lag is concealed," the CIO Dept. of Research and Education said in a notice to research departments of international unions, "but indicates the probable comparative movement of the indexes in the future if food prices continue rising more rapidly than others."

The revision had been discussed for months within the BLS, which had the benefit of advice from a Labor Price Advisory Committee on which the CIO was represented by Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, CIO associate director of research; Sol Barkin, research director of the Textile Workers, and Nat Weinberg, Auto Workers' research director. The bureau rejected all of the committee's recommendations which did not agree with its own positions.

The principal changes are the addition of the 1.3 index points for rents—which many unions had already succeeded in having employers recognize in determining escalator wage adjustments—use of 1950 population figures in combining city indexes into a national index, and what the BLS called "modernization of the market basket of goods and services priced for the index to reflect postwar consumption and spending habits."

That meant changes in the relative importance, or weight, given the different groups in the index, such as food, apparel, etc., changes within each group, and the addition of substitute items.

THE WEIGHT given food, for instance, was changed from more than 42% of the average working man's family's spending to about 34%. On the other hand, the weight of the miscellaneous group was jumped from about 22% to 33%. This means that in future indexes, food will occupy a relatively smaller bulk than in the past.

Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education, was sharply critical of the revised index.

"It underestimates the actual rise in prices because alterations were made that are based on inadequate data and information," he said.

"The labor research committee recommended that the BLS wait to revise the index until data for 1951 became available. We made this recommendation because the pattern of expenditures for American families will obviously be different in 1951 than in the preceding two or three years.

"It will be different because consumer durable goods (refrigerators, vacuum cleaners, etc.) will not be available for 1951 and subsequent years to the same extent that they were available in the pre-Korean years.

"During 1951, families will be spending, as a result of this and rising food prices, more money for food and less money for consumer durable goods. Yet, the new index gives greater weight and importance to consumer durable goods expenditures and less weight and importance to food expenditures. This distorts the measurement of consumer prices.

"At a time when this index is being used extensively in escalator clauses in collective bargaining contracts, we feel that it is unwise and unnecessary—particularly in the light of inadequate information about the changing patterns of expenditures and the availability of consumer goods, and in the light of rising food prices—for the Dept. of Labor, at this time, to issue a new index."

MOST OF the workers who got a 5c an hour pay increase under escalator clauses in their contracts were members of the CIO Auto Workers. It was touch and go for a time if they would get 4c or 5c, but General Motors broke the ice by agreeing to use the old index figures plus a rent increase allowance. The others followed suit.

And well GM might, because a few days later it announced net profits in 1950 of $834,044,039—the greatest ever reported by any corporation in the history of the world and 27% higher than the year before. Earnings on common stock soared from $7.32 in 1949 to $9.35 last year.

Several thousand members of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers employed by GM and some other firms also got increases. The IUE-CIO contract with General Electric provides for an escalator clause adjustment based on the March 15 BLS index.

UAW members who got the increase viewed it as a dubious benefit, Pres. Walter P. Reuther advised Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), chairman of the Senate Labor and Welfare Committee, in a letter asking that the committee hold public hearings "on the problem of inflation and its relationship to defense mobilization."

Reuther told Murray that the UAW would much prefer to have the cost of living rolled back and controlled than to have the pay boost.

"Our union is prepared," he wrote, "if the cost of living is rolled back to the pre-Korean level, to accept a corresponding roll back in wages that have been increased during the last six months through cost of living escalator clauses."

THE NEWEST raise increased to 13c the total escalator clause pay boosts some 800,000 UAW members have received since last September, Reuther reminded Murray, "yet they would be better off and the Nation would be better off if the cost of living had been held down and they had not received those increases."

Food prices increased 2.6% during the month, more than those of any other category, the BLS said. It added the further bad word that preliminary reports indicate another 2% jump in the cost of feeding the family between Jan. 15 and Feb. 15.

And the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index went up in the week ended Mar. 6 by 2c to $7.27, just 9c short of the all-time high of $7.36 on July 13, 1948, and 22% above the pre-Korean level of $5.96.

General Motors' 1950 Profits Twice Those Of All Class I Railroads

The incredible profits made by General Motors in 1950 stack up as even more fantastic when compared to the net earnings of other wealthy corporations which it makes look like poor relations, the Associated Press discovered last week.

GM's $834,044,039 was more than all the Class I railroads in the courty earned—$786 million. Class I railroads are those with annual gross revenues of more than $1 million and include, to all practical purposes, every line in the country.

The GM net was more than double what American Telephone and Telegraph reported for 1950—$346,962,051.

It was slightly less than four times the $215,337,655 reported for last year by U. S. Steel, which is generally regarded as a financial behemoth. The CIO Steelworkers, taking a dim view of Big Steel's bookkeeping methods and its failure to include an estimated $19 million in something called "accelerated depreciation," (which the Internal Revenue Bureau will probably collect on) says the real figure should be $232,518,905, subject to final audit. But GM earned three times that figure and another $139 million to boot.

The automobile industry's second largest producer, Chrysler, thought it did pretty well when it reported a net of $127,876,071 for 1950. That's slightly more than one-sixth of what GM earned.

Standard Oil of Indiana by this time is probably ashamed to mention the $23,581,477 it earned in 1950—and GM shouldn't even be speaking to the largest private bank in the country, the Bank of America, which netted a comparatively measly $56,802,331.

A riffle through the World Almanac also yielded some interesting comparisons. In 1949, for instance, each of 16 states had fewer total bank deposits than what GM took home last year. Also in 1949, foreign trade (imports and exports) was greater with only three countries—Canada, Germany and the United Kingdom.

The total of all unemployment compensation paid jobless workers throughout the United States in 1949 was only about 2¼ times what GM earned last year, and no single state paid out anywhere near as much. All the farm buildings in each of 28 states were worth less in 1945, the last time they were appraised, than GM's 1950 net.

And GM's $834,044,039 would pay the cost—$1 a year—of sending the CIO News to every man, woman and child turned up by the 1950 U. S. Census (150,697,361) for seven years and eight and two-third months.

N.Y. State CIO Charges "Gang-Up" On Workers

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council last week charged Democrats and Republicans in the state with a "legislative gang-up on wage earners."

Pres. Louis Hollander, in a public statement, compared developments in the State Legislature with those in the nation's capital.

"At all levels," he said, "Big Business and its servants among lawmakers of both parties are attempting to misuse the mobilization program to make this the Century of Profiteering."

Three proposals which have been receiving favorable consideration in the Legislature were cited as examples of "catering to greed at the expense of the State as a whole." They are a new State rent control plan which permits increases of 15%, amendments to the unemployment insurance law through which $600 million of the reserve fund will be divided up among employers, and the New York City request for permission to jack the current 2 per cent city sales tax up to 3%.

Democrats and Republicans have been acting in concert openly to assure passage of the city sales tax legislation, the state CIO president pointed out. He charged Democrats with offering only "lip-opposition" to the rent control and unemployment insurance legislation.

"There has been no forthright effort on the part of the State Democratic leadership to block these destructive and demoralizing proposals," he said.

The Council also attacked the proposed State civil defense bill for placing reliance on "police state methods."

"Such powers as are prescribed in this bill are morally repulsive, unnecessary and will be completely ineffective in the defense of our free communities," the State CIO executive board resolved at a meeting in Albany.

The board listed, among major objections, provisions in the bill for conscription of civilian manpower, outright removal from office of elected officials, and possible compulsory arbitration.

"There are by no means adequate provisions to prevent abuse of these powers or to confine their use to periods of extreme emergency," it pointed out. "They could be used to break strikes and eliminate the source of any public protest; for political advantage; or to enforce settlement of any labor-management dispute on the State's own terms."

The resolution reiterated the CIO policy of working wholeheartedly with local, state and federal officials in civil defense programs.

"The basis of such programs," it emphasized, "must be careful planning, sound organization and inspired leadership together with the freely-expressed determination of the people—these are things which no government edict can provide."

In connection with this, Hollander stated that "present conduct of our legislators and mobilizers in domestic matters endangers our foreign policy and impedes the work of civil defense."

"Developments to date have tended to create confusion, mistrust and cynicism among people in all walks of life, including the young men who are being called to serve in our fighting forces," he said.

4-F Rise Cited In Aid To Education Plea

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) finds strong evidence of the need for federal aid to education in a study he made recently of draft rejection rates in the post-war period. Lack of such aid is weakening our military defense, he concludes.

The rejection rate under the Selective Service Act of September, 1948, has been 46% in the 19 through 25 age group, the Senator says. The rejection rate in the 18 through 25 groups during World War II was only 26%.

Actually, the picture isn't quite so bad, the Senator admits A large number of men previously classified 4-F were "rescreened" and some of them were actually rejected twice. Nevertheless, he says that "there is a distinctly greater percentage of rejections in the post-war period, pointing to the fact that our human resources for national defense are less adequate than they were during the war itself."

MEAT BOYCOTT was launched by CIO Steelworkers Local 1211 at Aliquippa, Pa., because prices went up and up and up in spite of the so-called "freeze." Here are wives of five members picketing a local market with signs calling on all housewives in the community to join in a strike against meat until prices come down within reach. The 10,000 members of the local have pledged themselves to do without meat until then, and meantime to substitute eggs, fish, cheese and beans. The meat strike was launched on the theory that organized consumers can do more to combat unfair prices than any freeze or ceiling imposed by the government. Several Aliquippa meat dealers think the union has the right idea. The strike is scheduled to continue indefinitely.

Industry's Solution: Bait Labor, Enjoin Strikes

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE BIG three industry associations last week made public their ideas of how to secure labor cooperation with the mobilization program and how to stabilize the economy.

Bait labor into striking, and then enjoin the strikes, they suggested.

Set up a tri-partite Wage Stabilization Board, they said: enforce a rigid wage formula; give the board no power to settle wage disputes, however, unless both parties agree in advance to abide by the decision; and by all means forbid the board to settle any "non-wage" matters on any basis.

Resulting wage strikes—and the industry boys were frank, even exultant, in predicting that there would be strikes under such a set-up—would be strikes against the government and should be handled by "existing machinery"—i.e. injunctions provided by the Taft-Hartley law.

Resulting non-wage strikes should also be handled by "existing machinery" i.e. injunctions under T-H.

TO MAKE their meaning even clearer, they said firmly and self-righteously that Eric Johnston, Economic Stabilization Administrator, had already gone too far when he softened the original wage freeze order somewhat, last month.

This proposal came from the National Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Joint Committee for the Business Advisory Council. It represented official industry reaction to Johnston's latest attempt to find a formula for labor management agreement on the scope and powers of a Wage Stabilization Board.

There has been no WSB since last Feb. 16. On that day the labor members resigned.

The United Labor Policy Committee, composed of representatives of CIO, AFL, the railway brotherhoods and the Machinists, has repeatedly set forth its reasons for approving these resignations: there must be equality of sacrifice, there must be labor participation in policy decisions, and whatever wage stabilization agency is set up must have the power to settle disputes.

MOBILIZATION czar Charles E. Wilson has maintained he doesn't know what the shooting is all about. He's asked to have a labor representative assigned to his office, he says, and that should be enough: last week he added that there's not much substance to the rest of labor's protest, in his opinion. (Such an invitation was belatedly issued, it's true, but ULPC knows window-dressing when it sees it.)

Johnston, Wilson's second-in-command on the economic front, has swiveled around in the middle.

Last week, here's what Johnston did, in between fruitless conferences:

—He refused to approve the 9c an hour wage increase agreed upon by the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the big meat packers, stating that it should be brought before the Wage Stabilization Board. (There isn't any such board, we repeat.)

—He said he wouldn't issue an order setting up a wage board, in the absence of any agreement between labor and management. That's up to President Truman, he explained.

—He said he wouldn't attempt any further revisions of wage policy at this time, or hold any further meetings with either labor or management groups.

This threw the problem squarely at the White House. President Truman, from Key West, caught it and tossed it back into the air. He announced appointment of a 17-man committee to advise him on mobilization problems. It's to consist of four men each from labor, industry and agriculture. The 17th man, who is to serve as chairman: Charles E. Wilson.

FROM the ULPC: silence, probably to be broken next week when, on March 20 and 21, unprecedented meetings of over 700 representatives of the participating unions will be held in Washington to hash over the entire problem.

From the CIO Executive Board: a resolution of full support for the ULPC. (See text elsewhere on this page.)

From individual labor leaders and local unions: a flood of detailed and indignant explanations of their position, on the radio, on television, and in the press.

And from industry, the blind-alley policy statement reported at the beginning of this story.

WHILE ONE group of industry spokesmen was drawing up these proposals, another group was meeting with the Office of Price Stabilization, registering objection to any proposals for price roll-backs, and demanding price concessions right and left.

One small concession to labor's position came with the announcement that Frank Graham, ex-chairman of the War Labor Board, ex-Senator from North Carolina, and ex-President of Univ. of North Carolina, had been appointed to head up an Office of Defense Manpower Administration within the Labor Dept. The appointment was announced by Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin.

But Wilson remained in control of manpower policy.

MEANWHILE there were these developments on the economic front:

—The Dept. of Commerce reported that, for the first time since last February, there had been no increase in factory wages.

—Signs appeared that retailers were overstocked and that towering prices were bringing consumer resistance: the Commerce Dept. reported that retail inventories were up 24% over a year ago and that there had been a sharp drop in installment buying.

—The Dun and Bradstreet wholesale food price index temporarily stayed where it was—just 9c short of the all-time high recorded on July 13, 1948. (Last week, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported food prices had jumped 2.6% between Dec. 15 and Jan. 15, and predicted another 2% jump between Jan. 15 and Feb. 15.)

—The Defense Production Administration announced it had approved tax benefits for industrial expansion costing $2.7 billion.

Actions Of United Labor Policy Committee Win Approval Of CIO Executive Board

THE TEXT OF THE resolution in which the CIO Executive Board endorsed the policies and actions of the United Labor Policy Committee follows:

For many years, the CIO has urged the development of a unified working relationship among bonafied American labor organizations as a means of increasing the strength and effectiveness of our labor organizations on a wide variety of issues. Early in 1950, Pres. Philip Murray, in urging a greater degree of unified action among the great labor organizations of America, developed a strong foundation for joint action in achieving our common goals.

The United Labor Policy Committee, formed in December, 1950, has more than justified our belief in unified action.

The United Labor Policy Committee, through its statements and actions, has caught the imagination and won the support of American workers. It has created new and increasing respect for the viewpoints of our unions.

In three short months, the United Labor Policy Committee has demonstrated strength, effectiveness and an ability to set forth a constructive program for all the American people.

This committee has made it possible for practically every major group of free trade unions in America to join together in common endeavor. The long range effects of the United Labor Policy Committee's efforts to develop a national defense mobilization program, based upon equality of sacrifice and fair play, will long be appreciated by all Americans.

The United Labor Policy Committee's struggle to achieve a just and flexible wage policy affects the welfare of every citizen who works for wages or salaries. In leading a mighty crusade against inflation and for an effective economic stabilization program, free of big business control, the United Labor Policy Committee has become the leading voice of the consumer public.

The committee has sought to obtain labor participation at all policy-making levels of the mobilization agencies. It has attempted to obtain a clear-cut government policy on civilian manpower based on democratic and voluntary methods.

Despite valiant efforts, however, the United Labor Policy Committee has not yet succeeded in its attempt to obtain a stabilization program based on equality of sacrifice, or adequate labor representation in the mobilization agencies.

It was this failure to achieve proper policies, adequate representation or even meaningful consultation on matters that involve the basic needs of the American people that prompted the United Labor Policy Committee, after lengthy consideration, to recommend the withdrawal of the handful of labor representatives from their posts and advisory committees in the defense set-up.

The Executive Board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations wholeheartedly endorses the action of its officers in helping create the United Labor Policy Committee, composed of the CIO, the American Federation of Labor, the Machinists, and the Railway Labor Executive Association.

The CIO Executive Board fully supports the CIO's five members of the United Labor Policy Committee in endorsing the committee's policies and actions.

The CIO Executive Board hails the United Labor Policy Committee for the leadership it has given in labor's fight for a fair defense mobilization program; and it pledges the full support of the CIO in carrying forward this program of the American people for equality of sacrifice in this period of national emergency.

Johnston Turns Down Raise Negotiated By Packing Union

ECONOMIC Stabilizer Eric Johnston last week turned down the 9c an hour wage increase agreed upon between the CIO Packinghouse Workers, the AFL Meat Cutters, and the major meat packing companies, leaving the unions no alternative but to strike Mar. 25, when the present wage agreement expires.

The CIO Executive Board voted full support to the workers, both AFL and CIO, "in their fight to secure for themselves and their families the fruits of their collective bargaining."

Johnston said he would not approve the increase, although he had the power to do so, because he believed it should be submitted to the Wage Stabilization Board.

Commented the CIO board: "The fact is that there is no such board (WSB) currently in existence. It is obviously unfair that the packinghouse workers' negotiated wage increase should be used as an instrument in an attempt to compel acquiescence in the establishment of a board which does not possess power to adjudicate labor disputes and which does not have an equitable wage formula."

Johnston gave his answer to a 200-man CIO delegation, headed by Packinghouse Workers' Pres. Ralph Helstein. They had come to Washington in good faith to present their arguments in person.

AT a Washington news conference Helstein charged that Johnston "has decided to use the packing industry and its workers as a pawn in an attempt to force the United Labor Policy Committee to accept the conditions which industry is seeking to dictate in the current mobilization program."

He pointed out that the price side of Johnston's office "is acting regularly and quite efficiently to lift ceilings and raise the prices of the things the people of this nation must buy."

"But when a group of underpaid workers with conceded equities on their side is waiting patiently for Mr. Johnston to approve a wage increase which they need to meet those rising prices, Mr. Johnston has seen fit to evade his responsibility," he added.

Helstein further noted that with the Mar. 25 deadline running out "Mr. Johnston will have to accept the responsibility for a strike in the packing industry."

HERE ARE A FEW of the 200-man delegation from the CIO Packinghouse Workers' locals who met at Washington to condemn the refusal of Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston to approve a 9c an hour wage boost which the packers had agreed to give. UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein (standing right) called Johnston's action "appeasement of big business at the expense of the packinghouse workers." The union plans to strike after Mar. 25 unless the agreement gets government approval. The CIO board voted the union full support.

Action Taken On Variety Of Issues

Board Endorses ULPC, OK's Talks On ILO Return

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE CIO'S 43-man Executive Board last week received from Pres. Philip Murray a complete report on labor's effort to win a fair wage stabilization program and improvement in the nation's mobilization policy.

During the course of a one-day meeting, the board adopted a variety of resolutions on major issues affecting those programs.

But, with the United Labor Policy Committee set for a major conference of union representatives from all parts of the country on Mar. 21, the CIO board decided not to make public its resolutions on such items as wage stabilization, prices, manpower and labor participation in the defense program.

These resolutions will be forwarded to the United Labor Policy Committee as formal CIO policy recommendations.

In a series of other actions, the board voted:

1. To give full support to the CIO Packinghouse Workers in their effort to get approval of a 9c wage increase won on Feb. 8 in negotiations with major meat packing companies.

2. To extend full endorsement and support to the ULPC—representing CIO, AFL, railroad brotherhoods and machinists. The ULPC, the board said, "has more than justified our belief in united action."

3. To urge speedy enactment by Congress of the International Economic Development Program—an expansion of the President's Point Four Program. Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, who heads the CIO Intl. Committee, represented CIO on the Intl. Development Advisory Board which recently issued a major report on foreign economic aid as a means of helping democracy.

4. To authorize the CIO's officers to discuss with the Dept. of Labor the question "of renewing our participation in the work of the Intl. Labor Organization."

5. To hail creation of the Inter-American Regional Organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The board said the new grouping, established at Mexico City in January, "will provide a rallying point for inter-American free trade unionism." It predicted the ICFTU affiliate would help build unions throughout Latin America.

6. To protest bitterly the action of Peron's totalitarian regime in Argentina in forcing the closing of "La Prensa," one of the great newspapers of the western hemisphere. The board pledged support for efforts—through the United Nations or in the United States—to re-establish a strong free press in Latin America.

The meeting was the board's first since the CIO Convention in Chicago last year.

This week, the CIO and other groups in the ULPC have scheduled a round of meetings to rally public sentiment against the soaring cost of living and to develop strength for more effective laws and actions against rising prices.

The ULPC meets Mar. 19. On Mar. 20, the CIO and AFL will hold separate meetings in Washington on the subject.

On Mar. 21, a United Labor Conference will bring together some 700 or more union representatives from the states and cities of the country for a one-day meeting. Scheduled as speakers are Murray, AFL Pres. William Green and other leaders of the union organization in the ULPC.

The CIO statement on the ULPC recalled that it was an outgrowth of Murray's call for unity last April.

The board said the ULPC "has caught the imagination and won the support of American workers."

"It has created new and increasing respect," it continued, "for the viewpoints of our unions. In three short months, the ULPC has demonstrated strength, effectiveness and an abillty to set forth a constructive program for all the American people."

The board's decision to probe the possibilities of once again working within the Intl. Labor Organization—an affiliate of the United Nations — represented a major change in policy. In 1946, the CIO withdrew from the ILO with considerable bitterness, charging that it had been denied adequate representation.

But times have changed, the board indicated.

"In the light of the current international situation and of our present relationship to the ICFTU, and its affiliated organizations, the CIO Executive Board believes that our past practice requires reconsideration," the statement said.

The ILO holds numerous conferences in various parts of the world, and is dedicated to developing and raising governmental standards in such fields as industrial relations, workers' safety and health, etc. In addition, it holds special industry conferences that bring together workers, management and government officials concerned with the industry's specific problems.

The resolution on economic aid pointed out that "peace, democratic free institutions and human welfare" can be certain only within the framework of "an expanding world economy."

It hailed the report of the International Development Advisory Board as an indication that labor, management and other segments of the population can get together on constructive programs for the nation and the world.

The CIO resolution suggested that a new Overseas Economic Administration is needed to coordinate the work of various foreign aid agencies of the government, and it said that billions of dollars — from both public and private sources—are needed for long-time economic development in various parts of the world.

THE statement on La Prensa said the closing of that Buenos Aires democratic newspaper was "another dismaying incident in the march of dictatorship against democratic institutions."

Noting that La Prensa was one of the most influential papers in South America, the board said that it had defied the Peron dictatorship in Argentina by keeping a free editorial position.

The board charged that in moving against La Prensa, the Peron forces manufactured an "incident camouflaged as a collective bargaining dispute" to provide an excuse for police seizure of the publication.

Agenda Set For ULPC Sessions

Here is the agenda for the important labor meetings to be held in Washington Mar. 20 and 21 at the call of the United Labor Policy Committee:

On Mar. 20, the participating organizations will meet separately. The CIO meeting will be in Barker Hall of the YWCA, 17th and K Sts. N.W.

The joint session Mar. 21 will be in the Presidential Room of the Hotel Statler. Morning session opens at 10 a. m. with addresses by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green, who will co-chair the meeting.

Also at the morning session, AFL Secy.-Treas. George Meany will discuss prices and rents; CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey will talk about profits and credit controls; Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Machinists will speak on taxes, and Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers will discuss production.

At the afternoon session, George Leighty, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, will present United Labor's declaration. There will be supporting statements by members of the ULPC, followed by open discussion.

P. R. Pay Freeze Bar Urged

THE federal government was asked last week by the CIO not to apply the wage stabilization program to Puerto Rico on grounds that wages in that low-pay area ought to come up sharply.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Secy. Ernesto Ramos Antonini, of the Puerto Rican General Confederation of Workers, CIO, sent the plea in a letter to Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston.

Antonini—together with CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Tom Harris, CIO associate counsel—called on Johnston in Washington to emphasize the need for such exemptions for Puerto Rican workers.

The Murray-Antonini letter recalled that Puerto Rico was exempted from wage stabilization during the last war. It added:

"The levels of wages and salaries currently prevailing in Puerto Rico are grossly substandard, both in comparison with those in the U. S. and from the standpoint of enabling the workers to maintain a decent standard of life.

"The average prevailing wage in Puerto Rico is 36.7c an hour.

"The control of inflation does not require the freezing of substandard wages. The perpetuation of such wages harms rather than helps the mobilization effort."

Carey Calls Both Excise And Sales Tax Proposals Inequitable

EXCISE TAXES proposed by Secy. of the Treasury Snyder and the general sales tax proposal being promoted by the National Committee for Fair Emergency Excise Taxation were denounced last week as inequitable by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Ben C. Sigal, attorney for the CIO Electrical Workers, who presented Carey's statement, told the House Ways and Means Committee that Snyder apparently had selected arbitrarily the items on which he would impose additional taxes to bring in $3 billion revenue.

He quoted Snyder as saying that the reason he would increase taxes on such articles as beverages, tobacco, refrigerators and radios is that they are "less essential" or "use materials that are in short supply."

Carey charged that the secretary "made no attempt to secure from the National Production Authority information or advice regarding essentiality of products, or how scarce materials should be saved, or how extensive the savings should be.

"How, then, has Snyder decided what is essential? He has not stated any criteria. The Treasury Dept., so far as we know, has no special competence nor authority to make decisions in this area."

CAREY POINTED out that NPA has proposed that "a wide list of consumers goods, which include many of those listed by Snyder, may use materials at the rate of about 75-80% of the base period of January to June, 1950.

"For a number of products, which Snyder would presumably call 'less essential,' the NPA has prohibited use of copper and aluminum after Apr. 1. NPA has just now set up an office of Civilian Requirements, for the express purpose of seeing that civilians get necessary products when and where they are needed.

". . . Secy. Snyder does not propose to place taxes on a wide list of goods that NPA does consider non-essential, in terms of scarce materials."

The CIO secretary-treasurer said that excise taxes "will fall most heavily on those least able to pay—the low and moderate income families; and will fall with the least burden on those most able to pay."

Carey produced a table used at recent hearings before the Joint Committee on the Economic Report which showed how much of the income of various groups is paid in federal excise taxes at the present rate:

Income	Percentage Paid in Taxes
Under $1000	5.1%
From $1000 to $2000	4.3%
" $2000 to $3000	4%
" $3000 to $4000	4%
" $4000 to $5000	3.5%
" $5000 to $7500	3.4%
Over $7500	2.3%

Carey was equally vigorous in his attack on the general retail sales tax proposed by the National Committee for Fair Emergency Excise Taxation, which represents a number of large companies including General Electric, of which Mobilization czar Charles E. Wilson was president.

He said that it was interesting to note that companies supporting the committee "are primarily manufacturers. Can it be the manufacturers are fearful that they will be blamed for the price increase that will follow the imposition of a manufacturers' excise tax, since these taxes will, of course, be passed on to the retailer and the consumer? They think, perhaps, that if the tax is imposed at the retail level, the irritation of the consumer will be vented on the retailer, or on the federal government."

Carey also said that the increased price of goods necessitated by the imposition of excise taxes would ultimately result in decreased production with a corresponding decline in employment at a time when there is considerable lag in converting from civilian to defense production.

CAREY MADE a number of constructive proposals for increasing the tax revenue.

- Ending the income tax loopholes for the wealthy, such as the community property principle.
- Increased excise taxes on non-essential goods first, if excise taxes are necessary.
- Greater taxation of corporations because of their "staggering profits."

"We maintain," Carey said, "that since corporation income will continue to rise in 1951 due to increased volume and the lid on wages, the presently proposed $3 billion increase in corporation taxes will still leave corporations with about the same net earnings as they had in 1950.

"If there were a graduated scale of permissible net earnings on net worth, starting with say 10% for the largest corporations, and making allowances for the smaller ones, we believe that at least $7 billion in new revenue could be raised."

Labor's Withdrawal Is Used As Proof Of Democracy

THE WITHDRAWAL of American labor from the mobilization program is being used to good propaganda advantage by the Voice of America in its worldwide broadcasts — especially those beamed behind the Iron Curtain.

The Voice is citing the withdrawal as an evidence of labor's strength in the United States and of the freedom with which the citizens of a democracy can criticize their government.

"American unions are free and militant," it has said in broadcasts. "Even in the midst of crisis they insist on protecting the rights of their members and insuring equality of sacrifice in the national scene."

The broadcasts are tied in with propaganda that paints the United States as a really "progressive" country and Soviet Russia as the "blackest reactionary." Unions in the U. S. have the right to strike and exercise it, the Voice points out, while Soviet unions "not only fail to protect the worker's rights, but actually help the monopoly capitalist—the state—exploit him."

Labor Fights Another Monopoly Attempt

Its Opposition To Control Of Mobilization Machinery By Big Business Is Part Of Old Campaign For Greater Equality

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THERE WAS a boom and then a bust. Unemployment spread rapidly. Soup kitchens were established and bread lines were put into operation.

The Big Depression was on.

Many persons lost many things—jobs, homes, farms, businesses, bank accounts. But the most important thing lost was faith—faith in ourselves, faith in our ability to pull ourselves out of a hole.

Then the people went to the polls and elected Franklin D. Roosevelt.

FDR launched the New Deal. And he gave back to many of the people the faith they had lost.

He made mistakes, sure. But he started the nation on the road that led from depression.

Before many years had passed, business and industrial leaders whose hides had been saved by the New Deal began to condemn it and its leader.

They began charging that FDR was leading the country into socialism, that he was turning the nation over to labor—and that they weren't getting a fair deal.

It was in such an atmosphere that Robert H. Jackson, then assistant attorney general and now Supreme Court justice, went to Philadelphia late in December 1937 and made a speech.

Jackson declared:

"The only just criticism that can be made of the economic operations of the New Deal is that it set out a breakfast for the canary and let the cat steal it."

In this case the "cat" obviously was big business.

"THE UNVARNISHED truth is that the government's recovery program has succeeded nowhere else as effectively as in restoring the profits of big business," Jackson said. "Labor has had no such advance."

Four years after Jackson made these remarks the nation was plunged into a costly war—and now the nation is engaged again in conflict.

The Jackson comments are reprinted here because they shed light on another conflict—that between big business and labor.

AND THE light-shedding shows that labor has to fight constantly—and often with all its might—to get its fair share of the fruits of our economy.

It is engaged in such a struggle at the present time—and recently it has been getting a pushing around.

Big business hasn't sought to control the mobilization program either because of super patriotism or because it believes it has a monopoly on brains.

Its motives—if motives can be judged by actions—are obvious: big business wants to make sure big business gets more than an even break in the perilous days ahead.

Labor wants greater equality of sacrifice. It wants an end to war and preparedness profiteering.

Come hell or high water, depression or war, big business is always in there scheming for a bigger share of the dollar.

Big business is entitled to its fair share. But it has no right to more, especially in times of great national emergency.

It has no right to a monopoly on the mobilization decisions which effect everybody.

It had no right to attempt to use organized labor as "window dressing" so the public would get the idea that the nation's workers had a real voice in the defense program.

AND THE IRONY of it all is that those who are misusing the government in an effort to feather their nests were yelling loudly just a few shorts months ago against the government.

Somehow or other, what's going on now is reminiscent of conditions in 1937 which prompted Robert H. Jackson to lash out at big business' greediness.

THOSE INTERLOCKS

The Federal Trade Commission tells an important and shocking story in its 1950 report.

It's a story with which trade unionists should become familiar because it shows how big business is able to dominate certain segments of the economy through a little gimmick called "the interlocking directorate."

The interlocking directorate—or "interlock," as it is sometimes called—enables the same people to dominate or control businesses which are supposedly in competition with each other.

Some of the existing interlocks, FTC reported, violate the Clayton Anti-Trust Act but others are legal because of loopholes in the law.

Unquestionably FTC shed light on the high cost of meat when it reported:

"In the packing industry, for example, Armour & Co. was indirectly interlocked with the third and fourth largest packers; three of the largest meat packers had indirect ties with three of the largest bakers, while Armour and Swift had direct interlocks with equipment manufacturers."

The FTC report showed interlocks exist in many important fields, including steel, food processing, electrical manufacturing, tire making and petroleum.

And it should be recalled that those who set up the interlocks are the same people who make those fiery speeches in favor of "free enterprise."

★ ★ ★

LABOR SHOULD BACK CHANGES

Organized labor and all consumer groups should throw their support behind a campaign to bring an end to interlocking directorates which restrict competition—because it's the consumer who pays through the pocketbook when competition dies.

Chairman Mead of FTC recently told a House committee that legislation designed to crack down on interlocks was being drafted.

He said such legislation is urgently needed not only in the present emergency but from the long-range view of strengthening the anti-monopoly laws. And Mr. Mead was right.

Big business must not be permitted to use the mobilization program to gain greater control over our economy. It must not be permitted to hog defense orders so that small business will be crowded out of the picture.

There is much to indicate this is exactly what big business will do unless the public prevents it.

Men recruited from big business and big finance completely dominate the Washington mobilization set-up. Labor and other groups have been denied an effective voice in defense policy making.

Any way you look at the situation you come up with the same "answer."

The group which publicly champions free, competitive enterprise and cuts its throat privately is in the saddle in Washington. It's yelling that everybody should pitch in and make the mobilization program work.

Yet it's keeping it from working efficiently because of its arrogant attitude.

McCarthyism Doesn't Terrify One School Board

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

ORCHIDS TO the Baltimore school board and scallions to the one in Washington. Both faced the test raised by the McCarthy hysteria. The school board in the nation's capital flunked. The Baltimore board scored 100%.

The Baltimore action is cheering because it involved Owen Lattimore, the man McCarthy accused of pro-Communism. And it was McCarthy who had a big hand in the defeat of Sen. Millard Tydings in Maryland, with his cry that Tydings' investigation of the McCarthy charges was a whitewash. The McCarthy technique of smear, insinuation, guilt by association, fake pictures, and outrageous charges helped beat Tydings.

Lattimore, who is a professor at Johns Hopkins Univ. in Baltimore, was invited to address a high school assembly. The Americanism committee of the local American Legion rushed to the City Council with a resolution.

The resolution was a recommendation to the school board that Lattimore be barred. The council argued for three hours, and passed the resolution, 13 to 6. The school board told the city fathers to go fly a kite.

THE SCHOOL board went on record in a resolution that is a model of its kind. It said: "The individual members of the school board have different ideas about the conduct of the investigation of Mr. Lattimore by the Senate, about the charges which have been made against him, and about the positions which he has taken.

"But we are unanimously of the opinion we could not prohibit the meeting. We believe it is one of the functions of the public schools to train their students to hear all sides of a question, to discriminate and decide — with guidance from their duly appointed and responsible teachers."

Commented the Washington Post: "There is no semblance of Americanism in condemning a man on the basis of unsubstantiated charges. And it has never been an American trait to silence dissident or critical opinions. The Baltimore school board's conduct is a heartening reminder that the spirit of fair play is still very much alive among Americans who practice Americanism without making a profession of it."

So the Baltimore school board passed the test of Americanism. How did the Washington school board do?

The principal and assistant principal of Cordozo high school invited Pearl S. Buck, Nobel prize winner, to speak. When Superintendent Hobart M. Corning found out, he cancelled the invitation. He acted because Mrs. Buck's name appeared in the files of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

NOW THE committee itself has pointed out that these files are "unevaluated"; that is, mention of a name in the files does not mean that any investigation of that person's loyalty has been made.

In the uproar that followed, it was discovered that others had been barred by Corning, for the same reasons. The others included Marquis Childs, noted columnist; Dr. A. Powell Davies, pastor of All Souls Unitarian church; Dr. Charles H. Thompson, dean of the graduate school of Howard Univ., and Dr. Buell G. Gallagher, special consultant in the U. S. Office of Education.

That smelled so bad that the Washington school board subsequently ruled that the House committee files would no longer be used as final proof of a speaker's fitness.

But Dr. Corning was not through. The two Cardozo school officials who had originally invited Mrs. Buck were reprimanded "severely." Dr. Corning notified both teachers that their efficiency ratings for the year were being reduced. Their sin?

They had invited Mrs. Buck without first clearing with Dr. Corning's office. This, he said, was "conduct unbecoming a public official," was "prejudicial to good order," and that "further disobedience will be considered insubordination and cause for suspension or dismissal."

Dr. Davies and Childs later were permitted to speak at a teachers' college in Washington. "Let us stop acting like commissars," said Dr. Davies about Corning's threat to the teachers.

That's what goes on in Iron Curtain countries, he pointed out. As to the House Un-American Activities Committee, and the Washington school board, Dr. Davies said, "What are they afraid of? Let there be free and open discussion. Let our young people know what a weak case our enemies present."

CHILDS SAID it was "a profound insult," to suggest that Americans be forbidden to hear certain ideas. We must work constantly against the theory that "papa knows best, papa being an all-wise state or an all-wise ruling clique," he said.

Dr. Gallagher said "freedom flourishes only when there are stout hearts to defend it and consciences sensitive to respect it. Academic freedom, the right to teach truth and pursue it, derives from the student's right to learn. Holding back the truth, a timid teacher robs his students. Or, denying the demands of integrity, the irresponsible teacher leads his students in error."

That, and not McCarthyism, is in the best American tradition.

His 'Boys' Always Received Top Priority

HE WAS A broad-shouldered, slightly stooped Negro with extremely large hands and a thatch of white hair.

He had a friendly manner, a big smile and a rumbling voice but he was a quiet man.

Nobody paid much attention to him when he became a CIO council delegate.

He would come into the room just before the meeting started, head for a chair in his favorite corner, speak to friends around him and then take his seat.

He listened attentatively to what was going on for several months but refrained from joining in the discussions.

SOME DELEGATES thought the man—whom we shall call George—was a bit stupid merely because he was so quiet

They began to change their minds, however, when he engaged in his first floor discussion.

He spoke briefly and to the point—and then sat down.

As time went on he became more talkative at meetings. But his long suit was asking pointed questions.

He'd usually rise to his feet and say something like, "I'd like to ask some questions and get some information. I want to get everything straight in my mind so I can report to my boys back at the plant."

The council president, who had ignored George at first, became interested in him after a few months had passed.

GEORGE, HE learned, had received very little formal education and had drifted around from job to job for years.

He had been a drifter until he went to work in a small plant at about the time the CIO started organizing his industry.

George thought a union would be a good thing and so he helped sign up his coworkers.

When the union was established George was elected president—and for the first time in his life he felt responsibility sitting heavily on him.

He also felt inadequate for the job.

So he started asking questions about unionism. He'd "pump" anybody who could give him information.

Although his reading ability was limited he waded through considerable printed union material.

Then, when he thought he was fitted for the job, he asked his union to elect him as a council delegate.

THE COUNCIL president, after learning this story, decided George was a man slated for advancement in the union field.

At a meeting a short time later he appointed George to a minor committee. George rose to his feet and politely declined.

A month or so later the same thing happened again.

The president went to George after the meeting and asked him why he had refused appointment.

"My boys out at the plant need me pretty bad right now, so I've got to give all my spare time to them," he said.

"Some day—if you ask me—I'll accept a job with the council, but not right now."

NEARLY A YEAR later George called on the union president and said he'd like to get really active in council work.

"I'd like to run for the board of directors if you think I could do the council some good," he said.

The president expressed his delight and then asked:

"What made you decide to ask me about this?"

"Well, it's this way," George said. "I worked mighty hard to keep that union of mine going and to get some officers who could really do a job.

"I've got a good vice president now and we've just signed a good contract at the plant. My boys are in good shape now, so I'll have some time for the council. Couldn't do it before because my boys always come first."

And George was elected. A. L. S.

Professor Hits AMA Fight On Medical School Aid

THE BALLYHOO let loose by the American Medical Association over the $500,000 it plans to spend for medical education has been long and loud. Actually the amount is a mere drop in the bucket as far as meeting the tremendous need for such funds is concerned.

But so far the AMA's ballyhoo unfortunately has served its main purpose of blocking adequate federal aid, says Dr. J. H. Means, professor of clinical medicine at Harvard Medical School and chief of medical services at Massachusetts General Hospital.

In a letter publicized last week on the floor of the Senate by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), Dr. Means sharply criticized the AMA's "ominous" campaign against federal aid to medical schools, and accused the association of attempting to "control everything that has to do with medicine."

Murray used the text of Dr. Means' letter to warn Congress and the public of the misleading attack being waged on Senate bill 337, which is designed to provide emergency aid to medical schools and relieve the present critical shortage of nurses and doctors.

Murray told the Senators that Dr. Means "is one of America's most outstanding men of medicine—a registered Republican, I may say—but nonetheless a man who knows whereof he speaks when he talks of medicine and medical politics."

Murray received unanimous consent to have the letter printed in the Mar. 10 issue of the Congressional Record, where it appeared along with a number of letters from other leading medical authorities endorsing S. 337. Hundreds of organizations including the CIO and other labor groups that have endorsed the federal medical aid bill were also listed by the Senator.

"I KNOW IT TO BE a fact that a great majority of the medical deans of this country favor federal aid to medical education provided in S. 337," Dr. Means wrote. "The only opposition to this bill comes from the American Medical Association, the leadership of which, in my humble opinion, is amazingly benighted.

"The association has lately made a great ballyhoo over its appropriation of half a million dollars to aid medical education, which, of course, would be but a drop in the bucket, and has been largely responsible up to now in blocking government aid of an adequate magnitude."

DR. MEANS then referred to the failure of the AMA to give its funds to the National Foundation for Medical Education, Inc., a voluntary independent agency set up under the leadership of Herbert Hoover and several university presidents to support medical education in the U. S. Although it is unlikely, Dr. Means said, "that any private source can do the whole job," he considered the AMA's attitude unfortunate.

"Having set up a fund of half a million dollars, and uttering some promise of getting more, instead of doing the logical thing and turning this over without restriction to the National Foundation for Medical Education, Inc., it set up its own foundation which it can completely control," he added.

Dr. Means said this setup looks "like an effort on the part of the AMA to control medical education. The AMA would like to control everything that has to do with medicine—how medical care is to be provided, how students are to be educated, and how education is to be financed.

"It has recently established a junior AMA, by means of which it is trying to get control of the thinking of medical students, and indoctrinate them along AMA lines while they are in their most malleable phase. I regard this as rather ominous. I don't consider the medical profession of the United States and the AMA as synonymous, and I think that under AMA leadership the public relations of medicine are rapidly deteriorating."

Univ. Of California Loses 110 Scholars Because Of Blanket Loyalty Oath For Faculty

At least 110 scholars, "among them some of the illustrious minds of our generation," have been lost to the Univ. of California because of the regents' requirement that faculty members sign a blanket loyalty oath, the university's Committee on Academic Freedom reported last week.

The number includes 26 dismissed, 37 who resigned in protest against the regents' decisions and actions, and 47 who were approached to take jobs on the university faculty, but declined.

Fifty-five courses have been dropped from the curriculum.

The figures were cited in a 59-page booklet issued as a preliminary report to the university's Academic Senate on "The Consequences to Date of the Abrogation of Tenure of This University."

Blueprint For Monopoly

Interlocking Directorates Help Profit Takers, But Are Not Free Enterprise

By GERVASE N. LOVE

BIG BUSINESS and its spokesmen often do a lot of straight-faced prattling about what they call "competition" and its manifold benefits. But the chart at the right indicates that "competition" is strictly a word in the dictionary so far as big business is concerned, and that the benefits aren't always passed on to the customers.

The chart shows the interlocking directorates, direct and indirect, that in 1946 involved the "Big Four" of the electrical machinery industry—General Electric, alma mater of Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson; Westinghouse, Western Electric and RCA. It was taken from the report of the Federal Trade Commission on interlocking directorates recently submitted to Congress by Chairman James M. Mead.

How Interlocks Work

Every corporation has a board of directors which is supposed to make policy and major decisions on a variety of matters. When the boards of two corporations include one or more common directors, the interlock is direct.

When directors of two corporations meet on the board of a third company, usually in an allied field, the interlock is indirect. The usual effect of a direct interlocking directorate between two firms in the same industry is to reduce or eliminate competition, restrict markets, increase prices and profits, and make the customer pay, as usual, through the nose. The same effect is often attained when the interlock is indirect.

In practice, directorates interlock through competitors, potential competitors, customers and possible customers, suppliers and financial institutions, the FTC reports.

What Lines Mean

What all the lines on the chart mean is told in a few words in the report.

"Directors of these corporations (the Big Four)," it says, "came together on the boards of six of the country's largest commercial banks—Chase National Bank, Guaranty Trust Co., First National Bank of Chicago, Bankers Trust Co., Chemical Bank & Trust Co. and Mellon National Bank & Trust Co.; of two of the largest life insurance companies—New York Life and Equitable Life; of the country's largest utility—American Telephone & Telegraph; on the board of one of the country's leading railroads—New York Central, and of one of the country's largest industrials—Kennecott Copper."

The report points out that although the Big Four was specifically prohibited from maintaining direct interlocking directorates by a consent decree in 1932, they have continued to maintain indirect interlocks. Then it tells what this practice means:

"In an industry already highly concentrated in the hands of the major companies, such close relationships may seriously affect the competitive rivalries of the Big Four and oppose their combined strength against other smaller members of the industry.

"Indeed, multiple indirect interlocks may be just as effective in implementing anti-competitive activities among companies as direct interlocks."

The report cites specific interlocks, as the chart shows, between members of the Big Four and competitors, suppliers, customers in the same industry and potential customers in other industries, such as the railroads and financial houses.

Interlock 'Benefits'

So far as suppliers are concerned, the FTC indicated that it is not unreasonable to assume such connections result in favorable prices and allocations. A relationship through directors with customers or potential customers may result in more ready access to a market. A relationship with a financial institution may mean favored treatment in financing and, sometimes, pressure on other firms to boost sales or to yield other favorable treatment.

"Significant interlocks existed between electrical machinery companies and financial institutions," the report comments.

"The Big Four electrical machinery maintained especially close relationships with the larger metropolitan banks. In fact, only one other important electrical machinery company, aside from the Big Four, maintained interlocks with more than one bank. Several interlocks existed between the large electrical machinery companies and the large insurance companies."

The FTC reports that the "pattern of interlocking relations among the Big Four electrical manufacturers overshadows other interlocks within the industry, both because of the predominant position occupied by the companies and because of the historical record of their collaboration."

"Their connections in 1946, however, were of an indirect character and thus less subject to legal remedy," it continues.

The report also shows how the Big Four dominates the industry.

"In 1946 the combined assets of these four manufacturers totaled $2070 million and their sales totaled $2130 million," it said.

"The aggregate assets for the next 49 electrical machinery companies totaled $880 million, or only 97% of the assets of the largest manufacturing company, General Electric. The aggregate sales of the 44 largest companies below the Big Four amounted to $1295 million, or 1% more than the combined sales of the two largest companies, General Electric and Westinghouse."

Serving Two Masters

The FTC has some pertinent comment on the responsibilities of a director who serves two or more companies.

"An individual who is a member of more than one board of directors cannot divide his personality into unrelated segments," it observes.

"He would be derelict to his responsibility if in two different boards of directors he supported policies each of which would tend to defeat the course of action he had recommended or seen adopted in the other company.

"Hence, wherever an individual serves on the boards of two or more companies that have interests related to each other, his duty as a director is necessarily to harmonize those interests so far as possible. If he cannot do so he can fulfill his duty to both companies only by withdrawing from further participation in the business at hand.

"A director of two competing corporations cannot in good conscience recommend that either shall undertake a type of competition which is likely to injure the other. A director of two or more corporations that are respectively buyer and seller of the same commodities or services cannot in good conscience recommend that either concern prefer unrelated sources of supply or customers instead of the other company in which he is interested, nor that either concern press to the limits its ability to strike a good bargain at the expense of the other.

Lessened Rivalry

"A director who is on the board of an industrial company and a financial institution cannot in good conscience encourage the latter to finance expansion by competitors of the former which may jeopardize the former's prosperity; nor can he in good conscience encourage the industrial company to obtain its credit through other channels.

"Thus the inherent tendency of interlocking directorates between companies that have dealings with each other as buyers and sellers, or that have relations to each other as competitors, is to blunt the edge of rivalry between corporations, to seek out ways of compromising opposing interests, and to develop alliances where the interest of one of the corporations is jeopardized by third parties."

1/Mr. Young is a former director of General Electric Co.

Chairman James M. Mead of the Federal Trade Commission, when he recently testified before the monopoly subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee, said "the principal weaknesses" of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act are:

FIRST, IT CAN be so easily evaded as to be scarcely worth enforcing. The law is violated if a director of one large concern is also a director of its large competitor. However, there is no violation of the law if one concern's president is director of the other, or if the president of one company is sales manager of the other.

The result is that when an interlocking directorate is questioned, a mere change of form without change of substance is sufficient to bring about technical compliance with the law. For example, several years ago the board of directors of General Steel Castings contained the president and two vice presidents of American Steel Foundries, all of whom were also directors of the latter company and also contained the chairman of the board and the president of Baldwin Locomotive, both of whom were also directors of that company.

When the Dept. of Justice questioned these interlocking directorates, the directors from American Steel Foundries and Baldwin withdrew from the General Steel Castings board. Their place was taken by two vice presidents and the comptroller of American Steel Foundries and two vice presidents of Baldwin Locomotive.

But since none of these officials was a director in any company but General Steel Castings, the new arrangement satisfied the requirements of Section 8 of the Clayton

FTC Chair

Act. There is no reason to believe tha closeness of the executive and policy-ing ties between the three companies in any way reduced by the change.

SECOND, THE present law is appli only to direct interlocks as d guished from indirect interlocks. The rect interlock is by far the most com type of interlocking relationship a competitors. Such an indirect relatio is established when two or more com tors have directors who sit jointly on board of directors of a third company.

For example, Standard Oil Co. of Ind Standard Oil Co. of California, Gulf Corp., and Continental Oil Co. all ha rectors on the board of the Chase Nat Bank. Similarly, the Texas Co., Shell U Oil Co., and Tidewater Associated Oi all had directors on the board of Ce Hanover Bank and Trust Co. of Chi and Standard Oil Co. of Indiana and Texas Co. each was represented on board of Continental Illinois National and Trust Co. of Chicago.

The significance of such indirect i locking relationships differs from cas case. It tends to increase when more petitors are represented on the same b when each competitor has more than representative on the board, and when same competitors are represented tog on the boards of more than one com It also tends to increase when the com on whose board the various competitors

Interlocking Directorate Looks Like

presented has a business interest in the rms of the competition between the rep- sented companies.

When several competitors are represented the board of a bank which finances them all, or of a large buyer of their products, or of a large supplier of their raw materials, there is a strong probability that the indirect relationship will impair competition.

Decision on major policies of purchase and sale by the directors of the company in whose board the interlock takes place can scarcely fail to produce a working understanding as to the respective shares of that company's business to be enjoyed by the competing customers or suppliers from which the directors come.

THIRD, THE present law makes no attempt to prevent injuries to competition that may be produced through interlocking relationships between suppliers and customers. Interlocking directorates which connect a supplier with his customer are common.

Their typical purpose appears to be to create a two-way preferential relationship which gives the customer assurance of supplies on favorable terms and gives the supplier assurance of an outlet for his products. In other words, such an interlock has a purpose similar to that of vertical integration. Like vertical integration, it may be sometimes harmless and sometimes seriously harmful.

So long as neither the supplier nor the customer has an important part of the total market, it is probable that the vertical relation between them will not jeopardize the opportunity for other concerns to sell or obtain goods. However, if the supplier is an important concern the loss of equal access to his products may be harmful to competition among the customers, and if the customer is an important concern the loss of the sales outlets which he controls may be harmful to competition among the suppliers.

If a large supplier and a large customer work out a preferential trading relationship, there is a strong likelihood that other large suppliers and large customers will find it expedient to do the same thing in self-protection; and when such dancing-partner arrangements become general the effect is not only to give each of the dancing partners a good deal of relief from competitive pressure but also to make it difficult for small companies that have not been able to find dancing partners to have any share in the party.

Vertical interlocks are particularly serious when one of the interlocked companies is a public utility that has a duty to serve all customers without discrimination. The establishment of preferential relationships with such a utility defeats one of the basic purposes of public utility regulation.

THE INTERLOCKING directorate report shows the prevalence of indirect interlocks between competitors and of interlocks both direct and indirect between suppliers and customers. On the basis of this report I am convinced that Section 8 of the Clayton Act as now written would cover only a small part of the problem of interlocking directorates even if it were effective in preventing direct interlocks between competitors.

Section 8 should be amended to take care of the inadequacies which have come to light.

Patman: Support For CCG Is Support For Fascism

SOMEBODY in the Committee for Constitutional Government made the mistake of sending Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) an appeal for a contribution to a $150,000 fund to defend Dr. Edward S. Rumley, the committe's operating head.

It was a mistake because Patman has entered into the Congressional Record some of its most searing pages, with his vigorous denunciations of the CCG, which he has called a Fascist group, and of Rumely, whom he apparently regards as an unmitigated menace to the United States.

He entered more of them this time.

The appeal is based on the fact that Rumely goes on trial in Washington Apr. 12 on a charge of contempt of Congress. He was cited by the House Lobby Investigating Committee, headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), because he refused to tell the source of the funds that paid for the big business, anti-labor, anti-Fair and anti-New Deal brand of reaction the CCG has been spewing out over the country in its publications. The appeal went to all members of Congress.

PATMAN opened by reading from the card the CCG claim "at the risk of imprisonment he (Rumely) tries to uphold for you and all citizens your basic right to hear all sides through a free press." The other side of the card, he said, claimed among other things that Rumely was indicted "for discouraging Red activities, exposing socialism, and refusing to reveal names of book purchasers." (The books,, paid for by big business and tory Republicans, went to colleges, libraries, schools, churches, clergymen, etc.)

He read that the appeal was for funds not only to defend Rumely but to enable the committee "to expand its efforts against inflation, to protect the value of all bank balances, mortgages, dollar bonds, social security funds and insurance policies."

"If you have already given your full 1951 support," it concludes, "please obtain one or more subscriptions from others."

Patman charged that the latter part of the card "is a direct solicitation of corporate funds."

"If you will notice," he said, "the language is not even subtle where it says: 'If you have already given your full support.'

"WHAT DOES that mean? The amount that is tax deducted. 'Please obtain one or more subscriptions from others.'

"In other words, as heretofore, corporate funds have been used to promote fascism in this country; and whenever you support the Committee for Constitutional Government headed by and run by, organized by and operated by this Edward A. Rumely, you are supporting the spearhead of fascism in the United States."

Patman declared Rumely was not indicted, as he claims, for distributing John T. Flynn's reactionary book, "The Road Ahead."

"He was indicted for refusing to divulge to Congress," Patman went on, "information as a propagandist, lobbyist and former convicted German spy, information that all American citizens have heretofore voluntarily divulged and which in the event of refusal they were compelled to divulge.

"The public press has done a magnificent job exposing and properly building up sentiment against communism in this country.

"However, the press has been strangely silent on the recent rise of the Fascist movement and the efforts made by strong influential people to make fascism the only alternative for communism, as occurred in both Germany and Italy. It is important that we not only crush communism but that we also keep an eye on and crush the other devastating enemy approaching us from the other direction in the form of fascism.

"Any American citizen can very quickly find out who Edward A. Rumely is; he is the spearhead of the Committee for Constitutional Government; he is the sponsor of the publication 'Spotlight' mentioned on the card; he is the person who was convicted immediately after World War I for trading with the enemy, for violating the law against trading with the enemy in wartime.

"BUT THE testimony in this case against Rumely discloses that he was guilty of treason against the American Government although he was not prosecuted for treason. He was convicted for illegally trading with the enemy.

(Rumely was convicted in 1920 of buying the New York Mail during the war with German funds, ostensibly to use as a German propaganda organ. His conviction was upheld by the Court of Appeals, and the U. S. Supreme Court refused to review it. He was subsequently pardoned.)

"Any person interested in knowing who this fellow is who is trying to direct thought control in the Nation, including a change of recognized school and college textbooks and warping the minds to his viewpoint, of students, teachers and professors, should read what the Federal courts of our Nation have said about him and found him guilty of."

Patman gave a detailed account of the 1920 trial, showing that Rumely had able attorneys. The only longer trial he knows of, he said, was that of the 12 Communist leaders. Why, asked Patman, despite the country's fight against communism, have'nt "Rumely and his gang" said a word against fascism? He answered his own question:

"Why? Because it is the Fascist group that they favor. I called them a Fascist group six years ago on the floor of this House and presented proof then; I have done so a number of times since.

"IT IS ONLY by the boldness of such people as this that they get by with it. Such arrogance I have never known in my life, that they would try to direct a national organization, sponsored by a man who has been convicted by a jury under our system, and whose conviction has been affirmed by the highest courts of our land.

"I say something should be done about such propaganda as that, appealing for $150,000 to help defend a man like that. For what, do they say? For refusing to divulge the information to a congressional committee . . .

"I again say I have never known such boldness and arrogance demonstrated by any person in the United States before."

Murray Embarrassed By Quote In CCG Ad

CIO Pres. Philip Murray underwent probably the greatest embarrassment of a lifetime when the neo-fascist Committee for Constitutional Government quoted him in an appeal for funds that took up a full page in the Wall Street Journal of Mar. 14.

The CCG wants the suckers to kick in $500,000 to stop inflation for entirely different reasons and by different means than Murray and the CIO. But that did not prevent it from including in its ad Murray's words:

"Inflation must be stopped. Inflation can be stopped—if we meet this major problem of the home front with the same boldness, intelligence and courage that our armed forces are showing in Korea."

Newark Study Shows Pay Lags Behind High Profits

NET PROFITS of the 10 largest firms in the Newark, N. J., area with which CIO unions have contracts increased an average of 289% between 1945 and 1949, according to a study prepared for the Essex-West Hudson (N. J.) CIO Council.

During the same period, the workers who made possible this fantastic increase in profits won wage hikes of only 44%, the study shows.

Equally significant, is the fact that that gross sales revenue of the 10 firms increased but 87% during the period. And one corporation, Worthington Pump & Machinery Corp., managed to eke out a 135% increase in net profits while its sales income dropped by 5%.

A table showing the relative net profits (after taxes) of the 10 firms and the gross (before taxes) increases in wages at each plant is shown in an adjoining column. The figures on profits and sales used in the study were taken from Moody's and Standard & Poor's financial manuals.

The study was undertaken to highlight, on the local level, the defense mobilization's failure to take into account "price gouging" and "profiteering" in "stabilizing" prices and wages, the council said.

"These words are not just propaganda bolts shot indiscriminately into the dark," it added in a statement releasing the study. "To the contrary, much evidence exists that such conditions not only exist but, in fact, flourish right in our own back yard."

IN DISCUSSING the fact that the net profits of the 10 corporations increased far out of proportion to wage boosts and advances in sales revenue, the report said:

"In view of the fact that management has been universally deploring its 'increased costs of operation'—citing such factors as increased material, labor and tax costs—it is now obvious that the higher rate of profits is reflected only because these 10 corporations have indulged themselves in a not inconsiderable amount of price gouging and profiteering."

The study also said:

"In its proper light, industry's rather persistent claim that labor is responsible for increased prices and the high cost of living now appears as ridiculous as it actualy is. Management has continually increased prices far above the commensurate percentage increase in costs caused by the wage boost.

"Even if we assume that prices must be raised because of wage increases—a false asumption as this report obviously demonstrates—it is apparent that management has used every conceivable opportunity to blame its workers for industry's profiteering schemes.

"Workers' wages have been left far behind by prices and profits in the current economic race. In terms of purchasing power, a worker today has made no gains whatsoever during the past five years.

"The future prospects for wage earners are gloomy. While the cost of living continues to zoom upward, wages are being frozen and workers are being forced to accept a completely disproportionate burden in the current emergency.

"The future prospects for corporations were never better. Profits earned and dividends paid by U. S. corporations in 1950 have broken every record in the financial history of the country. From every indication, 1951 will be still another record-breaking year."

Past Shows Workers Go Where Jobs Are

AMERICAN Labor is sufficiently adaptable to make whatever changes in occupation, industry or place of residence may be necessary for the defense effort, a fact book on manpower just published by the U. S. Labor Dept. indicates.

That conclusion is based on the amount of flexibility it showed in meeting the changing pattern of labor demand in both the World War II period and the reconversion era that followed.

"One out of every six workers who had civilian jobs in both December, 1941, and March, 1944," the study says, "was employed in a different industry in the latter period from the one in which he had been employed in the week preceding Pearl Harbor.

"Over 7 million workers made similar changes in their major occupational group over this period.

"In the year following V-J day, the return of a peacetime economy brought a new wave of industry and occupational shifts of workers.

"A heavy volume of migration accompanied the wartime and postwar changes in the economy. During the war, vast numbers of workers and their families poured into the shipbuilding and airplane centers of the West Coast and into the production areas of the Northern industrial states. The predominantly agricultural South and the Great Plains States provided the bulk of the migrants into other areas.

"In March, 1945, over 15 million persons in the civilian population were living in a different county from the one in which they had lived in December, 1941. Of these, 7.7 million were living in a different state.

"In the postwar period, continued large population movements across state and county lines have reflected the mobility that characterizes a substantial segment of the American people."

However, influences exist which tend to hamper the movements of workers, the fact book points out. The major factors it cites are "home ownership and family ties, on the one hand, and lack of adequate housing and community facilities." In addition, the "great extension of pension and seniority rights in recent years also raises special problems in the transfer of workers from non-defense to defense jobs," it says.

It notes that about 5.5 million workers were covered by pension plans by the middle of 1950. It did not note, however, that most of them work in industries essential to defense.

Ronson Profits Rise 822% In 4 Years, Wages Only 41%

Profits of the 10 largest firms in the Newark, N. J., area with which CIO unions have contracts are compared here for 1945 and 1949, with the percentage increases in wages.

U. S. Steel	58,015,056	165,908,829	185%	53%
		Average increase	289%	44%

Some 1950 profits already released show far higher profits than in 1949. For instance, 1950 net earnings were $40,361,166 for Celanese; $215,337,655 (stated) for U. S. Steel, and $834,044,039 for General Motors.

4 Million To Work In Defense Jobs By '52

There will be 4 million workers in defense production by the end of 1951, Ewan Clague, U. S. Commissioner of Labor Statistics, said at Chicago. He estimated the present civilian work force at 61.5 million. He suggested that industrial output could be increased by employing the 2.5 million now unemployed, hiring persons entering the labor force for the first time, hiring more women and increasing the average work week.

Air-Wick In The Living Room Won't Hide A Goat, Says FTC

Keeping an open bottle of Air-Wick in your house is no assurance that you can keep a goat in the living room and not know about it.

The Federal Trade Commission has approved a stipulation in which Seeman Bros., Inc., and Airkem Corp., Inc., both of New York City, agree to discontinue certain representations concerning the deodorants Air-Wick and Airkem, respectively.

Seeman Bros. agree to stop claiming that Air-Wick eliminates all unpleasant odors or that it clears or freshens the air otherwise than according to its seeming effects.

The Airkem Corp. agrees to discontinue claims that Airkem ends odor problems, that it masks odors, that it restores some of the characteristics of outdoor air, or that it freshens the air otherwise than according to its seeming effect.

The stipulation also provides for discontinuance of representations that the products contain chlorophyll, as distinguished from commercial chlorophyll, that the action of chlorophyll in the products is similar to the action of chlorophyll in nature, or that the content of commercial chlorophyll as an active ingredient in the products provides a chief effect in their action.

Leak In AEC Plans Shows Its Housing Policy Failure

THE ATOMIC Energy Commission continues to demonstrate that it has no intention of building any housing at or near its newly acquired South Carolina plant site.

On the other hand AEC has shown it has every intention of encouraging stiff rent increases for AEC workers living in government-built housing on present sites.

With a great show of indignation, AEC Chairman Gordon Dean pounced on an employe who had "leaked" information about the new site to a land speculator who thereupon bought a 91-acre tract inside the area and re-sold it to a Georgia firm at a profit of $845 per acre. The employe resigned, or was fired; nobody could quite decide which.

Dean said he would "do everything" to prevent land speculation within the 250,000-acre AEC domain, even condemning the land if necessary.

But he also said he would do nothing about land speculation outside the site, which is where most of the speculation is now going on, and made it clear he had not changed his mind: AEC itself will build no housing for the thousands of workers who will soon come into the area. That's up to private enterprise.

As for rentals at Oak Ridge and Hanford, the present sites, Dean justified his announcement of stiff rent increases effective Aug. 1 by saying that if the rents did not go up, they would not be comparable to rents charged off the two plant sites, and this would amount to a subsidy to the AEC workers.

He said this in a letter to Pres. Martin Wagner of the CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers, who replied that apparently "subsidies are perfectly all right for anyone in America except the working people."

Extension Of Rent Control Gets Under Way In Congress

AS MAR. 31 drew dangerously nearer, Congress last week reluctantly moved to extend federal rent control till the end of June in the 1400 communities where it is due to expire April 1.

Status as the CIO News went to press: The Senate passed its end of a concurrent resolution removing the Mar. 31 deadline, and the House Banking Committee approved it. (Under the present law, rent control is on the books till the end of June, but expires automatically the end of this month unless local governing bodies vote before Mar. 31 to keep it for the longer period. About 1400 cities and towns have failed to act.)

The administration, in the person of Tighe Woods, boss of the Office of the Housing Expediter, urged adoption of the resolution. He said that in addition, there would soon be a request for a stronger rent control law, to be incorporated with badly needed proposed amendments to the Defense Mobilization Act, which also expires the end of June. No such bill has been introduced as yet.

THE NEED for stronger controls was highlighted by figures, released by the CIO Housing Committee, which were drawn from reports of the 1950 Census of Housing. The committee listed 193 cities in which a significant proportion of renters pay one-fifth of their income for rent alone (minus utilities).

Of these, there were six, including Miami, Fla., where over half the renters paid this much, and 24 more in which 40% or more of renters shucked out one-fifth of their total incomes just to get a roof over their heads.

In 12 cities, the committee found, one renter in five paid one-third or more of his total income for rent alone. This list included Washington, D. C. (Congressmen are well aware of the rent situation in the Capital, which has its own separate rent law. No nonsense about allowing this one to expire. A 90-day extension for the District of Columbia was rammed through Mar. 12 in a matter of minutes.)

The significance of this finding lies in the fact that most official statisticians assign a far smaller proportion of the family budget to rent than these figures indicate is actually the case.

THE RENT control extension does not allow OHE to recontrol areas which have been decontrolled on their own motion, and this is the main reason why a new law is needed.

The Greater Los Angeles CIO Council pointed out this in a bitter telegram to the chairmen of the House and Senate Banking Committees. Reminding them that Los Angeles now has no rent control, that the number of evictions and dispossess notices received was up in the thousands and that the families of 200,000 GIs were expected to move into the already crowded area within the next six months, the council urged immediate adoption of a much stronger law to last for the duration of the emergency.

The entire military housing situation is affected by this weakness in the present law. Unscrulous landlords are taking such widespread advantage of the situation that renting is becoming known as "Operation Gouge." Congress is under increasing pressure from the Defense Dept. and scores of individual post commanders to do something about it at once.

For instance:

LT. Glen S. Blackburn, billeting officer for the 101st Airborne Division at Camp Breckinridge, Ky., reported:

"There are four families living in a converted barn in Morganfield. No modern facilities, no plumbing of any type, outside toilet with shower, paint coming off ceiling which is only 6½ feet high. Occupants must use coal stove for heat and hot plate for cooking.

"Place is in state of complete deterioration. Rent is $50 per month for two rooms. This barn, now inhabited by four service families, is a disgrace to Morganfield and its people as well as the landlord involved."

Capt. Madison Nichols, commandant of the ninth naval district at Great Lakes, Ill., said: "Personnel who must reside in the general area for reasons of economy are compelled to pay exhorbitant rentals if they are successful in locating apartments, houses or housekeeping rooms.

"A sampling of the rental assessed reflects that one-room unfurnished kitchenettes, when available, are rented for $32.50 monthly. A four-room furnished house is available for $200 monthly. A five-room unfurnished dwelling is listed at $175. Housekeeping rooms are sometimes available at rentals from $12 to $16 weekly."

LT. COL. John L. Livingston of the Engineer's office at Rock Island, Ill., reported:

"About six weeks ago we notified all local realtors that a three or four-bedroom house was desired for me. Ads were run for several days in the three papers. Only response was a farm house 21 miles east near Muscatine. I did find one five-room apartment $110 per month that was most unsatisfactory. Purchasing property was almost as bad as renting. I found only one house that I would consider. It was a 37-year-old, six-room house on a high terrace and at $14,000."

PFC Lloyd Chandler, of Camp McCoy, Was. (near Sparta), said:

"The situation here is to get what you can pay for and not kick. We're doing the best we can. We're living, that's all. I have a wife and child, pay $30 a month plus heat for a tiny, one-room tourist cabin near the camp. It was never made for winter occupancy. Plumbing facilities are in another building. It's crowded and very cold, but still better than being apart from my family."

Note: Bills for statewide decontrol are now pending before the state legislatures of Kansas, Colorado and Iowa.

IT WAS A BIG MOMENT in the life of Margaret Cornell, president of CIO Steelworkers Local 215, Canonsburg, Pa., when her fellow union members, before an audience of 650 people, presented her with a bound book containing all their signatures. If she'd ever wanted to make a speech now was the time. And she had laryngitis! Margaret has worked for 22 years as a machine operator at the Continental Can plant in Canonsburg.

Wisconsin Kids To Work All Hours

The kids will be going back to work in Wisconsin this summer and they'll be permitted to work unlimited hours as long as they get a minimum wage of not less than 75c an hour.

The Wisconsin Industrial Commission explains that 16 and 17-year-old boys will be permitted to help with the 1951 harvesting and canning "in view of the anticipated shortage of labor." The Wisconsin Canners Association is happy to cooperate.

Program For Brave New World

HST Lauds Plan 'To Break The Back Of Hunger'

A DRAMATIC, comprehensive program for a brave new world, idealistic in its humanitarianism; to "break the back of hunger and famine" and give the people of underdeveloped nations a hand in pulling themselves up by their own bootstraps, was presented to President Truman last week by his International Development Advisory Board.

The board was established to advise the President on implementation of the Point Four program. Nelson Rockefeller is chairman, and Jacob S. Potofsky, a vice president of the CIO and president of the Clothing Workers, is a member.

Its report, which drew high praise from the President, was aimed at stopping the aggression of Soviet Russia short of war by carrying the fight to "military aggression and subversion" on the one front, and to "hunger, poverty, disease and illiteracy" on the other—wherever either is found or may develop. It stressed the importance of helping the great mass of people, and called for the full recognition of free trade unions.

"Our first imperative must be to rebuild sufficient military strength to resist aggression," the board said.

"TODAY THE production of the free world is not sufficient to meet both the human and defense needs of its people, nor can these needs be met by any one nation alone. The people who live in what have been termed the underdeveloped areas of Latin America, Africa, the Middle East, Asia and Oceania need our help and we need theirs.

"This board also recognizes that to achieve lasting peace, security and well-being in the world we must join forces in an economic offensive to root out hunger, poverty, illiteracy and disease. Only by working together in common interest can we produce the necessary increase in foods, raw materials and manufactures.

"As a result of these findings, the advisory board feels that strengthening the economies of the underdeveloped regions and an improvement of their living levels must be considered a vital part of our defense mobilization."

To meet the "double challenge" of strengthening the defenses of the free world and at the same time promoting "the economic progress essential to lasting peace," the board made nine specific recommendations. They were:

1 A U. S. appropriation of $500 million for economic assistance to underdeveloped areas, entirely apart from defense emergency requirements. The report said:

"A balanced program of economic development calls for simultaneous progress in three broad fields of economic endeavor. Along with the production of goods—which is a job for private enterprise—must go public works, such as roads, railways, harbors and irrigation works; also improvement in the basic services, like public health and sanitation, and training people in basic skills. The financing of both the public works and these basic services are largely governmental functions."

2 Creation of one over-all agency for major foreign economic operations with an appropriation of about $500 million a year. This agency would encompass the Economic Cooperation Administration (Marshall Plan), and two State Dept. bureaus, the Technical Cooperation Administration and the Institute of Inter-American Affairs. The board said:

"There should be a truly unified organization planned from the ground up to deal with present and future problems, not problems of the past . . .

"The new agency will also be charged with making the most effective use of private enterprise and of the varied international agencies and voluntary groups active in the field of economic development . . .

". . . the advisory board also feels that the U. S. needs a permanent governmental agency which will give consistency and continuity to U. S. foreign economic policy."

3 A program for strengthening the economies of underdeveloped areas and improving the living standards of their people, balanced against defense needs.

The board here stressed the importance of regional organization of the new administration because "only in regional terms would it be possible to do a hard-headed analysis of each country's problems and possible contribution to defense." The board said:

"The time for vagueness in administrative objectives has passed. Simply to allocate U. S. funds for something 'worthwhile' is not good enough.

"Whatever is undertaken should be aimed at overcoming specific problems, with targets of accompaniment set forth within set time limits.

"The first requirement is a carefully worked out over-all country-by-country development program."

4 "An all-out food-for-independence production drive in the underdeveloped areas, including a 25% increase in rice output.

". . . an all-out food production drive which would break the back of hunger and famine . . . would strike at the greatest single cause of the suffering and discontent on which subversion feeds . . .

"A really fundamental and lasting improvement in the agriculture of all these areas must be considered as a long-haul proposition. But a start toward its realization should be made immediately . . .

"Along with this program must go certain health and sanitation projects . . ."

5 A development program to increase by 50% the flow of strategic materials from other countries, and to develop substitute sources for what now comes from behind the Iron Curtain. This includes the investment of $2 billion in the next few years to boost the flow of strategic materials from underdeveloped countries by $1 billion a year. The report added:

"This increased production can best be carried out under private auspices and wherever possible local capital within the country should be encouraged to enter into partnership with U. S. investors in these projects . . .

"With an expanding productive base it will be possible to increase individual productivity, raise living levels, increase international trade, meet the needs of the growing populations in the underdeveloped areas and perhaps even resettle peoples from the industrial areas under growing population pressure . . .

"Workers should receive a full share in the benefits as quickly as possible . . .

"Improving the standard of living of the people of the underdeveloped areas is a definite strategic objective of U. S. foreign policy.

"The advisory board recommends the continued encouragement of the free labor unions in the underdeveloped areas, and that the Intl. Labor Organization's recommendations as to fair labor standards be used as a guide for minimum labor standards."

6 A policy and program to assure underdeveloped nations of what they need for development.

This would involve screening of projects by the proposed new administration. It would represent all foreign countries before allocating bodies, with the highest priority reserved for "nations which cooperate most effectively with the other free peoples in mutual defense against aggression."

7 Creation of an Intl. Development Authority to help finance public works vital to economic progress, operating under a management contract with the Intl. Bank for Reconstruction & Development.

This authority would be capitalized at $500 million, subscribed by all countries in proportion to their subscriptions to the Intl. Bank. The report said:

"In no case should the Development Authority make grants covering the full cost of any project. In every case there should be some degree of matching of the grant by the beneficiary country in terms of local materials, local labor or other local resources."

8 Adoption of the general principle that all aid programs should provide for some measure of cooperative local services and financing.

The board recommended creation of regional organizations in other parts of the world similar to the Institute of Inter-American Affairs, which it found has been effective in the people to people approach "this nation has always stood for," and in giving the people of the aided nations an ever-increasing share in programs. The board said:

"Only by broadening the human base of technical skills in the underdeveloped countries can the U. S. withdraw from these programs assured that the roots of lasting results have been firmly planted."

9 A five-point program to increase U. S. investments abroad from the present $1 billion to $2 billion a year. This included:

Taxation on income from such new investment only in the country where the income is earned.

Tax treaties to eliminate discriminatory levies upon U. S. firms abroad.

Earmarking of $100 million of the loan and guaranty authority of the Export-Import Bank to underwrite, for a fee, the transfer risk on new foreign debt obligations bought by private U. S. investors.

Creation of a new Intl. Finance Corp., affiliated with the Intl. Bank, to make loans in local and foreign currencies to private enterprise without government guarantees. The corporation would have $400 million in capital with the U. S. subscribing $150 million.

Encouragement of the maximum use of private capital in the whole program of aiding underdeveloped nations.

Labor Represented On Advisory Board

The International Development Advisory Board, in addition to Chairman Nelson Rockefeller and CIO Vice Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, included Lewis G. Hines, AFL special representative.

Among the 17 consultants who aided in preparing its report were Elmer F. Cope, of the CIO International Affairs Dept., former CIO representative in Europe and former assistant secretary general of the World Federation of Trade Unions; Robert R. Nathan, economist and CIO radio broadcaster, and Boris Shishkin, director of the Economic Cooperation Administration's European Labor Division and former AFL research director.

CIO Board Endorses Report

The CIO Executive Board last week described the report of the International Development Advisory Board as "a demonstration of the constructive results which can be obtained by calling on all segments of our society to participate in the framing of our national policies."

In a resolution adopted unanimously, the board added:

"The CIO Executive Board commends Brother Jacob S. Potofsky and his assistants for their participation in the work of the board and believes they have made substantial contributions to the generally satisfactory character of the report.

"The report clearly recognizes that 'strengthening the economies of the underdeveloped regions and an improvement in their living levels must be considered a vital part of our own defense mobilization.'

"The CIO has repeatedly affirmed that peace, democratic free institutions, and human welfare can be assured only within the framework of an expanding world economy. We agree with this report in its finding that 'to achieve lasting peace, security and well-being in the world we must join forces in an economic offensive to root out hunger, poverty, illiteracy and disease.'

"The CIO wholeheartedly welcomes the tribute which the board's report pays to the work of free trade unions in fighting communist and fascist infiltration by striving to improve the lot of their members. We agree that 'improving the standard of living of the people of the underdeveloped areas is a definite strategic objective of United States foreign policy,' and we underline the board's recommendation that free trade unions must receive continued encouragement.

"The CIO believes that our economic programs must be greatly expanded. For long range economic development billions of dollars from both public and private sources must be channelled into investment abroad. A new Overseas Economic Administration is needed to integrate the work of the present agencies, including the Export-Import Bank, which are functioning in this field and to coordinate this activity with the work of the World Bank and the United Nations.

"The CIO Executive Board urges that Congress speedily enact legislation to carry out the recommendations of the Report of the International Development Advisory Board.

"The Executive Board calls upon CIO affiliates to support such legislation and to ensure that it carries out the constructive proposals of the report.

"The Executive Board further recommends that the principles and policies underlying the program for international economic development be publicized among CIO members so as to increase understanding of and support for measures making for world peace and prosperity in a free world."

Humphrey Gets Award

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) has received the Russwurm Award for "distinguished service in behalf of human rights." The award was given by the Negro Newspaper Publishers Association, meeting in the capital during Negro Press Week.

"But, Adeline, I'm not proposing. I lost a dime under here."

Potofsky Backs Bill To Train Farm Labor

CHAIRMAN Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Committee on International Affairs last week endorsed the Yorty bill, which would allow the Labor Dept. to recruit, train and place farm labor, and enforce standards covering their wages and living conditions.

The bill would encourage the placement in available jobs of Puerto Rican, Hawaiian, and Virgin Island citizens as well as inhabitants of continental United States, since all are U. S. citizens, before nationals of other countries such as Mexico would be given jobs.

The section of the bill dealing with standards of work and living conditions is of extreme importance in the wake of revelations, given widespread recent publicity, of heartless exploitation of Puerto Rican laborers brought to Michigan to harvest the beet crop on a contract basis.

THE BILL would allow the Labor Dept. to recruit, train and place farm workers, supplying them transportation, health and medical care and housing while in training or on the way to jobs. They would be placed only with employers who agreed to meet prevailing wage standards, guarantee employment or wages for 75% of the contract period, and supply decent housing and working conditions.

Employers also would have to conform to applicable labor laws, obtain workmen's compensation or other insurance to protect workers against occupational disease or accidents, and pay all medical expenses in case of accident. The bill would recognize the workers' right to organize and bargain collectively and would give the farm laborers access to the National Labor Relations Board.

Potofsky urged adoption of this measure instead of the pending Poage bill, which, he said, "ignores the problems of American workers, and, without proper safeguards, would flood the nation with foreign workers, many of them illegal entrants."

(The Poage bill among other things would legalize employment of "wetbacks"—Mexican farm laborers who enter the country illegally by swimming the Rio Grande.)

"LIKE OTHER segments of the American economy," Potofsky said, "agriculture should seek to become prosperous through decent wages, not sub-standard conditions. . . . Whenever our unions support protective legislation in regard to wages, hours, collective bargaining rights, or social security, some farmers urge loudly that agricultural labor should be omitted from such protection.

"Their objections have been successful in securing exclusion of farm workers from most benefits enjoyed by industrial wage earners. No wonder there is a constant flow from agricultural jobs to industry. We hope that an increasing number of farmers, like industrial employers, will realize that it pays to agree to conditions which attract rather than repel employes."

Murray Urges Pay Raise For U. S. Employes

CIO PRES. Philip Murray wired the Senate Civil Service Committee asking approval of pay raises averaging 17% for some 830,000 classified federal workers.

"The relative economic standing of federal employes has substantially declined since 1939 and this inequity can be corrected only by a substantial pay increase," Murray said. "The need to retain and attract able personnel for the federal service in this time of emergency accentuates the desirability of an immediate increase."

The last "raise" received by this largest grouping of federal workers came in October, 1949, when a reclassification act was passed. This resulted in increases averaging $240 a year (or $4.61 a week), but was very unevenly applied, with many employes receiving nothing.

The pending bill does not affect Post Office employes outside of Washington, D. C., nor other smaller groups. It is supported by the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

UPW Meetings Barred From Cook Co. Bldgs.

The public welfare committee of the Cook County (Ill.) Board at Chicago has ordered the use of county facilities barred to all union meetings.

The committee acted after learning that county facilities are used for meetings of the United Public Workers employed by the Welfare Dept. The UPW was among those unions ousted by the CIO for Communist domination.

John Hancock Poll Ordered By NLRB

MORE than 5800 agents of the John Hancock Life Insurance Co. from 25 states and the District of Columbia will vote in a National Labor Relations Board election between now and Apr. 13.

The election, which was asked by the CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, was ordered last week by the NLRB.

Also on the ballot will be the United Office and Professional Workers independent union which was expelled from the CIO in March, 1950, for following the Communist Party line, and the National Federation of Insurance Agents Council, AFL.

UOPWA contended at an NLRB hearing on Dec. 15, 1950, that an existing collective bargaining contract between it and the company which expires June 15, 1951, constituted a bar to an election. The NLRB election order declared "the record shows that of some 5800-odd Hancock agents throughout the country, some 2600 belonged to locals or worked in district offices that took action to disaffiliate from UOPWA and join the CIO." It added:

"As there are about 1480 Hancock agents working out of offices which have never been organized or in which the UOPWA local is admittedly defunct, the number of those who have acted to disaffiliate is more than half of the UOPWA membership which was active at or about the time of expulsion."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, who is also chairman of the IAWOC, predicted an overwhelming vote for the CIO affiliate when the election is held.

World Government Un-American—DAR

The D. C. Daughters of the American Revolution have decided you can't be a good American and believe in world government at the same time. They voted to "call the attention of the Congress of the United States to our belief that any and all groups working for World Government and Federated Union are Un-American because their ultimate aim is the surrender of the sovereignty of the United States."

To make sure that this doesn't happen, the DAR asked the Senate to include in the ratification of any treaty such reservations as will leave no question as to the supremacy of our state and national laws.

The Daughters, at their three-day fiftieth annual State Conference, expressed their faith in free enterprise and went on record as opposing "socialized medicine" and "paternalistic bureaucracy in the U. S."

Trenton Six Trial Jury Completed

It took two weeks and the examination of 280 persons before the jury for the retrial of the six Negroes charged with murdering an elderly shopkeeper in Trenton, N. J., was finally completed last week. Eight women and six men make up the jury, including two alternates. Testimony starts this week.

The defendants have been in prison since their arrest in January 1948. Widespread protests charging racial discrimination and unfairness at the first trial—at which all six were convicted and sentenced to be executed—resulted in an investigation and a retrial ordered by the State Supreme Court.

CIO unions throughout the state have backed the move for a fair and unbiased trial for the Trenton Six. The defendants are Ralph Cooper, Collis English, McKinley Forrest, John McKenzie, James Thorpe and Horace Wilson.

Teachers' Loyalty Vow Upheld By N. J. Court

A 1949 New Jersey law requiring teachers employed in schools supported by public funds to take a loyalty oath has been upheld by the New Jersey Supreme Court.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

A significant victory for the CIO took place in New York City when the members of unaffiliated Local 1-S, representing about 8300 employes of the Macy Store, voted to return to our organization. The vote was 3327 to 1420 for affiliation with the CIO through the medium of an organizing committee. This vote and action by 1-S lays the foundation for building a real union in the department store field. The campaign will be conducted by the newly formed CIO Department Store Workers Organizing Committee. R. J. Thomas, Assistant CIO Organization Director, is chairman. Pres. Samuel Kovenetsky of Local 1-S is a vice-chairman and director of organization. I want to extend to Brother Kovenetsky and his associates my congratulations on their action. The headquarters of the new committee will be in New York.

Allan Haywood

This action will and has caused a gnashing of teeth by the Cominform boys. It also presents the other department store workers a chance to get out from under the Communist Party control, which is in turn controlled by Moscow. The DPO (dying, puny, outfit) is cracking at the seams.

The CIO welcomes all department store workers into the great family of the CIO.

In Washington, the great battle against big business control continues. When will Mr. Wilson learn that there are forces in this great country who have their hearts and souls in the protection of our democracy—we who built the equipment and vast machinery in the late war? Labor intends to bring the true facts to the people.

Pres. John Green, United Railroad Workers, reports winning a representation election on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad by the following vote: eligible 236, URWA 163, AFL 48.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a union shop election at the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., New Castle, Ind., the workers voted 177 yes, 18 no, in support of URW Local 138.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, Intl. Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election at the Ocean Gate Lumber Co., Tillamook, Ore., the workers voted as follows: IWA-CIO 7, AFL 1, no union 1, challenged 1. In two union shop elections the workers voted in favor of the IWA-CIO: Ohio Match Co., Spokane, Wash., for 324, against 18, challenged 4, void 1; and Huntington Shingle Co., Mapleton, Ore., for 27, against 10.

Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten reports that the Woodworkers won a representation election at McCloud River and Lumber Co., McCloud, Calif., by the following vote: IAW 646, AFL 126, neither 6, void 7, challenged 7. The IWA-CIO won a smashing victory in this election over the AFL, which attempted a raid.

Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports the Steelworkers won two representation election victories: Newark Wire Cloth Co., Newark, N. J., where the workers were formerly with Mine, Mill, 92 for, 10 against; and Jiffy Mfg. Co., Newark, N. J., 60 to 0 against.

Reg Dir. James Leary reports that the United Brewery Workers won a representation election at the Kaw Sales Co., Kansas City, Mo., by a unanimous vote. The organizational work in this campaign was conducted by Intl. Rep. Mel Greenthal.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that the Rubber Workers won a representation election at the Rainford Mfg. Co., Closter, N. J., by the following vote: URW-CIO 32, no union 24, challenged 2. Herbert Bennet, URW regional director, was in charge of the campaign.

Secy.-Treas. John C. Lawson, United Stone and Allied Products Workers, reports that the union won a representation election at the Harbison-Walker Refractories clay mine, Clearfield, Pa., by a vote of 20 to 14 against. Intl. Reps. Gaston LeBlanc and Isaac Sayers worked on this campaign.

New Council Formed In S.F.

A NEW, Communist-free San Francisco Council was organized Mar. 10 at a conference of 40 delegates representing CIO local unions.

Initially affiliated are 13 CIO locals with 7500 members.

Formation of the new council came after CIO Pres. Philip Murray, following hearings, revoked the charter of the former Communist-dominated organization, finding that it "has ceased to be representative of CIO in its territory and has ceased to function."

In welcoming delegates to the conference, Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO regional director, said:

"We never did have a CIO union council in this city; we had a tool for the Communist party.

"Now we're in the process of setting up for the first time a legitimate CIO council in this area. We are faced with a national situation, of defense mobilization, that makes it pretty essential that we have a CIO county council to coordinate the the activities of all of our unions."

Nomination of officers was set for the first regular Council meeting on Apr. 13. A strong ban on Communist activities was written into the constitution.

Justice Urged For CP Pawns

CIO APPROVAL of a proposed amendment to the Internal Security (McCarran) Act was registered Mar. 14 in a telegram from Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director, to sponsors of the legislation — Sens. Lehman (D. N. Y.), Smith (R. N. J.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.).

The amendment would permit entry into the United States of "involuntary" members of Communist, as well as Fascist and Nazi, organizations in countries controlled by totalitarian parties.

"Every rule of justice and every consideration of national self interest," Cowan wired the three, "require that the same standards applied to involuntary members of Nazi and Fascist organizations be applied to involuntary members of Communist organizations.

"Adoption of this amendment is necessary to follow through on our efforts through the Voice of America program to persuade persons on the other side of the Iron Curtain to flee totalitarian tyranny."

Haywood Hails Victory

8300-Man Macy Local Votes To Rejoin CIO

MEMBERS of unaffiliated Local 1-S, representing about 8300 employes of the Macy store in New York, voted last week to return to the CIO.

The tally was 3327 to 1420. It was chalked up in two days of secret balloting after a spirited membership meeting at which the issue was discussed thoroughly.

The victory was hailed by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, as "the base for department store workers all over the country to build for themselves a great, strong union.

"The CIO compliments Local 1-S Pres. Samuel Kovenetsky for a job well done," Haywood said. "In R. J. Thomas, a former president of the CIO Auto Workers, the department store workers have as their chairman a man who has a great deal of experience in bringing the blessings of organization to American workers. I have the utmost confidence in his ability.

"The CIO will support this drive in every possible way and will cooperate fully with the newly formed CIO Department Store Workers Organizing Committee, the full membership of which will be announced later. Committee headquarters will be set up in New York City.

Members of the committee so far named are Thomas and Kovenetsky, who is a vice chairman and director of organization.

"The substantial vote favoring our return to CIO is an important indication of the organizing successes which lie ahead," said Kovenetsky.

"I am confident that the 8300 members of Local 1-S will reap direct benefits in the form of greater security and that they will be able to claim a major part of the credit for the first successful nationwide organizing campaign which we will launch in the near future."

In pre-election discussions Kovenetsky told members of the local that economic conditions in the country "demand that we be part of the large organized labor force."

"Standing on the sidelines," he warned them, "we will not be heard and will have no opportunity to make our influence felt."

CIO Textile Union Sets Patterns In Wool And Cotton-Rayon

THE CIO Textile Workers on Mar. 15 came to a last-minute agreement with the New Bedford and Fall River (Mass.) Manufacturers Association and the Berkshire Fine Spinning Associates, Inc., which averted a scheduled strike by 200,000 cotton and rayon workers.

Heeding a warning by Undersecretary of Defense Robert Lovett of the "serious nature of any interruption in production" and his plea for an agreement, TWUA negotiators and manufacturers' representatives arrived at a settlement which is expected to set the pattern for the industry. The Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service worked closely with both parties in the successful attempt to head off the threatened walkout.

The agreement provides for a 7½% hourly wage increase, which amounts to 10c an hour; a cost-of-living escalator clause calling for a 1c an hour pay raise for each 1.4% rise of the Bureau of Labor Statistics' consumer price index; improvement in company-paid insurance, including life, sickness and accident benefits; severance pay similar to the American Woolen Co. provision, and retirement pay.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve hailed the two-year contract, which contains a wage reopening clause after one year, as "a good agreement with better terms than the recently negotiated American Woolen pact."

"While it does not contain everything we asked for, it is definitely a victory for the union," he declared. "Once again, as we have done every time since we have represented the textile workers in New Bedford and Fall River, we reached agreement without a work stoppage."

Following the New England settlement, TWUA's policy committee voted to extend present agreements with other cotton-rayon companies until Mar. 21.

Meanwhile, there were indications that several New England companies were balking at accepting the terms which ended the 26-day strike at the American Woolen Co., Mar. 13. According to that agreement, workers were to be given an immediate 12c an hour wage increase and other benefits.

Murray Asks McGrath Probe Arrests Of Georgia CIO Aides

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has called upon Atty. Gen. Howard J. McGrath for an immediate Dept. of Justice investigation of "serious violations of civil liberties which are currently taking place at Dublin, Ga."

His letter cited the disruption of a union meeting at Dublin on Feb. 8 which ended in the subsequent overnight detention of Charles H. Gilman, CIO State Director, and Clyde G. Brock, a member of the CIO Organizing Committee staff.

Murray charged that the sheriff of Laurens County, Ga., where Dublin is located, and four deputies "broke into the meeting, wildly brandishing firearms," although they had neither search warrants nor arrest warrants.

He cited Georgia newspaper clippings which quoted the sheriff as declaring that when he saw whites and Negroes meeting together, "I suspected Communism and I arrested them and put them in jail until I could find out."

Murray noted that the CIO has been in the "forefront of the fight" to protect the nation from Communist infiltration and added: "It is a tragic situation when union men like these are rewarded for their fight against the evil totalitarian forces which threaten our country by the denial of the basic statutory and constitutional rights and civil liberties for whose preservation they have been fighting."

Express Rates Boosted

The Interstate Commerce Commission has granted increases in railway express rates on 12 items which are usually packed in large, but light, cartons. The extra charges, ranging to 100%, will be for handling. Items include men's hats, millinery, lampshades, nursery stock, artificial flowers, cut flowers, and furniture.

Africa ICFTU Setup Is Urged

TWENTY-NINE official delegates from the organized labor movements in 10 west and central African colonies met recently, under the auspices of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at Douala, French Cameroons, and asked for formation of an ICFTU regional organization in their territory.

Represented were Senegal, Gambia, Sierra Leone, Ivory Coast, Gold Coast, Dahomey, Nigeria, British and French Cameroons and French Equatorial Africa. Many local tribal chiefs and representatives of territorial administrations and legislatures attended as observers.

Establishment of an ICFTU regional body, the conference declared in a resolution, is necessary for the coordination of union activities, especially in the field of education.

Other resolutions passed asked ICFTU support in getting an African office of the Intl. Labor Organization; housing programs to meet the needs of African workers; abolition of racial discrimination and the granting of national independence, and the emancipation of African women. The importance of the economic and social development of African territories also was stressed.

Marcus Grant, member of the ICFTU executive board from Sierra Leone, presided at the opening of the conference. Alfonse Tonye, general secretary of the French Force Ouvriere in the Cameroons, was elected chairman.

Local 100 Of Transport Workers Turns To Television To Dramatize Struggle With N.Y.C. Transportation Board

LOCAL 100 OF the CIO Transport Workers Union in New York City recently used television to carry its fight for a pay increase and a 40-hour week to the public by televising a meeting of the local's executive board.

During the program, which was carried by television station WPIX, members of the local's 500-man joint executive board asked questions on TWU's current negotiations with the New York City Board of Transportation. Other members answered.

The broadcast, was furnished as a public service by TWU as part of its city-wide campaign to acquaint the riding public with the problems and grievances of the men and women who operate the city's gigantic transit network.

Local 100 Pres. Matthew Guinan, who was chairman, reviewed the history of the union's struggle to secure adequate wages, hours and working conditions from the board.

Guinan called for a wage reopening of the present contract due to the rise in the cost of living for TWU members and their families. He said that despite the granting of a 11c increase last July 1, the standard of living for BT employes is far below what it was before June 1, 1950.

HE POINTED out that in a "memorandum of understanding" with the board signed last June, the 40-hour week was agreed to and the machinery set up at that time to bring about the effectuation of the 40-hour week in the shortest possible time.

"It was understood then that the board of transportation, the union and several engineering firms would jointly work on this project," Guinan declared. "However, almost nine months have elapsed and while we have endeavored during that period to meet with both the board and the engineering firms with reference to the 40-hour week, we have been completely ignored."

He stated that the privately owned transit companies in the city pay their employes 12½c an hour more than the board.

TWU's Intl. Pres. Michael Quill, the final speaker, gave a summary which included a recital of the union's achievements, an explanation of the urgency of the need for the 40-hour week and a review of the negotiations with the board.

TIRED OF STALLING TACTICS by the New York City Board of Transportation, Local 100 of the CIO Transport Workers decided to carry the story of the union's struggle to get a badly needed wage raise and a 40-hour week to the public by means of a television broadcast of a meeting of Local 100's joint executive board. An engineer is shown setting up his equipment prior to the broacast. Board members asked and answered questions.

Labor, United, Mobilizes To Help Public In Fight Against Inflation

(See Pages 3, 6, 7)

TOGETHER IN BATTLE ON INFLATION: These four CIO and AFL leaders last week told 700 delegates to the United Labor Conference in Washington that they should take the story of labor's fight against inflation and for equality of sacrifice to the people back home. AFL Pres. William Green is making a point to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, AFL Secy.-Treas. George Meany and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers (See Pages 3, 6 and 7 for stories on the conference and other pictures.)

Baby Sitter, If Tot KO's You, You May Get Compensation

If you're a baby sitter and the little monster whacks you over the head with a baseball bat, relax. You may be eligible for workmen's compensation.

Deputy Commissioner Stahl of the Workmen's Compensation Court at Newark, N. J., ruled Mar. 15 that a baby sitter, under some circumstances, at least, is covered by the New Jersey compensation statute. He awarded Mrs. Arielle M. Smith of Caldwell $275 for injuries sustained while sitting for an Essex Falls family May 2, 1950.

While sitting in an upstairs bedroom adjacent to the children's bedroom in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Barton Greason, Mrs. Smith heard the doorbell ring. On her way downstairs to open the door she fell, sprained both ankles.

Commissioner Stahl awarded the compensation when he learned Mrs. Smith was employed by the Greasons at fairly frequent intervals and must be classed as a regular rather than a casual emloye. Mrs. Smith said she occasionally sat for the family for four-hour periods and was paid 65 cents an hour. The court gave her an extra $15 for cab fares. She reported that the Greasons paid her doctor's bill.

Court officials said the award was the first in New Jersey received by a sitter. LPA

Phelps-Dodge Underworld Link Told Kefauver Group By CIO Man

PARTNERSHIP between Big Business and Big Crime was illustrated in testimony before the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee in New York on Mar. 19 by Theodore Narushef, president of Local 441, of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, at Elizabeth, N. J.

Big Business involved—Phelps-Dodge Copper Products.

Big Crime involved—Anthony Anastasia, underworld leader.

Occasion—1946 strike of Phelps-Dodge employes after the company refused to abide by a War Labor Board directive.

Method — Anthony Anastasia, brother of boss of Murder, Inc., and waterfront racketeer, was handed Phelps-Dodge "labor relations" job, which in this case was to break the strike with thugs, killers and goons imported to the Elizabeth plant.

Result — One picket, Mario Russo, was murdered by the Phelps-Dodge-Anastasia partners —no one was indicted.

Anastasia was tried on a charge of assault against a picket. An Elizabeth police captain won his acquittal by offering an alibi.

Sixteen pickets were indicted for assault and battery, and assault and battery with intent to kill. Narushef has been convicted on the first charge and is scheduled to be sentenced Mar. 30.

THE STORY was told for the first time to the Kefauver Committee by Narushef, who testified concerning Anastasia's claim that he got $1000 a day from Phelps-Dodge to break the strike, Anastasia's report that Wylie Brown, of Phelps-Dodge, had given him full power to settle the strike, and Anastasia's part in picket line violence which resulted in indictment of the pickets.

Anastasia admitted on the stand that he entered the United States illegally by jumping ship and that he was involved in the Phelps-Dodge strike-breaking efforts, but denied he was authorized to settle the strike by the company.

The danger of working arrangements between business, crime and government is amply shown in the Narushef case. Narushef has been convicted of simple assault because he resisted the strike-breaking efforts of Anastasia goons.

The indictments against Narushef and his fellow strikers were allowed to lie idle until Phelps-Dodge workers walked out on another strike in July, 1950, in protest against the firm's sub-standard contract offer. Here, the influence of the company on government can be seen—Narushef and his fellow strikers were notified that the four-year-old indictments were being prepared for court.

NARUSHEF was elected union president in December. Despite earlier delays, he was brought to trial on Jan. 29. In five days, he had been found guilty.

District Four, IUE-CIO, is fighting back against the corrupt combination of forces trying to ship trade union leaders to jail on trumped up charges. Plant gate collections for a $40,000 Defense Fund are being taken up for the next four weeks. Money-raising efforts are being encouraged by district officials, Pres. Milton Weihrauch has announced.

Narushef got his first lucky break in the chance to reveal the link between Phelps-Dodge and the underworld to the crime investigators and the public.

The facts show that Phelps-Dodge management could not have used the services of Anastasia without being aware of his thug background. Anastasia was no ordinary worker who slipped through the employment office—he was a contract employe with the company, for which he did stevedoring.

During the January, 1946, strike, the company tried to settle through untruthful "love letters" inviting the strikers to return to work. The attempts failed and Phelps-Dodge apparently decided to try stronger methods.

ANASTASIA showed up at the wharf to pick up materials. Pickets warned him to stay away and he agreed. Next day, he returned with 35 or 40 thugs armed with pistols, rifles, baseball bats, iron shackles and other weapons.

Anastasia carried out relentless warfare against the strikers from then until the strike was settled. Complaints to the police about his mobsters firing at pickets and attacking them resulted in John Doe warrants and no arrests.

Picket boats continued to be run down by Anastasia's ships, and pickets continued to be assaulted. Russo was shot and killed from the dock while in a row boat off shore. Another picket was shot in the leg and hospitalized. Dozens were wounded by blows and sent to hospitals.

ANASTASIA waited for this treatment to take effect, then called a negotiating session at the Hotel New Yorker in New York. He told Narushef that he was authorized by Brown to settle the strike. He also said he was being paid $1000 a day by the company for his assaults on the pickets. The union declined to yield and the strike went on.

Before it was ended, the pickets, including Narushef, had been indicted. Anastasia was also indicted although police made no particular effort to locate the killer of Mario Russo. When Anastasia's case came to trial, Police Capt. Winkelman, of Elizabeth, took the stand to offer the racketeer a foolproof alibi. The jury found Anastasia not guilty.

Kefauver Probers Planning Study Of Reuther Shootings

A REOPENING of the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee hearings in Detroit in the near future may serve to throw some light on the long unsolved shotgun attacks on Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers and his brother, Victor.

The committee is also interested in the peculiar circumstances surrounding the beatings of five UAW Local 212 members during a strike at the Briggs Manufacturing Co. in 1947.

Committee Counsel John Burling and Chief Investigator W. D. Amis, who returned to Detroit two weeks ago, indicated they are "looking into" the Reuther cases in particular.

"We do not promise to solve the cases," Burling said, "but we will try to throw new light on the crimes, if that is possible."

Detroit is the first city to be revisited by the Kefauver committee. Requests for its return came from many civic and union groups.

NEW information will be offered on the beatings of the Briggs workers which followed the awarding of a highly profitable scrap contract to one Carl Renda by the Briggs firm.

Renda himself has no police record. But he is the son-in-law of Santo "Sam" Perrone, who is listed frequently in the Detroit police files. Perrone also had a scrap contract which has been tied to the beating of workers at Briggs and the Detroit-Michigan Stove Co.

During the previous committee hearing, John A. Fry, president of the stove company, reluctantly admitted that in 1934, the Perrone brothers—Sam and Gasper, who worked at the plant—helped break a walkout by bringing in strike-breakers who started fights on the picket line.

Shortly after, the company "practically gave the brothers a scrap business," Fry admitted.

(Walter Reuther was felled by a shotgun blast in his home one night in April, 1947. Victor, then UAW education director and now CIO representative in Europe, was shot down, also in his home a year later. Rewards totaling more than $200,000 have failed to disclose the assailant of either.)

3 Manufacturers Cut Prices On TV Sets

Three manufacturers have slashed prices of television sets. The Wall St. Journal said the reason was "big inventories and lagging sales." Admiral cut $40 off the price of two table models and $30 off another set. Hallicrafters announced a 14-inch model at $199.95. Previously its lowest-priced model was a 17-inch for $249.95. Crosley recently cut prices $40 to $60 on eleven of its 23 TV sets.

School Children In Charlotte, N. C., Faint In Classrooms From Hunger

SCHOOL children in Charlotte, N. C., the largest and most progressive city in the state, are fainting in their classrooms from hunger.

At least 300 youngsters go to their classes every day with no breakfast; they carry no lunch and they haven't the money to buy it.

Hunger has turned scores of kids into problem children. They skip classes, they're quarrelsome, and they are pointlessly irritable and belligerent. When they get a quarter a day to buy lunch they get back to normal—but the quarter too often is lacking. So is the free midday meal that Parent-Teacher Associations are able to finance in some schools.

This shameful state of affairs was made known to the public by the Charlotte News, which quoted school heads as admitting that the problem is "serious" and that "a solution must be found soon by responsible agencies." The situation is especially bad in Negro schools, the school leaders conceded.

There is no public fund that can be tapped to channel food into the empty stomachs of the hungry children, the News said. Why Charlotte schools are not sharing in the Federal school lunch program—expansion and extension of which was recently urged by the CIO before the House Appropriations Committee —was not immediately clear. Federal funds for school lunches are apportioned among the states under a formula that weighs the number of school age children and the per capita income of the state. A grant must be matched by funds from within the state.

Charlotte businessmen have just started a campaign to raise additional funds to permit the Community Chest to try and cope with the problem.

THE CONDITION apparently is a direct reflection of the sharp increases in the cost of living since last June. Miss Louise Rankin, visiting counsellor in Negro schools, who investigates the most serious cases of truancy, classroom misbehavior and special needs, says lack of money is probably the greatest source of trouble, the News reports.

"Despite the compulsory attendance law," the News article reads, "many parents have been keeping their children home because they couldn't afford to give them money for lunch, or even a sandwich.

"A large number of these children have been put to work as delivery boys, caddies and laborers, to make enough to support themselves because their parents could not support them, Miss Rankin said.

"IT'S A matter of absolute necessity, especially in big families, where the parents earn small wages. A dollar a week to provide lunches for a child sounds small, but in families where there are three school children, that adds up to $12 or more per month, an amount that the poorer families can't scrape together.

"Miss Rankin told of a child who had been falling asleep in class too frequently. She found he had good reason to sleep. He had gotten up at 4 o'clock every morning and was working as a delivery boy on a milk truck, then going to school."

Many parents have kept their children out of school because they lacked the money to buy the youngsters shoes. Miss Rankin said this problem had been solved by the Negroes themselves, who have contributed to a Shoe Fund for the purpose of buying shoes for children whose parents haven't the money.

WSB Failure May Force Strike Apr. 3

FIFTY THOUSAND shipyard workers will walk out on Apr. 3 if the Wage Stabilization Board doesn't approve a wage increase obtained from the yards operated by the Bethlehem Steel Co. So John J. Grogan, president of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, announced Mar. 18.

The increase ranged from 18½ to 31c. It had to be approved by the WSB because it was signed Feb. 18, more than three weeks after the effective date of the wage freeze, and because it exceeded the 10% over pay rates of Jan. 15, 1950, the board said would be allowable under the freeze.

Meanwhile, the WSB was dormant as Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston tried to find a formula to reconstitute it. The WSB's labor members walked out Feb. 16 in protest against the 10% ruling.

IUMSWA extended the old agreement to Apr. 3 at Bethlehem's request. But Grogan said the WSB would have to act by that date or the entire membership of the union would strike. Bethlehem employs about 20,000 IUMSWA men in eight yards. Bulk of the remaining 30,000 are in Todd Shipyards.

United Labor's Declaration Of Principles

Delegates to the United Labor Conference held at Washington Mar. 21 issued the following declaration of principles. The conference was called by the United Labor Policy Committee, which represents the CIO, AFL, the Machinists and the Railway Labor Executives Association.

WE ARE Americans and proud of it. Our forefathers came to America seeking liberty, justice and equality. Our fathers fought for those ideals on the battlefields, on the farms and in the shops and factories.

We are proud of our nation's history and proud of the part trade unions have played in that history. We are mindful of the responsibilities which we share as citizens in a free nation.

We are met here today as free and independent Americans, free of government dictation, and independent of political party. We are committed only to the defense of America and the basic American principles of liberty, justice and equality.

Our nation faces a grave national emergency. The peace of the world is balanced on a razor's edge. Our government, in the interest of preserving peace, is seeking to mobilize the men and the machines of our country, for a great defense force, adequate to any challenge. To this effort, we have pledged our wholehearted support.

Our principles are clear:

We believe that all of our nation's resources must be mobilized for the defense of peace and freedom now threatened by Communist aggression. We can make no compromise with Communism or any other dictatorial force.

To us in the labor movement, fighting Communism is not a matter simply of writing editorials, issuing memoranda or making speeches. We have been engaged in fighting totalitarianism for many long years—in shops, factories, mills, mines and the political arena.

We believe that our nation must join with freedom-loving peoples of the world in common defense of human rights and human decency.

Fair Share For All

We believe that the first objective in the struggle for a free world is the preservation of freedom at home and the development of a defense program fair to every group. We ask no special privilege for labor. We believe that every group in our country must bear its fair share of the burden of sacrifice if freedom is to prevail.

As citizens of a great and free nation, we have both the right and the duty to raise our voice in united protest when we believe our Government is departing from the historic principles which made it strong and free.

As the defense mobilization program has unfolded, we have come to the inescapable conclusion that the democratic principle of equality of sacrifice has been abandoned by the Congress and by those charged with the administration of the mobilization program.

We are shocked by the cruel disregard for the interests of everyday American families. We are shocked by the privilege and favoritism bestowed upon a single group.

This special privilege is apparent for all to see in the ineffective price control program, in the tight wage freeze, in credit controls, in the deterioration of rent control, in the misdirection of civilian manpower authority.

We, the representatives of a united American labor movement, protest the special privilege being granted to the wealthy, to big business, to greedy profiteers.

To single out any group for special privilege weakens and disrupts the democratic unity from which our nation gets its strength.

We call upon our government to live up to its pledge of equality of sacrifice as the guiding principle for the entire mobilization and stabilization effort.

We insist that equality of representation be accorded to the major groups in our economy both in the making of policy and in the administering of policy. In no other way can the principle of equality of sacrifice be safeguarded.

We urge that an effective stabilization program be established, based upon these points:

1. Defense Production Act

Primary responsibility for the basic law of our entire mobilization effort rests with Congress.

The present Defense Production Act, adopted by Congress last year, expires on June 30. It contains fatal weaknesses and built-in special privileges. Yet, it provides the insecure foundation for our whole defense stabilization program, including the interim price and wage control system now in force.

Congress must proceed immediately to the consideration of a new Defense Production Act. It must eliminate dangerous defects in the existing law. It must incorporate in the new law a clear guarantee that equality of sacrifice shall be the controlling principle of the defense program.

It is the duty of Congress to adopt a new law in the national interest and not for special interests.

It is the duty of the Administration to exert more constructive and aggressive leadership in the drive for enactment of a new and better law.

It is our duty, the duty of the American people, to notify Congress in clear and unmistakable terms that we insist on an honest and effective law to serve as the basis for a revised defense program.

There is little time left to act. Before June 30, when the Defense Production Act expires, the American people must make their voice heard and respected by their elected representatives in Congress.

2. Price Controls

The price orders issued by the Office of Price Stabilization have been far weaker than even the defective Defense Production Act permits. They represent a fraud and a deception of the public. Instead of controlling prices and rolling back living costs to reasonable and justifiable levels, the Office of Price Stabilization has approved margins of profit which admittedly will result in even higher prices.

This victimization of the people must be ended under the new Defense Production Act. The law must deny to anyone in our economy a license to profiteer out of the national emergency.

The law should provide for real price control—for dollar-and-cents price ceilings, honest enough to be enforceable, clear enough so that any housewife, shopping for her family, can have confidence that she is not being overcharged.

Food prices can and should be held down, and farmers can be assured fair returns, under the parity system, if profiteering is prevented.

3. Wage Stabilization

Any system that freezes wages and salaries before it controls the cost of living is a system of oppression, not stabilization.

An equitable system of wage stabilization can only be made effective when living costs are actually controlled.

The purposes of any wage program in a national emergency are both to stabilize the economy and to reduce industrial strife to a minimum. Such a program must obviously include broad and flexible provisions for the settlement of disputes arising during the emergency period.

The wage program can and should be flexible enough to permit justice and equity to be done to the nation's wage earners. It must honor all existing collective bargaining agreements, protect basic living standards, allow for improvements in keeping with technological progress, and permit adjustments to correct hardships, inequities and substandard wage rates.

We urge these principles as indispensable to any wage policy.

Since the Defense Production Act expires on June 30, any wage stabilization policy now adopted must therefore be regarded as temporary. Labor cannot be committed beyond that date on any wage formula until we know what the new law provides.

4. Housing and Rent Controls

Congress has failed the people on housing programs and rent control. Here again the Administration has not fought hard enough to protect the public interest.

With acute housing shortages still existing, tight rent controls must be enacted for the duration of the national emergency. The Government cannot evade its responsibility for making certain that defense housing is available at reasonable rents for workers moving to defense production centers.

5. Taxes

The heavy costs of the defense program can and should be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis, insofar as possible.

Labor accepts its fair share of this unavoidable burden, as do the American people generally.

But we are forced to protest against the special consideration accorded to wealthy individuals and to big business under the tax laws adopted by Congress and under the new legislation proposed by the Treasury Department.

Our tax laws must be made to conform with the historic American principle that taxes should be levied in accordance with the ability to pay. Standards of luxury should be lowered before the American standard of living is undermined. Record-breaking corporation profits and high-bracket personal incomes are not yet taxed high enough. Gaping loopholes in the tax laws through which wealthy individuals and corporations escape their just share of the tax burdens must be plugged.

We reject a Federal sales tax and proposed increases in excise taxes, because these taxes fall heaviest on those least able to pay.

6. Civilian Manpower

American history has proven that free men outproduce conscript labor.

Civilian manpower problems can and should be solved by voluntary methods, as they were in World War II.

Civilian manpower policies and administration can and should be entrusted to responsible representatives of management and labor on both national and local levels.

Any system which conscripts citizens to work in industry is no longer free.

7. Participation

From top to bottom, the defense program has been staffed by men drawn from executive positions in big business. They cannot divorce themselves from their past experience and associations. Their policies in the Government service clearly reflect their one-sided background.

If permitted to continue, these policies will wreck the defense program.

In order to attain maximum results and to enlist the utmost cooperation of all the American people, we must have democratic participation in the defense program.

Labor, the farmers, small business and independent consumer groups must be given full representation on all mobilization and stabilization agencies—at the policy-making and administrative levels. By so doing, the Government can inspire renewed public confidence and public support of controls which otherwise will be hard to take.

* * *

We submit this as a just program for the mobilization of a free nation.

This is not the fight for labor alone—this is the struggle of all the American people.

To win it, we call on every decent, fair-minded American to join forces with us in demanding equal sacrifices of all groups in our defense mobilization effort.

We invite every civic and consumer group to unite with organized labor in every community to make the protest of free men heard in Washington—in the Congress and in the defense mobilization agencies.

United, the plain people of America are mightier than any group of profiteers or politicians.

This country belongs to the people who have fought for it and worked for it.

Let us act now—all who believe in the sacred American principles of liberty, justice and equality.

Six-Point Program For Action

The United Labor Conference, which met Mar. 21 in Washington, adopted this program for action:

Action must be undertaken by the Administration and by Congress to protect every American and to safeguard the defense program itself.

Action will be taken if the American people make their voice heard in unmistakable terms.

To carry out the declaration of principles adopted here today, we agree:

1. To enlist cooperation in support of this anti-inflation program from all community organizations which support our democratic institutions and are devoted to the anti-totalitarian objectives of America's defense program.

2. To promote public meetings, radio and television programs, speeches before community groups and other appropriate means of alerting every citizen to the need for improved defense mobilization and anti-inflation policies.

3. To forward letters, telegrams, petitions and memorials of President Truman and members of Congress in support of the principle of equal sacrifice and fair play in the mobilization program. Our first objective is the improvement of the Defense Production Act.

4. To help establish local consumer committees through which the people may be fully advised of the developments in Washington, violations of price regulations may be publicized, and to cooperate with public-spirited merchants for local anti-inflation programs.

5. To encourage authorized delegations from labor and other groups to seek appointments with Senators and Congressmen during the forthcoming Easter recess to set forth the problems of the consumer.

6. To secure the widest publicity through the labor press and, if necessary, through the purchase of local radio time and newspaper space, for the voting record of Senators and Congressmen on major bills affecting the fight against inflation and for a better defense mobilization program.

To this program of action, we pledge our united effort.

Meany: Don't Look For Snafu Cure In D. C.

APPLAUSE greeted AFL Secy.-Treas. George Meany when he told the United Labor Conference, "The first step is to scrap our present price control system.

"I suspect that the controls were not expected to control anything. The Congressional Record shows that there has not been any criticism of the control system from Sens. Taft and Wherry. The reason: there has not been any price control system."

"The whole attitude of Congress and the people running the mobilization agencies is something that has been developing since World War II. Despite the production record of labor in the war, big business and its lackeys in Congress seem to have decided that labor came out of the war too strong morally, numerically and financially."

Meany said that "the people who passed the Taft-Hartley law were elected by you and you. Let's look for the cure. But not in Washington. Money is the real pressure in Washington and we don't have that kind of money. Perhaps the issues will not be decided until November, 1952."

'I Called 'em As I Saw 'em'

—So Says Editor Swim, Who Is Leaving CIO News For Job With Marshall Plan Agency At Paris, France

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THIS IS GOING to be a tough one to write. You see, it's my last column as editor of the CIO News.

On an occasion such as this, so the journalism rule book says, an editor is to be forgiven if he talks about himself.

OK, here goes. I held the job for three years and eight months. I called 'em as I saw 'em. I ran the paper without having officers of the CIO look over my shoulder to see what was going into print.

I hope I didn't make too many mistakes. I hope I made some contribution to the labor movement and to union journalism.

In a few weeks I'll be on my way to Paris, France, to work with the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Well, that's about it.

NOW LET'S take look at some of the things which happened during those 44 months I was editor. Events are always more important than editors.

Because the Democrats took a beating in 1946, labor got kicked later in the seat of the pants—when the Awful 80th Congress passed the Taft-Hartley Act.

The "experts" put Tom Dewey in the White House two years later but the voters sent him back to Albany. Labor was given a large share of the credit for Truman's re-election.

BUT NOT much of the Truman Fair Deal was enacted into law because the Dixie-crats teamed up with conservative and reactionary Republicans.

In 1950 the Democrats again lost ground in Congress. And by the end of '50 the emphasis had shifted from domestic to foreign affairs.

By early 1951 labor realized it had been kicked in the seat of the pants again—this time by those directing our mobilization program.

The big story of those 44 months, however, was written by the men of the Kremlin. For a long time we in this country only added the footnotes.

One of the important footnotes was written in 1949 and 1950 by the CIO. It struck at the heart of communism in the U. S. when it expelled 11 unions on charges of consistently following the CP line in preference to CIO policy.

This really hurt the comrades. It destroyed their chief base of operations in this country. It discredited them among workers throughout the world. It gave encouragement to anti-Commie unionists elsewhere.

One of the silly—and dangerous—footnotes was written by the supporters of McCarthyism and by those who tried to establish ideological guilt by association.

This group struck a blow at our civil liberties, which provide democracy with its backbone.

LAST JUNE MARKED a turning point in our history, when we began demonstrating in Korea we weren't kidding when we said we'd fight Red aggression.

Not long after this Congress fumbled the stabilization ball. It passed a hodge-podge Defense Mobilization Act which wasn't designed to provide equality of sacrifice.

In January of this year the "freeze" was imposed by the mobilizers. Before the "thaw" began millions realized they'd been hoaxed when told there was to be stabilization.

Big business moved in and took over the mobilization show. And labor was given "the business" when it asked for a voice in determining mobilization policy.

Labor then withdrew from the defense agencies and launched a campaign for public support of its "equality of sacrifice" program.

MANY THINGS happened during those 44 months and one of the most important was America's decision to spend a lot of manpower and money in an effort to halt the spread of Communism.

In this campaign we've made progress—and we've made blunders.

Some profiteered at home while others were dying in fox-holes in Korea.

In one way or another the men of the Kremlin and the men on Capitol Hill have changed the lives of all of us.

So it seems altogether fitting—at least to me—that I should be heading for Europe.

There are quite a few Commies over there and I'm told that I'm going to get a crack at 'em.

So it's time to say "so long."

IT'S BACKFIRING!

The effort to grab control of the mobilization program and operate it as a monopoly on behalf of big business is backfiring.

All you had to do to find this out was to be on hand in Washington last week when representatives of some 15 million workers got together at one big meeting to launch a nationwide "equality of sacrifice" program.

The meeting itself was the first of its kind in history—the first at which organized labor presented a real united front.

Leaders of the CIO, AFL and the rail unions appeared on the program, working closely together for a common cause.

In the meeting room were unionists from all over the country—men and women who came to Washington so they could get first-hand reports on the attempted grab by big business.

These men and women brought along stories from back home—stories of complaints by Joe and Mary, Hank and Ruth about rising prices for consumers and rising profits for corporations.

They made it plain they thought all American labor—not just union members—had been getting a raw deal.

Some of them were a bit angry about the situation when they arrived in town. After they learned in detail how their leaders had been ignored or pushed around by those running the mobilization show more of them were angry.

They were going back home, they said, and tell everybody who would listen just what had been going on.

Many of them were astounded—to say the least—when they learned that the "labor strike" against the defense program, about which some editorial writers had been raving, wasn't a strike at all.

"When you go on strike," one union leader declared, "you pull away from their jobs people who are doing productive work.

"You could put into one taxi all of the union representatives we withdrew from the defense agencies—and we withdrew them all. None of them was really producing because they weren't permitted to produce."

WE NEED NEW LAW

What the country really needs is a new Defense Mobilization Act — or a lot of amendments to the present act—and realization by leaders of government that the nation must have a mobilization program that is reasonably fair to all segments of the population.

The present program isn't fair. It isn't representative of all the people. It's loaded in favor of big business.

That's why the big business attempt to run the show for the benefit of itself is backfiring.

That's why people throughout the country are joining organized labor in its complaints about the way things are being run.

If the program were reasonable and fair there would have been no such meeting as that called in Washington last week by the United Labor Policy Committee.

If it were reasonable and fair labor wouldn't be outside the mobilization agencies and it wouldn't be spending a lot of time, effort and money to get its story to the public.

And labor wouldn't feel confident—as it does now—that public resentment will cause the matter to be straightened out.

Swim Resigns, Fleisher Gets CIO Position

CIO PRES. Philip Murray last week announced the resignation of Allan L. Swim as director of publicity and editor of The CIO News.

Swim submitted his resignation in order to accept an overseas government position in which, he said, he will have an opportunity to "return to Europe and carry on there my personal campaign against Communism."

In accepting "with regret the termination of our working association," Murray voiced pleasure at the "splendid and constructive job you have accomplished in the last three and a half years in your responsible position with our organization."

AT THE SAME time, Murray announced the appointment of Henry C. Fleisher to succeed Swim as CIO publicity director and editor of The CIO News. Fleisher, a member of the CIO staff since 1937, has been assistant publicity director of the organization since his return from the army in 1946.

Swim, prior to joining the national CIO staff in 1947, was a writer for the Scripps-Howard newspapers in Memphis, Tenn. In 1946, he was named public relations director for the CIO Organizing Committee, with headquarters in Atlanta, Ga.

Haywood Asks Councils, Aides To Pry India Grain From Hous

ALL CIO industrial union councils and regional and subregional directors have been urged by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organizations and councils, to write or wire their congressmen asking all-out support for the shipment of American grain reserves to India.

Haywood pointed out that both CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, who also is chairman of the CIO International Affairs Committee, have pledged support for the shipments in messages to both houses of Congress. In addition, he said, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, with which the CIO is affiliated, has also pressed for passage of the measure.

"I feel sure that I do not have to tell you that this great humanitarian proposal, to which absolutely no strings or reservations are to be attached, as far as CIO is concerned, is one which should appeal to the heart and mind of every CIO member throughout America," Haywood declared.

"While it is true that international communism will make an issue of this matter against the West and against America if this proposal should by any misfortune be blocked, it nonetheless remains a fact that America favors this gift, and certainly the CIO does . . . So it is of the utmost importance to the worldwide program of the democracies and to the kind of constructive foreign policy the CIO favors that prompt and favorable action be taken on the issue immediately by Congress."

Haywood said that although the measure has been voted upon favorably by the Senate, action is now being held up by the Rules Committee of the House.

Marriage No Permit For Hazardous Job

A Wage and Hour investigator told a New York knitgoods manufacturer last week that he had been illegally employing a minor in a dangerous occupation. The minor, a 17-year-old delivery boy, rode regularly on a freight elevator not licensed for passengers. Operating or riding on such elevators is one of eight hazardous occupations banned for minors under 18 by the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

The employer's defense was that the boy couldn't have been a minor because "he was married and the father of a child." The messenger, now over 18, is still on the job, and the employer now knows that birth certificates, not marriage licenses, are acceptable proof of age.

He Talked Entirely Too Soon, Too Loudly

THIS IS a story about a union negotiator who obtained an "additional" pay raise because of a poor telephone connection.

It happened some time ago in a community where a fairly large firm operated a branch factory.

Employes of the factory belonged to a CIO union and when contract renewal time rolled around a CIO field representative was sent in to negotiate a new agreement.

Soon he tangled head-on with the son of the owner of the factory, who had been sent to the community to handle negotiations for the company.

THE DISAGREEMENT between them was a simple one. The union wanted a pay increase of 8c an hour and the company negotiator said his firm wouldn't give more than 5c.

The union man said his group wouldn't accept a penny less and the company representative said he wouldn't give a cent more.

They got together and talked—and argued—but the situation didn't change.

Finally the union negotiator reached the conclusion he had gone as far as he could without referring the matter to the membership.

Because the factory was small he had a good idea what would happen. The group would accept the 5c offer reluctantly rather than go on strike.

THE NEGOTIATOR discussed the matter with the union executive board and it called a general membership meeting.

Soon workers began passing around the word that "we're going to settle for a nickle."

A foreman heard the talk and passed the information along to the son of the owner, just as the latter was leaving the plant for the downtown section.

The owner's son kept a brief appointment then dashed into the lobby of a hotel.

At the same time the union negotiator also entered the lobby.

He had just come from a strategy session with local union leaders.

AT THE strategy meeting the negotiator had argued in favor of holding out for 8c an hour.

Local leaders had suggested that he propose this to the union, but one of them said, "I'm afraid you'll only be wasting your time. Our boys will take 5c before they'll go on strike."

After considerable discussion the negotiator had agreed on a procedure to be followed.

He would report on negotiations, suggest that the group send him back to try for an extra 3c but agree to settle for 5c if that appeared to be the real sentiment of the union.

He was in low spirits when he left the meeting and headed for his hotel—because he knew the company could well afford 8c.

THE UNION representative passed near a telephone booth as he headed toward his room. He heard a man inside the booth talking in a loud voice and complaining about a bad connection. He listened and heard:

"Hello, papa. Can you hear me? I just called to tell you I'm going to save you a lot of money—3c an hour.

"You told me when you sent me here I could go as high as 8c but I fought 'em hard and tonight the union is going to settle for 5c."

The union representative went into action quickly. That night the members turned down the 5c offer and threatened to strike.

The next day a new contract was signed —and it provided an 8c pay increase.

90,000 Victims Of Reds In Czechoslovakian Labor Camps

FORTY-SIX FORCED labor camps, in their own grim way, were playing host on the first of the year to Czechoslovakians at odds for one reason or another with their Communist rulers, according to the March issue of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' organ, Spotlight.

In 30 of the camps were just under 90,000 victims of Red benevolence, according to Spotlight. Some were set up for terrorization of the regime's "political" enemies—Socialists, members of other anti-Communist parties and the men, women and children who have attempted to leave the Iron Curtain countries.

Others, according to Spotlight—a collection of reports from reliable sources in the Russian satellite nations—"might better be described as factories behind barbed wire," manned by cheap and mobile labor charged with carrying a heavy portion of Czechoslovakia's numerous five-year plans.

"An incautious word, leading to denunciation to the secret police, is sufficient to gain entry," Spotlight reports.

The ICFTU organ lists 30 of the original camps, with exact locations and the approximate number of inmates at the start of the year. They are:

EIGHT special camps for women: Vestec, near Brodu, 300 inmates; Kladruby, 200; Radnice, 200; Geyersdorf, 400 Jachymov XIV/S, 2800; Dlascovisce, 1600; Jaroslavisce, 1400, and Tabcice, 2400.

Four camps for young people: Kladno 15a, 2000; Albrechtice, 1300; Nova, 300, and Nova Ves, 300.

Other camps: Repov, 480; Kdyje, 2300; Pribam, 7000; Blansko, 800; Claby, 400; Kladno, 8000; Frydek-Slesko, 1400; Trinec-Morava, 2100; Kunice-Morava, 4100; Straz, 1400; Praha Ruzyne, 6500; Mikulovice, 1200; Menhartice, 1200; Vitmanov, near Jachymov, 23,400; Pardubice, 2600; Usti nad Lab, 8300; Hradistko, 2100, and Svaty Jan, 3400.

Spotlight also recounts the accumulating evidence "that international communism has passed the peak of its power and influence" and is now definitely on the decline—the subject also of a recent Voice of America broadcast.

Recent estimates of losses as high as 30% in Communist Party membership in Western Europe may be over-optimistic, Spotlight says, adding "there can be no doubt, however, about the defeats sustained by the Communists in free elections throughout the world during 1950."

"THE FULL extent of Communist organizational disintegration has been seen most strikingly," it says, "in recent weeks in Italy . . .

"Full credit has not perhaps been given to the spade work put in here by our affiliated Italian organization, the Italian Confederation of Trade Unions (CISL), which throughout 1950 had been steadily chipping away at solid Communist majorities and achieving remarkable results in one factory council election after another, often in reputed impregnable Communist strongholds such as Turin, Milan . . .

"It would be false modesty on our part to pass over in silence the influence which the ICFTU has had on developments."

A warning against permitting defections from communism to lead to the conclusion that the fight is over and won is sounded by Spotlight.

"The Kremlin is not meekly accepting its loss of influence in the satellite states," it says, "and will certainly fight to maintain its fifth column bases within the labor movements of the democratic countries.

"We may therefore expect to see not only a further stiffening of Soviet control over the satellites, but also renewed Communist attempts to persuade the workers of the free world that these Stalinist police measures are in some mysterious way 'progressive'."

THE VOICE OF AMERICA broadcast on the waning strength of communism in the free world asserted that the "sound and fury" of Red military aggression roaring to new heights in Korea, Tibet and Southeast Asia in recent months "fail to obscure the fact that in every nation where men may freely declare themselves, Stalin's henchmen have been beaten back."

"Not only have the Communists suffered sharp losses in votes in every free election," it added, "but their very lifeblood—working class support—has been ebbing away."

The broadcast cited Communist losses in political and trade union elections in many countries—including the United States —and carried a prediction by J. H. Oldenbroek, ICFTU secretary-general that before the end of 1951, "Communist union control will be ended in France and Italy."

"This unbroken pattern in every free country of the world—where ballots and freedom of speech prevail instead of bullets and slave labor camps—is a pattern of defeat," it said.

THE $1.25-A-COPY magazine of special appeal to big business, Fortune, in its February issue notes the first anniversary of ICFTU with a review of the initial year's activities.

"Even if it was losing the war of vituperation to the Stalinists," the magazine remarks, "it nevertheless had some impressive scalps on its belt after one year of battle."

Labor, United, Mobilizes For War On

By FRED ROSS

WASHINGTON has been the scene of many important meetings. It has never seen—outside of the halls of Congress—one as significant as that held Wednesday, Mar. 21, in the Presidential Room of the Hotel Statler.

The meeting was an historic occasion. Assembled in the Presidential Room were 700 representatives of the CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods from all parts of the country. They represented 15 million organized workers.

Never did so many representatives of so many organized American workers meet to decide on a common course of action. The meeting — the United Labor Conference — was called by the United Labor Policy Committee, which was formed last December by the three main branches of the union movement.

THE DELEGATES did decide on a common course of action. Aroused by the rising tide of inflation and the virtual do-nothing policies of the government that spawned rising prices, shrinking wages and higher taxation, the conference unanimously adopted a declaration of principles which:

- Called on Congress and the administration for a new and better Defense Production Act to supplant the law which expires June 30.
- Urged "real price control—dollar-and-cents price ceilings, honest enough to be enforceable, clear enough so that any housewife, shopping for her family, can have confidence that she is not being overcharged."
- Asked a wage program "flexible enough to permit justice and equity" for the nation's wage earners.
- Demanded tight rent controls "for the duration of the national emergency."
- Requested laws "to conform with the historic American principle that taxes be levied in accordance with the ability to pay."
- Urged the entrusting of manpower policies and administration "to responsible representatives of management and labor on both national and local levels," and avoidance of a labor draft.
- Called for full representation of labor, farmers, small business and independent consumer groups "on all mobilization and stabilization agencies—at the policy-making and administrative levels."

From this declaration of principles the delegates moved on to a program for action. (See Page 3 for the declaration and action program.) Under this program they agreed unanimously to:

1. Enlist the cooperation of all community groups.
2. Promote public meetings and radio and television programs.
3. Forward letters to Congress.
4. Establish local consumer groups.
5. Talk to members of Congress during the Easter recess.
6. Launch a wide publicity program.

CIO and AFL representatives in unprecedented numbers heard speeches of their leaders foretelling the creation of a united labor movement. They roundly applauded them. The picture of a united labor movement caught and held the imagination of the entire audience.

The delegates knew their way about and resolved that they would not be fooled. What they were thinking was aptly expressed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray when he declared:

"The conservative coalition in Congress produced a so-called anti-inflation bill that reminds one of the ancient dinosaurs which once roamed this world. Those ancient and loathsome reptiles had a gruesome appearance; they had practically no brain power; and they had mis-shapen bodies and tremendously long and useless tails.

"The dinosaurs were inefficient specimens of animal life.

"The Defense Production Act is an inefficient specimen of law.

"It is cumbersome and ineffective. It cannot keep prices down, and in many sectors of the economy, it does not even try. It is made to order for the exploiter, the profiteer and the speculator."

The applause which greeted a speech by AFL Pres. William Green showed that the delegates were fully in accord with his charge that "because of big business domination" in the mobilization drive, there exist:

". . . built-in inflation instead of stabilized living costs . . .

". . . a rigid price freeze, instead of flexible and workable wage stabilization, geared to the realities of economic and industrial conditions . . .

". . . authority over civilian manpower summarily transferred from the Dept. of Labor to Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson's own office and placed in the hands of an official who openly advocated conscription of civilian labor in the last war.

". . . not a single high government official courageous enough to come out in the open and demand that Congress act promptly to fortify the glaringly inadequate Defense Production Act, to adopt tight rent controls, and to enact a really equitable new tax law."

To the delegates, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey gave this economic fact: U. S. corporations' 'take' increased from 5.9% of the national income during the war years to 11.5% in the fourth quarter of 1950. In the same period, the share of the national income going to wages dropped from 62% to 61%.

Labor Is Locked Out, Reuther Declares

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers told the conference:

"Two and a half months ago I was appointed to represent labor on an advisory committee of the National Production Agency. I have not been invited to one meeting.

"They say labor is on strike—we were locked out."

And Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers expressed the spirit of the meeting by saying:

"We are here to negotiate a new contract. Otherwise, we do a disservice not only to the workers we represent but also to the American public . . .

"Let us get a contract that will guarantee that the Capitol will remain in Washington and not be transferred back to Wall Street."

The fulfillment of the United Labor Conference will require major efforts.

There were few delegates who thought that carrying out the program they adopted would be a lead pipe cinch. And CIO Pres. Murray reminded them:

"The success or the failure which might attend our efforts on plans passed here today rests with you. Arouse community interest and get the support of all right-thinking people and you will win.

"With 15 million workers bound together in this effort to seek perpetuation of our democratic system, there is no force on God's green earth that can stop us."

Carey: 'Goug

"HYPOCRISY and shameful g of the American people" are coming more and more of a comm place under the present big busi rule of our government," CIO Se Treas. James B. Carey told the Un Labor Conference.

Carey quoted from a business maga article which showed how a business could borrow a half million dollars an no time, make a profit of $6675.

"He hasn't done a single thing but bo the money!" Carey declared. "There i need to stress the point that no Amer working man can borrow a half-millio order to make a quick clear profit of $66

"There are a lot of people who beli that labor representatives make speec but do nothing about carrying out t ideas," Pres. Joseph Beirne of the C Communications Workers told the Un Labor Conference as he urged adopt of the program for action.

Speaking of profits, Carey quoted st tics, saying that "In the first quarte 1950, the profits made on each hour of by each of the nation's 13 million produ workers was already at the staggering ure of 86½c an hour. In short, the emp was making 86½c per hour on each hour worked!

"But, this was only a starter. By the fourth quarter of 1950, this profit had jumped to $1.21 an hour—an increase of 34½c for each hour worked. Let that comparison sink in. Production workers got an increase of 10c an hour for their labor, while the employer raked in an increase of 34½c an hour on that same hour of labor!"

Carey hit at restrictions on credit buying of homes. The regulations call for a down payment of 23% of the purchase price, he pointed out—"presumably that would help stop inflation."

Carey then asserted: "If you should want to buy a $10,000 house with only a 10% down payment, because that's all the money you have, you are accused of wanting to create more inflation.

"But, you can take that same $1000 and walk into a brokerage house and buy for 10% down, $10,000 worth of cotton or corn or wheat or tin or lead or copper or soybeans. You may never have seen those products, never even wanted to raise them. You simply make a down payment and wait for the prices to go up."

HST Can Oust Wilson

While calling for adoption of the conference's program of action. Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers said that Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson has "greater power than any man ever had who did not hold an elective office. If the President is desirous of carrying out the mobilization effort, he has the power to remove Wilson."

Green Hits Business Domination

A pertinent excerpt from the speech of AFL Pres. William Green to the United Labor Conference:

BEHOLD THE picture! At the top of the structure sits the one-man czar of the defense program, Charles E. Wilson, ex-president of the giant General Electric Corp.

Beside him are two hand-picked corporation directors, to carry out his bidding.

Beneath them are ranged lesser business executives, each one chosen from a particular industry to make defense policies affecting that industry.

Thus, furniture price and production policies are made by men selected from big furniture companies, clothing prices and policies are taken care of by executives drawn from big clothing firms—and so right down the line. Believe me, these representatives of business are taking good care of their own businesses.

Where does the public interest fit into this picture? Where does labor fit into the picture? Nowhere!

When Wilson speaks of the need for "neutral" consideration and determination of defense policies, he is condemning the whole special-interest structure which he heads.

At the outset of the defense program, before the appointment of Wilson, an entirely different spirit prevailed in the Government. W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board, which was then coordinating the work of defense agencies, voluntarily invited representatives of labor, management and agriculture to consult with him and agreed to appoint experienced men in these fields to his staff.

The advent of Wilson immediately threw the policy of democratic defense participation into reverse. He staffed defense agencies from top to bottom with businessmen. Even the so-called public representatives were only considered "safe" enough to be appointed if they had a business background.

Labor was left out in the cold. The only representation we had left was of an inconsequential nature, for window-dressing purposes only.

Murray: Labor, Public Have Good Reason To Be Concerned

Here are some of the highlights of CIO Pres. Philip Murray's speech to the United Labor Conference:

WE ARE concerned about inflation —about the spiralling cost of living.

We are alarmed by hypocritical efforts to freeze wages into a narrow, inflexible mould — while prices rise sky-high.

We are disturbed about the failure to extend rent controls, and to bring back rent controls in the thousands of communities where they have been already removed.

We are disturbed about an out-of-balance tax program, that would bear its new burdens most heavily on moderate income families, rather than on the wealthy profiteers, where they belong.

We are disturbed about the possibility that civilian manpower will be mobilized not in our traditional voluntary way, but by unnecessary compulsion.

And we are excited because the direction of this defense mobilization program—a program of, by and for all the American people —has slipped into the hands of a clique of men who represent only one attitude: the attitude of the top executive offices of big business.

* * *

Let us look at the facts. Let us examine that Regulation No. 6 which was issued by the industry and public members of the Wage Stabilization Board and approved by the Economic Stabilization Director.

First of all, it provided a mechanical formula for determining how much of a wage increase you could receive before your pay envelope magically crossed the line into inflation—this, mind you, at a time when prices were rising every day.

The six public and industry members decided that the line would be crossed at 10%. That is, they said, you would be permitted to get an increase only up to 10% of the wages you were being paid on Jan. 15, 1950. This is supposedly based on the increase that has taken place in the cost of living—yet, no provision was made to increase the formula for the certain rises of the future. Instead, we were promised a study sometime in May. Well, studies don't buy groceries.

Under the formula, if you were a $50,000 a year corporation executive, you could get a $5000 increase—and it wouldn't be inflationary. But if you were a 50c-an-hour service employe in some little shop, the Board majestically decided that a wage raise of 6c an hour—six cents an hour, I repeat—would be inflationary! Your 6c would upset the nation's economy; it would endanger the stability of great corporations, whose staggering profits are increasing daily.

* * *

We said to the wage board: What are you going to do about the two or three or more million of workers who are covered by cost-of-living and productivity contracts? Will you let those contracts run their normal, stable course?

No, said these stabilizers, if a stable cost-of-living contract bumps into our rigid formula, the contract will have to be violated. The stabilizers well knew they were risking instability in half a dozen of our most vital industries; they knew that workers had fought for those contracts, and would fight, on the picket line if necessary, to keep them.

Yet, the Board majority was willing to risk strife, discord and instability for that miserable formula, intended—they said—to bring stability.

There was one further big question that we of the Labor Policy Committee had to ask about the wage board majority's policy declaration. We wanted to know how the board would handle disputes arising out of the stabilization program. Again, the answer from the industry members was a clear-cut "no." They boldly said that the Congress and the Defense Production Act had given them this veto power over a disputes board

They boldly proclaimed that the way to handle disputes is by T-H injunctions.

Problem Of U. S. Cities: Minority Housing In A Ghetto Psychology

"THE LINCOLN Cafe, two blocks from the Lincoln house, has a portrait of the Civil War president flanked by two silk flags. The Lincoln Cafe also has a sign reading 'We reserve the right to refuse service to anyone . . .'"

This was Springfield, Mo., birthplace of the Great Emancipator, in the year of our Lord 1950.

The quotation is from "In These 10 Cities," a lavishly illustrated, 30-page study of racial discrimination in housing and community facilities published by the Public Affairs Committee and available to CIO members through the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

The pamphlet consists of studies of the racial situation, mainly as regards housing, in 10 cities selected at random by the New York State Commission on Discrimination in Housing, which was organized in 1949 by representatives of racial, religious, housing, labor and other groups. The cities: Charlottesville, Va.; Sledge, Miss.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Los Angeles, Denver, Springfield, Mo.; Chicago, Detroit, Waterbury, Conn., and New York.

Except for subtle underlining of the contrast between ideals and practices, the study does not preach. It does, however, make these points:

1. The location and attractiveness of its home generally determine a family's place in the community.
2. Segregation of minorities as to housing leads to segregation and discrimination in schools, churches, employment and recreation.
3. Segregation "is too often identified with the south. Many northern cities enforce housing segregation more rigorously than the south does. The nation's largest ghettoes, for example, are not in New Orleans or Atlanta but in Chicago and New York."
4. Urban redevelopment, a hifalutin' word for getting rid of slums, cannot be handled intelligently where segregation is part of the picture, because "central slums cannot be torn down until decent housing is provided elsewhere for the inhabitants, who are usually minority groups. And in nearly every city the only vacant land suitable for relocating these families is outside the segregated districts."
5. Segregation plays right into the hands of unscrupulous real estate dealers. To nobody's benefit but their own.

This, the pamphlet states, is particularly true in cities where Negro families who have the means try to buy property outside of the slums.

"The broker," the study explains, "encourages the white owner to sell, often at a loss. The panic causes a temporary drop in land values. Speculators buy at this point, and then sell to the Negro at 30 to 100% above normal value. Ultimately prices become stabilized at or above the original level."

Highlights from various city reports:

CHARLOTTESVILLE: Negro housing is concentrated along the railroad tracks. The three Negro developments are "rotten and over-priced." There is no public housing. A private Interracial Commission is functioning, with little success.

SLEDGE: "Segregation in Sledge is a paradox. On the one hand, white and Negro sharecroppers often live side by side; the luxury of segregated housing is prohibited by cotton's need for manpower. Yet the very poverty of the Mississippi culture makes the poor white seek some distinction from the Negroes who live in identical squalor. Thus the miserable little store . . . is divided by a beaverboard partition so that black hands may never touch the counter where white ones reach for a coke. . . ."

PHOENIX: "Few Cities can boast of more wretched slums. Phoenix is as staunchly jim crow as the average southern city." But there have been some successful efforts to combat this tendency: the Park Commission built "a first-class recreation and swimming pool—unsegregated—in the heart of the slum district," and Phoenix's St. Monica's Hospital "was the first American hospital founded with a definite inter-racial policy." On the other hand, the three public housing projects are segregated, "because it seemed a decade ago to be a choice between segregation or no housing at all."

LOS ANGELES: "The Negroes are slowly moving out of the ghetto. . . . and there has been little violence." Mexican-Americans and Japanese-Americans are making real headway. The City Council has adopted an ordinance opposing any discrimination in federally-financed redevelopment projects, but building has not gotten beyond the planning stage. All 24 existing housing projects built by the city itself are interracial.

DENVER: "Denver has made an honest start." It has a permanent and effective Human Relations Committee. Only a fraction of the housing need has been met by the Denver Housing Authority. Projects until recently have been entirely segregated, although "recently the authority has cautiously begun to mix racial groups in some of these dwellings." New projects, of which many are planned, will be built on relatively vacant sites. . . . There will be no segregation. . . . The General Hospital is becoming a model of fair treatment.

SPRINGFIELD: Schools are inter-racial, but strict segregation prevails in pools and on beaches. Nearly all of the city's 6000 Negroes live east of the Wabash Railroad tracks. In public housing projects, there are separate buildings for Negroes and whites, but both races share a single project with many common facilities.

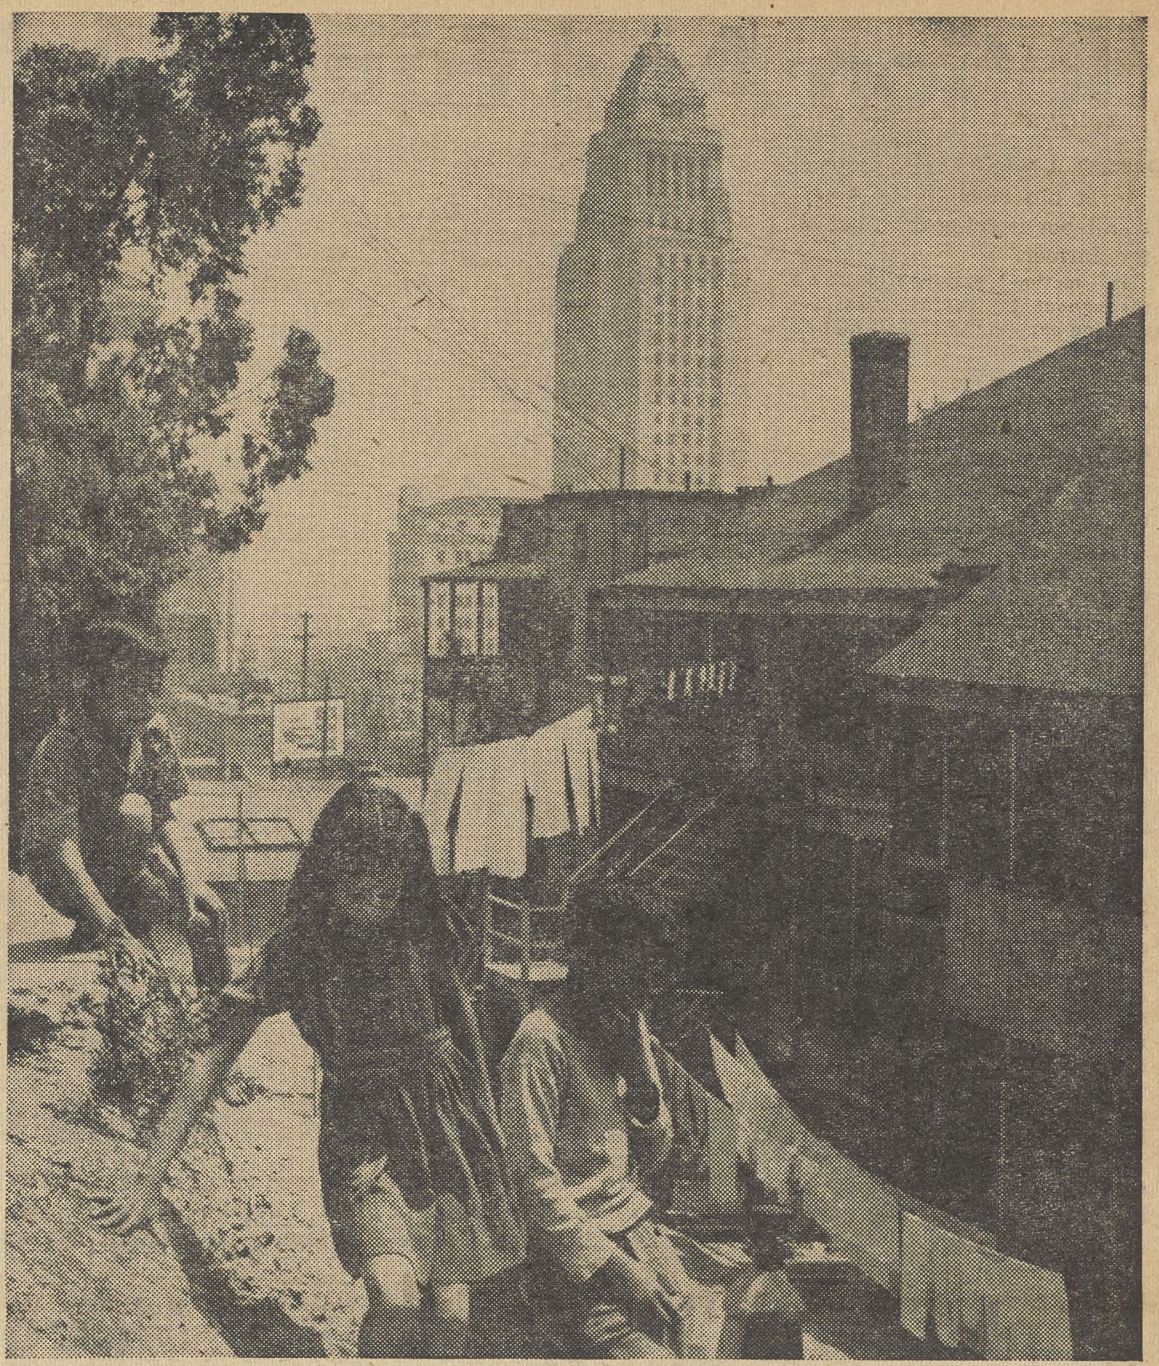
CHICAGO: The race issue has been a main factor in the blocking of any new public housing, and the pamphlet blames this squarely on local politicians interested in maintaining the status quo. Chicago also is the headquarters for three of the most powerful real estate organizations. The race issue is handled in an under-cover fashion, through whispering campaigns.

DETROIT: Here the issue is out in the open. Detroit's Negro population numbers about 300,000. Their housing is deplorable and way over-priced. The city administration's current and only plan is to tear down 8550 slum dwellings in the central slum area and replace them with 8900 "new slums," making no provision for the displaced families in the meantime. "The public schools do not segregate in theory, but geography does the job."

WATERBURY: Public housing was segregated until a year ago. Community facilities are non-segregated. There is widespread discrimination in employment. Waterbury is "no horrible example, nor yet a model."

NEW YORK: There is low-rent public housing for New York's millions of Negroes, but no good private housing is available. Discrimination in new housing, public or private, which gets any tax benefits from the city, has been prohibited.

Copies of the pamphlet may be obtained from the National CIO, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C., at the following quantity prices: 30c per copy; 4 copies for $1; 25 copies for $5; 100 copies for 18½c each; 1000 at 17½c each.



Los Angeles' Teeming Ghettoes In The Shadow Of The City Hall

Harding College Film Called Brannan Plan 'Satire'

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE UNSUBTLE approach of big business to American labor is being tried out on the farmer.

In motion picture houses throughout the Middle West, he is being exposed, in a semi-captive audience fashion, to a cartoon movie, "Fresh-laid Plans," which pokes fun at government planning in agriculture and is described by Alfred D. Stedman, liberal farm editor of the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press, as a "satire on the Brannan Plan."

It is sponsored by an outfit experienced in the captive audience technique—Harding College, of Searcy, Ark., the unaccredited institution used by the notorious Dr. George S. Benson and his big business financial angels as a springboard for union-busting.

BENSON WAS the inventor of the captive audience technique, to which he has given the imposing label, "Freedom Forums." At them, as many CIO members in Middle and Far Western factories and packinghouses know, speakers trained by Benson give tricky talks stressing the virtues of the American way and American capitalism, and decrying Communism. As Benson and his trained seals see it, "communism" is anything that interferes with profits — including unions, though they're never mentioned by name.

The workers' reaction to forced exposure to such propaganda hasn't always been what their bosses hoped for. CIO members have tagged it with such names as "the Bosses' PAC" and "Operation Gaspipe."

The film is the fifth in a series made for the Harding College "Public Education Program" by John Sutherland, a graduate of Walt Disney's cartoon factory who apparently absorbed Disney's anti-unionism along with his technique. It is being distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"FRESH-LAID Plans" purports to show how a poultry community fell to pieces when it put into practice the "crackpot" theories of a professorish rooster for prior guarantees, farm payments, consumer subsidies, rationing, policing of black markets and taxation to pay for enforcement.

Sutherland has written and directed all five in the film series, receiving a total gross of $360,000. His stories were first submitted in outline form to Harding for approval. Three more movies are on the way, dealing with profits, taxation and inflation.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has distributed all five of the films. The first was a portentous warning that socialism'll get ya eff you don't watch out called "Make Mine Freedom." The second was "Meet King Joe" a glorification of invested capital and the beneficence it has allegedly bestowed on the workers. The third was "Why Play Leap Frog?" a sly attack on wage increases, and the fourth was "Alice In Blunderland," an ironic treatment of Russia under Communism.

Profits from all five films go to the college.

Benson's Freedom Forums are sometimes confused with the Freedoms Foundation, Inc. The confusion is unnecessary, because they're branches off the same tree. Freedoms Foundation is the outfit that has its headquarters at Valley Forge, Pa., and celebrates Washington's Birthday by handing out cash awards, medals and certificates of merit to a wide variety of persons and publications who have contributed to its version of the American Way Of Life. This "Credo," as it has been misnamed by its sponsors, is anti-union, anti-New Deal, anti-Fair Deal and as reactionary as a suddenly enriched radical.

Labor newspapers have steadfastly refused to be mousetrapped into accepting Freedoms Foundation awards. Four thus "honored" this year, including the Light Edition of the CIO News, flatly turned them down.

Among the backers of Benson's college and its program are Don Belding, New York advertising man and tub-thumper for "anti-labor Americanism," and E. F. Hutton, anti-Semitic, pro-fascist, anti-labor Wall Street millionaire whose well-filled tub Belding has often thumped for gifts to reactionary propagandists.

BELDING, BESIDES backing Benson, is president of Freedoms Foundation. Hutton, a Harding trustee, is also a director of Freedoms Foundation.

Testimony before the House Lobby Investigating Committee of last year headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) showed that Hutton was a heavy "purchaser" of publications of the Foundation for Economic Education, sedately anti-union brain trust of reactionary Republicanism, and the Committee for Constitutional Government, the more blatant tory powerhouse kept steamed up by Edward A. Rumely.

Rumely, convicted of dealing with the enemy during World War I, goes on trial Apr. 12 on a charge of contempt of Congress. The lobby probers accused him of refusing to identify wealthy CCG benefactors

Natl. Tax Equality Assn. Termed 'Unscrupulous' By GOP Congressman

The National Tax Equality Association, a big business front which has been trying for years to get a tax levied on cooperatives, was described as "racketeering" and "unscrupulous" in a House speech Mar. 20 by Rep. Reed (R. N.Y.).

Reed is top Republican on the Ways and Means Committee, where tax legislation is started on its way through Congress. He told the House that the NTEA has misled businessmen for several years into contributing funds to its "propaganda campaign" by falsely claiming such contributions are tax deductible.

One Of World's Great Papers Seized By Peron

ONE OF the world's great newspapers died last week when Dictator Peron's Argentinian government seized La Prensa, independent Buenos Aires daily which had fought him since his rise.

Its control was placed in the hands of a joint congressional committee loaded with Peron stooges which was given full power to "intervene and investigate." The committee's first move was to seal all doors of the newspaper plant, except one, on Mar. 20, and to bar all employes and the owners.

On Mar. 21 Alberto Gainza Paz, the doughty editor who with his family owns most of the stock, was prevented by police from flying to Uruguay to spend the Easter holidays with his mother at her ranch there. His papers were "not in order," he was told.

The following day Peron's police were ordered to pick him up and hold him for 15 days on a charge of contempt of Congress, but reported he had disappeared.

LA PRENSA had been closed since Jan. 26 because of a strike and boycott by the News Vendors' Union, a tool of Peron's politically powerful and ambitious wife, Evita Peron. Other Peron-controlled unions refused to service the newspaper. Employes who tried to run it were attacked and one was killed.

It is understood that Evita Peron was responsible for the strike and the closing of the paper because it had offended her. Every year she collects funds disguised as gifts from the unions she controls, ostensibly for charity. Always she tells the donor "No, no, you must keep this——." One financially-pressed union officer took her seriously and did. La Prensa printed the story and its troubles started.

The assault on La Prensa is not the first attack of the Peron regime on the free press. The anti-Peron newspaper Vos del Interior, published in Cordoba, also has been shut by the demands of the News Vendors. Some five years ago Peron forced the closing of two small Catholic newspapers which had offended him in the cities of Junin and Parana. Shortly thereafter the Christian Democrats started a political weekly, Estrada, which criticized the earlier closings. After seven issues it was suppressed.

THE LA PRENSA case offers a fine hot potato to Ellsworth Bunker, New York industrialist who was sworn in Mar. 22 as new U. S. ambassador to Argentine. The closing has caused considerable embarrassment to Peron's friends in the U. S. State Dept. led by Assistant Sec. Edward G. Miller, Jr.

A few months ago Miller brushed aside protests from many individuals and groups, including the CIO, to authorize a $125 million loan to bolster Peron's tottering economy.

The CIO Executive Board at its recent meeting passed a resolution condemning the closing of La Prensa. Argentine Unions were excluded as not free when the Inter-American Regional Organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was set up recently.

TWUA Calls On Mill Head To Quit As N.C. Democratic State Chairman

THE CIO Textile Workers in North Carolina have sent a registered letter to the president of the Royal Cotton Mills, Inc., at Wake Forest, demanding that he resign from the political position he holds.

The president is B. Everett Jordan, of Saxapawhaw, who also happens to be chairman of the North Carolina Democratic executive Committee.

Another registered letter went to the wealthy vice president of the mill, who happens to be U. S. Sen. Willis Smith. It reminded him of the run-around the union is getting from the management and demanded that he do something in the way of keeping his campaign promises. Smith, a first-term Senator, was elected last year with the help of a Dixiegop combine out for the scalp of his liberal predecessor, former Sen. Frank Graham.

The letters were signed by Howard E. Parker, TWUA Joint Board manager at Durham and a former State Representative. Copies were sent Gov. W. Kerr Scott.

The TWUA demand that Jordan stop disgracing the Democratic party was based on his firm's "open and flagrant violation of the Labor-Management Relations (Taft-Hartley) Act."

The union won a National Labor Relations Board election last September. It submitted proposals described by Parker as "mild." This was done, he explained, in the hope that such a proposal would lead to smooth relations, collective bargaining in good faith, and an early contract.

"We find ourselves sadly mistaken," Parker wrote Jordan.

"We find that your officers apparently had no intention of bargaining in good faith with us.

"We find that your company . . . discharges employes for their union affiliation; interrogates other prospective employes as to their belief in unions and generally makes the working conditions of a known union-minded employe unpleasant . . .

"YOUR officers object to contractual benefits contained in every working agreement between this union and the several hundred companies with which we have contractual relations. They do this with the full knowledge that these benefits are granted by other companies, your competitors in many instances, with almost no discussion. They are accepted as good contractual practices.

"Your company continues to maintain a disgracefully low wage structure, at least 15c per hour, on the average, below the wages enjoyed by other organized workers in North Carolina and in this area. This is an indisputable fact and you know it . . .

"THE working people of North Carolina are proud of the record of the Democratic party. They cannot be proud of its present North Carolina head. We call upon you to resign your office as chairman of this great party and to turn it back into the hands of competent leadership; leadership which will at least recognize the basic rights of the working people who have consistently supported the party."

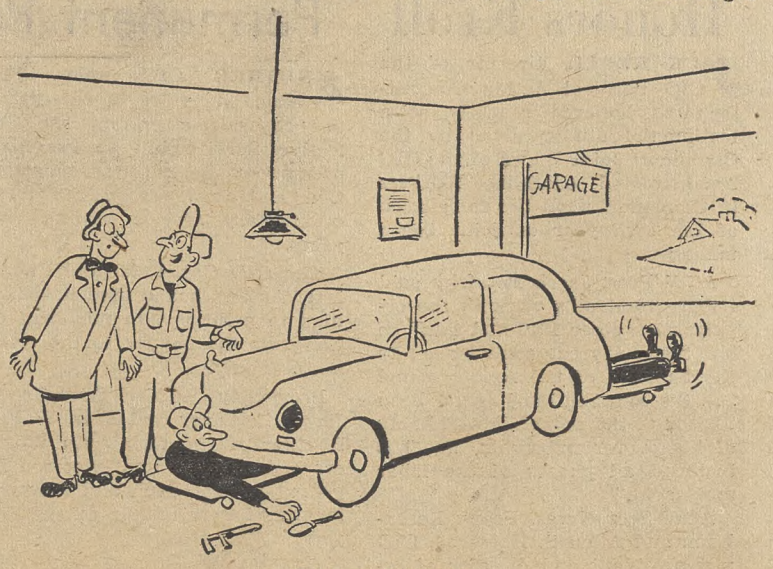
The letter to Smith, one of the main owners of the company as well as vice-president, was substantially the same as that to the State chairman. In addition, it reminded Smith that while the union has been working for a peaceful solution of the contract problem, management has discharged so many workers that NLRB unfair labor practice charges will be filed; that "the wages of the already underpaid employes" were cut until the union protested, and that prospective employes are quizzed on their attitudes toward unions before being hired.

"Senator," wrote Parker, "you were elected on the ticket of the Democratic Party, which is generally accepted as the so-called liberal party of our government.

"You were elected with votes influenced by your asserted belief in high wages and a liberal attitude toward the working class of this nation. It remains now for you to prove that these assertions were not 'just campaign promises.'"

"PARKER reminded Smith that his son, Willis Smith, Jr., has attended several negotiating sessions, and that Jordan was present at least once.

"With such representation," he concluded, "it is difficult to believe you are not aware of the action of your officers. If you are aware, you stand guilty of the basest deception simply for the purpose of gaining votes; you are guilty of false campaign promises and assertions and you are not worthy of representing North Carolina in the highest deliberative body of our nation."



"Tall, isn't he?"

Haywood Pays Tribute To CWA Leader

"AS LONG as our movement produces women like Frances Smith, I have no fear for its future," CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood said last week in expressing to the CIO Communications Workers the condolences of the entire CIO on the recent death of one of CWA's outstanding women leaders.

Mrs. Frances V. Smith, who was president of CWA's Michigan Division 15, and a pioneer in the work of building the CIO's telephone union, died of cancer Mar. 11 at St. Joseph Mercy Hospital, Pontiac, Mich.

MRS. FRANCES V. SMITH

Labor, management and government officials attended the funeral serivces for Mrs. Smith.

WHEN SHE was carried to her final resting place outside Detroit, the line of mourners in the funeral procession stretched for more than a mile through the streets of Detroit. Hundreds of rank and file Michigan telephone workers were in the cortege to pay a last tribute to Mrs. Smith.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne was one of the delegation of union officers who served as pallbearers. Ruth Wiencek, a longtime friend and co-workers of Mrs. Smith, attended the funeral ceremonies as Haywood's personal representative. Miss Wiencek is now on Haywood's staff.

Pres. August Scholle of the Michigan CIO Council paid the respects of the State CIO to Mrs. Smith.

Michigan telephone workers paid tribute to Mrs. Smith by stopping work during the funeral services for a minute of prayer.

Mrs. Smith is survived by her husband, Jack Smith, a fellow worker in the union cause, two teen-age daughters, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Sharrow, three brothers and four sisters.

IN EXPRESSING the condolences of the CIO to Mrs. Smith's relatives and to officers and members of the CWA, Haywood said:

"Frances Smith was an inspiration to all union men and especially to the women of our movement. Her work is a living tribute to her memory. She brought to our movement a great spirit of personal courage and threw herself without stint into the fight against the might of the huge communications monopoly. As long as our movement produces women like Frances Smith, I have no fear for its future."

VOTE TO RETURN TO CIO: Tellers are counting the ballots cast by members of Local 1-S, independent department store local, who voted 3327 to 1420 to return to the CIO. The local represents 8300 employes of the Macy store in New York City. The vote adds impetus to the drive of the newly formed CIO Department Store Organizing Committee which will conduct a nationwide drive. Headquarters for the new CIO affiliate are in New York.

Murray Calls For Measure To Provide Adequate Wage Base In Philippines

THE MINIMUM wage law that the Economic Cooperation Administration has set as the price of extensive Marshall Plan aid to the Philippine Islands has been passed by both branches of the island nation's Congress, BUT—

The Filipino Senate bill provides for full compliance nine months after enactment. The House bill, however, has an approach so gradual that full compliance could not be attained in less than two years—and probably three or four months more would be required on top of that.

The House bill is looked upon with disfavor because of the long interval before complete effectiveness. Both measures provide for a minimum of four pesos a day in industry, and 2½ pesos in agriculture with at least two pesos in cash (the rest may be in the form of meals, housing, etc.).

In addition, they would require direct payment of wages to the workers, who now often get their earnings through a labor contractor; and would establish wage boards which may set industry minimums above the statutory figure, but not below it. A peso is worth 49.2c.

SENATE and House committees are expected to begin conferences on the bills this week.

Immediate enactment of a minimum wage law to relieve exploited Philippine workers of the grinding burden of poverty that has been their lot was called for in the report of the commission, headed by former Under-Secretary of the Treasury Daniel W. Bell, which investigated economic conditions in the Philippines several months ago.

The report also urged a strong, free labor movement as an essential in improving the living standards of the people.

Free, democratic unions in the Pilippines are fighting to extend their lines against strong Communist and company unions. To aid them in establishing organization, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers granted leave to Paul Schuler, the union's regional director in New Orleans.

SCHULER is serving as CIO representative on a mission to the Far East. He just left the Philippines for Indonesia after spending four weeks there. In close cooperation with Richard C. G. Deverell, AFL representative in Asia, he conferred with many union leaders and government officials. As a result of his reports, CIO Pres. Philip Murray has strongly endorsed minimum wage legislation, but has urged something better than has been passed so far.

"The CIO is gratified to learn," said Murray, "that such a law has been passed by the Philippine House and the Senate.

"But we do not feel that it is adequate to meet the needs of workers who have suffered so long and unjustly, especially in view of the inflated prices they must pay for the necessities they require to keep themselves and their families. Minimum wages set so low will not permit people to live in the decency and dignity that are the natural right of every man, woman and child.

"IN THE case of the bill passed by the Philippine House, two years or more required for full compliance falls pitiably short of what is so urgently required.

"The CIO hopes the House and Senate conference committee will speedily throw out of the law a provision that is nothing less than a license for further exploitation of Philippine workers.

"Hope too long deferred has often been turned into an effective propaganda instrument by the Communists. They must not be allowed to use this weapon in the Philippines.

"The CIO has long had sympathetic interest in the lot of workers in the Philippines, as well as of working people in the rest of the world.

"We are anxious to do whatever we can to assist them in setting up their own free, democratic trade unions, and to help them throw off chains of the Communists on the one hand and of unscrupulous, exploiting employers on the other."

Joint Board Honors Kroll

JACK KROLL, director of the CIO Political Action Committee was honored recently at a testimonial dinner given by the Cincinnati Joint Board of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in Cincinnati upon the completion of his 25th year as joint board manager.

ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky paid tribute to Kroll's work in the organization since 1910 and said "he has made a great contribution to the building of the Amalgamated . . . his contribution has not been limited to the economic well being of his own membership, but has included all phases of the labor movement."

ACW Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum and Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, also extolled Kroll.

UGCCW Warns Members On Permanent Peacetime Draft

ANOTHER CIO union has added its voice in opposition to proposals amending the Selective Service bill to establish permanent peacetime conscription and to lengthen the term of military service beyond two years.

The CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers has alerted its members to point out to members of Congress the danger to the civilian economy.

Previously CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers had asked that servicemen be given job protection and that the length of service not extend beyond 27 months.

GCCWA officers have called on local unions to urge their members to ask Congressmen that a termination date be included in the legislation. Such a restriction is not contained in the measure now before the Senate.

THE PROPOSAL has the support of the nation's top military leaders. It would, for the first time in the history of the country, establish permanent peacetime conscription and would also extend military control over American civilian life, the union declared.

"The Senate bill and a slightly different version in the House would make conscription a permanent American policy in both war and peace and is much more than a simple extension of the draft law, as it has been termed," the UGCCW said.

More Tax May Kill Brewing, Feller Claims

PRES. KARL Feller of the CIO Brewery Workers has warned that a proposed additional excise tax on beer, the workingman's drink, "may well place it beyond the reach of the public and destroy the industry."

In a statement recently filed with the House Ways and Means Committee, Feller denounced the proposed increase in excise taxes on all beverages as "unfair, ill-advised and shortsighted.

"It is questionable whether they will yield substantial additional revenues," he said.

"We protest, in particular, any additional tax on beer. To place this additional burden on an already overburdened beverage may well place it beyond the reach of the public and destroy the industry.

"It is commonly said that beer is the workingman's drink, and this is largely true. But the size of the beer glass has been shrinking in recent years and its price has been rising. The tax burden on beer is fantastically heavy."

THE UNION president warned that increased excise taxes will tend to "drive scores of small breweries out of business and hasten the pronounced trend in industry toward concentration and monopoly." He added:

"We submit that any tax program which has such undesirable consequences should be scrutinized very closely. It places an unfair and excessive burden upon a staple, workingman's beverage; it places an unfair and excessive burden upon one American industry; it will lower consumption, produce reduced revenues and aid in the destruction of small business. There is a point beyond which beer cannot be taxed and that point has been reached. An industry which is now one of our greatest revenue-producers may well be placed in jeopardy by such a tax program."

FELLER likewise voiced concern that a proposed increase in the tax on distilled spirits, in conjunction with state and local taxes and license and permit fees, will help force retail prices to such a high level that "the bootlegging of alcohol on which no tax has been paid becomes attractive to lawless elements."

He called attention to the fact that "the fanatical forces of prohibition which are ceaselessly active in our national and state capitals, view any increase in alcoholic beverage taxes as a step toward prohibition . . .

"Those who would destroy the alcoholic beverage industry will enthusiastically support any proposal which will place a crippling burden upon the already overtaxed beer and liquor industries. We submit that this committee in its deliberations should disregard completely any 'control' or 'prohibition' arguments or considerations . . .

"Beer is a beverage for the masses, not to be treated in the same manner as expensive jewelry or expensive furs or perfumes. It is a beverage that the American worker has the right to enjoy. It must not be placed outside his reach through excessive taxation."

ORIT Board Will Meet In Havana

THE FIRST meeting of the executive board of the Inter-American Regional Organization (ORIT) of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions since it was established in December will be held Mar. 27 and 28 in Havana, Cuba.

The CIO will be represented by L. S. Buckmaster, president of the Rubber Workers, acting on behalf of Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO International Affairs Committee, and by Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin-American Committee and ORIT assistant secretary. Delegates from the AFL and the Mine Workers also will attend. Chairman Arturo Sabroso, of Peru, will preside.

Rich Richer, Poor Poorer

QUESTION: How can a company pay pensions amounting to $28,541,877 to 25,212 persons during one year and still have nearly $3.5 million more in the kitty as a result?

Answer: It can be done if the company is as big as the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and is drawing interest on a pension hoard of $1,231,332,149.

The annual report of AT&T shows that interest received by the fund in 1950 amounted to $31,995,196, or almost $3½ million more than what was paid out.

The average pension amounted to $1132, less than $100 monthly—and this average includes both management and non-management pensioners. Highest amount went to Walter S. Gifford, former AT&T board chairman and now U. S. Ambassador to the Court of St. James. He received a paltry $91,700.

Shell Grants 10% Wage Increase

THE CIO OIL Workers Intl. Union has received a 10% wage increase in a settlement of negotiations with Shell Oil Co.

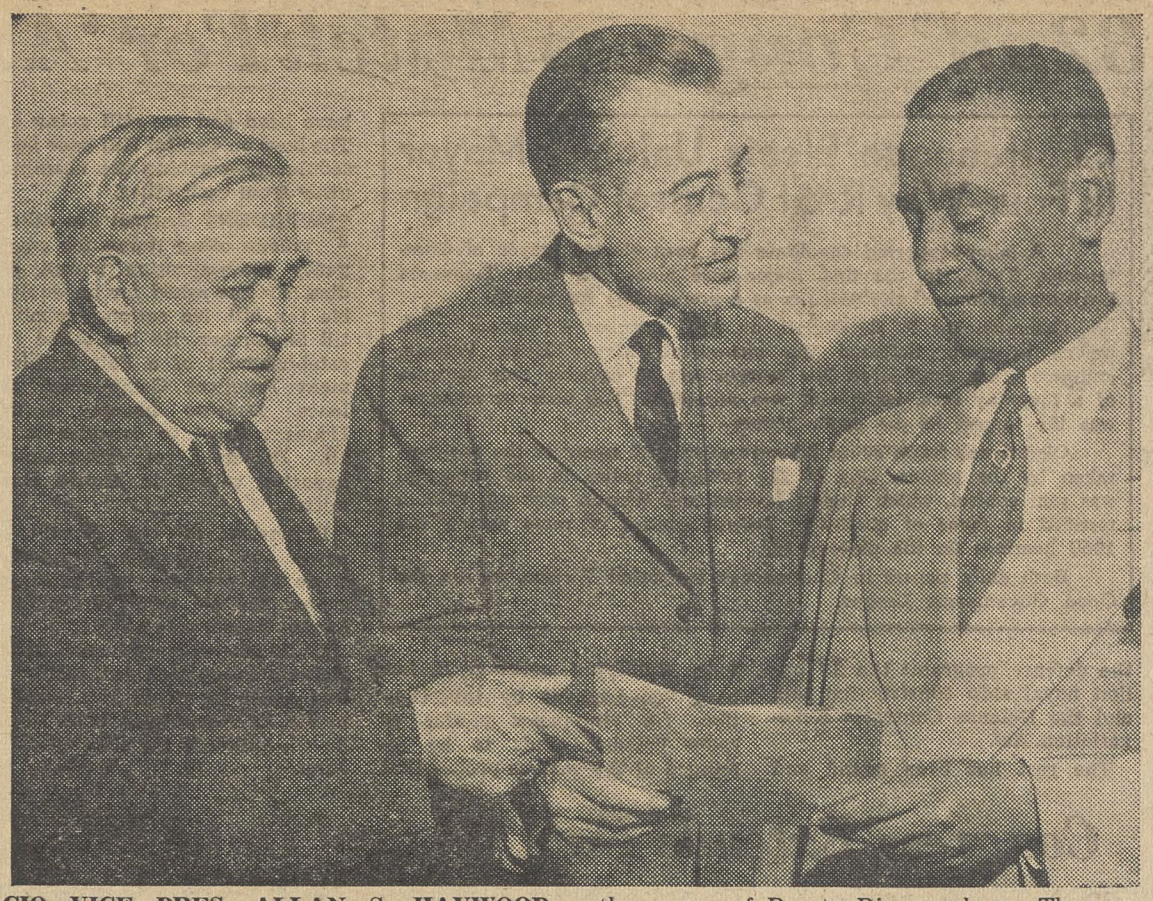
The increase, effective March 1, averages about 7c an hour for some 2800 oil field and refinery workers in Martinez, Bakersfield, Coalinga, Ventura and Long Beach, Cal.

The settlement is the first important agreement this year with a major California oil producer and is expected to set the pattern for pending negotiations with Tidewater Associated and other firms.

Missouri Utility Strike Ban Invalid

Another state law which prohibits strikes in public utilities was set to go down the drain last week in Missouri when State Attorney Gen. J. E. Taylor ruled the King-Thompson Act unconstitutional.

Taylor, in an opinion requested by the State House of Representatives, said the four-year-old law was in conflict with federal labor legislation. His ruling was based on the U.S. Supreme Court action of Feb. 26 which knocked out a similar law in Wisconsin.



CIO VICE PRES. ALLAN S. HAYWOOD (left) and Secy. Ernesto Ramos Antonini of the Puerto Rico General Confederation of Workers, CIO (right), ask Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston to refrain from freezing the wages of Puerto Rico workers. They are discussing a letter written by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Antonini in which it was pointed out that wages in Puerto Rico are "grossly substandard."

Ewing Urges Broader Social Security Plan

EXPANSION of the social security program to include national health insurance, social security for all workers, insurance for the permanently disabled and grants for needy workers has again been recommended by the Federal Security Agency.

In his annual report to the President and Congress, FSA Administrator Oscar R. Ewing said present laws go only part way toward the administration's goal —"a comprehensive, basic national system of contributory social insurance."

The report, which covers the 12 months ending June 30, 1950, states that the federal government paid out $1,863 million in benefits during the year. Nearly 3 million persons received $749 million from federal old age and survivors insurance. Public assistance grants from state and federal funds amounted to $2 billion for 4,531,000 persons.

Ewing also reported that last year's changes in the social security program have restored pensioners to a position relatively as favorable as in 1940, "before rising prices nearly halved the value of the insurance benefits." LPA

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

A historical conference was held last week in Washington by the CIO and AFL. This conference was presided over jointly by Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO and Pres. William Green of the AFL.

Allan Haywood

The cold facts of the wage stabilization problem were presented to the attending delegates from the councils, national and international unions of both groups. Labor is united against the efforts of the industrial monopolies ruining the American people. In presenting a strong front in this battle, real organic unity can be achieved between the AFL and the CIO. The writer was impressed by a statement made by the AFL's George Meany, where he said: "In searching the record, the only reason that can be explained for the CIO's expulsion from the AFL was for organizing."

This is a notable statement.

Members of the Organizational and Council Depts. also met this past week and these issues were discussed. We are calling upon everyone to render every cooperation possible.

United action now on all matters affecting the American people is imperative.

John Riffe, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, reports the following 10 victories won by the Southern staff in the past month: Harbison-Walker Refractories Co., Oxford, Ala., United Stone & Allied Products Workers 17, no union 0; John L. Roper Lumber Co., Roper, N. C., International Woodworkers 78, no union 3; Atlanta Metallic Casket Co., Atlanta, Ga., Steelworkers 259, no union 65; Richardson Co., Newnan, Ga., Rubber Workers 16, no union 7; Jeffries & Smith Lumber Co., Washington, N. C., Woodworkers 23, no union 3; Excelsior Brick Co., Montgomery, Ala., Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers 14, no union 11; Tennessee Corp., Cedartown, Ga., Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers 13, no union 5; Hood Chair Co., Greeneville, Tenn., Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers 64, no union 51; English Mica Co., Spruce Pine, N. C., Stone & Allied Products Workers 25, no union 0; and Tennessee Corp., Gainesville, Ga., Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers 14, no union 0.

Secy-Treas. John C. Lawson, United Stone & Allied Products Workers, reports that in a representation election at the Pine Hall Brick and Pipe Co., Pine Hall, N. C., the workers voted in favor of the USAPWA-CIO by a vote of 137 for, 60 against, 5 challenged. Intl. Rep. J. B. Foreman and Pres. Sam H. Scott worked together to accomplish this victory.

Field Rep. Alexander Hieken reports that in a representation election at the Port Arthur News (editorial department), Port Arthur, Tex., the employes voted in favor of the CIO Newspaper Guild by 10 to 1.

Reg. Dir. August Scholle reports that LIU 1064 won a representation election at the Fred B. Prophet Co., operating at the Schwayder Brothers, Inc., cafeteria, Ecorse, Mich. The vote was unanimous in favor of LIU 1064. LIU 1064 also won representation elections at the following Ford Motor Co. plants: Central Parts Depot, LIU 1064 11 (full-time employes), against 3, challenged 1; LIU 1064 16 (part-time employes), against 0, challenged 1; Lincoln-Mercury General Parts Depot, LIU 1064 (full-time employes) 4, against 0, challenged 0; LIU 1064 5 (part-time), against 0.

Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports that in a representation election among the office workers of the Sargoy Stein Auditing Co., for Motion Picture Exhibitors, they voted 29 to 0 against in favor of the CIO. Field Rep. Pete Flynn conducted the organizing campaign which brought about this 100% CIO victory.

Red Catch-All Loses Rights In N. Y. Agency

THE staggering left-wing Distributive, Processing and Office Workers took another wallop on the chin last week when the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York announced it would no longer negotiate with Local 19, Social Service Employees Union, upon expiration of the current contract on June 30.

Local 19 is a former affiliate of the United Office and Professional Workers, which was expelled from the CIO last year for following the party line. It is now part of the Communist-led catch-all DPO.

The action of the federation, central fund raising agency for 116 hospitals, health centers and social service agencies in the New York area, constitutes a major blow to the already battered left-wing group.

Ralph E. Samuel, federation president, announced the recognition withdrawal in a letter to all employes. He declared it is the federation's desire "to continue to maintain collective bargaining relations through whatever bona fide labor organization the majority of the employes may select."

The move applies directly only to the 250 employes of the federation itself. However, its affiliated agencies, employing more than 10,000 workers, tend to follow the pattern established by the parent body.

GCEOC Backs Pension Bill

The CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee sponsored a bill introduced in the House last week which would supplement Civil Service Retirement Act benefits for federal employes with coverage under the Social Security Act.

The measure, introduced by Rep. Lesinski (D. Mich.), would provide coverage for federal employes under both the Social Security Act, which gives relatively high benefits at low premium cost, and the Retirement Act, which provides relatively high pension benefits after 25 years service. It would not remove any of the benefits under the Retirement Act.

The Lesinski bill would also reduce the employe contribution from 6% to 3¼% on salaries up to $3600. Federal workers earning above that amount would pay the regular 6% Retirement Act deduction on that part of their salary which exceeds $3600.

Underwood Named To U. S. Senate

Rep. Thomas Rust Underwood from Kentucky's Sixth Congressional District has been named to the U. S. Senate by Gov. Lawrence Wetherby. Underwood, a Democrat and editor of the Lexington Herald, will succeed the late Sen. Virgil Chapman, who died in Washington, Mar. 8, after an automobile accident. A special election will be held to fill the House vacancy caused by Underwood's elevation.

The CIO Voting Guide lists Underwood as voting "right" eight times and "wrong" four times during the second session of the 81st Congress.

'Slothful 82nd' Congress Match For 'Awful 80th'

We've been asked why it is that the CIO News hasn't been running a "Keep Your Eye on Congress" box lately. The answer is that there is literally nothing to put in such a box. We could run a blank space, of course, listing what we believe ought to be done and repeating again and again that there is nothing pending on the subject —but we don't have space to waste like that. This story gives you some details.

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE 82d Congress has been in session for three months now, and in terms of accomplishment it makes the late unlamented 80th look good.

Literally the only piece of legislation of any social or economic importance to pass this Congress has been the simple 90-day extension of federal rent control, which got under the wire last week. This was just a resolution making the present weak law effective in all communities till june 30; it did not restore the badly needed power to recontrol communities, or allow the Housing Expediter to control rents in newly built accomodations.

Congress has passed two other important pieces of legislation, both confined to the mechanics of the defense program: the 2.7 billion naval ship construction bill, and the Defense Contracts Renegotiation Act.

The rest has been sound and fury, signifying nothing. It has been "government by investigation. No newspaper reader or radio listener needs to be reminded of the various probes that have been and are still going on. The boys on Capitol Hill have been sedulously grabbing the headlines away from each other.

PRESIDENT Truman has asked, among other items, for emergency reorganization power. No dice. He has asked for an equitable tax bill. No action, probably, till September. He has asked for establishment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission. Silence. Defense housing — the House refused to consider it at all. Dispersal of government agencies vetoed in House committee.

Extension of the President's power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements—the House accepted the old GOP version, the Senate hasn't acted.

Badly needed amendments to the Defense Production Act, including real price control: the amendments have not even been introduced, although the act expires in June.

Nobody should need to be reminded that the House gave back to the Rules Committee its old powers to control what goes to the floor, and that coalition government is firmly in the saddle once again, with the Rules Committee dominated by the worst of the Capitol Hill Dixiecrats.

First real result of this move: the Rules Committee flashed the red light on a food famine grant to India. Famine can wait while the House leadership decides what to do.

THE SENATE has been spending its time in a so-called "great debate" over whether the President has, or should have, power to send troops to Europe without asking the Senate's permission. Both Houses have been in a hassle over whether to draft 18-year-olds and what the size of the armed forces should be.

It's an incredible spectacle.

Chattanooga Elects Unionist Mayor In Four-Way Rent Control Campaign

A labor-supported candidate has been elected mayor of Chattanooga, Tenn., in the first major race since the 1951 Tennessee Legislature removed the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting.

Commissioner P. R. Olgiati, an AFL member supported by all unions in town, defeated the incumbent, Mayor Hugh Wasson, and two other candidates. His margin was so decisive that in spite of a four-way race, no run-off was necessary. The turn-out of votes was the largest in the city's history.

Olgiati was frank about his agreement with many of the positions taken by the unions. One of the principal issues in the campaign was rent control, which Olgiati favored and Wasson opposed. Wasson testified in favor of abolishing federal control of rents during the 1950 hearings on the present bill.

Both daily papers in Chattanooga supported Wasson, as did the Good Government League.

Congress Extends Rent Control Until July 1

CONGRESS has passed the resolution extending rent control till the end of June. This means that rent control will stay in effect till July 1, but only where it already exists, and then only if local governing bodies don't decide to do away with it in the meantime.

There still has been no administration bill introduced calling for a new and stronger rent control law, which is so badly needed. Rumor has it that this may be done this week.

The real estate lobby, losing no time, is putting out a lot of propaganda about how unfair, inequitable, etc., etc., rent control is, demanding relief from this intolerable burden which it claims is unfairly imposed upon the suffering landlords.

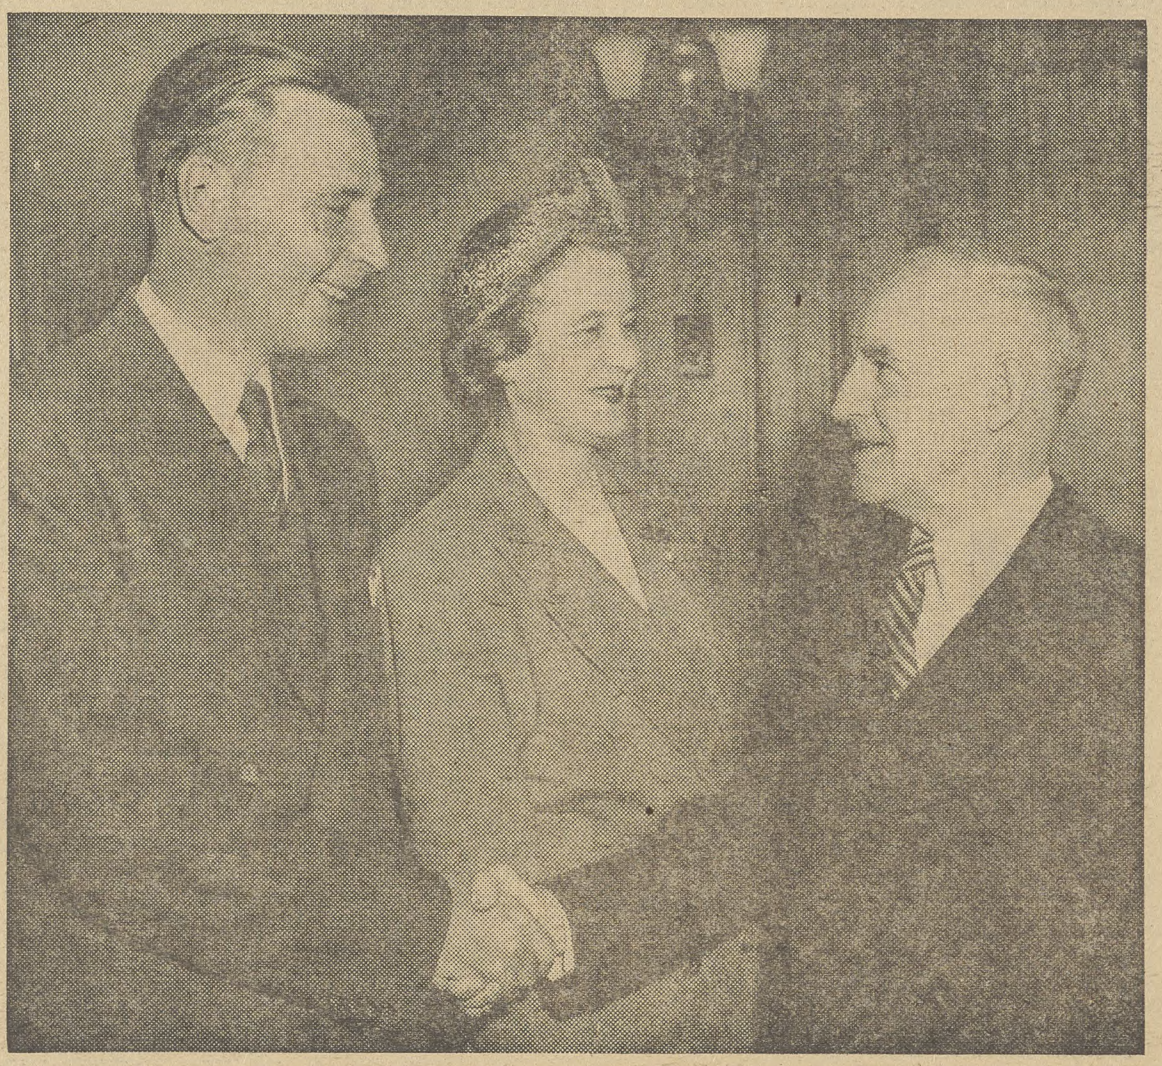
If it weren't so serious it would be funny. Currently the biggest selling point used by the lobby is that rent control now affects so few people it's really not worth keeping, from the tenants' point of view. On the other hand, they say, it is increasingly unfair to the landlords whose properties are still controlled.

Fact: some 9 million dwellings are now under rent control, even under the present shoddy law. This is more than half of the urban rental dwellings in the United States, according to the Census of Housing. If three people live in each of these 9 million dwellings, that means that the family budgets of 27 million people are involved in the forthcoming decisions.

Red Peace Campaign Planned South Of Rio

Soviet Russia is going to step up its propaganda campaign in Latin America, according to the Mexico City newspaper El Popular, which usually follows the Communist Party line.

The campaign is aimed at winning over additional "peace partisans" in Spanish-speaking countries, El Popular said, with the propaganda based on the phony Stockholm Petition to outlaw the atom bomb.



LABOR MAY HAVE A LARGER VOICE in manpower control in the mobilization effort as a result of the appointment of Frank P. Graham (right), former North Carolina Senator, as defense manpower administrator of the Labor Dept. While Mrs. Graham smiles approval, Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin congratulates Graham.

Korean War Winners? It's The Landlords

ONE MORE case history showing the need for a tough rent control law: Mrs. Agnes Annello, of Kinston, N. C., near the overcrowded Camp Lejeune area, received a notice from her landlady last month that her rent would henceforth be $125 a month instead of the $60 she had been paying.

Mrs. Annello is the wife of Lt. Vincent Annello, who is in Korea with the 3d Infantry Division, and is currently hospitalized with a bad case of combat fatigue.

All she has to live on is the $300 a month allotment she gets from her husband's pay. On this she supports her aged, feeble father, and three children, aged two, five and six. She cannot pay any more than $60 for rent on this income, and she cannot work, because just taking care of her father and the three youngsters "is a 24-hour job," she says.

She can't tell her husband what's up. You just don't give bad news from home to a man in Korea suffering from combat fatigue, which means nervous breakdown from battle shock. And besides, there isn't anything he could do about it if he knew.

Mrs. Annello has been looking for a new place ever since December, when her landlady first threatened her with this increase. She hasn't been able to find anything. She did tell her husband, back in December, that she guessed they would have to move, and he wrote to the Mayor of Kinston, asking help for his family.

But Lt. Annello will not hear about it, she insists, when the inevitable eviction notice comes. The Mayor reports he has been unable to find any accommodations the Annellos can afford.

UAW Local 600 Renames Stellato

Carl Stellato, anti-Communist president of CIO Auto Workers Local 600, representing 60,000 workers at the Ford Motor Co.'s River Rouge plant in Detroit, was re-elected by a margin of 476 votes in a run-off contest, returns showed last week.

He received 16,664 votes to 16,188 for Joseph Hogan, a left-wing candidate. Tommy Thompson, former president defeated a year ago by Stellato, ran third in the first round of balloting and threw his support to Hogan in the final.

Stellato and others supporting UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther control the executive board of the local as a result of the elections, but its delegation to the international convention in Cleveland beginning April 1 is about evenly divided between friends and foes of Reuther.

New Zealand Tories Lose By-Election

In New Zealand the unexpectedly large majority by which a Laborite won the recent Brooklyn by-election is considered an indication of increasing dissatisfaction with the Tory government's failure to control inflation. It was the first election since the Tories won power 15 months ago.

The seat was made vacant by death of Peter Fraser, former leader of the New Zealand Labor Party and former prime minister. Fraser got 62% of the vote in 1949. He had built up a large personal following in the 30 years he held the seat. However, Arnold Nordmeyer, a comparative unknown in the district, polled a surprising 63%. The Tory candidate mustered only 34%.

Would Curb Immunity

Congressmen who insert libelous or slanderous statements into the Congressional Record would lose their immunity to damage suits under a bill introduced Mar. 22 by Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

The Constitution grants immunity "for any speech or debate in either house," but it should not extend to words not actually spoken in either chamber, Celler claims.

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 2, 1951 82 No. 14

CINDERELLA STORY: Tall and trim is Miss Dorothea Chang, 22, who has been chosen to reign over the ball of the Newspaper Guild of New York, CIO, on Apr. 13. One of the newest Guild members, Miss Chang joined when she and others at the Saturday Review of Literature voted 17 to 2 for the Guild in an NLRB representation election Mar. 19. She was also a last-minute entry in the Miss Page One competition. It was only on the urging of her younger sister, Agnes, that she finally made the trip to the scene of the contest. Dorothea, who is the daughter of Chinese Consul Gen. P. H. Chang, had been ill until the night of the contest. She also won a trip to Washington where she will be the guest of honor at the Washington Newspaper Guild's Page One Ball on April 4.

CIO: Ability To Pay, Equality Proper Tax Standards

THE UNITED States will have to raise between $16 and $17 billion additional in taxes during the year beginning July 1 if the cost of running the government is to be kept on a pay-as-you-go basis.

The CIO, which is in favor of the pay-as-you-go basis, so long as what is actually spent is about the amount anticipated—$71.6 billion—has some ideas about raising the extra $16 or $17. They are printed in the March issue of the Economic Outlook, the publication of the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

The Outlook suggests that the money come from three main sources:

1. "Raising individual income taxes an average of 4%, but with no increase for individuals making less than $4000 a year.

2. "Closing of loopholes in the present law.

3. "A substantial increase in corporation normal and excess profits taxes."

Only two standards should be applied to new tax proposals, the Outlook says: ability to pay and equality of sacrifice.

"To increase the already heavy tax load on low-income families simply because there are so many of them and because payroll and excise taxes are so easy to collect would be a tragic miscarriage of justice," the publication declares.

On individual income tax rates, the Outlook proposes leaving the present $600 exemption unchanged (since this "actually buys much less food, clothing and shelter than the $500 exemption allowed during the last war"). It also suggests leaving tax rates where they are for the large group makin $4000 a year or less, increasing the next bracket by 2%, jumping rates for the group earning from $5000 to $10,000 by 4%, and applying a higher percentage increase to incomes above $10,000 "to make up for losses resulting from the lower rate in the lower brackets."

THE TOTAL raised by this method would be $3½ to $4 billion, and it would be far more equitable than the straight across-the-boards 4% increase proposed by Secy. of the Treasury Snyder.

Closing existing loopholes in the tax structure should raise from $4½ to $5 billion more, the Outlook says. Specifically, it suggests:

Doing away with the split-income provision; increasing the capital gains tax to 50%; taxing presently exempt state and local bonds; forbidding corporations to sell stocks to their executives below market price; withholding taxes due on dividends and interest paid out by corporations; tightening up on estate and gift taxes; doing away with special benefits to oil, gas and mineral companies; working out some equitable system of taxing insurance companies.

MOST IMPORTANT gain in this group, the Outlook says, would come from abolishing the split-income provision.

"A married person with two dependents must have an income of $4900 before he receives $1 of tax benefit from this provision," the publication says. "On the other hand . . . while Secy. Snyder's proposed new income tax rate would be one point above the World War II peak, the split-income provision would actually reduce tax payments in the higher brackets to levels substantially below the World War II peak."

On corporation taxes, the Outlook comments:

"Certainly, there is no moral justification for profiteering during this national emergency. Nor is there any economic justification for profits at these levels."

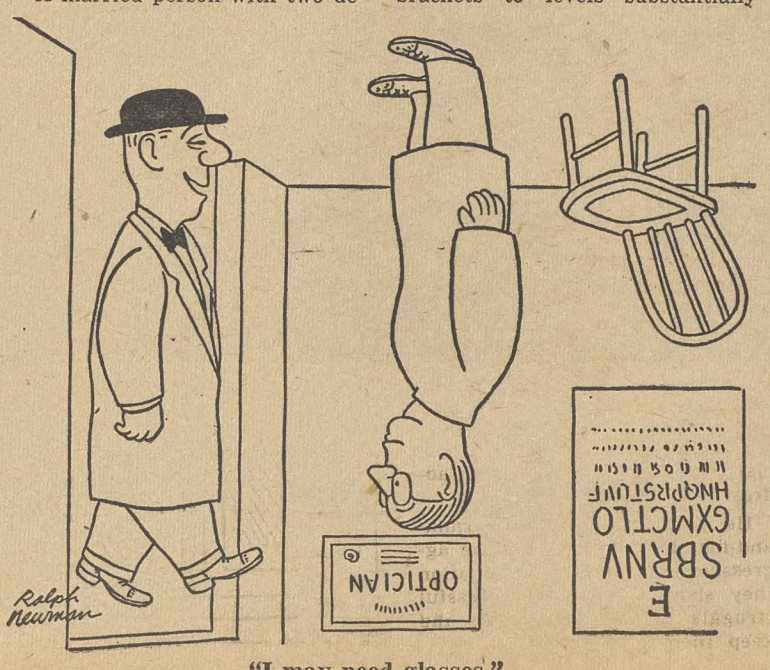
THE SUGGESTION: increase the straight corporate tax rate to 55%; increase the excess profits tax rate to 85%; change the basis for determining what constitutes "excess profits."

"Instead of allowing a corporation to pick its best three years from 1946 to 1949, as at present, to determine its excess profits tax base, the entire four-year period should be averaged," the Outlook says.

Snyder has suggested simply increasing the normal corporate tax. His proposal would raise an additional $3 billion from this source: the CIO approach would net $8½ to $9 billion.

Finally, the Outlook strongly opposes Snyder's idea of raising $3 billion through additional excise taxes.

"Excise taxes and sales taxes are particularly unfair to low and middle income families," the Outlook explains. "They are taxed on consumption. They are borne in inverse proportion to income—the higher the income, the less the burden."



"I may need glasses."

Murray Blames NAM

Efforts To End Stabilization Snafu Fizzling?

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

EFFORTS TO work out a wage stabilization and disputes program seemed to be bogging down last week, and CIO Pres. Philip Murray placed the blame squarely on the National Association of Manufacturers.

Murray made the charge after he, AFL Pres. William Green and other members of the United Labor Policy Committee spent a two-hour talk session with Eric Johnston, economic stabilization director for the government.

"The NAM is unwilling to accept any Wage Stabilization Board with power to handle non-economic disputes," Murray told reporters after the session.

A week before, at the United Labor Conference in Washington, the CIO president had warned of grave dangers for unions if a wage board is not empowered to act on such issues as union security, grievance and seniority problems, and other contract items not involving actual outlay of dollars and cents.

In such a case, Murray said, many employers would "dare" the union to strike, and then seek Taft-Hartley injunctions against the workers—either on grounds of "national emergency" or of striking for "illegal" objectives.

The members of the United Labor Policy Committee and Johnston both indicated that this important issue of non-economic disputes appeared to be the biggest stumbling block in the path of reconstituting a Wage Stabilization Board.

Johnston said he plans to arrange one more meeting this week with spokesmen for business and industry, with the hope that he may be able to get some form of agreement on the issue.

Failing that, he indicated he might have to try something altogether new—but he offered no clue as to what he may have in mind.

Meanwhile, an increasing number of cases are piling up for whatever form of government agency eventually emerges to handle wage problems. Many of them affect working stability in key industries.

Both CIO and AFL Packinghouse Workers unions have extended old agreements while awaiting action on wage raises which are higher than the "formula" contained in Regulation 6 of the old WSB. That allowed wages to rise 10% over the rate of Jan. 15, 1950.

IN ANOTHER case, involving several hundred thousand non-operating railroad workers, the government is a house divided. The Army, which nominally runs the rail lines since they were seized by the government months ago, has approved a wage boost which is well over the formula.

But Johnston's office says no increase over the formula level will be permitted. The scrap between the stabilization agency and the army should prove interesting.

Meanwhile, government statistics show the cost of living is still going up; and reports from a number of cities throughout the country indicate that price regulations have had little effect in holding down the rise.

Cost Of Living At All-Time High No Matter How BLS Figures It

The cost of living reached an all-time high on Feb. 15 any way the Bureau of Labor Statistics figured it.

Under the old—and more accurate—way of working it out, the BLS Consumers' Price Index went from 181.5 on Jan. 15 to 184.2 on Feb. 15, an increase of just under 1.5%

Under the new system, it increased from 181.6 in January to 183.8 in February, a jump of 1.2%.

However the bureau wanted to look at it, the February figure is a record high.

The revised system was put into affect in February. It reflected changes in the theoretical budget the BLS prices every month to determine what it costs a family to live—changes in the proportions of the various parts to the whole.

The CIO does not fully approve them because they do not properly reflect actual purchases. It particularly objects to the reduction of the food budget at a time when food accounts for an increasing amount of the family's spending. Over the course of a year the revised version will show a smaller increase in the cost of living than the old.

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index dropped 2c to $7.21 in the week ended Mar. 27, the second consecutive weekly decline and the lowest it has touched since reaching $7.17 on Jan. 20.

However, the BLS wholesale price index rose .3% in the week ended Mar. 20, following an increase of 1.9% from January to February. Wholesale price changes are usually reflected in retail prices several weeks later.

CIO Bowls Over DPO-FTA 10 to 1 In Third Packingshed Election

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

IT WAS better than 10 to 1 this time for CIO. That was the victory margin for the third time the United Fresh Food and Vegetable Workers Local 78, CIO, rolled over the Communist-dominated Food and Tobacco Workers with a crushing victory in an election among packingshed workers in the Far West.

The Food and Tobacco Workers, who were ousted from the CIO for failure to follow CIO policy, are now part of the Communist-dominated Distributive, Processing and Office Workers.

This time Local 78 scored its victory at Phoenix, Ariz.

THE BIG CIO victory streak began last October, when a wide-margin triumph was scored in an election held in the Salinas, Cal., area.

And in January, the CIO majority had swelled to well-over the two-to-one margin, when a second election among shed workers brought victory in the Imperial Valley-Yuma areas.

When the count was in this third time, in the election held Mar. 28, the CIO had 1150 votes, while a mere 182 went no union, and 37 were challenged.

FOR THE DPO-FTA it was one-two-three—out. The insignificant no union vote was an indication of the utter rout handed out by the shed workers to DPO-FTA. Although DPO—the dying, puny outfit—was not on the ballot in Phoenix, they put on an anti-union campaign, marked by all the traits of vicious union-busting, in an attempt to turn out a "no union" vote.

DPO-FTA representatives were active in the packingsheds throughout the campaign, whispering poisonous anti-union propaganda. And on the day of the election, they made their union-smashing tactics a matter of written record.

In a leaflet distributed election day, DPO-FTA attacked the CIO in language that might have been lifted from a handbook on company unionism, written by professional union haters.

AND THEY crawled right out on their own anti-union limb and cut it off behind them by openly proclaiming "D. P. O. members will vote solidly against the CIO . . ." (In other words, vote 'no'.)

It was apparent DPO "members" did what they were told. A comparison of the anti-union vote in the first two elections showed that 18 were cast for no union in the first, and 40 in the second. This time, the no union ballots inched up a trifle, obviously exposing the weak backing culled by DPO-FTA.

In the first two elections, DPO-FTA had taken sharp beatings. In the third, they lacked the courage to face the shed workers again, and attempted to sneak-attack from behind a barrage of anti-union propaganda.

THE ELECTION brought to a climax a drive which began about a year ago when the rank-and-file shed workers came to the CIO asking for help in their fight to stay in the CIO and get out of FTA.

The Phoenix election campaign was highlighted by an address before a mass CIO rally by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization. Haywood, who dubbed DPO the "dying, puny outfit" in a talk in Salinas last October, made a special trip in each campaign to address the shed workers.

He paid tribute to the rank-and-file shed workers for the aggressiveness and determination they showed in their successful struggle to oust DPO-FTA, and keep their CIO union.

Haywood also praised Richard T. Leonard, National CIO representative who directed the campaign through the first two elections; Irwin L. Deshelter, Southern California CIO regional director, who handled the drive during its early phases and during the third election, and Nick Dragon, CIO regional director in Arizona and New Mexico, for the "important guidance" he gave the campaign in Phoenix.

Activity to "mop up" by organizing a few remaining sheds in the areas, to consolidate and strengthen the union, and to win strong contracts for the workers already is underway, said Ken Gillie, assistant director of the CIO drive, and a CIO field representative.

SOME 10,000 shed workers, principally in the vegetable and melon packing industry, are covered by the elections held.

Additional thousands of shed workers are in the small fruits areas—such as apricots, peaches, etc.—and other areas, such as citrus fruits.

CIO organizational activity is on the move in these areas, and "the organizational campaign among shed workers in small fruits and other areas will continue," Haywood said.

Price Relief Unlikely Under Inadequate Law

THE Office of Price Stabilization last week ordered food wholesalers and retailers to start applying the old OPA markup regulations, effective Apr. 1, to about 60% of the products they sell. Neither meat, fresh fruits, nor milk are covered.

The order does not, and can not, do anything about the basic trouble with food prices, which is the inadequate and poorly drawn law which Congress gave OPS to work with. The upward push of prices, by and large, will continue, until and unless Congress amends the law so that it will be effective and enforceable.

However, here's what the order does do—or will, if wholesalers and retailers abide by it:

It sets percentage ceilings on the mark-up which they may apply to what they buy for re-sale. The wholesaler may only charge the retailer a fixed percentage more than what he paid the processor. The retailer, in turn, may only charge a fixed percentage more than what he paid the wholesaler.

Wholesalers buying from each other may not make any markup at all, and the same goes for retailers buying from each other. The resulting prices must be posted every week where housewives can see them.

Mostly, the percentage ceilings are exactly the same as those allowed by the old World War II OPA. There are a few exceptions but not many. If the order were applied right now, a few items would be reduced in price and a few others might rise.

THE ORDER will replace the blanket "freeze" regulation in those fields which it covers with the result that those retailers who have been "frozen" with excessively high markups in some lines will have to reduce quite a few prices in a hurry. This is the only real benefit of the rule.

But food processors and food growers will go right on charging whatever they feel like charging—the present law forbids OPS to touch them.

The law exempts fresh fruits, vegetables, and sugar entirely, and as for the rest, it says no attempt may be made to control prices at any level until the farm price has reached "parity"—a fair relationship" between what the farmer receives for his products and what he has to pay out.

MANY IMPORTANT foods are still below this mythical figure, and furthermore, the parity figure itself varies with the entire cost of living, so there is no way of stopping this merry-go-round until Congress passes a law that allows OPS much stronger control over all segments of the economy.

The order does cover: Butter and package cheese (at retail only); baby foods; cocoa; breakfast cereals; coffee and tea; flour and flour mixes; canned and frozen fruits and vegetables; jams and jellies; lard; mayonnaise; canned meats and fish.

It does not cover: fresh milk and cream, bread, fresh fruits and vegetables, sugar, ice cream, soft drinks, candy, and fresh meats.

NO TIME BETTER THAN NOW

The American economy ought to be strong enough to avoid booms and busts—both in times of peace and in a time of national emergency.

It's pretty clear that we are now in the midst of a free-wheeling boom. You can see the evidence in every corporation profit report; in the steady rise in prices, both wholesale and retail; in the tremendous growth of inventories in almost every branch of industry.

The inflation has caused hardships, and it offers threats to the stability of the entire country.

The National Association of Manufacturers, looking at the statistics, concludes that "it is possible that the inflationary drive has spent itself." Actually, there's no particular sign that inflation is over. But there are warnings that the inflation may be leading us toward economic troubles, unless we do something about it now.

The CIO and the rest of organized labor have been offering a program during the nine months since Korea that would have avoided the worst effects of inflation. It's still not to late for industry, the government and the public to give labor's program some serious sensible thought.

What do our unions suggest?

1. That Congress put some backbone into the Defense Production Act—which is supposed to provide our legal bulwark against inflation.

The 1950 Act, which expires in June, is full of lobby-produced loopholes. Those loopholes should be closed, and the general provisions of the law strengthened in every paragraph.

2. That wage stabilization insure decent incomes for working men and women. Wage stabilization doesn't mean pay-chiselling; but workers are willing to make fair sacrifices, along with the rest of the population, to avoid inflation.

3. That the nation get along more quickly with the job of developing a defense production program that will provide our democracy with the strength it needs for protection against totalitarianism.

IS DEFENSE JOB LAGGING?

A few hours after this paper goes to press, Defense Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson is scheduled to make public a report on the progress of the defense production program.

The chances are that it will be a glowing, optimistic report. On the other hand, a number of observers have voiced worry that defense production isn't slipping satisfactorily into high gear.

Some companies, with more concern for the profit figure than the national interest, are showing little interest in bidding for defense work. The Textile Workers Union reported that some large mills just didn't seem to be interested in defense contracts.

Robert Nathan, a leading economist, said recently on a CIO radio broadcast that during a trip around the country, "one has to look with a magnifying glass for evidence of war production . . . We appear to be operating not only on a business-as-usual basis, but also on a prosperity-as-usual basis."

There's no better time than now to accelerate the defense machine. With big supplies of consumer goods in the stores and warehouses, the country has a cushion against change-over shortages.

Furthermore, quick change-over now to greater defense output would cause minimum hardships for workers and management, as well as for the consuming public.

Such a program of action—not just words or blueprints or promises—would help the country and help democratic forces everywhere.

Farmers Union Rejects Wage Freeze 'Deal'

THE NATIONAL Farmers Union, liberal farmers' group, turned down a "deal" whereby all wages would be frozen solid July 1 in return for a freeze on farm parity prices at the Jan. 26 level.

The wage freeze would have included suspension of cost-of-living clauses in union contracts.

The proposition was made to Pres. James G. Patton of the NFU in Washington Mar. 5, according to the National Union Farmer, the NFU's monthly publications. After consulting his executive board, Patton rejected the proposal in a blistering letter to Economic Stabilization Chief Eric Johnston.

"The Farmers Union was and is today convinced that inflation is as dangerous an enemy as any military foe," Patton wrote. "It needs to be stopped dead in its tracks clear across the board. We cannot, however, go along with piecemeal stabilization which will freeze and disadvantage some segments of the population, while permitting a one-sided inflation advantageous to already overly-large, concentrated industries and financial interests."

Further on he said:

"WE stongly recommend that your stabilization agency put an adequate tax program, including a stiff and inescapable excess profits tax, at the top of its list of projects. Next should come drastic credit and money controls to lessen purchasing above $3000 family income. There should be a floor tax to stop hoarding of supplies in inventories of manufacturers and distributors.

"When such measures are enacted I do not believe that there will be need to deny farmers a fair, parity price for their products. Reports indicate that farm prices are weakening right now. There is not any significant upward pressure in farm prices which is beyond present ability to control.

"Parity represents only a fair price for farm products in comparison to prices farmers have to pay for the things they require. Freeze other prices and parity will be frozen, just as cost-of-living escalators in some labor contracts would be frozen. Stop the runaway horse and you stop the wagon. It is senseless to try to unhitch the wagon and stop it while the horse gallops on."

Parity prices on farm products are calculated by the Dept. of Agriculture by formulas approved by Congress. Their purpose is to sustain the farmers' capacity to purchase industrial products and necessary services.

Under the Defense Production Act of 1950, farm prices can't be frozen below parity. Price Boss Michael DiSalle recently froze cotton prices at about 127% of parity despite protests from cotton-bloc Congressmen. Other farm prices, many of which are below parity, are uncontrolled. But studies show that food price rises reflect manipulation by middlemen rather than changes at the farm level.

Wages have been frozen at 10% over the Jan. 15, 1950, level, but pre-freeze escalator or cost-of-living clauses can operate freely at least through June. Many think of the escalators as a kind of parity for wages, and the United Labor Policy Committee has suggested that workable wage-parity formulas could be devised.

In his letter to Johnston, Patton said that during World War II the National Farmers Union supported President Roosevelt's "Indivisible Seven-Point Program" for stabilization but found it didn't work.

"Farmers, workers and fixed-income people were frozen tight," he wrote, "and then subjected to a creeping inflation resulting from inadequate credit and profit controls and inadequate and unfair taxation." LPA

Minnesota CIO Leader On Health Group Unit

Glenn Peterson, president of the Minnesota State CIO Council, has been nominated to represent the Duluth district on the board of directors of Group Health Mutual and Group Health Association.

Nomination by the district is tantamount to election at the annual meeting of the organizations on April 14 in Minneapolis. Peterson is a member of the CIO Steelworkers, who are strongly represented in the Group Health membership.

British C of L Jumps, But Wages Go Up More

Prices went up 3% in Britain during 1950 but wages rose 4% at the same time.

"For seven million workers in Britain, pay envelopes today are noticeably thicker than they were a year ago," according to C. H. Hartwell, publications editor of the Trades Union Congress.

P. O. Bulletin Board Urged As Voting Aid

Rep. Javits (R. N.Y.) has introduced a bill requiring every postmaster to make available in his post office equal facilities for the display of political campaign literature and information as to registration and voting requirements.

"These regulations are entirely practical and are designed to bring the voter and prospective voter in closer touch with public officials and to establish a central and convenient place where voting information can be available," Javits said.

That 'Awful Servant Problem'

Harold N. Graves, president of the Ohio Machinery Co., Independence, Ohio, and his wife, Fern, are aboard the S. S. Caronia on a round-the world cruise. Members of the Shaker Country and the Cleveland Athletic Clubs, their residence is in Independence.

The following story about Mrs. Graves was published in the Sydney, Australia, Sunday Sun on Feb. 18, under the heading "Those Awful Servants."

Fern Graves, from Cleveland, O., was glad to take the trip on the Caronia to escape household cares.

The Caronia, carrying a shipload of wealthy Americans, left Sydney for Port Moresby on Friday.

Mrs. Graves said:

"Help is becoming very scarce in America. Life for the American woman just isn't what it used to be.

Yearns For Good Old Days

"What frightens me is that we'll probably never go back to the old way of living.

"It's so wearing to have continual servant problems.

"I'm afraid Social Security has ruined the American working class.

"I don't exactly understand what Social Security is but I do know it gives all my friends headaches.

Not Quite Clear

"I believe, under the scheme, domestics can take so many days off a year and be paid, but I'm not quite clear on anything."

Mrs. Graves showed us an opal ring which she had bought in Sydney. The opal was surfaced with diamonds representing the Southern Cross.

"Isn't it cute. I love to collect souvenirs from every country I go to.

Collects Antiques

"I want to collect some antique furniture from Sydney, too. My home is full, just literally full, of antiques. All different periods, starting with early American."

We asked Mrs. Graves to give us an idea of how her days were spent at home.

"Well, now—that's a bit difficult. Each day is so full and so different.

"Of course, I love the country so much I don't go to town more than about four days a week.

Makes Parties Difficult

"The servant problem—isn't it terible how I have to keep going back to that—has made it difficult for me to play bridge or canasta every afternoon.

"I'm not the only one who is depressed about it, believe me. All my friends are exactly the same.

"I just love to entertain and give formal dinners at home but now I have to order from the caterers and they bring everything to the door in time for dinner.

"That certainly helps some but it isn't the same as it used to be when I could order a formal dinner for 10 or 12 people and have it cooked right in my own home.

Letter Writing 'Easy'

"I'm enjoying the trip very much but to tell you the truth I'm not sorry to get into port and have a rest from parties for two or three days.

"Sometimes we have four parties a day on the ship and it becomes quite wearing.

"Fortunately I don't have to cope with letter-writing. My husband writes one and sends it to his secretary and she sends copies to our friends. His letters are very witty, too. He sees fun in any little thing at all."

More Involved Than Mink Coat

The Pressure To Abolish RFC Comes From Banks

The following story was prepared by the staff of the Labor Press Association.

SO THERE'S been great moral indignation over that pastel mink coat. Much of that indignation has come from the very same Republicans who could see nothing immoral about the slimy campaign in Maryland that replaced Tydings with Butler.

But what happened when the House voted on President Truman's proposal to reorganize the Reconstruction Finance Corp. by replacing the present five-man board with a single administrator? The Republicans went down the line against it.

They thought the Southern Democrats would too. After all, the Southern Democrats have no love for Truman. Here was another chance to throw the harpoon into him. Why did the Dixiecrats desert the GOP?

THE ANSWER is that the South knows what the RFC has done for the nation, and especially the South. And it knows who is really behind the cries about rascals, and influence, and the campaign to abolish RFC.

Too few people know that the RFC, by law, cannot lend anyone money until he produces a certificate from his own bank, and from one other, that he can't get credit. In other words, every loan made by the RFC was first turned down by a regular bank. Yet, 99% of RFC loans have paid out. And it has made a profit of $600 million.

The hyper-patriots talk about "risk" capital and "venture" capital, and preach that "taking a chance" is what has made our country great. But the banks refused to take these chances and it was to the RFC that the farmers, the small merchants, the small business men had to go. In 19 years the RFC made 631,351 business loans, totalling $16 billion. Only $134 million went sour.

Too few people know that most RFC loans are for under $100,000. These went to the men who got only a fishy eye from the commercial bankers, the same ones who preach about "venture" capital, and how wonderful everything would be if only the government would keep its nose out of business.

And here we get to the heart of the matter. For the pressure to abolish the RFC comes from the big banking and financial interests. They don't want to lend money to the small enterprisers, and they don't want a government agency to do so.

THE REASON is simple: If the little enterpriser can't get the money, he can't go into business, or stay in business. The greater the mortality in small business, the less competition and the more gravy for the big boys. What the big boys really want is a monopoly of credit.

That's why the Dixiecrats deserted the GOP on the RFC issue. The South remembers the stranglehold the big eastern finance outfits had on it for a long time, so that it was an economic peon of the financial East. The South needed money, and the commercial banks looked the other way. So the South got its money from government credit agencies, including the RFC, for farmers, home-owners, and the small business men.

The Kaiser-Frazer story illustrates what's really going on. Kaiser wanted to build a steel mill. Although we had been caught in World War II with a steel shortage because the steel men had refused to expand, after the war they did not want any competition. Kaiser went to the banks. The bankers listened to his competitors and turned him down. The RFC went to his aid. The mill was built. And even with that added capacity, we don't have enough steel today.

Oh yes, the big boys are now expanding—after getting the government to let them amortize over five years instead of 20. The government loses money in taxes, the steel corporations make money in taxes saved, and at the end of five years they have new plants—at your expense.

DURING World War II we needed tremendous amounts of electric power. Where did it come from? In part from public power projects, fought bitterly by the same people who now want to scuttle RFC. Where did the money come from? From RFC. Without those public power plants our mobilization program would be far behind. We still have a power shortage—thanks to the big utilities.

The other day Walter E. Cosgriff, the only RFC director so far not involved in any revelations, said the RFC is needed because the nation's bankers have failed in their job. Clean out those who abused their authority, he said, but don't abolish RFC.

"No one called for abolition of the Army when Maj. Gen. Benny Meyers went to jail," he said.

FORGET ABOUT that mink coat. The real issue is government credit versus monopoly credit. For the big boys are not shooting just at RFC. They want to kill all government lending agencies.

When Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) introduced a bill to abolish RFC, he laced into the other government lending agencies. Several days later he said such lending "is probably the most inflationary thing we are doing." The U. S. Chamber of Commerce says, "legitimate credit is in ample supply."

The pack is in full cry. If they kill off government lending agencies, they'll have a monopoly on credit. That's what they're really after.

THIS IS A scene from "the Ox-Box Incident," a motion picture which presents the dramatic story of a breakdown of civil rights in the early days in the West, as terrible as some in our own times. An adaptation of this movie entitled "Due Process of Law Denied," prepared in collaboration with a committee of the National Council for Social Studies, is now available in a 16mm sound film. African Labor In March To Set Up Free Unions

DOWN ON the under side of the big bulge in the west coast of Africa, a handful of workers have set out to harness surging new social, economic and political forces—and to build trade unions.

With the selflessness of the crusaders and the vision of a Columbus, 28 men and a lone woman, meeting in a thatched hut under the broiling African sun, planned the first moves to bring economic and social justice to a new frontier, through free, democratic trade unions.

The new frontier is an area 1,919,246 miles square. It lies between the Atlantic Ocean and the Sahara waste. It is a land of virtually untouched industrial and military potentialities. In it live under the rule of white Europeans almost 45 million people whose rising nationalism is clashing with the colonialism of their overlords.

THREE MEMBERS of an Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Union delegation leave a meeting at Douala, French Cameroons, where they met with representatives of organized labor movements in 10 west and central African colonies to form the first pan-African trade union conference. Left to right, Walter Hood, Australia, co-secretary of the delegation; Frederic W. Dalley of the British Railway Clerks Association, delegation president, and Harold Snell of the CIO United Transport Service Employees, representing the American labor movement.

Only 29 Delegates

The 28 men and one woman were delegates to the Regional Trade Union Conference for Central and West Africa held under the auspices of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions last month in the French Cameroons port city of Douala.

They came from 10 colonies of Great Britain and France—Senegal, Sierra Leone, Gambia, Dahomey, Nigeria, Gold Coast, Ivory Coast, French Equatorial Africa and the French and British Cameroons.

For sheer audacity they won themselves a permanent place beside the other trade union pioneers who braved the physical hardships that went into the foundation of the labor movement in every country of the world.

They spoke a motley collection of languages and dialects—even though a few were Europeans and some of the Africans had been educated in Europe.

Walk 3 Days

They represented a maze of cultures and traditions. Their dress ranged from the flowing robes of Adio Moses, secretary of the Nigerian Labor Congress, to the European-style shorts and shirt of Marcus Grant, secretary of the Sierra Leone Artisans & Allied Workers' Union and representative of west and central Africa on the ICFTU executive committee.

Three delegates, sent by impoverished unions, walked for three days over 60 miles of difficult terrain to attend the meeting. Others came by trains primarily devoted to carrying bananas. Still others arrived on buses of an antiquity unknown in the United States. A few had no other way of reaching Douala, so the ICFTU had to charter an airplane and ferry them.

Under the direction and guidance of a team of eight delegates from the ICFTU, they labored for three days and established what they hope will prove to be the nucleus of an ICFTU Pan-African Regional Organization. The ICFTU guides included Harold D. Snell, of the CIO United Transport Service Employees, who represented the AFL, Mine Workers and the railroad brotherhoods as well as the CIO.

Discussion during the sessions showed some of the problems trade union organization faces in a land offering almost unlimited raw material resources of immense importance and potential military and air bases of equally great strategic importance.

Bosses Oppose

In the first place, most of the employers in the 10 states and a lot of the government officials, including many in high places, don't think much of unions—a state of mind by no means confined to Africa even though it may be more pronounced there.

Some of it reflects the unfortunately common desire of the employer for a glutted labor market from which he can pick and choose his workers and pay them whatever he wants. But in addition, there are definite overtones of classical colonialism.

The opposition ranges downward from vigorous in some colonies to what can be handled in others.

Literacy levels are generally pretty low. So is productivity—only a small proportion of the natives have any mechanical skill whatsoever. Women's right to work outside the family is restricted. Wages are so low that many workers can't pay union dues and in some areas native customs such as polygamy, or multiple wives, result in economic dislocations.

As a matter of fact, the question of polygamy gave the conference more excitement than anything else, even the heckling of Communists and their stooges—yes, they even have 'em in Africa — who attended sessions which were open to the public.

The lone woman delegate, Mrs. Marie Issoula, 23-year-old mother of two children and representative of a teachers' union right in Douala, introduced a resolution demanding that African women be freed from polygamy.

Mrs. Issoula was educated in Dakar and at Aix-en-Provence in France. She is the only wife of an African official.

Much Polygamy

She told the delegates that more than half the population of the Cameroons still practices polygamy—even though many profess Christianity and have church weddings. A man looks on each additional wife as a producer of wealth for him, she said, and he may buy her for cash or obtain her in a swap for goats, salt, wine, kitchen utensils, etc.

However, the only backing she got came from Snell. The male delegates—perhaps some of them practitioners of polygamy—overruled her and passed a resolution which made no reference to it but called in general terms for the emancipation of African women.

One of the significant things about the conference was that though most of the delegates are leaders in movements in their own territories for freedom from European domination, they stuck grimly to their consideration of the economic problems of workers. They demanded freedom in resolutions, but did not use the conference as a sounding board for their particular versions of nationalism.

They wanted to establish a sound basis for protecting the rights of the workers in the industrial revolution they hope will descend on their primitive continent in the near future—and they got off to a good start.

Most of the workers represented at the meeting were civil servants, miners, railway employes, port workers and a few industrial workers.

Fights Commies

Moses, the Nigerian Labor leader, occupies an unusual role. The Communists have concentrated much of their organization and propaganda work in that strategically-located British colony, and the Nigerian Labor Congress is affiliated with the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

But Moses, its secretary, is leading the fight to get rid of the Communists and to line up the Nigerian labor movement with the ICFTU. He told the conference that anti-communism in the congress is strong and predicted that in June it will vote to bolt from the WFTU.

Two strong unions, of teachers and railroad employes, belonged to the central body when it was called the Nigerian Trade Union Congress, but kept out of the new group and have refused to join the WFTU.

The ICFTU delegation was satisfied with the progress made at the conference. Said Frederic W. Dalley, its chairman and a member of the British Railway Clerks Association:

Good Start

"There nave been mistakes made at this conference, but considering the difficulties of language, race and beliefs, it has been a start—in my opinion a good start—and that is what is needed in Africa."

Andre Lafond, secretary of the French CGT-Force Ouvriere, said: national development fund.

"We have worked here toward suppression of economic barriers, greater economic cooperation and an increased standard of living . . . I am convinced that the establishment of a strong international movement of free trade unions can guarantee the defense of our freedom without war.

"Freedom is threatened everywhere in the world and should be defended in Africa just as it defended so stubbornly in other parts of the world."

Freedom In Poland: Work Applicants Face 150 Queries

ANY WORKER who has ever sweated his way through one of the job application blanks some companies use to gather information about a prospective employe should feel deeply for the Polish working man.

Since the Communists have come into power in Poland, he must give not only a detailed biography, but he has to fill in an official form, which asks about 150 questions on every phase of his life.

Applicants who have to reveal past membership in the Communist Party when they ask for a U. S. government job have it easy. In Poland, a worker applying for any kind of a job must give minute details about past or present membership in no less than 14 political and racial organizations, including the CP.

On top of that, he must list all former memberships in labor, military or other organizations—and those of his parents as well. If the powers that be don't like the answers, he may end up in jail.

Any claim of membership in the Communist Party must be accompanied by a source of confirmation. The queries that deal with "discipline" by the party are numerous.

The Polish worker also has to tell all about his relatives living in satellite and other countries. The Soviet in the past has found this a fruitful source of people it can pressure into subversive activities by threatening retaliation against the folks back home.

The Russians have locked the Poles in a social straitjacket that makes Red pretensions to "freedom" pretty silly. A job applicant must tell whether he and his parents have the "social status" of workers, peasants, working intelligentsia, gentry or bourgoisie.

N.J. Car Insurance HigherToNegroes

Auto insurance companies charge New Jersey Negro car owners higher premium rates than whites, Arthur Chapin, New Jersey CIO Civil Rights director, disclosed in a letter to Joseph A. Bustard, director of the State Div. Against Disricimination, Chapin said the rate differential ranges from 20 to 40%.

"When I questioned one insurance company, they informed me that the companies that did their research analysis on individual applicants for liability insurance immediately check to see whether or not the applicant is a Negro through the State Div. of Motor Vehicles and the insurance underwriters use this as a basis of higher rates," Chapin wrote.

"Since it has been your policy to end segregation and discrimination and to create wherever possible fuller citizenship participation, it is my hope that you will order that the question of color be deleted from our State applications."

ICFTU Aide To UN Group: Capital 'On Strike' In Asia

A 10 POINT program for the economic and social development of Asia and the Far East has been offered to the United Nations' Economic Commission for that region by Dhyan Munget, Asiatic representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Capital is "on strike" in many Asiatic countries, and profits, rents, dividends and interest are piling up instead of being reinvested, he said at a recent meeting at Lahore, Pakistan.

Major financing, he claimed, "can be done only by creating an international organization equipped by contributions from economically advanced countries.

The ICFTU program calls for:

1. Progressive social and labor legislation.

2. Free trade unions, both agricultural and industrial.

3. A social security system, primarily in the field of health.

4. Agricultural development projects to increase productivity and to raise the food supply.

5. Technical assistance supplemented by a large-scale international plan for its expansion.

6. Development by local governments of economic resources through activating idle capital, taxation and productive use of savings.

7. An international financing plan through UN action, and public loans provided by an international development fund,

8. Priority of projects for developing productive resources in claims on the international development fund.

9. Private foreign investments on condition that the underdeveloped countries retain full independence.

10. Social investments—housing, health services, education—to have the same rank as economic investments.

Technical Workers In TV, Radio Vote To Join CIO

If you watched the recent Senate Crime Committee hearings on television, the chances are that the men who focused the TV cameras on the squirming underworld characters were members of the CIO.

The National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians, in a referendum completed Mar. 22, voted by a 5 to 1 margin to affiliate with CIO and will be given a national charter. The union, which has been unaffiliated, has 3000 radio, television and film workers under contract with the American Broadcasting Co., National Broadcasting Co., and about 80 independent radio and TV stations.

George Maher, executive secretary of the new affiliate, as well as all other officers and the executive board, had recommended CIO affiliation to the membership. NABET maintains its national office in Chicago.

High Court Continues CP Loyalty Hearings

HEARINGS TO determine whether the Communist Party must register as a subversive organization will continue, Seth Richardson, chairman of the Subversive Activities Control Board, declared after the U. S. Supreme Court ruled the board can proceed despite an appeal from a lower court decision.

The CP had sued to suspend the hearings until it could get a ruling on the validity of the McCarran anti-subversive law.

The hearings were started originally when Atty. Gen. McGrath asked the board to determine whether the CP must register.

The Supreme Court refused to review the case of Michael Obermeier, sentenced to two years for denying falsely to immigration, officials that he ever had been a Communist. He was president of the New York local of the AFL Hotel and Club Employes Union.

The Supreme Court also agreed to review Maryland's Ober law, which requires all candidates for state and federal offices to take a loyalty oath.

IN WASHINGTON, J. Edgar Hoover, FBI chief, declared the FBI has secret agents among a group of Communists who have gone underground. He said party membership has dropped from 55,000 to 43,217 in a year.

In New York, the American Institute of Pacific Relations reappointed as chairman Gerard Swope, honorary president of General Electric, and announced election of 20 new trustees, including a university president, a newspaper publisher, and a bank vice president.

This is the group whose files were raided, McCarthy style, when they could have been obtained for the asking. The institute is protesting its listing in the latest "Guide to Subversive Organizations," by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

The Washington Post, in commenting editorially on the "raid" and the election of trustees, pointed out that the names "constitute a who's who of scholarship and public eminence," called the "subversive" listing "more than a trifle foolish."

In New York, Gov. Dewey signed the loyalty bill that provides for discharge or transfer of any civil workers in security positions who are suspected "on reasonable grounds" of being subversive.

IN CINCINNATI, the U. S. Court of Appeals ruled that a District Court judge in Detroit was wrong in denying bond to John Zidok, 55, because he was accused of being a Communist. A bond, ruled the higher court, "is not intended as punishment but is to make sure the defendant will be present when required."

In Hollywood, the executive board of the AFL Painters Union barred from office for five years Herbert K. Sorrell, for 14 years business agent of Painters Motion Picture Local 644. The board charged Sorrell was a Communist sympathizer. LPA

Exploited Nurses Quit Over Wages

Sixty nurses at Stamford (Conn.) Hospital resigned Mar. 26 because the hospital refused to meet their demand for a $1.50 hourly wage. The directors offered $1.25.

Mrs. Sylvia Morton, director of nurses, also resigned. She said 28 of the resignations will take effect April 9. Other staff members, including head nurses, will leave a few at a time over a two-month period.

President Truman Signs Measure Liberalizing Immigration To U.S.

Almost unnoticed in the welter of world crises, the U. S. has taken an important liberalizing step in its immigration regulations.

President Truman last week signed an amendment to the badly drawn McCarran Act, the subversive control measure the CIO has condemned as useless and dangerous. The amendment permits entry into this country of persons who were "nominal" members of Fascist or Communist organizations in other nations.

Such persons may be admitted to the U. S. if they were dragooned into joining before they were old enough to know what they were doing, or if they were forced to join "for purposes of obtaining employment, food rations, or other essentials of living."

The original McCarran Act simply barred former Nazis, Fascists or Communists. This worked great hardship on persons seeking entry from totalitarian countries where membership in the governing party often has been essential for the protection of life itself.

Hundreds of persons otherwise eligible for entry to this country have been waiting in Europe, particularly Germany, for the removal of this barrier.

ORIT To Ministers' Meet: Don't Throttle Democracy

LIFE IN Washington had sort of an international air last week, what with the Western Hemisphere Foreign Ministers opening an historic meeting on Monday and President Auriol of France arriving on Thursday.

A quarter of a million people welcomed President Auriol as he and President Truman drove up historic Pennsylvania ave. in a small parade to Blair House. Twenty-one guns boomed a salute to the visitor, jet planes outraced sound overhead and the streets were gay with U. S. and French flags. The statues of Gen. Lafayette and Count Rochambeau in Lafayette Park, across the street from national CIO headquarters, were illuminated.

There wasn't as much fanfare for the foreign ministers, but their sessions in Constitution Hall were likely to be far more important than conversations between Presidents Auriol and Truman, even with Secy. of State Acheson sitting in.

THE MINISTERS' meetings were divided into three sections, each of which had some knotty problems to deal with. These were economic, military defense, and Communist subversion.

Free organized labor in the Western Hemisphere had some good advice for the foreign ministers. The executive committee of the Inter-American Regional Organization (ORIT) of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trades Unions met in Havana on Tuesday, the day after the foreign ministers gathered. The first item on its agenda was a statement on the meeting going on in Washington.

The statement, like the foreign ministers' program, was divided into three sections: internal security, military cooperation, and economic cooperation. And its advice was sound.

INTERNAL SECURITY: We favor the adoption of measures designed to curb Fifth Column activities and prevent sabotage, but are greatly concerned over the possibility that these measures, unless surrounded by proper safeguards, might be abused by totalitarian-minded governments against their democratic-labor opposition.

"If this should be the impression created among the people in Latin America, there is ground for possible active resistance to whatever measures might be recommended for possible production and hemispheric defense against Communist aggression . . .

". . . the meeting of American foreign ministers should strive to obtain the desired goal of strengthening the internal security of the American republics without the adoption of measures which could imply the repudiation of the basic principles of the American community, incorporated in the Charter of the Organization of American States, adopted at the Bogota Conference . . .

"Another necessary condition for the strengthening of the democratic front in the Western Hemisphere is the re-establishment of a democratic political climate in those countries that have suspended constitutional guarantees . . .

". . . we therefore recommend:

"1. That the foreign ministers reaffirm the basic concepts of the Bogota resolution on 'Preservation and Defense of Democracy in America,' which repudiates not only international Communism but all forms of governments that deny the fundamental rights of man.

"2. That the American governments be urged to grant amnesty to political prisoners and exiles, and be reminded of their solemn inter-American commitments undertaken at several inter-American conferences, by which they are obligated to respect political and trade union freedoms, to conduct elections in conformity with democratic methods and procedure, and to act in general as governments based on the will of the people.

"3. That the Committee for the Political Defense of the Continent, which functioned during the Second World War . . . be re-established with the added task of combating Soviet infiltration in the Western Hemisphere and coordinating compliance on the part of American governments with the various provisions of inter-American pacts and conventions that are devoted to the preservation and strengthening of democracy."

MILITARY COOPERATION: "We believe that the free world should prepare itself adequately in strength which will deter Soviet Russia and its satellites from further acts of aggression. We believe that every country of the Western Hemisphere should participate, according to its possibilities, in the task of defending the Panama Canal, in protecting coastal waters from hostile craft and in manning the lifelines of communication with Europe and Asia.

"We urge the foreign ministers to adopt practical measures for the application of the principle of 'shared defense' of the Western Hemisphere."

ECONOMIC COOPERATION: "Efforts for economic development and social progress must go hand-in-hand with military defense, for economic distress will aid Communist aggressors as much as military weakness.

"It is of great importance, therefore, to lay the foundations for a long range program of social and economic reforms as foreseen at Chapultepec, discussed though not carried further at Bogota, and outlined in President Truman's Point Four . . .

". . . It (the program) cannot achieve permanent success unless developed under democratic government and with the full cooperation, in every phase of its conception, planning, enactment and execution, of the democratic forces, and, in particular, of free labor . . .

"As a complementary program for the attainment of full cooperation on the part of labor in the common effort for strengthening the economy of the Western Hemisphere, we specifically recommend:

"1 All labor contracts and agreements originating from the emergency situation should provide guarantees of conditions at least equal to present Intl. Labour Organization standards, and provide adequate wages and working conditions.

"2 Extension of compulsory social security covering all the necessities and risks to which workers are subjected in the conduct of their normal activities.

"3 Guarantees for agricultural and migrant workers, assuring them decent standards of work and life.

"4 Extension of opportunities for professional training.

"5 Extension of the right of organization to small landholders for the purpose of aiding them to obtain more land, easy credit, machinery and other necessities; and to farm cooperatives.

"6 Extension of exchange of workers among American countries and establishment of adequate funds for training scholarships.

"7 Development of extended health and sanitation programs."

The CIO was represented at the board meeting by L. S. Buckmaster, president of the Rubber Workers, who acted on behalf of Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO Intl. Affairs Committee. Also present was Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the Latin-American Affairs Committee and assistant secretary of ORIT.

"Oh, formal attire? So that's what Fred meant when he told me to wear a monkey suit?"

TWUA Asks Probe Of 2 Textile Strikes

THE CIO Textile Workers have asked the labor-management relations subcommittee of the Senate Labor Commitee to probe anti-union activities during strikes at two textile mills.

A majority of the Senate group last month issued a blistering attack on the union-busting activities of Southern textile mill owners.

The union complained to the subcommittee that town, county and state police were used against CIO strikers at the Royal Cotton Mill, Wake Forrest, N. C.

TWUA also asked the subcommittee to determine whether federal law was violated by an alleged attempt by officials of the Wilmington, Del., plant of Ludlow Sales & Mfg. Co. to bribe a train crew.

President of the Royal mill is B. Everett Jordan, who is chairman of the North Carolina Democratic Executive Committee. The mill's vice president and a principal stockholder is U. S. Sen. Willis Smith, who last year defeated former Sen. Frank Graham, veteran liberal.

A FEW weeks ago Howard E. Parker, TWUA representative in charge of a strike and a former state representative, wrote Jordan asking him to resign his party post because of the firm's "open and flagrant violation of the Labor-Management (Taft-Hartley) Act."

The union has disclosed additional facts about the strike, which was called Mar. 16 after the union won a National Labor Relations Board election and the company refused repeatedly to discuss seriously a contract.

Parker said that within 15 minutes after a picket line was established the entire Wake Forest police force was at the gates, and escorted several non-strikers into the plant.

ROBERT PLEASANTS, Wake County sheriff, and five of his deputies appeared near the picket line an hour after it was set up. The sheriff allowed a truck driver to enter the plant through the picket line.

State highway patrolmen and State Alcohol Beverage Control officers also visited the line. At one time 18 officers were present although there was no disorder.

TWUA said that at the Wilmington mill company officials gave each of the members of a five-man train crew $5 in an apparent attempt to have the crew violate a picket line. The union, which obtained supporting affidavits from crew members, said that the men indignantly refused the money.

Probe CIO Aides' Arrest, ACLU Says

The American Civil Liberties Union has joined the CIO in asking Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath to investigate the arrest of two CIO organizers at Dublin, Ga.

The two organizers, Charles H. Gillman, CIO Georgia director, and Clyde G. Brock, a member of the CIO Organizing Committee staff, were arrested at a union meeting by the sheriff of Laurens County, Ga., and four deputies, CIO Pres. Philip Murray wrote McGrath about the matter a few weeks ago. They were later released.

ACLU Executive Secy. Patrick Murphy Malin wrote that if the facts given ACLU "are true, then this incident seems to be another in a series of incidents to prevent organizing efforts in certain Southern communities . . .

"We feel that an investigation of this incident, and other incidents similar to it, may very well be justified in light of the coercive effort that these actions have on the federal right" to organize freely.

Reds Killing Jewish Culture UN Is Told

THE JEWISH Labor Committee has demanded that the United Nations investigate and halt the "spiritual and cultural genocide" practiced against Jews in Soviet Russia and in the Soviet satellite states.

The demand was served on the UN Human Rights Division by a committee composed of Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers; David Dubinsky, president of the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers; Joseph Baskin, general secretary of the Workmen's Circle, and Adolph Held, Jewish Labor Committee chairman.

The committee presented evidence showing that Soviet Russia for years has carried on a ruthless campaign to exterminate all traces of Judaism in religion, language, culture, education and tradition.

In addition, the campaign has contributed, directly or indirectly, to the deaths of millions of Jews —including some of the pioneers of Communism, the group said.

The evidence is admittedly contradictory, the delegation pointed out in a memorandum left with the UN. Efforts made in this country to get the actual facts have been rebuffed, the committee said.

This leads to the conclusion, it added, that Soviet Russia has something to hide in its treatment of the Jews, and to the suspicion that the worst of many fears are true.

"IN Soviet Russia today," said the memorandum, "there are only a few shreds of Jewish cultural and spiritual life remaining. In the other countries under its domination, the process is rapidly approaching a similar stage.

"All Jewish institutions — schools literature, press, theatre, publishing houses, community and charity organizations, synagogues and religious observances, the Yiddish and Hebrew languages— the whole pattern of a once vibrant and creative culture are rapidly approaching final obliteration.

"We are compelled to warn that to permit this brutal annihilation of a culture is to inevitably weaken and endanger the foundations of civilization and the basis on which the world's hope in the United Nations rests."

Jim Crow In Schools Faces Carolina Test

THE SCHOOL segregation issue is coming to a boil in South Carolina.

The longe-range effects of the current controversy will have a profound effect in all states where segregation is now practiced.

In South Carolina, a federal court will hear in May a suit brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People against the principle of segregation. NAACP is acting on behalf of the Negro parents of Clarendon county, a rural community with more Negroes than whites.

Lined up against the NAACP will be the full legal resources of South Carolina, headed by Gov. James F. Byrnes, who has announced he will abandon the public school system entirely if the Negro side wins. Byrnes, now 71 years old, formerly was U. S. Senator, Secretary of State, special assistant to President Roosevelt, and a justice of the U. S. Supreme Court.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S defense will be that the state believes in the "separate but equal" doctrine, which has been the basis of many court victories won by individual Negroes in the past few years.

On this doctrine, the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that if equal educational facilities are not provided for Negroes and whites, Negroes must be admitted to white schools.

The new suit for the first time attacks the segregation principle directly, stating that the "separate but equal" doctrine has failed and that mixed education is the only way to provide "real democracy" under the constitution.

JAMES M. HINTON, state president of the NAACP, claims that while white schools in the state are valued at more than $74 million, Negro schools are worth only $16 million. He says that the state will have a hard time proving its belief in the "separate but equal" principle in the face of these facts, even though a $75 million school improvement program is near passage in the legislature.

SQUARELY in the middle of the legal battle is Federal District Judge J. Waties Waring, in whose court the suit has been brought. Waring in 1947 ruled that the state's all-white primary was unconstitutional.

He has ordered the suit heard May 28 by a tribunal including himself, Circuit Judge John J. Parker of Charlotte, N. C., and District Judge George B. Timmerman of Columbia, S. C.

Whichever side wins the pending lawsuit, the other side is expected to appeal the decision, and in all probability the question will wind up in the U. S. Supreme Court.

Pro-Segregation Section Of Service Bill Blasted

TWO CIO unions, the Auto Workers and the Electrical Workers, last week vigorously attacked the Winstead amendment to the proposed Universal Military Training and Service Bill.

The House Armed Services Committee has approved the Winstead amendment which would permit each person required to register for service to express in writing his desire to be trained and to serve in a segregated unit of the armed forces.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and IUE Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett both said that amendment repudiates President Truman's executive order calling for equal opportunity and treatment in the armed forces.

Reuther ascribed the committee's action to a "politically immoral deal between 10 or 12 Republicans and Southern Democrats."

Hartnett said that passage of the amendment would be "worth more to the Communists than 25 divisions" and "would cause all Americans to hang their heads in shame."

". . . and when I got to be owner of the plant, those . . . employes started asking for a pay boost!"

Lithographers Win Raises

THE CIO Amalgamated Lithographers recently negotiated a number of new agreements in this country and Canada which provide wage increases, welfare benefits and other improvements.

One contract covering approximately 40 shops in five Eastern Canadian cities grants a 7½% wage increase, additional benefits for a welfare program and additional increases for two-color press rates.

In Washington, D. C., ALA members employed at the Colortone Press Co. received wage increases ranging from $2.50 to $7 weekly. In Springfield, Mass., workers at the Hano Co. obtained a new agreement containing an 8c an hour wage boost, retroactive to Dec. 1, 1950.

An initial contract between the Amalgamated and the Muirson Label Co., Meriden, Conn., provides wage increases from $2 to $7 weekly, eight paid holidays, two weeks' vacation after one year and a health and welfare program.

Lead-Pipe Attacks On Union Members

By GERVASE N. LOVE

WHEN THE lusty young Blue Eagle screamed its call to unionism back in 1934, few if any of the millions who answered it had any idea that it was also a signal for the underworld to move into Detroit's far-flung industry.

Probably nobody thought, either, that 14 years later it might summon gunmen to a cowardly ambush of the president of a union still unborn—or to a similarly craven attack on his brother, then educational director of the same union, 13 short months later.

Maybe it didn't. But one can't help wondering, in view of what the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee turned up in its all too short stay in Detroit. Some of the details have become public in two articles.

One appears in the March issue of Ammunition, monthly publication of the CIO Auto Workers' Education Dept. The other, "The Lead-Pipe of Labor Peace," by Guy Nunn, is in the Mar. 19 issue of the New Republic.

Nunn is the UAW radio broadcaster who kept the people of Detroit informed of what the Kefauver Committee was finding under some of industry's rocks while two of the city's major papers were strangely silent.

Stomachs May Turn

The CIO News just hasn't the space to print the full story in all its sordid detail. But it can be summarized sufficiently to throw a few highlights on the morals—or lack of them—that prevail in some Detroit industrial circles, even though it may turn the stomachs of those who believe in elementary decency.

It doesn't only show that a couple of big Detroit firms turned their labor relations over to big shots in the Mafia, the Sicilian gang that seems to control much of the country's evil. It shows, too, that the racketeers muscled into what had been perfectly respectable firms—permanently.

Much of the evidence adduced by Nunn and in the Ammunition article is repeated—and enlarged upon—in the complaint UAW Local 212 filed against the Briggs Manufacturing Co., charging unfair labor practices.

The articles and the Local 212 statement show that the unsavory mess began cooking in 1934, when employes of the Detroit-Michigan Stove Co. decided to take advantage of the National Recovery Act and form their own union. They asked for recognition of the Mechanics Educational Society of America (unaffiliated) as their bargaining agent.

Workers Strike

John A. Fry, then general manager of the company and now president, a sometime Detroit deputy police commissioner, didn't like the idea. He said no. His workers struck. Fry struck back. He called in the notorious Perrone brothers—Santo, Gaspar and Matthew—the nucleus of the city's Sicilian gang, of which Santo was the most notorious leader.

Santo, the boss, called in thugs from far and near to work as scabs and start trouble on the picket line. The police helped them. Union members were beaten. Sam Mazzola, an active union man, was given a specially brutal lead pipe going over. The homes of strikers were bombarded with bricks and their families were threatened.

The strike was short and bloody, and it was lost. Out of it Santo Perrone won, besides suzerainty over the company's labor relations, a contract for handling all the firm's scrap metal, and another to do its hauling. He's made about $5000 a month out of it ever since.

Gaspar began to take home—and has since then—about the same amount under a curious arrangement. Until 1934 the company had always made its own cores right in its own plant. Now Gaspar has the contract to make the cores—in the company's plant, using the company's equipment and the company's materials. Matthew got a job in the plant, and the brothers reputedly cut him in on some of their juicy take. He has since died.

"Then (in 1936) the Treasury Dept. picked the Perrones up for their part in an alcohol racket and sent them off to Leavenworth," says the Ammunition article.

Sentimental

"While they were in Leavenworth, John Fry—of the stove company — sentimentally sent their wives a company check each month for the equivalent of their former take from the waste contract.

"Fry helped them get out of prison on parole."

In 1937, while the Perrones were still guests of Uncle Sam, the Auto Workers went into the plant and formed a strong local.

"But with the release of the Perrones in 1939," Nunn writes, "the beatings and head-crackings recommenced and again the union was destroyed."

In 1945, the scene shifted to the Briggs Manufacturing Co. Its president, Dean Robinson, hallowed by four years at Yale and marriage to the daughter of Walter O. Briggs, is a long-time friend of Fry and a fellow-member of the Detroit Athletic Club.

Robinson has testified that he talked about labor relations in his plant—they were exceptionally tumultuous — with Fry, though the latter claimed he "couldn't remember."

In 1945, Briggs was having some of its usual trouble with the two UAW locals of its employes. And early that year, according to Ammunition, Carl Renda began to think about going into the scrap metal business.

A graduate of Albion (Mich.) College, where he had played football, Renda, 27 was a $1.65-an-hour machine operator at the National Twist Drill & Tool Co., in Detroit. He didn't know anything about scrap. He had no yard, no trucks, no experience.

But Renda had one invaluable asset. He was a son-in-law of Santo Perrone. He had married the gangster's daughter at a wedding marked by an elaborate reception in Detroit's Wardell-Sheraton Hotel at which Fry was a guest.

Brash Young Man

Let Nunn take up the story:

"In March, 1945, a young man named Carl Renda invaded the office of the Briggs superintendent of salvage and informed him that he wanted to see the bids of Briggs' would-be scrap contractors for the coming quarter. George Herbert, the superintendent, ordered him out of his office.

"A few days later Herbert was called to the office of his superior, the director of purchases, and was informed that Renda would be given the bulk of the company's scrap business. Herbert protested.

"He had investigated Renda and found him utterly lacking in knowledge of the scrap business. A call to Renda's telephone had brought Santo Perrone to the phone. Besides, the company's dealings with its incumbent dealers had been entirely satisfactory for nearly 20 years.

It's An 'Order'

"William Cleary, the director of purchases, led Herbert to understand that there was nothing to be done about it. 'An order' had come down that Renda should be given the scrap and that was it. A shame-faced Herbert complied, swallowing his tongue when informed that 'his job and his life' was at stake.

"For a time, Renda was permitted to see the scrap bids of his competitors, and then to file bids fractionally over the highest.

"The firms which had generally handled the Briggs scrap, worth perhaps $2 million a year, continued without interruption to haul it. Renda had merely inserted himself as a broker, forcing the old dealers to pay him a royalty. His first year's take was more than $100,000 in net profit, earned without lifting a finger. Conservative estimates by company officials have put Briggs' monthly loss through the Renda deal at better than $14,000."

Immediately Briggs' stormy labor relations moved from the gale to the hurricane stage.

On Mar. 22, Art Vega, an active Local 212 member and now a UAW international representative, was beaten by two men with metal pipes, according to Ammunition. Two months later, on May 23, Roy Snowden, another active union member, was attacked as he opened the door to his home and beaten with metal pipes. That fall he was given another going over.

Mrs. Genora Dollinger, a veteran of UAW sitdown strikes in Flint and an active union member at Briggs, was attacked with a metal pipe as she lay in bed beside her husband early on the morning of Oct 16. Her husband threw himself across her body to shield her and was severely beaten.

Others Beaten

Three days later Mrs. Marie McDonald, wife of a vice president of the local, was beaten. The following spring, on May 23, 1946, Ken Morris, then recording secretary of the local and editor of its paper, and now president, stepped out of his car in the parking area of the housing project where he lived into the hands of a small gang.

In full daylight, and in full view of people who watched from a distance, the gangsters worked him over with pipes, breaking his nose, jaw and leg, fracturing his skull and leaving him unconscious on the ground.

In 1946 and 1947, an investigation into Detroit rackets was made by what has come to be known as the George B. Murphy Grand Jury. The proceedings, of course, were secret. And they stayed secret, too, until the Kefauver Committee turned them up four years later.

The committee used the transcript, which it had requested of Circuit Judge George B. Murphy, the Grand Juror, as the basis for its own recapitulation of the Briggs story, according to Nunn, who added:

Faulty Memories?

". . . and Detroit was treated to a spectacle in which two of its most revered company presidents went shifty, pled ignorance, poor recollection, were menaced with contempt citations and egregiously perjured themselves."

Among other things, it showed that Robinson admitted giving the order which gave Renda the scrap contract.

The UAW broadcaster claims an analysis of the testimony shows that as late as 1946 a "master plan" was available to paralyze unions in Detroit. It was based, he said, on a formula "of picking off the top leaders and corrupting the secondary leadership."

The record shows that Santo Perrone—he also is called Santos and Sam Perrone—and his college-bred son-in-law called that year on Harry Bennett, head of labor relations at the Ford Motor Co., and discussed the plan with him.

But a Ford salvage official, tipped off by Herbert as to what was in the wind, and having learned that Bennett was on his way out, ran Perrone and Renda out of River Rouge. Nunn says this stopped the "arrangement" at Chrysler and "would indicate that Bennett was pivotal in the plan's broader scope."

Local 212 some weeks ago served a formal demand on Robinson that the scrap contract be taken from Renda and placed in respectable hands. There was no response. So the unfair labor practice charges were filed with the National Labor Relations Board.

Extensively documented with liberal quotations from the now public Murphy Grand Jury proceedings, the complaint says the firm secured the services, of Perrone in previous strike-breaking activities, to interfere with, restrain and coerce Briggs employes from the exercise of their full rights" under the National Labor Relations Act.

Fear Is Born

The relationship between the company and the underworld, it continues, "has created an atmoshere of terror and fear which has existed as a coercing influence from the inception of the contract down to the present date."

Since release of the Murphy Grand Jury testimony, it goes on, every Local 212 member "is thoroughly aware that any vigorous union activity on his part . . . may well mark him for the special attentions of the hired gangsters whose services have been bought by Briggs with the Briggs-Renda scrap contract and which services are available under that contract at the present date."

Lead pipes aren't the sole stock in trade of Renda and his father-in-law. When Briggs workers couldn't get cigarettes during the shortage, Renda supplied them. And his income tax returns claim exemption for "entertaining" UAW shop committeemen and stewards.

The foul stench loosed during the Kefauver Committee hearings throws a strange light on the ethics of the Detroit Board of Commerce, which could see nothing wrong in the unholy alliance between business and the underworld. Said Harvey Campbell, its executive director:

"Some of the mouthings of the inquisitors are likely to prevent a lot of industrialists from continuing to cooperate in the rehabilitation of released prisoners. Henry Ford and Harry Bennett used that plan to give these men a chance to recapture what they had lost, to help them climb out of the mire. . . . The Kefauver Committee made much of one witness who had been arrested many times and charged a lot, but who had been convicted only once (Santo Perrone).

Tender Regard

"John Burling (Kefauver Committee counsel) said the man had no place in legitimate society. Should that man continue in a life of crime? What does Burling suggest he do for a living?"

This tender regard for the rehabilitation of gangsters sounds strange coming from Campbell, Ammunition comments.

He's willing to pay thousands of dollars a month for that purpose, but has fought against increases in rehabilitation payments for injured industrial workers, and has opposed unemployment compensation.

Ford Co. Always Ready To Help Pal, Even If It's Racketeer Joe Adonis

Joe Adonis, the pixie-named racket boss, got effective help from the Ford Motor Co. in 1946 when his car-transporting firm decided to enlarge its territory, according to a report made public Mar. 28 by the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee.

The firm is the Automotive Conveying Co. of New Jersey. Adonis and his wife own 40% of it. The company has hauled new cars from Ford's Edgewater, N. J., plant to dealers for some years, and in 1946 decided to expand into Delaware and Rhode Island, the report showed.

The firms which had been doing the hauling, Nu-Car Carriers, Inc., Chester, Pa., and University Overland Express, Inc., Somerville, Mass., are owned by L. J. Lishon, Jr. Their attorney, Val Holmgron Tanner, filed a protest with the Interstate Commerce Commission, but, according to the report, pressure from Ford "forced" its withdrawal.

The crime probers' chief counsel, Rudolph Halley, on the basis of the report, commented for the committee's record that "the rival carriers filed a protest, and the Ford Motor Co. forced them to withdraw it."

The record also noted that Ford, which denied bringing any pressure on Lishon, has been trying to reinstate Nu-Car as an Adonis competitor at Edgewater. Company officials recently testified before the committee that the company was not "happy" with dependence on Adonis' firm for movements of cars out of Edgewater.

NLRB Recommends UE Pay Wages Trio Lost In Walkout

THE COMMUNIST-dominated United Electrical Workers came up with a new dodge recently which helps to explain why its members have been coming over to the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical Radio & Machine Workers in droves.

The case, which was brought to light by a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner's report, arose at the Gardener Electric Manufacturing Co., Emeryville, Cal.

Three employes were kept from work for eight days last year while members of UE Local 1412 were on strike to force the company to cancel the seniority of the three.

The local took this action under a clause in its contract which provided: "Seniority shall be lost . . . when an employe fails to keep himself in good standing with the union." The union did not have a valid union shop agreement at the time.

The trial examiner recommended that the UE be required to reimburse the three workers for the pay they lost. He held that the local had illegally attempted to cause the employer to discriminate against them in violation of the law.

In addition to the back pay recommendation, the trial examiner proposed that the union be required to refrain from attempting to cause the company to discriminate against any employe illegally by reducing seniority or by any other means.

How Much Is Enough For Railroads?

The nation's railroads had asked the Interstate Commerce Commission for a 6% increase in rates, but now want 15%. Their alibi: higher costs since Jan. 16. They said nothing about higher profits. Here are some samples of how they did in the two months ended Feb. 28, compared to the same period last year.

Voluntary Health Plans' Faults Seen In C. of C. Words Of Praise

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

THE SMEAR word is "socialism," and the good word is "the voluntary way, the American way," when the American Medical Association attacks compulsory health insurance. The various Blue Cross and Blue Shield systems bang away at the same theme, and the commercial insurance companies are right up there with them.

In fact, the argument is that so many persons are now covered by "voluntary" health insurance plans that there's no need for federal health insurance.

Latest siren song in support of that theory is an article in "American Economic Security," published by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The authors are Benjamin B. Kendrick, a "research associate" of the Life Insurance Association of America, and A. L. Kendrick, a staff member of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

They discuss the "health insurance" policies offered to individuals and families, speak of the "millions" who now have such "protection," and boast that "only a fast-dwindling basis remains on which it can be argued that compulsory federal health insurance would cover more people than voluntary insurance already covers."

Those individuals who now get "protection" through individual or family policies bought from commercial companies number 15 million. And that's a lot of people. But the catch is that they are not "covered" against hospital costs.

The fact is that for these 15 million their hospital expenses "are defrayable." Which means that their commercial insurance policies merely meet part of the cost, and not the full cost, or anywhere near the full cost.

For the authors admit that the average commercial insurance policy will pay about $6 a day, and this is only about half the average hospital daily charge. And some policies pay as little as $3, so that although the policy holder is "insured," he still has to pay half or more of the hospital charge out of his own pocket.

The magazine article discloses that 25% of the insurance policies do not provide for maternity care, although that is one of the most important hospital costs the average worker needs to have covered.

Further, in hospitals there are charges for use of operating room, laboratory and X-ray services, drugs, anesthesia, etc., but most of the commercial insurance policies put a top limit on those expenses, and the article says the average policy sets a maximum of $70, which in many cases may not meet even half the costs.

The average policy also limits protection on costs of surgery, with an average maximum of $150 to $200, whereas surgeons' fees for major operations often run far beyond $200. The "protected" worker has to pay the difference although he is "insured."

The same article says nearly two-thirds of the policies do not cover doctors' fees in childbirth, one of the most important of a family's medical needs.

As for non-surgical services, the story is even worse. Only one in seven who have hospital-expense policies have any insurance covering doctor bills for home and office care or non-surgical care in a hospital, and even then the insurance is very restricted.

The article lists as "a liberal policy," providing both hospital and surgical benefits, one that is "especially adapted for purchase by a man wanting substantial protection against serious illness affecting any member of his family."

But this "liberal policy" pays only $10 a day towards the hospital bill, the top limit on surgical expense is $150, and if he is over 58, he can't get such a policy.

As to costs, for husband, wife and two children, the average policy is $136 the first year and $134 a year thereafter. Another type of policy, open to individuals only, costs a man $113 a year if he is under 50, and $138 if he is between 50 and 60. Women are charged more.

By comparison, the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York offers to a whole family complete medical service and hospitalization for about $108 a year. For this any member of the family can get care from a doctor in their home, care in a doctor's office, hospitalization, and complete cost of surgery. HIP is a non-profit plan, but is available only to those who enroll through employed groups.

Where the patients have a voice in management such as in the HIP and Group Health, Washington, D. C., greater service is usually provided at less cost than in doctor-dominated plans.

The article winds up thus: ". . . the conclusion seems warranted that almost any self-supporting individual or family willing to give the cost of such protection a priority over alternate expenditures—usually less necessary—can purchase remarkably complete coverage against health expenses."

Of course, it all depends on what you mean by "remarkably complete."

Slave Labor Probe OK'd

THE ECONOMIC and Social Council of the United Nations at its meeting in Santiago, Chile, last week authorized a "competent, impartial" investigation of slave labor charges.

The resolution covers the world, but was aimed particularly at Russia and her satellites. It was introduced jointly by the United States and Great Britain. In a speech supporting it, Walter Kotschnig, deputy representative of the U. S., charged that between 2 million and 20 million people are working in slavery in Soviet Russia alone.

The directive authorizes Trygve Lie, U. N. secretary-general, and Director-General David A. Morse, of the Intl. Labour Organization, to name three to five investigators "qualified by their competence and impartiality." Russia, supported only by Poland and Czechoslovakia, wanted to load the investigating committee with proportional representatives from the world's trade unions, which would have given the Soviet bloc a majority.

"They hired so much inefficient, non-union labor that they finally have a closed shop!"

Hate Band Charter Revoking Upheld

The White Circle League of America, a hate group, has lost its fight to operate in Illinois. The State Supreme Court has upheld a lower court order dissolving the group.

The league was formed in November, 1949, in Chicago. Last May its head, Joseph Beauharnais, was found guilty of circulating literature tending to defame the Negro race and was fined $200, the maximum. The Supreme Court found the corporation, by circulating "scurrilous and inflammatory" publications against the Negroes in Chicago, exceeded the powers conferred by its charter.

ACWA Plans Dixie Drive

THE CIO Clothing Workers general executive board announced last week that it would undertake a major organizing drive in the south, spending whatever is necessary to enroll 50,000 new members.

In addition, ACWA Pres. Potofsky said the union would press for wage increases throughout its jurisdiction next July or August if the cost of living continued to mount.

"We are watching the price situation very carefully," Potofsky said. "One thing is obvious—controls are not working."

He added that he and the union would prefer effective price controls to a system that would require steadily rising wages to keep up with soaring prices.

The Southern drive will be concentrated among the cotton garment workers in Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama and Kentucky. Over 10,000 workers, mostly in the South, have joined the Amalgamated in the past year, Potofsky said, and there is a "real growth of union feeling" in the Southern states.

GCEOC Hits Job Freeze In Defense

A proposal by the Defense Dept. to freeze its workers in their jobs drew protests Mar. 28 from the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

GCEOC predicted such a freeze would inevitably act to the disadvantage of both the department and the employes. Richard Shoemaker, the committee's legislative representative, said:

"Dissatisfied and unhappy workers are never efficient workers, and the price of freezing men and women in jobs they are now, or may become, unsuited for, will be the lowering of morale and productivity in the defense agencies."

Filibuster Curb Offered By Lehman

A proposed amendment to Senate rules which would curb filibusters on any legislation, including civil rights, was introduced Mar. 22 by Sen. Lehman (N.Y.) and 10 other Democrats.

The amendment would permit a majority of senators present to limit debate after a 15-day wait, and a vote of two-thirds of those present to limit debate after a 48-hour wait. At present two-thirds of the Senate, or 64 senators, is required to limit or shut off debates—a rule that some administration Democrats claim makes any limitation impossible.

Associated with Lehman in presenting the amendment were Sens. Murray (Mont.), Magnuson (Wash.), Neely and Kilgore (W. Va.), Douglas (Ill.), Humphrey (Minn.), Green and Pastore (R.I.), and Benton and McMahon (Conn.).

Unions Go To Bat For Rail Official

Unions of the New Haven Railroad have gone to bat for J. Frank Doolan "retired" as executive vice president in charge of operations.

James J. Hammill, general chairman of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen on the line, has threatened a "slowdown" by the BRT's 4000 members unless the "retirement" is rescinded by Apr. 11 when stockholders have their annual meeting here. His protests have been echoed by Mayor William C. Celentano, New Haven, and the engineers and firemen brotherhoods which have 3000 members on the road.

Hammill has accused the 85-year-old head of the railroad, Frederick C. Dumaine, of attempting to destroy the road for his own gain. He said BRT members will "scrupulously observe" the rule book if Doolan is not returned to his $25,000-a-year job.

"I promise you," Hammill telegraphed Dumaine, "that in a few short weeks, although our men live up to every operating rule on your railroad (and believe me, we know how your rules read), you will suffer losses which will melt your millions gained in mills and watch factories." LPA

Idle Pay Coverage Up By 2.9 Million

Between December, 1949, and December, 1950, the number of workers employed by firms covered by state unemployment insurance laws increased by 2 million to a record high of 34 million.

"What we need is less yap-yap-yap from the employers, and more yap-yap-yap spelled backwards!"

Firing Reds Gets Go Sign

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board general counsel has ruled that a company may fire a worker suspected of Communist activity——if dismissal has has been requested by the union —without violation of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The ruling by NLRB General Counsel George Bott arose in a case involving a Wisconsin hosiery mill.

The fired worker had aroused the antagonism of other employes by supporting various types of Communist propaganda activity, and in one case at least, by using the union's name in connection with those activities.

As a result, a number of union members threatened not to work with him. The union, after cautioning the workers against an illegal protest strike that might endanger their contract, asked for his dismissal.

The fired employe charged that his dismissal violated the Taft-Hartley Act. The NLRB counsel ruled, however, that T-H gives the worker no protection in such a case.

JAMES J. MITCHELL

Mitchell has been elected to his eighth consecutive two-year term as general secretary-treasurer of the CIO Shoe Workers.

Mitchell, together with six regional representatives, was returned to office as the result of a referendum election Mar. 20. The regional representatives reelected were: Angelo G. Georgian, George Fecteau, I. Rosenberg, David Wilson, James Bringle and Emerson T. Pence.

Pact Extension Averts Packinghouse Strike

A NATIONWIDE strike against the major meat packers was averted Mar. 26 when the CIO, AFL and independent packinghouse unions extended their present wage agreements until May 7.

Contract continuance was made in the hope that a reconstructed Wage Stabilization Board would be able to review a 9c hourly increase granted by the packing companies in February, but not approved by Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston.

Under the agreement the pay increase was subject to government approval by Mar. 25.

Johnston on Feb. 28 named a panel of three economists to analyze the agreement after the CIO and AFL unions' request for approval of the agreement had been ignored for two weeks. He did not, however, give the panel any authority to make recommendations.

A delegation of 200 members of the CIO union came to Washington to get Johnston's decision Mar. 14. He said that he would not approve the increase, because he believed that the case should be decided by the Wage Stabilization Board.

But there is no WSB. The labor members had walked out in protest over an inflexible 10% wage increase formula, which was supported by the industry and public members and subsequently approved by Johnston.

Big 4 Front Is Cracked By Goodyear Pact

THE CIO Rubber Workers signed a last-minute union shop agreement Mar. 29 with the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., and then called off a strike threatened by 25,000 workers in 10 plants throughout the country.

It is the first union shop contract signed by any of the Big Four in the rubber industry—Goodrich Tire and Rubber, Firestone Tire and Rubber, U. S. Rubber, and Goodyear.

The new pact, signed in Cleveland, was hailed by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the URW as "the crowning achievement of the fight URW has waged for 16 years to get a union shop contract with one of the Big Four companies."

The company and the union had been in almost constant negotiating sessions during the previous two weeks. A strike vote taken by the Goodyear membership showed the ratio favoring strike action to have run 4 to 1, according to reports. This factor was believed to have influenced the company in signing.

The contract, which must be ratified by the membership, runs until Feb. 10, 1953, but may be reopened on wages, on 30 days' notice, for an unlimited number of times during its duration.

In addition to 14,000 workers at the Akron, O., plant, the URW represents Goodyear employes at Los Angeles, Jackson, Mich.; Gadsden, Ala.; St. Marys, O.; Lincoln, Neb.; Windsor, Vt.; Topeka, Kan., and New Bedford, Mass.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Rolling our union on! CIO's big drive among thousands of packing shed workers in the far west recorded its third great victory on Mar. 28 in the Phoenix, Ariz., area. The vote was CIO 1150 to 182 for no union. This smashing victory brought to a climax the drive among the United Fruit and Vegetable Workers, Local Industrial Union 78, against the Commie dominated DPO-FTA.

Allan Haywood

This brings into the CIO another 10,000 workers. The first victory was in Salinas, Calif., last October, and the second in the Imperial Valley-Yuma area in January.

Although DPO—the "Dying Puny Outfit"—wasn't on the ballot in Phoenix, it put on an anti-union campaign urging the workers to vote no union. The writer addressed a mass meeting of workers in Phoenix the night before the election. Merge Briggs, a veteran shed worker, opened the meeting. These workers demanded the right to stay in CIO and get out of the Commie-dominated FTA; they started this drive themselves.

A great deal of credit is due to CIO Natl. Rep. Richard Leonard, CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler, of Los Angeles, who handled the campaign in its earliest stages and stayed right in the thick of things through the election, CIO Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon, of Phoenix, who gave guidance and direction to the campaign in Phoenix as well as assisting in the other elections.

Others who rendered splendid service were CIO Reps. Ken Gillie, Howard McNamara, James Spangler and A. R. Hardesty, and CIO Publicity Representative Henry Santiestevan.

The organizing campaign will continue among the small fruit and other shed workers.

This is good batting: 3 hits, 3 runs, no errors. Congratulations to all!

John Riffe, director of the CIO Organizing Committee reports, that in a representation election at the Union-Buffalo Mills division of the United Merchants and Manufacturing Co., Union, S. C., the workers voted 633 for the CIO Textile Workers to 460 for no union. In four more plants that are a part of this company the CIO is ready to file petitions for elections.

A significant victory was recorded for the CIO in the unaffiliated National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians which is known as NABET. In a nationwide election these workers voted to affiliate with the CIO by a vote of 1579 to 355 against.

This group will be granted a national union charter. The CIO welcomes them into the fold. We will work with them to build their organization everywhere. Their resources can be of greater value to our movement. A hearty welcome, best wishes and fraternal greetings to the officers and members.

The CIO Rubber Workers reported three union shop victories. Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said workers in the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, O., represented by URW Local 7, voted 5573 to 1327 in favor of a union shop. Local 238 at the Firestone plant in New Castle, Ind., voted 277 to 18, and members of Local 373, Bloomfield Molding Co., Bloomfield, N. J., voted 12 to 0 on the union security issue.

The Newspaper Guild of New York, Local 3, scored two more victories in representation elections. Employes at the Saturday Review of Literature voted 17 to 2 in favor of the Guild. The Guild also was the victor in an election held at WQXR, radio station of the New York Times, by a 19 to 15 vote.

Rep. Dave Wilson, Shoe Workers-CIO, reports that the USW-CIO won a representation election at the International Shoe Co., Eldon, Mo., by a vote of USWA-CIO 104, AFL 89, no union 9.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the United Furniture Workers-CIO was victorious in a representation election at the Sleeprite Co., Los Angeles, Calif., over an independent union by a vote of 106 to 37. Rep. William Gilbert was in charge.

Reg. Dir. William Smith reports that in a representation election at the Stauffer Chemical Co., Orlando and Apopka, Fla., the workers voted 9 to 3 in favor of the United Food Workers LIU 1758, CIO.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that the United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers won a union shop election at the National Gypsum Co., Baltimore, Md., by a vote of 162 yes to 7 no.. The CIO Steelworkers won a union shop election at the U. S. Steel Supply Co., Baltimore, Md., by 27 yes to 5 no. The Rubber Workers won a similar election at the Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., Cumberland, Md., by a vote of 1075 yes to 132 no.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, International Woodworkers-CIO, reports that the IWA-CIO won two representation and one union shop elections; Ralph L. Smith Lumber Co., Anderson, Calif., eligible 404, IWA-CIO 262, AFL 108, no union 5, challenged 1; Associated Plywood Mills, Inc., Roseburg, Ore., eligible 77, IWA-CIO 59, AFL 9, no union 2; Northwest Timber Co., Gibbs, Ida., eligible 141, for union shop 103, against 28.

A. F. Hartung, assistant director of organization, IWA-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Foresthill Lumber Co., Foresthill, Calif., the workers voted in favor of the IWA by a vote of 58 to 22 for AFL and 4 challenged.

Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports two union shop elections won by the Steelworkers: American Tool Works Co., Cincinnati, O., yes 414, no 19, challenged 1, and Wm. Powell Co., Cincinnati, yes 1031, no 49, challenged 3, void 3.

UTSE Wins 12½% Raises

THE CIO United Transport Service Employes recently negotiated a contract with virtually all the nation's major railroads giving union members a wage increase of 12%.

The new contract covers redcaps, dining car waiters, cooks, pullman laundry workers and porters employed on most Eastern, Western and Southern carriers and is retroactive to Feb. 1.

UTSE Pres. Willard Townsend declared the increase will add thousands of dollars to the pay envelopes of UTSE members, and an escalator adjustment based on the Dept. of Labor's cost of living index will mean additional raises.

Townsend estimated that by the end of this year, quarterly increases based on the rising index will equal the 25c hourly raise originally sought by the union.

The agreement will run to Oct. 1, 1953, with a provision that it can be reopened after July 1, 1952, for still further adjustments over and above those linked to the cost of living index.

Public Housing Vacant In Defense Plant Areas

A REGULATION of the Public Housing Administration is forcing local housing authorities to keep homes vacant in temporary public projects despite over-crowding in nearby defense areas.

The situation comes about because PHA requires exclusive reservation of these units for GIs and veterans. The agency has failed to provide that if no applications are received from these two sources, local administrators may rent vacant space to non-veterans.

The situation came to CIO's attention in two widely separated localities — Richmond, Cal., and Baltimore, Md.

In both these cities, the housing shortage is acute and yet there are vacancies in temporary public housing units.

JACK BURHL, president of the Contra Costa, Calif., CIO Council, wired CIO Pres. Philip Murray about the situation in Richmond, and two days later came a complaint from Baltimore.

The letter from Baltimore stated that there were more than 60 vacancies in three adjoining Negro housing projects located about one mile from the vast Bethlehem Sparrows Point shipyard. At the same time, necessary hiring by both the shipyard and the Glenn L. Martin airplane factory was going too slowly because of the difficulty of securing housing.

The Richmond situation, however, is more fantastic than this. There are 1500 vacancies in the huge temporary Harbor Gate project there, although Richmond is a center of defense activity in steel, shipbuilding and oil, because of this same PHA ruling.

The CIO Housing Committee has asked that PHA immediately revise the ruling.

On top of this, the entire existence of the Harbor Gate project has been endangered by Sen. Knowland (R. Cal.), who slipped an amendment into the pending defense housing bill in effect allowing the government to condemn the land on which the project is built. The government could then resell it for the construction of privately financed housing.

THE amendment doesn't mention Richmond by name, but states that the government may do this in any city where there are more than 12,000 temporary public housing units if there are 1500 vacancies in those units.

By no coincidence, Richmond is the only city in the U. S. which meets both these standards. Knowland has made no attempt to influence PHA into changing the ruling which keeps the units vacant, needless to say.

Meanwhile, there has been no further action on the defense housing bill, which is a thoroughly unsatisfactory measure from CIO's point of view since it mainly provides for a further bonanza to the private construction industry. It is scheduled for Senate debate within the next month, but the House has already refused to consider it.

As for what the mobilization agencies have done to meet the acute and growing problem within the limits of their authority—well, the Defense Production Authority last week announced it had set up a procedure by which certain areas can be termed emergency areas.

IN SUCH case, DPA may recommend to the Federal Reserve System that the tight credit restrictions in those areas should be relaxed enough to let people buy new houses on easier mortgage terms than are presently allowed.

No law says the federal reserve system has to follow DPA's advice, and of course the decision does nothing about getting new housing built for rental or sale, or keeping rent controls.

Former Anti-Control Lobbyist Chosen To Help Name Rent Advisory Boards

The Office of the Housing Expediter, which is charged with enforcing rent control, last week appointed a former anti-rent-control lobbyist to an important OHE post.

This action added to the chagrin of labor and other liberal groups, already disheartened by the delay of the administration in asking Congress for a new and stronger control low. The present law expires in June.

The appointee is George W. Proffitt, a registered lobbyist for the National Apartment Owners Association from Jan. 6, 1948, to May 5, 1950. The association opposed continuation of rent control in 1948, 1949, and 1950. OHE appointed Proffitt to serve as director of its important Rent Advisory Board.

As such, Proffitt will have influence in the naming of local rent advisory boards, which are the agencies through which rent increases are granted on a city-by-city basis under the present law. The local boards also make recommendations to OHE Administrator Tighe Woods for changes in rental ceilings and for decontrol actions, and handle local landlord-tenant disputes.

Leo Goodman, secretary of the CIO Housing Committee, upon hearing of the appointment, asked for a Congressional investigation to determine whether there was any payoff to get Proffitt placed in the strategically important post.

He called attention to the fact that Proffitt's former lobbying partner, Burton Edwards, was put on the New York State rent control payroll a short time ago.

Edwards is reported to have been influential in drafting a series of very liberal pro-landlord interpretations of the state law which went into effect two weeks ago.

Price Control A Flop Even In Washington

PRICE CONTROL may or may not be working in other parts of the country but it's definitely floundering in the nation's capital, according to the District of Columbia's price stabilization director.

Following a city-wide enforcement drive, District Director Vincent A. Holmes reported a widespread disregard of price control rules. Nearly half of the stores checked had failed to prepare records required by the price freeze regulations.

Of the first 26 establishments inspected during the survey, 11 were found to have ignored the Mar. 22 deadline and could not produce the base period records required, Holmes reported.

He said that if the same high percentage persists after his office has investigated a sufficient number of Washington business establishments, it will indicate widespread disregard of OPS regulations—"a situation which we cannot view lightly," he added.

Under the Jan. 26 freeze, business men are required to have ready for inspection records of prices charged, costs, ceiling prices and customary markups of goods sold or offered for sale between Dec. 19, 1950, and Jan. 25, 1951.

Injunctions will be obtained against stores which fail to comply within a seven-day grace period after formal notice from the Office of Price Stabilization that they are in violation, Holmes warned. The grace period may be reduced later, he added.

The entire Washington enforcement staff was ordered out last week on a survey of businesses affected by the Jan. 26 price freeze. Marked for special attention were drug, hardware, liquor and appliance stores, groceries, bakeries, jewelry stores, parking lots, laundries, dry cleaning establishments and shoe repair shops.

CIO Kicks On N.J. Rent Hike

PRES. Carl Holderman, of the New Jersey CIO Council, last week asked the Office of the Housing Expediter to halt a proposed 20% increase for "small landlords" in northeastern New Jersey.

The CIO officer also asked the OHE to direct the area Rent Advisory Board, which recommended the increase, to hold public hearings.

Holderman said the increase, which was supposed to go into effect April 1, would affect some 600,000 landlords and 2 million tenants in the nine northeastern counties of the state, and had been announced without prior public hearings.

Furthermore, he added, the board justified the blanket increase on the grounds that many landlords had suffered cost increases but had not applied for allowable rent increases.

Hence, said Holderman, the effect of the blanket order has been to give a clear 20% bonanza to the landlords who did apply for, and get, rent increases to make up for higher costs, and to do for the lazy or uninformed landlords what they did not do for themselves.

Heavy Work Strains Compensable In Mich.

The Michigan Supreme Court has ruled that an employe injured through overstrain caused by heavy and burdensome work is entitled to workmen's compensation. It is the first such decision in Michigan.

Reporter Finds Mexicans Have To Take Jobs At Any Wage Offered In U. S.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WAGES ARE at a starvation level, jobs at any pay scarce in many parts of Mexico. A wage of 40c a day is not unusual there.

It's not strange then, that rumors of the money which can be earned in the big rich country to the North should lure upward of a million Mexicans a year to sneak furtively across the border between the U. S. and Mexico.

Less than 900 immigration officers guard the 1600 mile border between Brownsville, Tex., and San Diego, Calif. It is not too difficult, therefore, for streams of poor workers from Mexico to get into this country.

A COMMON way is to swim or walk across the Rio Grande river.

That method of getting into the U. S. has given these illegal immigrants the nickname of "wetbacks."

The problems presented to this country, particularly to American workers, by these poverty-stricken Mexicans eager to earn what they consider to be fabulous wages in in U. S., are immense.

A survey of the whole situation recently completed by Gladwin Hill, a reporter who spent a year and made a 5000 mile tour of the border area, was published last week in a series of five articles carried in the New York Times.

Here are some of Hill's observations:

"The 'wetback', a penniless fugitive, has to take whatever wages are offered, which, because of the multitude of 'wetbacks' available, usually are at a bare existence level or below it.

"HIS traditional housing is the crudest form of shack or hovel, wherever he can find it, or just the open air. His status denies him access to regular community local and welfare agencies. If he doesn't like his situation he can go back where he came from. There are thousands of other hopefuls south of the border ready to take his place."

"Aside from the abuses to which these Mexicans themselves are subject, the traffic in 'wetbacks' has manifestly baneful effects on the citizenry with which they mingle. In many sections of Texas, Arizona, California and other areas, they depress the general standards of wages and working conditions below the accepted American levels.

"Instead of supplementing the domestic labor force they undercut it, taking jobs from tens of thousands of native citizens, farm and urban workers alike."

Although employment of "wetbacks" from a legal point of view, Hill reports, is "tantamount to harboring a fugitive," it has been held by the Federal courts to be a non-punishable offense, because of the omission of any specific penalty in the immigration laws.

Farmers may claim that they can't recognize a "wetback" from any other Mexican-American worker, but in reality, says Hill, they have a simple way of recognizing them—"they will work for far less than other labor—which is why the farmer uses them."

Growers testifying last summer before the President's Commission on Migratory Labor, Hill reports, acknowledged that they paid field hands as low as 15c an hour.

ACCORDING to a study made by two university professors, which Hill quotes, the prevailing hourly wage for "wetbacks" in one cotton growing area last year was 25c an hour.

"It is not extraordinary for 'wetbacks' to report having worked for weeks only to be told that there was no cash due them. In such a circumstance the 'wetback' has little scope for argument; the farmer can just turn him into the immigration authorities for deportation," Hill states.

Describing how authorities in the Southwest deliberately "wink at" the hiring of "wetbacks," Hill says that Southwestern cotton, citrus and vegetable growers "have come to feel they have a vested right in the illegal traffic."

CIO Seeks To Aid Mexican 'Wetbacks'

Bills now before Congress which propose among other things to legalize the employment of "wetbacks" are vigorously opposed by the CIO. The proposed legislation, the Ellender bill (S. 984) and the Poage bill (HR 3048), the CIO points out, would be harmful both to native and immigrant labor.

Besides permitting the hiring of illegal Mexican entrants, exemption of foreign workers from the payroll tax and the protection of the Social Security Act is also provided.

The CIO has endorsed the Chavez bill (S. 949) and the Yorty bill (HR 2955) calling for a reasonable program for supplying agricultural workers, while safeguarding their rights, including the right to organize and bargain collectively.

AUTO WORKERS: Older but still zestful, the CIO Auto Workers held their 13th constitutional convention at Cleveland last week. Renomination of Pres. Walter P. Reuther for his fourth term as UAW president without even token opposition provoked this half-hour demonstration. Hot debate preceded increasing the union's dues to $2.50 a month. (See Pages 6 and 7.)

COMMUNICATIONS WORKERS: Voting by secret ballot takes a long time at a convention attended by 1500 delegates—the number on hand for the CIO Communications Workers' conclave at Grand Rapids, Mich. But they all took such a keen interest in voting for their district officers that they didn't mind having to stand in line for a considerable time. Queues like this one waited patiently at several places at the convention. Casting her ballot is Helen Guthrie, delegate from Canton, O. (See Pages 8-9.)

'Liver' Knocked By FTC From Carter's Little Pills

The Federal Trade Commission last week knocked the word "liver" out of Carter's Little Liver Pills.

Not only is the manufacturer, Carter Products, Inc., barred from using the word "liver" in its ads and on the pill bottles, but the way in which it can use a number of other words is restricted by FTC.

Federal Trade Commissioner John Carson, in a statement authorized by FTC, said quite bluntly that Carter's pills "have no effect on the liver. . . ."

FTC also told Carter products to stop saying without qualifying its advertising that the pills will help a person who feels "down-and-out," "blue," "down-in-the-dumps," "worn out," "sunk," "logy," "depressed," "sluggish," "all-in," 'listless," "mean," "low," "cross," "tired," "stuffy," "heavy," "miserable," "sour," "grouchy," "irritable," "cranky," "peevish," "fagged out," "dull," "sullen," "what's-the-use," "bogged down," "grumpy," "run-down," or "gloomy."

The order says that such claims must be limited to "such temporary relief therefrom as may be afforded by an evacuation of the bowels in those cases in which such symptoms or conditions are associated with and caused by constipation."

Carson, in his statement, also hit hard at deceptive practices of drug manufacturers and associated advertising agencies.

"There is every reason to believe that the customers who are the victims of such practices," Carson said, "are all too often the less-informed and the less able to protect themselves and their pocketbooks.

"They are all too often the consumers who are weakened by the fear of illness, and burdensome medical expenses, and by unemployment, and who thus become the ready victims of those who would prey upon them by falsely advertising medical products."

TWUA Strike Of 40,000 In Dixie Solid After Week

FEDERAL mediators were attempting to settle the southern textile strike picture as the CIO News went to press. The conciliators met separately last Thursday for the first time with union and company officials since the walkout began Apr. 1.

Meanwhile, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers reported the strike of 40,000 TWUA members in six Southern states was "proceeding on schedule." He has established strike headquarters in Greensboro, N. C.

"With the exception of one or two isolated instances, the workers are staying away from the mills and will remain out until we get an acceptable settlement," he said. Rieve commented that it was ironical that the strike should have begun Apr. 1, "the very day on which 20,000 TWUA members in Northern mills of the industry received a 7c an hour wage increase under the cost-of-living formula."

"This latest raise for the Northern workers will make a total of 21c an hour these workers have won since last September, as contrasted to an average of 9c an hour in the South. Southern employers can well afford to pay wages equal to those made in the North, yet not one of them has made any real effort at negotiations. If ever a strike was forced on a group of workers, this is it."

In a rundown of the number of workers on strike in the various states, Rieve disclosed that 15,000 were out in North Carolina, 9000 in Virginia, 6000 in Alabama, 8500 in South Carolina and 1500 in Tennessee and Louisiana.

The largest of the 45 mills affected include Erwin Mills, Inc., Durham, N. C.; Cone Mills Corp., Greensboro, N. C.; Fieldcrest Mills, a division of Marshall Field Co., Spray, N. C.; Dan River Mills, Dan River, Va.; and Lowenstein and Co., with mills in several states.

TWUA is seeking a 12c hourly wage increase, with a minimum hourly rate of $1.14½, in addition to a 7c a year annual improvement provision, an escalator clause tied to the Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index, and concessions on insurance and pensions. The best offer to date has been that of Lowenstein and Co., a 7c an hour increase.

The Defense Dept. is known to be concerned over the strike, since several of the mills have important defense contracts. At the Cooleemee, N. C., plant of the Erwin chain, officials permitted strikers to move 63,000 yards of twill cloth at the request of government authorities. TWUA Secy.-Treas. William Pollock said that the union likely would permit emergency government orders to be filled at any of the struck mills.

SCENES LIKE THIS occurred in six Southern states where 40,000 members of the CIO Textile Workers are on strike. Emanuel Boggs, TWUA official talks to pickets at the Dan River Mills at Danville, Va.

Hawaii, Alaska Are Issues Again

The Administration is going to have another try at making Hawaii and Alaska into the 49th and 50th states—but manufacturers of bunting and flags are cautioned not to rush into production of 50-star Old Glories.

The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, by votes of 9-4 and 7-6, last week reported favorably on granting statehood to Hawaii and Alaska respectively, and the chairman, Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) said he would press for early floor action.

There was no indication, however, that the Southern Democrats would be any more inclined to go along this time than they were during the last Congress, when they talked the bills to death after they had passed the House. They feared then, and presumably fear now, that the addition of two new Senators from each of the new states would swing the balance against them on civil rights legislation.

Boss-Provoked Violence Marked Early Cotton-Belt Strikes

THE CURRENT Southern textile strike is different from earlier widespread walkouts in the cotton-belt states.

Gone was the clamoring for federal troops and state militia which characterized earlier widespread textile strikes in Dixie.

Gone, too, were the strikebreakers and anti-picketing injunctions.

It was not always thus. Southern textile strikes in 1919, 1921, 1929 and 1934 were notable for violent opposition by mill owners, citizens' committees and vigilantes.

Disorder Common

In 1919, a strike which began in Columbus, Ga., was the opening gun in a wave of disputes which swept the entire South. This protest centered in the workers' demand for shorter hours, union recognition and the transfer of wartime bonuses to straight time wages.

Disorder was common during the height of the Columbus controversy and a union man was shot and killed and several strikebreakers wounded before the strike was broken and the employes returned to work on the company's terms. At Macon, Ga., the same year, a violent struggle ensued when a mill resorted to the use of Negro strikebreakers.

When workers walked out on strike in 1921, events followed a similar pattern in almost every instance. Management countered with lockouts and evictions and attempts to reopen the mills invariably led to bloodshed and violense. Workers who were leaders in the union were fired and blacklisted. Usually a company of state militia or a national guard unit was called in to "maintain order."

Spontaneous Strikes

Starting early in 1929, a train of strikes spread like wildfire through the Southern textile industry. Prodded into rebellion by unbearable stretchouts, workers left their jobs by the thousands and despite a lack of both leadership and funds, dug in for a determined seige.

Spearheading the walkout were 5000 workers at the German-owned rayon plant in Elizabethton, Tenn. Quickly the strike fever spread to Gastonia and Marion, N. C., and to Danville, Va., site of the huge Dan River mills.

For sheer savagery on the part of mill interests and commercial elements, the Loray strike in Gastonia has few counterparts in American labor history.

Working conditions at the mill were abominable, hours were long and wages low—housing and sanitation were deplorable and the company store system kept most of the workers constantly in debt to the mill.

Within a few days after the start of the strike, management brought in the state militia and obtained sweeping injunctions. The mill quickly gathered a supply of strikebreakers and prepared to resume operations.

The strikers relief depot was demolished one night by a masked mob of several hundred men without interference by the troops brought there to "maintain order."

The mill organized a "Committee of 100" to ensure the continuance of the reign of terror directed against the strikers when public protests against the brutality of the troops forced their recall by the governor.

The strikers set up a tent colony and notified the governor that since the civil authorities would not keep order they would protect themselves. When the Gastonia chief of police and several officers tried to enter the colony without a warrant, the chief was slain and a striker and two policemen were wounded.

Six Strikers Killed

At Marion, a short distance from Gastonia, a sheriff and his deputies killed six strikers and wounded 20 when the group attempted to prevent strikebreakers from entering one of the struck mills there.

Despite the fact that the majority of the townspeople were in sympathy with the strikers at the Dan River mills, an obstinate management broke the back of that affair by the simple process of starving the union out. While violence broke out occasionally there, the strike was lacking in the sustained degree of terrorism present at Gastonia and Marion.

More than 420,000 workers took part in the three-week general textile strike in 1934—the largest single strike in the United States until that time. Seven union pickets were killed by deputies at Honea Path and Greenville, S. C., and 33 were wounded. At one time, 10,000 National Guardsmen and 15,000 armed guards were on duty throughout the South.

GOP's New Slogan For 1952

The Republican Party is trying hard to come up with a catch-all slogan for the 1952 campaign.

The GOP isn't leaving anything to chance; it is trying to pick the brains of college professors by asking them to select the slogans they like best from a number of submitted samples.

Members of the faculty of Columbia Univ., New York, received the sample slogans, according to Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr, dean of Union Theological Seminary and a veteran liberal. The slogan that caught Dr. Niebuhr's eye read:

"Individual happiness now."

It's almost as good as being against sin!

Mrs. FDR To Retire As UN Rights Chairman

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, widow of the World War II President, announced at Lake Success, N. Y., that she will not run for re-election as chairman of the United Nations' Human Rights Commission.

However, she is expected to continue as a member. She has headed the commission since it was established five years ago, but believes the chairmanship should be rotated.

Labor On New Defense Advisory Board

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A NEW TOP level defense advisory board, reporting to the President and speaking for labor, industry, agriculture and the general public, meets at the White House for its first session on April 9.

Labor's unanimous decision to serve on the 17-man group was made public on April 5, after the United Labor Policy Committee held an hour-long meeting with President Truman.

Afterwards, in a special statement, the ULPC voiced hope that this might lead to a settlement of differences with the various government mobilization agencies.

The ULPC withdrew its representatives from these groups Feb. 28, complaining that the interests of labor and the public generally were being ignored by the big business clique which had gained policy control of many of the top agencies.

Last week's ULPC statement said:

"The United Labor Policy Committee has agreed unanimously to serve on the President's National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy.

"We understand the Board is to serve in an advisory capacity to the President. We are hopeful that this will be the first step toward resolving the differences between labor and the mobilization agencies.

"In responding to the President's invitation, we were moved by a desire to render the greatest possible service to the defense program.

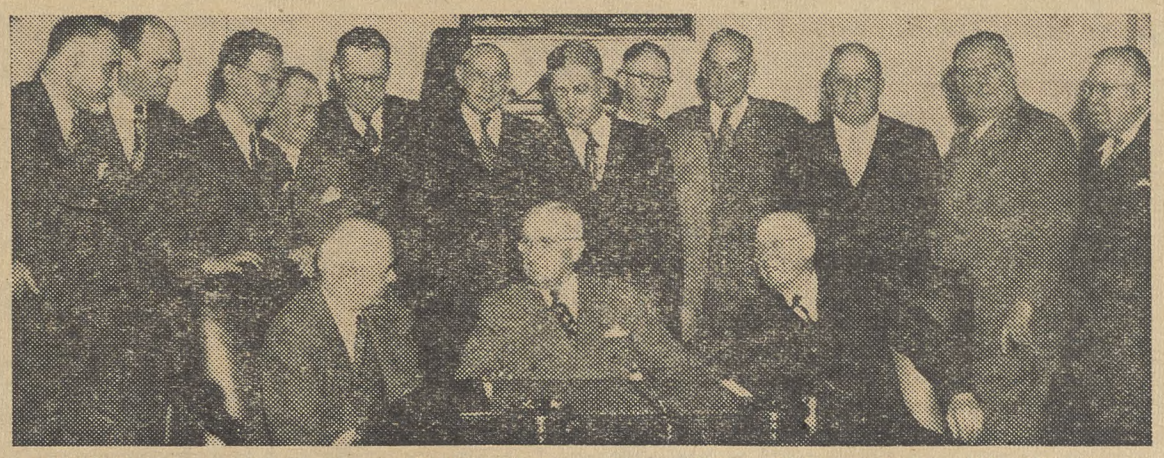
"By our service on the Board, we hope to achieve the equality of sacrifice which the present emergency requires from all Americans."

Pressed for more precise interpretations, both CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green told a throng of reporters that the "statement speaks for itself."

The board was created by President Truman on Mar. 15, through an executive order. In addition to providing for the 16 representatives from public groups, it also names Director of Defense Mobilization Charles E. Wilson.

The President's order, however, said "it shall be the function of the Board to advise the President from time to time with respect to the current defense mobilization program, or any phase thereof.

"The Board shall meet with the President at his request and shall meet at such other times as may be determined by its Chairman. The Board shall make recommendations and reports to the President upon his request, and at such other times as the Board deems appropriate."



LEADERS of the United Labor Policy Committee agree at a White House conference with President Truman to serve on a 17-man mobilization advisory board. Seated with the President are CIO Pres. Philip Murray (left) and AFL Pres. William Green. Standing, left to right, are Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO National Maritime Union, Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel; Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, Vice Pres. Elmer Walker of the AFL Machinists, Pres. Daniel W. Tracy of the AFL Electrical Workers, George Leighty and A. E. Lyons, chairman and secretary, respectively, of the Railway Labor Executives Association; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers, AFL Secy.-Treas. George Meany, Pres. William C. Doherty of the AFL Letter Carriers and Pres. W. C. Birthwright of the AFL Barbers Union. It was the first ULPC meeting with Truman since February.

The new group, therefore, is clearly advisory to the President, rather than to ODM Chief Wilson, even though he is its chairman.

Murray likened the board to a similar committee of the Office of War Mobilization on which he served during World War II.

It was the ULPC's first meeting with President Truman since mid-February.

ATTENDING for the CIO were Pres. Murray, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers, Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, on a brief trip to the West Coast, and UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, presiding at the Auto Workers' convention, were unable to attend.

Meanwhile, however, there seemed little noticeable progress in settling the wage stabilization problem.

Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, held "one last meeting" with management spokesmen, who continued to oppose creation of a Wage Stabilization Board with full power to hear and seek settlements of both wage and "non-economic" disputes.

On the manpower issue—which had arisen when Wilson placed the major control power over civilian manpower questions in his office—conversations between a ULPC committee and government officials were continuing.

A Strong Dissent On Committee's Report

Sen. Benton: 'Establish A Price Line That Can Be Held'

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE JOINT Congressional Committee on the Economic Report has come out with its comments on President Truman's economic recommendations to Congress—and the document is one more example of the split personality that Congress seems to have developed.

The report is "unanimous"—but vigorous dissents have been filed by at least five committee Democrats, in the form of footnotes, to nine of the most important findings. Ignoring the dissents, the committee Republicans have added snide comments gloating over the Democrats' "change of heart."

The committee chairman, Sen. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), in his own postscript says there were no deep disagreements and no changes of heart!

The two major recommendations, with which nobody disagrees, are these: the defense program should be put on a pay-as-you-go basis, and Congress should therefore immediately put through a big tax increase.

When it comes down to details, however, the report gallops off in all directions.

1. The majority says "the defense garment should be cut to the revenue cloth." In other words, military expenditures should be tailored to the Treasury estimate of how much money is coming in.

Comments Sen. Benton (D., Conn.): "If a revenue estimate turns out to be $3 billion too low—and many revenue estimates have so proved—the U. S. would . . . be in the ridiculous position of stating that we could have had, and should have had, $3 billion more of airplanes, tanks and guns—but that we failed to get them because somebody in the Treasury department made a bad guess on estimated revenue."

NOTE: The Treasury has just announced it guessed wrong on the fiscal year ending June 30. Treasury predicted a $2.7 billion deficit; actually there will be a $3 billion surplus.

2. The report says that cost-of-living escalator clauses in union contracts are inflationary because they tend to push prices up, and the majority suggests at least a three-month waiting period before they are allowed to go into effect.

Benton and Sen. Douglas (D., Ill.), comment that the escalator clauses are the result, not the cause, of price increases.

3. The majority, seeking a remedy for what it calls "built-in inflation," says that the Defense Production Act should be "carefully reviewed" by Congress. It declares something should be done about basic controls on food prices, that what it terms "administered pricing" in industry is a bad thing, but that rent control—a major factor in the cost of living—should be left mainly to the states.

Benton, the only Democrat to file a complete report of his own, does no pussyfooting about "careful reviewing," but wades right in:

"It is idle," he says, "to talk about stabilization on the wage front or on the farm front unless much more dispatch and firmness is demonstrated on the general front of price stabilization. This will necessarily compel many business firms to absorb rising costs out of profits. . . .

"If business prices are stabilized, the problem of dealing with wage increases based upon cost-of-living adjustments, and farm-price increases based upon the parity concept, will be reduced to manageable proportions and can be met with greater justice and firmness."

(In other words, it is putting the cart before the horse to try to hack away at either wage increases or farm prices while doing nothing effective about the forces pushing both wages and food prices up—which is something CIO economists have been emphasizing for months.)

"The Government's basic objective," Benton continues, "should thus be to establish a price line that can be held, and then to hold the line"—something that the majority was unwilling to come right out and say.

Business Group's Tax Plan: Soak Consumer

The Committee for Economic Development unveiled its "Emergency Tax Program" for 1951 at a press conference at Washington recently. Its chief theme: Soak the consumer.

CED, a businessmen's organization, called for an immediate tax increase of $10 billion and a $6 billion budget cut to put the government on a pay-as-you-go basis. It proposes to increase taxes for individuals $3.8 billion; excise taxes, $5.2 billion; corporation taxes, only $1 billion.

Thus, of the $10 billion in increased taxes, 90% would come from individuals, through higher income taxes and through excise taxes, which is another name for sales taxes.

"If price control is to make its contribution to a broad stabilization program," Benton goes on, "it is essential that the present type of control be supplanted by dollars-and-cents ceilings that can be posted by sellers and identified by consumers."

Benton and Rep. Hart (D., N. J.), also call for a strengthened federal rent control law.

4. The report asks for a delay in federal aid to states for health services and education, including medical education. It calls on the states to shoulder that burden.

The four Democrats said:

"If we were facing a period of all-out mobilization, expenditures for these programs could perhaps be deferred. . . . But it has been generally agreed that we must plan in terms of a 10- to 20-year period of defense mobilization, during which time a whole generation of children will mature. . . .

"We believe that we should apply federal funds to provide adequate educational facilities for the children who will be growing up during the long-term period of armed alert."

5. The committee majority comments, without recommendation, that various large-scale industries are getting tax breaks of gigantic proportions from the National Production Authority.

It even suggests that some corporations have been given these privileges even though their expansion programs were undertaken before the Korean outbreak.

(The tax break in question is the privilege of deducting the cost of an expansion program over a five-year period instead of the usual 20-year amortization period which, of course, reduces, for the five years in question, the amount of income on which the corporation pays its tax bill.)

Instead of recommending that NPA stop these bonanzas to industry, however, the committee majority appears to take it for granted that the practice will continue. At any rate, after piously saying that tax loopholes should be closed, all it recommends is that the Treasury should be extra cautious about estimating revenue!

Two committee Democrats, however, remark in a footnote to this section that the amortization privilege is "susceptible of great abuse and needs to be carefully checked. . . . The immediate effect is to deprive the government of tax revenues at the very time when the tax burden is likely to be heaviest."

They point out that the privilege is valid only when the expansion is for purposes that clearly have no peace-time uses, but that when it is extended to such industries as steel or aluminum—as has been done—it is clearly wrong.

6. While the committee majority firmly comes out for increased taxes on a fair basis, and pays lip service to the fact that lower-income groups are hard pressed already, it makes no recommendations either as to the amount of new revenue that should be raised or how the burden should be divided.

It remained for four Democrats, fully aware of possible political consequences, to name a figure—$10 billion—and to comment: "Such taxation will be a heavy load, but it will be less of a burden for society than a failure to tax and the consequent credit and price inflation which would result."

THE NEW DEFENSE BOARD

The decision of the United Labor Policy Committee that its representatives serve on the new President's National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy is indeed—as ULPC leaders voiced it—a "hopeful" step.

The new board—representing labor, agriculture, industry and the public—will meet regularly with the President, and have an unequalled chance to pass along their ideas to him. Through the board, the ULPC emphasized, "we hope to achieve the equality of sacrifice which the present emergency requires from all Americans."

For the first time since the Korean war began, labor and the other groups now have a recognized, formal method of talking over defense problems directly with the Chief Executive. Although Charles E. Wilson, the defense mobilization head, is the board's chairman, the group is established to bring views and advice to the President—rather than any subordinate public official. That is an important gain.

Nobody in labor, of course, expects that any one board—however valuable it may prove—will be able to solve the problems about which unions have been complaining in recent months.

Appointment of the board, of course, does not free Charlie Wilson of his big business attitudes; it does not bring down high prices, or work out an equitable wage formula, or improve the anti-inflation law, or give labor the participation it has rightly sought in the mobilization program.

Obviously, labor will keep up the fight to win equity and justice on all the mobilization issues about which it has been voicing protest in the last few months. These are not narrow "labor" issues—they concern every American, regardless of job or economic status.

In providing an agency for discussion of these important questions with the President, the new board may substantially help the people to win equality of sacrifice and fair play in the mobilization program.

ECA TALKS SENSE

Elsewhere on this page, you'll find some comments by William C. Foster, the director of the Economic Cooperation Administration, which make excellent sense.

Mr. Foster says in effect that the Marshall Plan has provided western Europe with a basis for prosperity for workers and farmers. And he adds that prosperity won't come if management is content with low production and high profit on each of the few units that come out of the factories.

Instead, says the head of ECA, European management simply must realize the need for high production; for lowering the high production costs that come with low output; and for passing the benefits along to workers and consumers.

To this, the CIO says a hearty "aye." Last August, a union delegation—on which the CIO was represented—said much the same thing. That group of experienced union men came back from France with reports of extreme dissatisfaction on the part of the French workers. For the workers weren't getting a fair share of the new prosperity that the Marshall Plan was making possible—and they had good reason to gripe about it.

As the CIO has pointed out, short-sighted management groups overseas won't do much on their own to improve living conditions. It requires a needling job by ECA—to make sure that Europe takes advantage of the billions of dollars of equipment and material that the Marshall Plan has made available.

And, equally, it requires some intelligent, militant action by governments and by non-Communist labor unions to force that progress toward a goal of higher living standards. Progress can be made; and, probably, the future of a free, democratic Europe depends on whether Europeans set out resolutely to make better use of the economic tools they now have at hand.

Resistance Movement

European Prosperity:

'Not So Wild A Dream'

This week, the Marshall Plan enters its third year.

Is it succeeding in the task of rehabilitation for which it was established? Can it lead Europe toward stability and prosperity—despite the need for rearmament?

William C. Foster, head of the Economic Cooperation Administration, offered his ideas on the subject in a speech at St. Louis on Mar. 22. An excerpt from Foster's talk:

THE ONLY WAY I see to move towards ascending prosperity and simultaneously toward a substantial reduction in arms costs is by pursuing an intelligent, well-directed course of economic aid throughout the free world.

To do otherwise will find us alone in the world, occupying our lonely peak of power, but surrounded by envy and hostility. As misery increased, danger to us would mount and mobilization would have to increase to unbearable proportions.

We in the Economic Cooperation Administration believe we have charted a practical, wise, effective course for American action. We have proposed to the nations participating in the Marshall Plan that they increase their production by $100 billion. This is not just arithmetic. An increase in gross production of this magnitude would have consequences of incalculable value to the free world. It would mean guns and bread for the present, butter for the future.

This is not so wild a dream. If the spark of industrial revolution in Europe is fanned into flame, the goal might be achieved well within this decade.

To accomplish this goal, there are certain imperatives. Too many Europeans follow the practice of small production with high per unit profits. Instead, management must become imbued with the idea of high production, lowering the costs of production, and then passing the benefit of these lower costs on to buyer and worker.

Increased productivity would, of course, mean a lifting of trade barriers, for goods would have to flow freely throughout Europe. Moreover, as trade barriers fell, national enmities would melt and a progressive new Europe would stand with us as beneficiaries of what wisdom can produce.

As a matter of fact, we have already, under the Marshall Plan, increased the capacity of Europe's industries enough to make possible nearly all the $100 billion increase well within the next decade. Our money has been well invested; its proper application means that economic aid in the future will be of relatively modest proportions.

Thanks to the Marshall Plan, Europe has nearly enough machine tools, nearly enough electrical power, nearly enough farm implements to do the job.

For instance, the secret of the American worker's high output per man per hour lies in the fact that he commands an average of seven horsepower to help him do his job. When the Marshall Plan began, the French worker commanded but 2½ horsepower. Today, thanks to vast new hydro-electric and thermal plants, he commands four. One result is that French production has been helped to rise almost 50%. Today, France's gross national product is being turned out at a higher annual rate than was Germany's when she was preparing for war.

ANOTHER INDIRECT result of France's increased production has been the drop in membership of the CGT, the Communist-dominated trade union organization. The CGT boasted a membership of six million at its post war peak. Today it is believed to have but two million members.

Comparable situations have come about in the other Marshall Plan countries.

These changes have resulted from less than three years of the Marshall Plan. Considering war damage that had to be repaired, considering inertia, resistance to new methods, the tendency of many to cling to outmoded and restrictive practices, it is fair to say that these people have had only a glimpse of what modern technology and methods can do for them.

Given more than a glimpse, given all the benefits that could accrue from a $100 billion increase in production, Europeans would experience an undeniable demonstration that the spiritual benefits of our way of life can be manifested in individually rewarding economic gains.

They would have the democratic fact with which to deny the Communist lie.

C. E. Wilson Meets The Press

On March 27, Charles E. Wilson, director of Defense Mobilization and former head of the General Electric Co., talked with reporters about mobilization problems.

Printed here are excerpts from the official transcript of that press conference—condensed for reasons of space.

It gives a good glimpse of the mind of Charles E. Wilson, who has been bitterly criticized by labor for his big-business attitudes.

PRESS: Do you see any encouraging signs in the inflationary picture, Mr. Wilson?

WILSON: Well, I find a lot of discouraging signs.

PRESS: Could you discuss it for us, please?

WILSON: That will be part of our report on Saturday and I would much rather cover it them. We cover our views on the inflationary picture.

There are good signs and there are bad signs about it. Of course, I surmise the nation very reasonably expects a great deal of the controls. Once you put on controls of any kind in a democracy, why, naturally people expect pretty quick results from them because they are dislocating and no American likes controls.

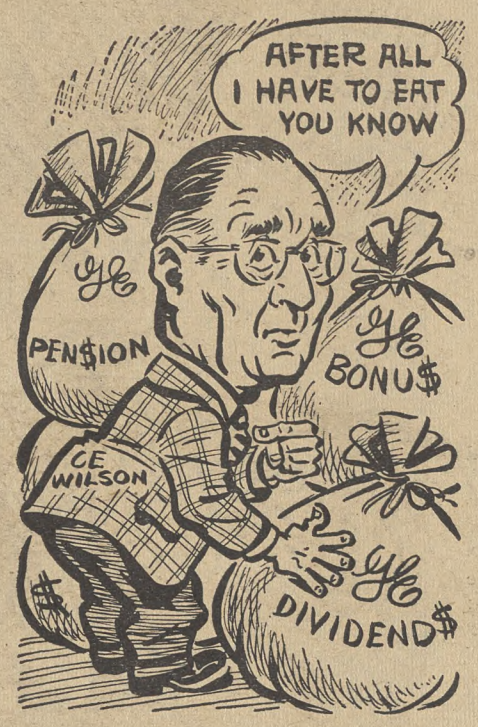
But I think that there are signs that the controls that have been applied in the interest of trying to stop the inflationary spiral have done some good. At least the upward trend of prices has been somewhat arrested . . .

I think that all of the various steps that have been taken show some signs—there are indications—that the situation is improved . . .

PRESS: Do you have any target date for stabilization, any ideas of actually when you may slow down the whole movement to a point where it will be stabilized?

WILSON: I wouldn't want to set a target date. No.

We are going to take every step we know from here on out to keep on, step by step, slowing it down because I really believe what I have said in radio talks and in articles and other places . . . I believe that many of the steps that are being taken—oh, feeble as they seem at times—are beginning the process of slowing down the inflationary spiral. I frankly can say to you that I think we have to take other steps, and we are considering some.



* * *

PRESS: Mr. Wilson, will you tell us what your reaction is to the statement last week by the labor leaders in this meeting here that the whole program has gone on the rocks and is near collapse? What is your reaction?

WILSON: My reaction? We will give you the report on Saturday and you can see.

PRESS: Mr. Wilson, are you satisfied that mobilization is proceeding according to the principle of equality of sacrifice on the part of all segments of the American economy?

WILSON: No.

PRESS: What do you think ought to be done to make it so? What specifically? Where are we falling down in that respect? Don't you think we need to be told?

WILSON: I am going on the air to tell the American people very shortly.

PRESS: The newspapers will be glad to know, too.

WILSON: I am going to undertake that.

PRESS: Do you think labor has more than its share?

WILSON: Would you call that a leading question or what?

PRESS: Mr. Wilson, what do you have to say about labor's charges that big business is taking over this program under you? That seems to be one of their big gripes. Can you answer that for them?

WILSON: I don't think big business has.

Oh, God, I didn't know we were going to get into another discussion of all these things! But if you are interested in that, as it applies to me—and I surmise it slightly applies to me—why, yes, I came from big business! I started in a little business and got into medium business and finally I got a job that might well be regarded as big business, which I quit. I am proud of it! Don't make any mistakes about it! I am proud of the fact! I am not hiding behind it!

I am proud of the fact that I came from the company I came from—resigned and when I came into government, I became just another bureaucrat, what you call them, and I ceased to be big business.

(Wilson receives a life-time pension from General Electric of $66,000 a year. He receives $25,000 a year in dividends on his GE stock—a considerable share of which was given to him as an executive bonus. In addition, Wilson receives this year a big bonus from GE for his 1950 work with the company. His 1951 income will probably be around $200,000—of which less than $25,000 comes from his government salary.)

PRESS: Mr. Wilson, how does that advisory board (proposed by President Truman) hamper your operation? Doesn't it cramp your style a little bit to have this board to advise the President?

WILSON: Do you know any more controversial things you want to raise?

PRESS: Mr. Wilson, did I understand you to say you would be chairman of the 17-man advisory board?

WILSON: That's right.

PRESS: Mr. Wilson, you emphasized that when you came to Washington you resigned from your private business.

WILSON: That's right.

PRESS: Do you propose that any labor representative in your office do the same?

WILSON: I don't care whether they resign or not. Anybody who comes in has at least a five-day job and I hope the man who comes in would make it a five-day job and would become a public servant. But I don't require that they resign their union. We would just hope they would make it a full time job and become a public servant like the rest of us.

PRESS: Don't you have a financial interest in these companies—GE and a lot of big companies—and other big companies?

WILSON: Do I own stock in General Electric? I do. In fact, every dollar I have in the world is invested in it. I don't mind if you know that. So what? So what?

PRESS: I am not arguing with you, sir.

WILSON: Then why do you raise the question?

PRESS: Well, when you say you have severed all connections, if you have any financial interests in a stock, that's not severing all your connections.

WILSON: Is it not? Think that over, All right. If there are many more like you that make a point of that, I would be perfectly willing to sell my stock. I did it when I came down in '42 and I would be glad to do it again. It seems kind of a stupid thing to do when you know you might be here three months. Who knows?

After all, I have to eat, you know, when I leave here, and eat while I am here.

PRESS: Thank you, Mr. Wilson.

WILSON: Thank you all. I am sorry to have taken so much of your time.

You, Mr. Taxpayer, Pay For Industry's Expansion

By IRVING FAGAN and CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

INDUSTRY plans to spend $21.5 billion on new plant and equipment this year. That's 45% more than last year, when industry put in a mere $14.8 billion.

This program is so gigantic that it will increase the nation's industrial capacity by 9% by the end of 1951. And that will mean a staggering increase of 91% over 1939.

But before you burst into cheers, let this sink into your mind: Industry will do a big share of this wonderful expanding at your expense. The explanation is the gimmick known as "accelerated amortization," or in the popular phrase, fast write-off. Some irreverent souls are rude enough to call it the war plant racket.

This tax amortization system, said Pres. Al Hayes of the AFL Machinists, at the historic United Labor Conference at Washington recently, "means that such defense plants owned by a corporation are in fact paid for by the taxpayers—you and me."

The thing has become so rancid that three committees of Congress are now looking into the matter, since corporations have already applied for $11 billion in "certificates of necessity." The total for all of World War II was only $7 billion.

How does it work? A corporation goes into the National Production Authority, master-minded by William Henry Harrison, who came into government service from the presidency of the giant Intl. Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The corporation tells NPA the expansion is "necessary for national defense." If NPA is persuaded (and the way these certificates have been handed out to big corporations shows that NPA is easily persuaded) the corporation gets the certificate.

Here's what the certificate does: It gives the company the right to charge off the cost of new plant or equipment in five years, instead of 20 years or more.

That reduces its apparent profits, thus lowering the amount it pays in income and excess profits taxes.

THUS, IN effect, Uncle Sam (that's you and me) subsidizes construction of new plant and equipment. At the end of five years, the corporation has the plant—free.

Let's put it in figures. Corporation A gets a "certificate of necessity" for a plant costing $40 million. It makes a profit (after taxes) in 1951 of $20 million. But it can write off, or "amortize," the cost of the plant in five years, so it writes off a fifth, or $8 million.

It subtracts that $8 million from its $20 million profit, and reports its profit at $12 million.

And instead of paying taxes on $20 million of profits, it pays on only $12 million.

Corporation A also does that for 1952, 1953, 1954 and 1955. At the end of 1955, it has written off the plant cost completely. It has a modern plant only five years old, for free, and Uncle Sam has lost all those taxes.

AND THAT'S not all. There's another gimmick that will cost you money—later. We've got a "renegotiation" law, which is supposed to "take the profits out of war."

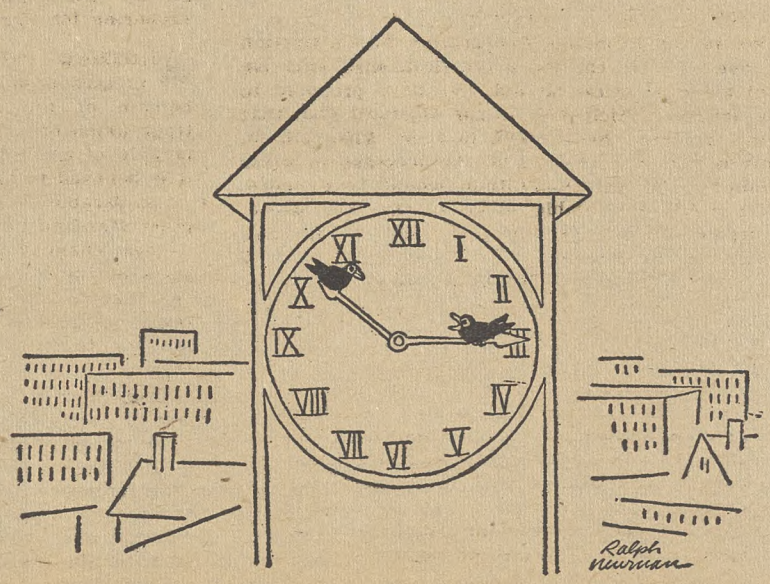
When Uncle Sam's accountants sit down with the corporation boys, the latter argue that they charged off cost of new plants and equipment in five years, and on the corporation books that's "depreciation" and therefore not a profit but an expense!

Business Week reported Mar. 24 that NPA has approved fast tax write-offs for 231 more companies for 313 projects; and it listed the 91 firms which got write-offs for projects costing more than $2 million. The 91 firms accounted for $1,156,900,000.

The iron and steel group accounted for $368.5 million. Of these Pueblo Steel got $80 million; Detroit Steel $47.8 million; Bethlehem Steel $37.1 million; Bethlehem Cuba Iron Mines $38.3 million; Jones & Laughlin $31.9 million.

DO THE corporations need to go to Uncle Sam for the money to expand? Well, 1950 corporate profits were so fantastic (up 30% from 1949) that apologists for the corporations were inventing all sorts of fancy explanations.

Dividends paid out also set an all-time record. Yet, according to Business Week of Mar. 31, dividends last year represented only 42% of net income (profits after all taxes).



"I think I'll rest here for about 15 minutes."

U.S. Blindly Grants Big Rebates In Taxes

Almost half a billion dollars in tax rebates was handed over to 40 steel companies with little or no investigation, a government official admitted last week.

H. B. McCoy, assistant administrator of the National Production Authority, told Congress that in at least one of the cases, the steel firm's application was filled with "false" and "misleading" information.

The applications were filed to get special tax benefits to help "write off" the cost of new plants being erected for the defense program. The companies got the benefits practically on their own say-so as to need and purpose of the new plants.

Thirteenth Convention Shows UAW Power— But Old Zest Remains

By GERVASE N. LOVE

ANYBODY who thinks the CIO's Auto Workers have been slowed down by age or grown dull and placid since their turbulent infant days has another guess coming.

Exactly 2222 delegates from just under 900 locals met in the Cleveland Public Hall last week for the union's 13th constitutional convention.

They drew up the usual fighting, far-seeing, down-to-earth program for the 1,264,451 members who have paid dues for April not calmly and serenely, but with all the gusto and fireworks and whoop-la and noise and enthusiasm that have come to be part and parcel of every UAW-CIO gathering.

They hurled verbal brickbats at the enemies of the worker and the average citizen of the United States and Canada in the form of hard-hitting resolutions that left no doubt of their intent. They paid reverse compliments, in other resolutions, to the big business bureaucrats who are messing up the defense mobilization program.

Intensity Is Hallmark

With an intensity that might have broken a union born in less bitter conflict they fought over and approved an increase in dues, but it was a fight in which the issue was, for the most part, the main talking point. And just as intently they heard distinguished speakers, headed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, talk of democracy, social and economic justice, and equality of participation and sacrifice in the defense effort.

They re-elected top officers headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey—who were unopposed—and Vice Presidents John W. Livingston and Richard Gosser—who were—after campaigns enlivened by all the old-time caucuses, banners, parades and generally pervading spirit of whoop-it-up.

Reuther got a 32-minute ovation when he was nominated, with balloons soaring, the flat sides of sticks pounding on the tables, feet stomping, whistles, cheers and a parade of hundreds of delegates up on the stage to shake his hand. Mazey got one nearly as long.

The principal change from earlier conventions, when the Communists still had some strength, was that speakers could be heard.

Heckling was promptly halted by Reuther or whoever happened to be presiding during the few minutes he was out of the chair. None of the sergeants-at-arms had to fight to keep an unrecognized speaker from grabbing a microphone.

Colorful Sight

The convention floor made a colorful sight from the balcony of the huge hall, where the historic 1949 National CIO convention was held. Tables, arranged in three sections, ranged over the indoor acreage.

At them sat men and women from some 40 states and four Canadian provinces: dark hair, light hair, straight hair, curly hair, no hair; dark suits, light suits, gay dresses, sombre dresses; sport shirts every color under the sun, and everywhere the blue convention badges flashing.

Behind the stage was a huge yellow backdrop with a curved slogan in blue, "Forward To A Better Life In A World Of Peace and Justice." Below it, also in blue, was a mammoth gear, representing the union, with smaller gears meshing into it tagged with the union's objectives: "OPPORTUNITY For All, HEALTH—Complete Medical Care, GUARANTEED Annual Wage, SECURITY—$200 a Month Pension, FULL Employment, and HAPPINESS—Dignity."

The convention opened with an invocation by Msgr. Robert B. Navin, president of St. John's College, Cleveland.

Snafu Is Hit

In his opening address, Reuther went right to work on the defense mobilization and economic stabilization impasse.

"The fight (of the United Labor Policy Committee) in Washington transcends the interests of labor alone," he said. "This is a fight for all the American people.

"We are not fighting the government, although the newspapers would have it appear that way. We are fighting big business, which is trying to take over the government. That is what we are fighting in Washington. They are trying to do through the back door what they could not do through the front door at the ballot box in 1948."

He said the "phoney" price control law was passed "to give them an excuse to freeze wages."

The war mobilization effort "is put together with old shoe strings, rusty baling wire and used chewing gum," he said, adding:

"What we need down there is not a couple of grievances settled. We need a whole new basic contract."

Organized labor, Reuther stressed, is determined to fight for equal representation at the policy-making level of the top war agencies and for complete equality of sacrifice in paying the cost of mobilization.

'Practical Unity'

He called for labor unity saying:

"We are making a beginning, because out of this practical, day-to-day labor unity we are making a substance out of which organic unity ultimately can be built. We ought to get together in a big national labor political conference. Then we should look at the score and ask ourselves, 'Where are we going and what can we begin to do to fight effectively on the political front?"

He asked the convention to strengthen the constitution to see to it that underworld racketeers trying to undermine and destroy unions cannot do it from within the UAW.

That request grew out of disclosures before the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee in Detroit showing that two major firms had tie-ins with gangsters they used to fight the union. Mazey, who gave some of the testimony, for the latter half of the convention was guarded by police because of threats against his life heard in Detroit.

In discussing the mobilization resolution, Mazey recalled that President Truman was re-elected in 1948 on a fair deal program that "captured the imagination of the people."

"I submit the President has made a very feeble effort to put the Fair Deal program into effect," he declared.

"Instead, I submit, the President in this administration has given the people a raw deal. President Truman cannot escape his full share of the responsibility for the confusion and the mess that the mobilization program finds itself in at the present time. All of these big business representatives—Mr. (Charles E.) Wilson, Mr. (Sidney) Weinberg, Gen. (Lucius) Clay, Mr. Eric Johnston—and a score of others have been appointed by the President."

Murray Hits DPA

Murray assailed the Defense Production Act, governing wage and price controls, as "the most iniquitous and most discriminatory act ever passed by Congress." Its price control phase he described as "hypocritical," and declared it obvious that there can't be any real control until the act expires on June 30.

"Unfortunately, the inertia or the spirit of indifference, or whatever you may call it, of the American people and particularly organized labor groups," he said, "determined and shortened the course which resulted in enactment of the act.."

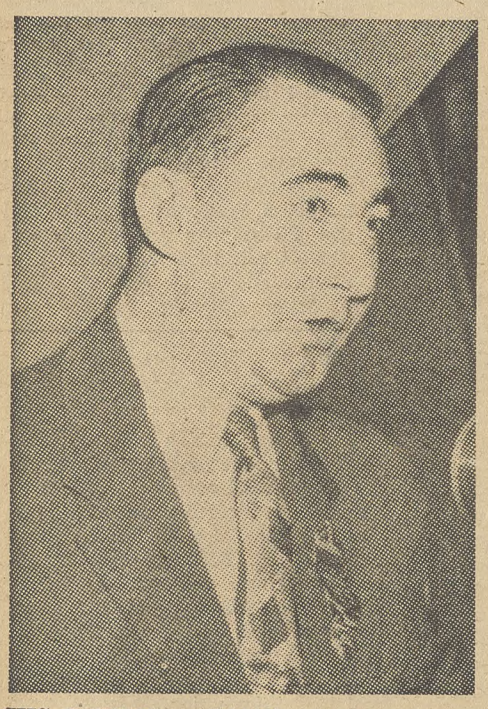
He detailed what organized labor finds wrong with the mobilization effort and what it thinks should be done to correct the deficiencies, and endorsed Reuther's hope for a united labor political conference before the 1952 election. He added:

"I am hopeful that out of the discussions which we are presently having with the representatives of the American Federation of Labor there will grow and develop a lasting, binding feeling of fraternal unity, a unity that will spell progress, a unity that will spell promotion of the people's welfare, a unity that will seek the perpetuity of all our democratic institutions.

"And I am living, as your president is living, in the hope that there may eventually culminate some sensible degree of constructive national organic unity between the two great labor movements of the United States."

The few remaining Communists and their supporters had their closest approach to a field day when they teed off against a resolution supporting the United Nations.

GREETINGS: CIO Pres. Philip Murray (left) is warmly welcomed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers to the union's thirteenth constitutional convention at Cleveland.



HIS DUTIES as UAW secretary-treasurer frequently brought Emil Mazey (above) to the microphone. Mazey was re-elected to his third term. A leader in the Briggs strike in 1933, he was subsequently employed by three companies, including Briggs, and was fired thrice for union activity.

Dues Increased After 4 Hours Of Hot Debate

THE CIO AUTO WORKERS broke through their traditional opposition higher dues in one of the lustiest and ngest debates ever held at a union nvention.

The oratory bounced off the walls of the veland Public Hall for four solid hours fore the vote was taken. Eighteen speaks gave their views from the floor, alterely representing the pros and the cons. is was the big fight, and everyone wanted get into it.

Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey opened the disssion with his report, which included an gent request for more money to permit e union to do its work better and touched a demonstration with all the traditional AW-CIO color. Pres. Walter P. Reuther sed the debate with an impassioned plea "give us the tools and we'll do the job."

The boost, accomplished through constitunal changes recommended unanimously the convention's constitution committee, ised minimum dues from $1.50 to $2.50 a nth. The per capita tax to the internanal was increased from 65c to $1.25 a nth, with the locals getting the rest.

Where Money Goes

Of the international's share, 25c per memt per month goes into the strike fund, ich top leaders hope to build up to about 5 million dollars by the time major conacts expire in 1955.

Another 5c is to be set aside in a special izenship fund "for the purpose of engthening democracy by encouraging embers, and citizens generally, to register d vote" in elections, and for programs med at "an ever higher understanding of tizenship responsibility."

Other special allocations were increased om a total of 8½c to 10c. The remainder es into the general administrative fund.

The locals are to use 5c of their share of the increase for a local citizenship fund, an raise the local educational and recreational allotment from 2½c to 3c a month.

The debate got under way soon after the opening of the afternoon session at 2:30 P.M. on April 2. The vote was taken shortly after 6:30 P.M.—a half-hour after the scheduled recess time—and nearly another hour was spent in determining whether or not there would be a roll call vote.

75% For Increase

The vote, by a show of hands, showed about 75% of the delegates in favor of higher dues, Reuther estimated from the stage. The demand for a roll call was made by Kenneth Forbes, anti-Reutherite from Local 4, Saginaw, Mich.

Under convention rules it required support from 700 delegates. It was defeated when it could muster backing from only 495 delegates.

During the noon recess, banners blossomed from the balcony urging support and defeat of the measure.

Only those of Ford Local 600, largest in the union and still torn by dissension between Communist supporters and their foes, called for the increase to be voted down.

Urging its approval were those of the united Mack Truck locals, the John Deere Council, Borg-Warner Council, all Canadian agricultural implement locals, Allis-Chalmers Council, foundry delegates, 12 aircraft locals, the Bendix Council and the Die Cast Council.

Mazey Makes Point

"It didn't take very much of an expert to figure out that we as individuals can't live on the amount of money we received in 1946," said Kenneth England, of Ford Local 200, Windsor, Ont., chairman of the constitutional committee, in reporting.

"It naturally follows that unions need increased revenue just in order to live, the same as a family."

Mazey pointed out that since dues were last increased in 1946, the cost of living has gone up 54 points under the Bureau of Labor Statistics index in the U. S., and 41.3% in Canada.

"Our union must have an adjustment in dues in order to meet increased operating costs," he said, "and in order to complete the unfinished job which still must be done."

'Sick Of Politicians'

He recounted the growth of the union and steadily mounting benefits to members that made the proposed $2.50 dues—which he described as an "adjustment" rather than an increase—take but $1 out of the $138 a month by which average wages have been increased since 1946. He described the help members in one plant gave to organize another in the early days, and also paid his compliments to opponents of the increase.

"I say, I am a little sick and tired of seeing cheap politicians come to this convention who have a one-point program against dues, not in favor of organizing or political action or other things," he said.

"Our chief difficulty is some of the people in this convention—and not very many of them, thank God—take the position that the most important thing is to get re-elected. I say the most important thing is what is good for our union. And we should put the interest of our union ahead of personal interest."

Parade Starts

Delegates in favor of the increase promptly leaped to their feet cheering, stamping and applauding. Noisemakers appeared and pandemonium took over briefly. A parade started, but Reuther managed to gavel the marchers back into their seats.

During the discussion that followed, Reuther carefully recognized first one side, then the other. With the tables divided into three large sections, he chose six from each, evenly divided.

Twice that many more were eager to be heard when a motion to end debate was passed, with discussion to be closed by Carl Stellato, president of Ford Local 600, usually a Reuther supporter but opposed to him on the dues increase issue, and by Reuther himself. The UAW president's gavel banged frequently to restore order.

tervention in Korea. However, when the te was taken, only 15 or 18 hands were ised in opposition.

Delegates heard former U. S. Rep. Helen ahagan Douglas call for greater attention ancient spiritual and cultural heritage as eapons in the fight against Communism nd inflation.

They also heard greetings and briefer eeches from Allan S. Haywood, CIO Vice resident and director of organization and tincils; CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, ho brought greetings from the CIO Intl. nion of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, of which he is president; John Brophy, former CIO councils director now representing the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the United Nations; Adolph Germer, organization director of the CIO Woodworkers, Pres. Karl Feller, of the CIO Brewery Workers, and others.

Reuther introduced his predecessor as UAW president, R. J. Thomas, now assistant CIO organization director. Thomas got a big hand when he declared his loyalty to the union and said that if top-level political enemies can bury the past, so can rank and filers.

"THIS IS THE PROUDEST moment of my life," said Walter Shaw (above) as he spoke at the UAW convention. The first Ford employe to receive his pension, Shaw was fired in 1940 for union activity, but was re-instated by the National Labor Relations Board with 18 months' retroactive pay.

CWA Re-Elects Top Officers, Only One Contest

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

TELEPHONE workers from 46 states, the District of Columbia and Canada poured into Grand Rapids, Mich., last week by train, plane, bus and car, to attend the annual convention of the Communications Workers of America, the CIO's fifth largest union. CWA's membership has passed 300,000 and is growing steadily.

The 1500 delegates, at least half of them women, together with the hundreds of visitors who came along with them, bulged the corners of the little city that calls itself the furniture center of the nation.

They swamped its hotels and restaurants. Only the huge gray stone Civic Auditorium where the sessions were held was big enough to accommodate them.

When Mayor Paul Goebel welcomed the delegates to the city at the opening session, he said that it was the largest convention in number of delegates that had ever come to the city. After furniture manufacturing, conventions are one of Grand Rapids, most lucrative sources of income.

MEN AND WOMEN DELEGATES were split fifty-fifty at the CWA convention. Here is the largest all-woman delegation present—there were 17 of them. Two don't show in the picture. They work for New Jersey Bell Telephone and come from all over the state. Their telephone service records range from seven to 30 years. Evelyn Burns is president of this big local. CWA probably has more women members than any other CIO union.

'Traffic' Has More Than One Meaning

The word traffic doesn't always mean what you think it does—at least in the telephone industry. You wouldn't know what the delegates to the CWA convention were talking about if you didn't soon catch on that when they said "traffic"—and they said it constantly—they meant traffic in words—communications.

Traffic is the largest of the three main segments of the industry and includes the thousands of operators, service assistants and other employes engaged directly in local and long distance telephone service. The other two divisions are plant (installation, equipment, etc.) and commercial.

Most of the women delegates at the convention and lots of the men work in the traffic division.

Polka Dot Ties Honor Gov. Williams

If anyone at the CWA convention was wondering why Joe Beirne and other officers all blossomed out in polka dot bow ties, it was done in honor of Michigan Gov. G. Mennen Williams, who has made this kind of tie famous throughout the state.

Explaining this to the delegates, CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne remarked that he doubted if a single Republican wearing a polka dot bow tie could be found in the whole state of Michigan today.

It was a dramatic moment Apr. 2, when CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne, peering over the top of the union's symbol, a big blue model of a dial telephone that partly concealed the speakers, looked out at the great array of delegates on the floor below him and raised his arm to open officially the CWA's fifth annual convention.

New Era

As his gavel banged, a new era in the history of CWA began. For this was the union's first convention to be held under the long-sought "two-level" structure, accepted at last year's convention and later approved overwhelmingly by a referendum of the membership.

The change will have the effect of bringing CWA into conformity with the democratic practices of other CIO unions. It makes the local the basis of representation instead of the division, and will unify and strengthen the union.

Under the old set-up, CWA was a loose federation of 38 or so semi-autonomous divisions of various kinds, organized on a statewide, city-wide, or company-wide and some on practically a nationwide basis.

Division 20 (Southern Bell), covered eight states. A local was affiliated to the international but sent delegates to conventions indirectly through the particular division to which it belonged.

Now locals are affiliated directly to the international, and the old divisions have been abolished, giving the CWA a "two-level" structure, as the members call it. The phrase was a keyword at the convention and much of the discussion and action taken by the delegates centered around it.

But before they got down to the serious business of straightening out the confusion that came with the changed set-up, delegates heard addresses by some outstanding guest speakers, and elected their international officers.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan and Michigan CIO Pres. August Scholle were the main speakers during the first two days. CIO Vice-Pres. Allan Haywood, who came to the convention with Murray, was scheduled to speak later in the week, as was Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.). Murray Cotterell of the Canadian Congress of Labor also addressed the convention Tuseday.

Tall and good-looking Gov. Williams, who hasn't been afraid to stick his neck out for labor, got a big ovation when he addressed the delegates the first day. He assured the convention that "the Democratic Party in Michigan is not afraid to acknowledge the support and participation of labor."

CIO 'In Vanguard'

He told the delegates that "organized labor is an active part of the Michigan Democratic Party," and that the party "is very proud of the participation of labor in its councils and at the polls on election day."

A rousing standing ovation was given to Murray, who came to address the CWA, after speaking before the United Auto Workers, whose convention was held simultaneously in Cleveland.

Referring to the "almost terrifying state of international confusion prevalent as it is in almost every country," Murray blamed the "Communist aggressors," for the serious disturbances now upsetting the world.

"Who can tell," he said, "when the Communist conspirator will select another spot to spill blood and to pillage another country and destroy more homes."

He declared that the CIO "stands in the vanguard in support of all legitimate things that have to do with stopping communism in America or anywhere. It didn't take the CIO long to make up its mind about those matters.

"The CIO has pledged its whole-hearted support, its life, its everything, whatever it may be, in support of our nation and in support of these programs enunciated by the President of the United States.

Murray made it clear that labor has just cause to be bitter about the way it has been pushed around in the emergency defense agencies. "It isn't fair, it isn't decent, it isn't democratic," he exclaimed. "It isn't the thing that our boys in Korea are fighting for."

The delegates applauded loudly.

In referring to labor's special bitterness about the appointment and subsequent behavior of the present Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson, Murray said:

"I don't think that God Almighty decreed in His infinite wisdom that Charlie Wilson should know everything and that everything he does should be perfect. He needs some assistance."

Scholle, president of the Michigan CIO Council, gave a fiery speech on the day the convention opened. Reviewing labor's national aims and hitting at labor's enemies, Scholle declared that "our entire economy is being delivered into the hand of a few corporate moguls."

He urged union members and friends to be "militant crusaders" for the CIO's objectives in national and local government.

Pres. Beirne, in his opening address on Monday, told the delegates that in their hands rests "responsibility and tremendous power to shape policies affecting directly and indirectly, all telephone workers in the United States and Canada."

The change to the "two-level" structure, Beirne said, shows evidence "of the fact that telephone workers have expressed their capabilities of meeting the challenge of the times and need not bow to any union."

Bow To None

At Tuesday's election, Beirne and the three vice-presidents—A. T. Jones, John L. Crull and J. J. Moran—were re-elected by acclamation. Delegates had previously voted to continue the union's custom of holding elections the second day of the convention.

Nomination of W. E. Martin, secretary-treasurer of CWA's former southern division, to oppose CWA Secy.-Treas. C. W. Werkau, put the union's somewhat lengthy election procedure into operation. For several hours the thousand and more delegates lined up at

Lesson In Economics Given By Beirne

In 1945, the Bell Telephone System took in $2.19 for each hour worked by each of its employes and paid them 95c an hour in wages, CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne told delegates to the union convention in Grand Rapids.

"Last year, their hourly rate was $3.46, out of which we got $1.44," he said.

Beirne pointed out the need of keeping members informed of economic matters affecting their interests through the union's education program, to counteract Bell's "propaganda mill."

LENNA WICKES of Houston, Tex. (above), was the first woman at the CWA convention to speak from the floor, but plenty of others followed her. Miss Wickes has worked for Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. for 26 years. She is a PBX (private branch exchange) instructor and is vice-president of her local.

'Number Please' Girls Gradually Bowing Out

Remember the old-time operator who chanted "number please" when you took down the receiver! Well, there are still quite a few of them left but they are rapidly getting fewer. There was one here and there among the CWA women delegates, but most of them work under the dial system.

Quite a few of the delegates were what you may call supervisors, but they now are called "service assistants," to make them eligible to belong to the union. A supervisor can't belong to CWA. A service assistant, one of the delegates explained, is the gal you give hell to when your call gets fouled up.

Each service assistant has ten operators to whom she lends aid when necessary.

four voting booths set up just outside the convention floor, to vote for the union's secretary-treasurer. Werkau was re-elected by an overwhelming vote.

Election of district directors, with delegates from each district voting for their own director, were held later.

Elected were: Dist. 1—Mrs. Mary Hanscom, Newark, N. J.; Dist 2—Glenn Watts, Washington; Dist. 3 — William Smallwood, Atlanta, Ga.; Dist. 4—Walter Schaar, Detroit; Dist. 5—Ray Dryer, Milwaukee; Dist. 6—D. L. McCowen, St. Louis; Dist. 7—Ren Hill, Omaha, Neb.; Dist. 8—Roy Purdy, Denver; Dist. 9—Joe M. Deardorff, San Francisco.

Officers Installed

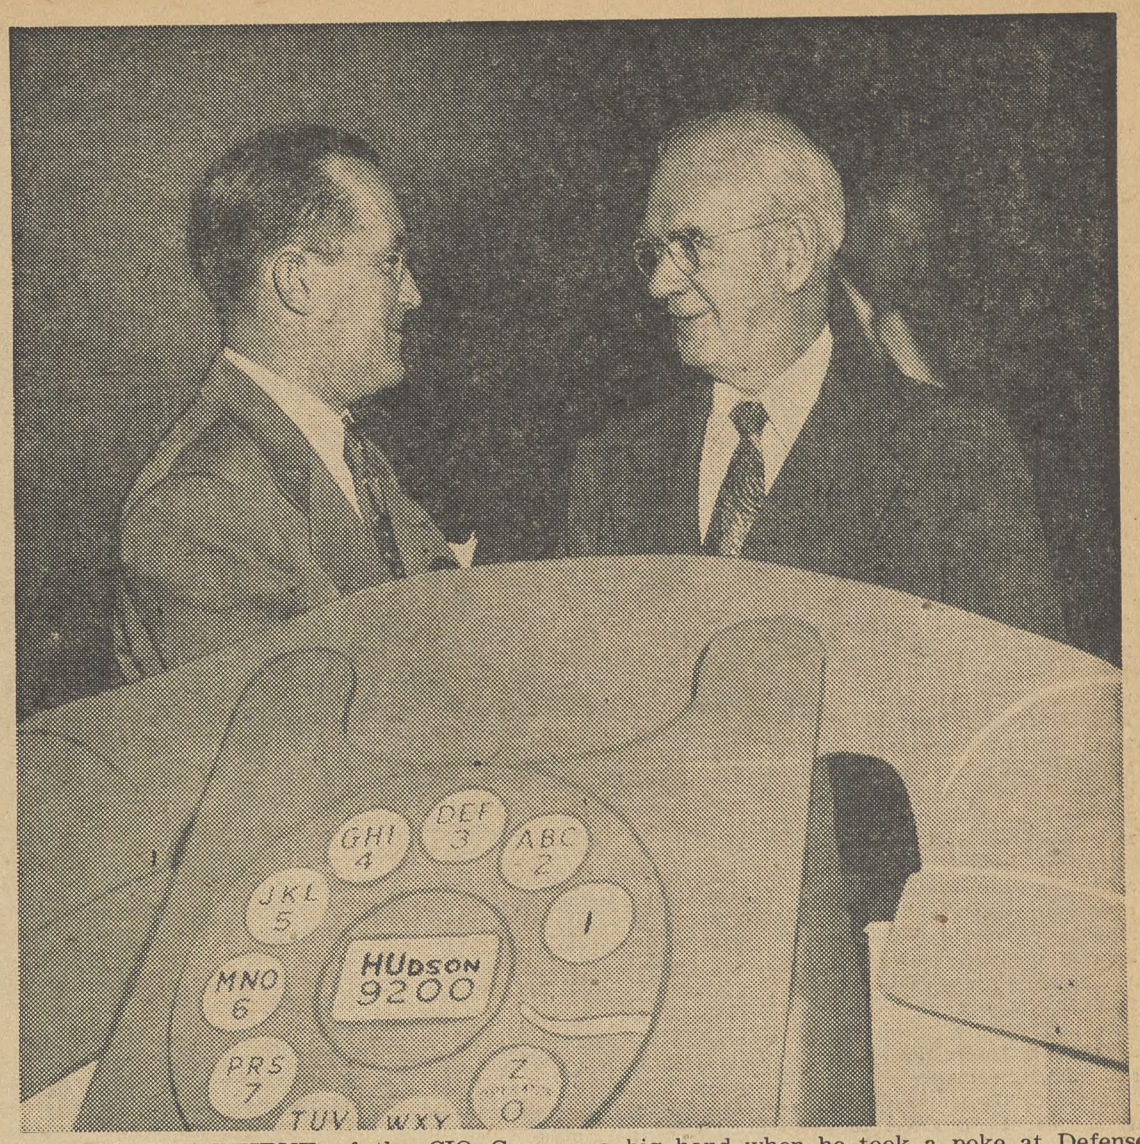
These nine directors head up the nine geographical regions into which the CWA has been divided. In addition, two area directors were elected for Western Electric—Ernest Weaver, Chicago (installation division), and Louis H. Junker, New York (sales). Later two national directors were elected—Carl Peters, for Long Lines, and J. Curtis Fletcher, for the independents (not affiliated with American Tel. & Tel.).

Newly elected officers were installed at a colorful ceremony Tuesday night followed by a dance, and the next day delegates got down again to the serious business of readjustment to the new two-level set-up.

The most controversial issue was the question of increasing the per capita, which locals turn over to the international for each member. Locals each determine their own dues; at present they average about $2.25.

The union administration asked an increase in the per capita from 50c to $1.50, on the basis that if the union was to expand under the reorganized structure, more money would be needed.

Delegates lined up behind the floor mikes four to twelve deep, waiting their turn to speak on the subject. As the CIO News went to press, the issue had not yet been decided.



PRES. JOSEPH BEIRNE of the CIO Communications Workers welcomes CIO Pres. Philip Murray who spoke at the CWA convention in Grand Rapids. Delegates gave Murray a big hand when he took a poke at Defense Mobilizer Charles Wilson. He doesn't know everything, Murray said, "he needs some assistance."

"Voice With A Smile" Comes From All Over

DELEGATES at CIO conventions are mighty interesting people to meet. The telephone workers were no exception.

The trouble is, you never have enough time at conventions to talk to as many rank-and-file delegates as you'd like to, but you can learn a lot about the union just from observing their collective behavior.

Practically every regional accent in the country was represented at the CWA's Grand Rapids convention. You could stand in the lobby and hear the twang of a group of Texans, the soft drawl of South Carolina or Georgia, the strident tongue of the Middlewesterner, and the precise accent of the New Englander.

Observed as they sat in the convention hall during speeches, they listened intently, quietly. No whispering, or talking in undertones, no milling around. But when an important issue was being discussed on the floor, they jumped for the mikes scattered throughout the hall and stood in line waiting for their turn to speak.

It was quite a sight to see them piled up in line behind one another twelve or more deep at some mikes when the discussion on increasing the per capita dues was on the floor. And they waited goodnaturedly in line in front of the election booths to elect a secretary-treasurer, or later in front of ballot boxes at separate voting for district directors. H.R.

MICHIGAN'S PRO-LABOR and good-lookin' governor, G. Mennen Williams, was kept busy addressing conventions last week. Here he is as he talked to more than 2000 delegates and visitors at the telephone workers convention in Grand Rapids. He spoke earlier at the United Auto Workers' Convention in Cleveland.

Brophy: ICFTU Seeks To Aid Workers Behind Iron Curtain

JOHN BROPHY, Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions representative to the United Nations, said recently that a powerful, free world labor movement "will not only check Communist aggression on the labor front" but "will also help the trapped millions behind the Iron Curtain."

Speaking on a Voice of America broadcast beamed to Finland, Brophy—former director of CIO Councils—said that in merely underdeveloped nations where living standards are "abysmally low" and where men work for long hours for almost no pay, the ICFTU's job is "comparatively simple."

"In such areas," he said, "workers are free to accept assistance from their more fortunate brothers in economically advanced countries."

"The workers behind the Iron Curtain, however, are equally impoverished, although forced to work continuously and, in addition, they are terrorized, suspicious and unable to communicate with the outside world of free men."

Abramson Named CIO Civilian Defense Aide

CIO Pres. Murray last week announced appointment of Irving Abramson as "the representative of the CIO in all matters involving civilian defense."

Abramson is a CIO national representative and chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee. Murray, in making the announcement, noted that "our Community Services Committee can render great and effective services in this field."

The offices of the CIO Community Services Committee are located at 1776 Broadway, New York 19, New York.

Minnesota Medics Kill Health Bill

The Minnesota Legislature, which has run rough-shod over every pro-labor measure during its current session, has again bowed to the State Medical Association and bottled up in committee a bill to allow incorporated co-ops to organize voluntary, non-profit hospital and medical care plans.

The doctors' union protected its closed shop in the same way during the 1947 and 1949 legislative sessions. Duluth and Two Harbors have voluntary health co-ops, in which CIO and AFL support is an important factor, which are consumer rather than physician-controlled.

Meat Co., Inspector Indicted In Fraud

A federal grand jury has indicted the American Packing Co., Jersey City, N. J., and nine individuals on charges of conspiring to defraud the government of $500,000 through sales of 4 to 5 million pounds of inferior meat to the Army and Navy.

The individuals include Dr. John F. Jones, Easton, Md., an inspector accused of accepting bribes to approve inferior meats as those the Army contracted to buy. He was also named in a similar indictment handed down Feb. 20 against Ben Grunstein & Sons Co., Hoboken, N. J., in an alleged $1 million meat fraud.

Iowa Labor Will Join Management In Survey

Iowa labor and management will undertake a joint survey of employer-employe attitudes in the state's economy at a conference June 22-23 at the Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City. One hundred representatives of labor and management will be invited to the meeting, first of its kind in the state's history.

The conference program will be prepared by the university, in consultation with a state-wide committee of labor, management and public leaders. The two labor representatives on the committee are Ken Everhart of Des Moines, president of the Iowa State CIO Council, and L. Curtiss Wood, president of the Cedar Rapids Federation of Labor.

N.Y.C. Guild Lauds Staff Of La Prensa

The Representative Assembly of the Newspaper Guild of New York, CIO, recently passed a resolution paying tribute to the courage and the ideals of the staff and management of La Prensa, liberal Buenos Aires newspaper which has been sized by the Peron government.

By failing to sell out and to be intimidated, the resolution said, "these fearless newspaper men and women focused world-wide attention upon the tyranny of Peron and thus, though temporarily defeated, greatly served the cause of journalism."

Workers In Show

CIO and AFL workers, management representatives and YWCA groups are in the cast of 100 of the original musical revue, "Time and a Half" to be presented by the industrial department of the Chicago YWCA April 19 and 22.

State Legislatures Acting On Social Welfare Measures

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

BILLS covering fair employment practices, housing, wages and hours, equal pay for women, and improvements in unemployment and workmen's compensation laws are being studied in the various state legislatures.

Here is a summary of major proposals in the states:

Arizona—A law has been passed which permits school districts to ban segregation of Negro and white students in elementary schools. Previously, segregation was required in the lower schools but was permissive in high schools.

Arkansas—The Legislature rejected an amendment to its 37-year-old child labor law which would have raised the minimum age for working in most industries from 14 to 16. In addition, a bill proposing more stringent laws against racial discrimination in public places of accommodation or on public carriers was defeated.

California—Gov. Warren has asked for the establishment of commissions to study and recommend laws to end discrimination because of race, color or creed.

Colorado—The state became the first to include an "incentive" provision to its unemployment benefit law. Under the act, a person working steadily for the past five years is entitled to $28 weekly for 26 weeks, instead of the regular maximum of $22.75 for 20 weeks.

Also enacted was a mild fair employment practices act, establishing a separate division in the State Industrial Commission. Courts can now issue cease and desist orders in public employment but not in private industry.

Connecticut—CIO and AFL joined forces to defeat attempts to shove through the Legislature a bill that would have banned the union shop. A bill providing a 70c minimum for 3400 laundry workers not covered by federal legislation was passed.

Georgia—The state budget bill, which Gov. Talmadge has signed, includes a provision expressly designed to bar Negroes from attending white schools and colleges. Under terms of the measure, any "white" school admitting Negroes is refused state funds. Talmadge put his O. K. on an anti-mask bill, aimed at the Ku Klux Klan.

Indiana—Gov. Schricker recently approved two laws—one raising the state occupational disease law's weekly maximum benefits from $23.10 to $27, and the other raising unemployment benefits from $20 to $27 weekly, providing applicants make a "reasonable effort" to find work. Also passed at this session of the Legislature was a continuation of wartime suspension of restrictions on women's working hours, permitting them to work between 10 p. m. and 6 a. m. Workmen's compensation laws were improved.

A bill was introduced in the House making it unlawful for any employer doing business in the state to require an applicant for employment to pay the cost of a medical examination.

Massachusetts—Labor suffered a setback here when a bill which would have set up a state fund for workmen's compensation insurance was rejected by the Senate. State CIO officials have contended that high insurance rates charged by private concerns are driving industry out of the Bay State. Also passed was a law which requires that ads for help in struck plants state that fact in type no smaller than the body of the advertisement.

Maryland—The state killed its "Jim Crow" law which in recent years has applied only to Chesapeake Bay ferries.

New Jersey—The CIO called on the Senate to approve at least six bills passed by the House. These measures would: Permit municipalities to join in creation of consolidated health districts.

Bar discrimination by employers against those subject to military service.

Repeal the special restrictions in the workmen's compensation law on proof of silicosis and asbestosis.

Increase the minimum salary for teachers from $2200 to $2500.

Extend the state veterans loan fund for one year to Korean and World War II vets.

Permit the Attorney General to hire "public defenders" against rate increases sought before the PUC by utility companies.

New York—A new state law provides that income of minors must be counted when determining family income in low-cost housing projects. Another new law permits cities to undertake low-rent housing for defense workers. The state's emergency housing act was extended to Mar. 31, 1952.

A bill aimed at racial discrimination in the issuance of insurance policies was defeated. Also beaten was a measure to end all restrictive real estate covenants based on discrimination because of race, color, or creed. The equal-pay law was made workable.

Nevada—A law was passed forbidding the union shop or any modification of it. The question of outlawing the closed shop under a so-called "right-to-work" law will go on the ballot at the next state election.

North Carolina—The Legislature increased workmen's compensation benefits from $24 to $30 weekly and made the top for death or total disability $8000 instead of $6000. It also passed an increase in unemployment benefits while cutting employers' contributions. Weekly payments were boosted from $25 to $30, and from 20 to 26 weeks.

Ohio—In the House, the reference committee finally reported out two good and one bad FEPC bills. In the Senate, management lobbyists voiced their opposition to decent unemployment compensation and hearings were set for FEPC. Hollywood Producer Cecil B. DeMille, testifying in favor of the Ferguson bill outlawing the closed shop before a Senate committee, declared that the abolition of the closed shop would neither destroy nor diminish "labor's just gains." CIO spokesmen have called the Ferguson measure "worse than the Taft-Hartley Act."

Pennsylvania—The State CIO Council has been pressing for repeal of anti-labor bills passed in 1947 which help break strikes, cripple unions and violate civil liberties. CIO officials are hopeful that a number of these measures will be repealed at this session of the Legislature.

The council, together with a number of liberal organizations, has circulated a petition designed to get additional support towards having an FEPC measure reported favorably out of committee.

Tennessee—The state came up with the legal answer for doing away with the poll tax. The Legislature repealed the tax for every year but 1871 which satisfied legal requirements and had the effect of actual repeal.

Vermont—Gov. Emerson asked for the establishment of commissions to study and recommend laws to end discrimination because of race, color or creed. The House, however, killed a proposal to extend unemployment benefit coverage to workers of an employer hiring one or more workers. Present law covers only employers with eight or more employes.

West Virginia—The Legislature enacted a bill to permit cities to use federal funds for slum clearance. Labor suffered a defeat here when a bill which would have required a full hearing before any injunction was issued in a labor dispute was killed.

Washington—Labor won a victory when Gov. Langlie signed a bill to increase workmen's compensation benefits from $75 to $100 a month for widows until their death or remarriage. Unmarried, totally disabled workmen will receive $100 a month, with payments being proportionately higher for married men. The bill was worked out jointly by labor and management, and was passed unanimously by both Houses.

Mill Town Station Denies Time To TWUA

Soon after the CIO Textile Workers announced a new organizational drive among the 25,000 workers in the big Cannon cotton-mill chain, the key radio station in Kannapolis, N. C., completely company-dominated town, refused to sell any time to Joseph Pedigo, TWUA representative in charge of the campaign.

Fred H. Whitley, manager of station WGTL, said Pedigo, considered such a program "controversial."

The union has complained to the Federal Communications Commission and the Senate Labor Committee. Robert S. Cahoon, who heads TWUA's legal staff in the south, in letters to members of the Senate Labor Committee pointed out that "anti-union propaganda simply saturates these company-dominated textile areas."

Woodworkers Get 12½c In New Pact

About 6500 members of the CIO Woodworkers got a 12½c an hour wage increase from the giant Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. in the union's first 1951 contract settlement in the Pacific Northwest timber industry.

The boost raised the basic wage to $1.62½ an hour. The pact also provides three additional paid holidays, stabilization of meal costs at 75c, and accrued vacation pay for union members entering the armed forces.

'Bazy' Rows With Col. 'Bertie,' Quits As Times-Herald Editor

THE EXTREME right has its Titos, too, or so it would seem from what has happened in the McCormick publishing empire.

Last week, Mrs. Ruth McCormick ("Bazy") Miller, 30-year-old editor of the Washington Times-Herald, resigned—after a policy disagreement with Col. Robert R. ("Bertie") McCormick, president and publisher of the Times-Herald and of the powerful, fantastically reactionary Chicago Tribune.

"Bazy," who is the colonel's niece, tried to buy the paper out from under the Colonel so she could have what she described as "freedom," but the Colonel, who is still fighting the war of 1812—against Great Britain—wouldn't

From what "Bazy" would leak to the general public, the main specific points of policy disagreement were two: "the Pearson suit" and "the Butler probe."

Background on the Pearson suit: Columnist Drew Pearson is suing the Times-Herald and Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R. Wis.) for conspiracy in restraint of trade, because of alleged influence used by the paper and the Senator to induce one of Pearson's radio sponsors to cancel its advertising contract in the wake of Pearson's denunciations of McCarthyism.

Said "Bazy": "I felt we should go all out to fight the suit and I wanted the Colonel's complete backing and it would cost a lot of money." She said the Colonel refused.

BACKGROUND on the Butler probe: A Senate committee is now investigating charges brought by ex-Sen. Tydings (D. Md.) that his Republican successor, John M. Butler, was foisted on Maryland voters in a campaign fraudulently linking Tydings with the Communist Party through such means as faked photographs suggested by McCarthy and printed in the Times-Herald plant.

"Bazy" was vague about how she and the Colonel split on this point, but said she personally feels that the newspaper played a "substantial and worth-while part" in Butler's election.

And in general, said "Bazy," the Colonel has "a much more rigid conception of political beliefs than I do . . . I'm a Republican in a broader sense than he. I like all the people he likes, but I like some more."

Minimum Wage Bills Killed In N. H., N. C.

Even the watered-down minimum wage bill (50c an hour and a 48-hour week) has failed to get approval of the committee on manufacturing and labor of the North Carolina House of Representatives.

New Hampshire's House killed a bill which would have put all restaurant and hotel employes under the state's 50-cent minimum. Legislators claimed it would be "inexpedient" to pass such a law now as State Labor Commissioner William H. Riley has announced he will study the wage questions in the hotel and restaurant fields.

CIO Lauds Chapman Stand Against Power Dams in Parks

SECY. OF the Interior Chapman has issued an order to all agencies of the department forbidding the making of any preliminary surveys "relating to water development in national parks and monuments, established wilderness areas and wildlife refuges, except after specific authorization by Congress."

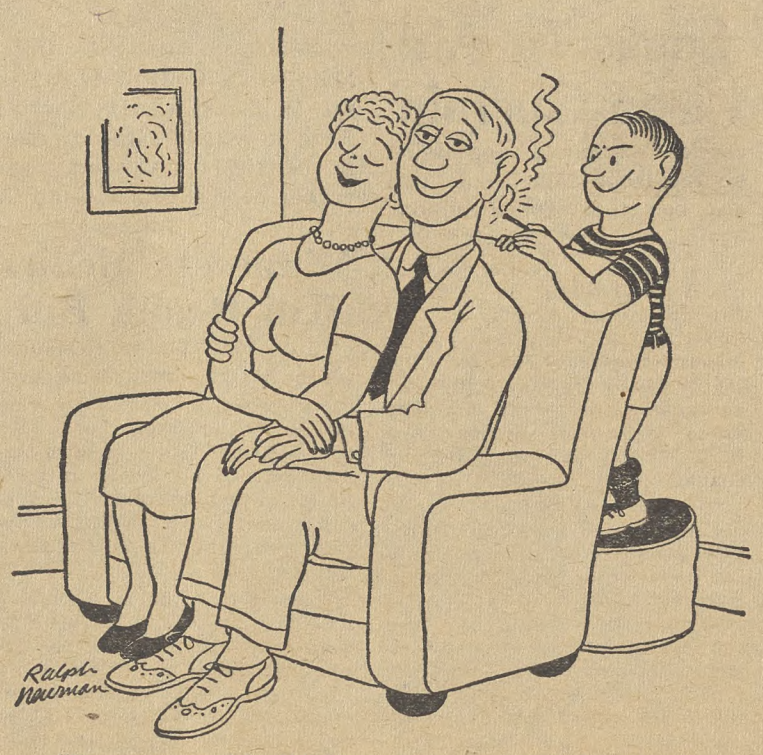
Stripped of official language, this means that the department is taking a firm stand against interests—in this case both private and federal — which would whittle away at the national parks, etc., in the interests of developing more electric power.

The department's attitude, concurred in by the CIO, is that there are plenty of river areas outside the national parks which are available for hydroelectric purposes.

Anthony Wayne Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, put it this way in a letter to Chapman:

"The CIO was delighted by your order . . . Labor organizations have been obtaining greatly increased leisure for their members in recent years and are interested in providing working people with opportunities for healthful outdoor recreation. The national parks and monuments and the established wilderness areas and wildlife refuges are of great importance in that connection . . .

"As I think you know, the CIO has long been in the lead in pressing for sound programs of hydroelectric development. However . . . there are plenty of places to go ahead with hydro power that will not impair the national park systems."



"Someone must be thinking of me—my ear's burning."

IUE Sweeps Union Shop At RCA Plants In Jersey

WORKERS at the Radio Corp. of America plants in New Jersey have dealt a crushing vote of "no confidence" to the United Electrical Workers, expelled by the CIO because of Communist domination.

UE has been boasting all around the country that it was going to defeat the drive of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers for a union shop in RCA's Camden and Gloucester plants, where IUE Local 103 is collective bargaining agent.

Although the issue was simply a yes or no vote on the union shop in a National Labor Relations Board election, UE tried to use the contest for its own purposes.

At the plant gates UE passed out leaflets which said that a no vote would be a vote of "no confidence" in IUE.

The workers refused to "buy" that line by casting 5170 votes for the union shop and only 1038 in opposition.

Votes in favor of IUE had increased 81.3% since a representation election last year. Workers who favored UE (assuming that the no-vote was mostly pro-UE) had declined about 59%.

English Schoolmarm Chances Riot To Tell Of Health Plan

By PAUL McGUIRE

AN ENGLISH school teacher caused a near riot at a teachers' meeting in Tulsa, Okla., when she answered a sharply framed question about English "socialized medicine" while acting as the principal speaker at a group discussion panel.

Amid cries of "communism," "welfare state," "socialism" and other completely unexpected discourtesies, Miss A. Freda Cooke stated:

"England's National Health Insurance is working for the benefit of everyone. For a very small fee it furnishes medicine and hospitalization to anyone who needs it without delay, injustice or red tape of any kind."

Miss Cook is head mistress of the Alfred Street Girls School and a justice of the peace in Manchester, England. She was sent to the United States by the National Teachers' Union of England to study teaching methods in this country.

"You are a wonderful people living in a wonderful country and have so many things in your everyday life which we call luxuries in England, that I cannot understand the bitter antagonism you have here against health insurance," she told the group.

"HOW WOULD AN English school teacher like me have ever been able to pay for an expensive gall bladder operation which was entirely without additional cost.

"It is simply not true that there are long delays or negligence in emergencies. You may call any health insurance office you desire or a private physician if you prefer to pay privately.

"There are no complaints about health insurance in England! All the complaints I've ever heard have been since coming to the United States, where I read about them in the papers."

Defense Job Freeze Plan Is Protested

THE GOVERNMENT and Civic Employees Organizing Committee has protested a proposal now under consideration by the Defense Dept. to freeze defense agency workers in their jobs.

The union's legislative representative, Richard Shoemaker, said that "although the proposal might grant certain mitigating exceptions, the result of this—or any other type of job freeze—would inevitably be to the disadvantage of both employe and Defense Dept.

"Dissatisfied and unhappy workers are never efficient workers, and the price of freezing men and women in jobs they are now, or may become, unsuited for, will be the lowering of morale and productivity in the defense agencies."

The GCEOC representative predicted the end result of such a freeze "would almost certainly be a mass transfer of defense agency workers out of government service into private industry, which offers not only more freedom but also better pay."

Passes Weak FEPC

The Akron, O., city council has passed probably the weakest of the FEPC bills to date. It reads: "It is the desire of the City of Akron that any firm doing business with the City of Arkon cooperate to eliminate discrimination as to color, race or creed in employment."

Southern Organizing Drive Clicks; Spadework Pays Off

THE CIO Organizing Committee's southern drive is really beginning to get results after years of preliminary work by state directors and field organizers.

When the undertaking was launched in 1946 under the able leadership of the late Van A. Bittner, first results were encouraging. Elections were held and won in textiles, wood, furniture and tobacco. After the initial successes, however, victories came with less frequency and more difficulty.

Employer resistance stiffened and anti-union activity on the part of various commercial interests increased. In addition, the technique used by non-union textile mills of granting identical wage increases and other benefits negotiated by the CIO Textile Workers had the effect of discouraging workers from joining the union.

Bittner and his successor as head of the drive, George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the Textile Workers, realized that a tremendous educational job had to be done if the workers were to be made aware of the advantages of union membership.

Organizers in the field were sold on the idea, and how well they did their job is beginning to show by the fact that election victories in the south are once more beginning to roll in.

For example, Gaston county, North Carolina, has long been considered a "no man's land" for labor unions. Its county seat, Gastonia, was the scene of much bloodshed during the southern textile strike of 1929 and for years organizers were about as welcome there as an epidemic of smallpox.

Today, however, it is a different story. TWUA has already won one election at the Perfection Spinning Co. plant in Belmont, and six more elections have been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board.

Recently more than 400 workers from nearby textile mills attended a Sunday meeting in the Gaston County Courthouse, sponsored jointly by the Organizing Committee and TWUA. In the five days preceeding the rally, some 15,000 leaflets were distributed at most of the 140 textile mills in the country. Leaflet reception and worker interest were termed "excellent."

John V. Riffe, national director of the Organizing Committee, reports a similar trend in all states where the drive is in operation. Since June 1, 1950, the committee has won 108 NLRB elections, an average of more than 10 a month.

At present, organizers are in action on 165 different projects in the seven states where the drive is being carried on. There are 78 NLRB petitions for elections pending. The committee is assisting 21 CIO international unions in southern organizational projects.

It looks as if the Southern Drive is getting under way again.

ACW To Spur Label Drive

THE CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers has earmarked an additional $500,000, "and more, if necessary," for an intensified union label campaign.

The union reported that it spent $455,000 during the past 18 months in daily newspaper, magazine, labor press and radio advertising, as well as in extensive field work directly with retailers, trade unions, consumers and other community groups.

"We are putting over our message," ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky said. "In every price range, dollar for dollar, a suit or overcoat carrying the Amalgamated union label is a better buy. Furthermore, purchase of union label clothing helps support the social welfare measures and decent wage and working conditions laboriously established in the clothing industry after 40 years of effort."

Among the few non-union clothing firms still in the industry and a principal object of the Amalgamated's present organizing efforts is Richman Bros.

Police Have Union Rights, Say CIO, AFL

CIO AND AFL have jointly condemned the advice of New York Police Commissioner Murphy to policemen that unionism has no place on the force, that it will gain the men nothing, and may cost them their jobs.

James Quinn, secretary of the Central Trades and Labor Council, AFL, and Morris Iushewitz, secretary of the New York City CIO Council, telegraphed Murphy that his speech to 1700 department members Mar. 31 has "brought a sense of shock and anger to the entire labor movement because it differs in no way from that of any arrogant industrialist who forbids his workers to join a union of their own choosing."

"We do not propose to surrender this hard-won right to you or anyone else who raises the bedraggled banner of reaction," they declared. "It is a little late for you to turn back the clock to the 'good old days' of unrestricted union busting." Murphy's action was denounced as "retrogressive, undemocratic and un-American."

OBSERVERS pointed out the AFL joined in the attack even though the organizing drive which roused Murphy's ire is being conducted by the CIO Transport Workers headed by Michael J. Quill. It is also the first joint action by the two groups since they split before last November's mayoralty campaign.

Murphy denied he was "against unionism" in an answering telegram, but did admit he told patrolmen that it was "not for them" because they were sworn representatives of all groups . . . "The employer, the employes, the unemployed."

A New York Times editorial echoed Murphy's stand, but asked: "Why should New York's police be thinking of joining a union, in view of their present membership in strong line organizations?"

The Times had an answer: "There is the question the Mayor needs to answer, and to follow up with action. The city has ignored their basic economic needs, and the unfortunate result is that some of them at least are tempted to listen to Mr. Quill."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer, on returning from Phoenix, Ariz., went to St. Louis, Mo., to attend a conference of the United Steelworkers District 34, which was presided over by Director Al Kojetinski. Many delegates were in attendance, making this one of the largest steel conferences ever held. The Steelworkers are proud of their organization, their officers and all of the union's achievements.

Allan Haywood

The writer then went on to Grand Rapids, Mich., to attend the Communications Workers of America annual convention. Pres. Philip Murray, as well as myself, addressed the delegates to this fine convention.

Leaving the CWA convention, the writer went on to speak at the United Automobile Workers of America convention in Cleveland.

More about both of these excellent conventions next week.

Reg. Dir. Del Garst reports that in a representation election at the Style Rite Co., St. Louis, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers won a smashing victory with a unanimous vote.

Two overwhelming wins within two weeks for the IUE are listed by Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett. The first was recorded at the General Railway Signal Co., Rochester, N. Y. The second was at the North Hudson Woodcraft Corp., in Dodgeville, N. Y. At General Railway Signal, the vote was 520 for IUE and 393 for no union. At North Hudson Woodcraft, IUE had 95 votes against 48 for no union, 5 challenged and 1 void.

Reg. Dir. George De Nucci reports that the IUE came through with a union shop win at the Westinghouse plant in Mansfield, O., by a more than 2 to 1 margin. Congratulations, Local 711!

The International Woodworkers list a new union shop victory, according to Adolph Germer, director of organization. In an election at the Atlas Tie Corp., Coeur d'Alene, Ida., out of 39 eligible voters, 25 voted for a union shop, 10 against and 4 void votes.

Fleet Perrine, general organizational director of the United Rubber Workers, informs me of two more victories. In a certification election at the Rainford Manufacturing Co., Closter, N. J., the URW won with 32 votes against 24 for no union. In a consent recognition election, workers at the Standard Manufacturing Co. of Chicago amalmamated with URW Local 392.

Reg. Dir. Michael Man reports two representation and six union shop triumphs in Illinois. The representation wins were: at the Joliet Pattern Works, 17 for United Steelworkers and 16 against; at Highway Steel Products Co., Chicago, 36 for the USA, 17 against, 2 challenged.

The union shop victories announced by Mann were: National Lock Co., Rockford, 2195 for Local 449, Auto Workers, and 536 against; Euclid Candy Co., Chicago, 105 for Local 15 RWDSU-CIO, 9 against; Economy Fuse and Mfg. Co., Chicago, 191 for the USA, 8 against, 1 challenged; Page Engineering Co., McCook, 162 for the USA and 5 against; Russakov Can Co., Chicago, 229 for the USA, 3 against, and the G. & W. Electric Specialty Co., Chicago, 175 for Local 3281, USA, and 15 against. Nice going, Illinois.

In Indiana, the USA also won a representation election, reports Henry Henry, acting regional director. Henry lists a unanimous victory at the Jack Frost Sash and Door Co., South Bend.

And still another country is heard from with Pete Mosele, director of District 2, USA, reporting a decisive representation win at Continental Can Co., Plant No. 30, in Passaic, N. J. The result was 187 for the USA, 133 for no union.

Move Aimed At Chiselers

CIO Asks Senate To Kill Housing Measure

WALTER REUTHER, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, last week called on the Senate to send the pending defense housing bill back to committee—in effect, to kill it.

The drastic decision to oppose passage of the only pending housing bill in a time of mounting shortage of adequate living quarters for defense workers came after careful analysis of the pending bill led the CIO committee to the conclusion that it was nothing but a bonanza for real estate chiselers.

If no housing bill was passed, it is felt the government would be forced to use existing powers to do something about the housing crisis. There are plenty of existing powers ready at hand.

Core of the trouble: the bill, now before the Senate, has as its main feature a federal guarantee of $1.5 billion in mortgage insurance, which would be available to banks. They could use it to finance private builders in the construction of new rental housing.

This, said Reuther, is "nothing more than a renewal of the inflationary Section 608 (of the 1949 Housing Act) which Congress permitted to expire in April of last year. Houses built under Section 608, which according to the best information in the trade were of minimum standard and of excessive cost, do not fill the needs of workers' families. . . .

"BEST ESTIMATES to date indicate that housing built under (these) provisions will cost approximately $135 a month. Workers cannot afford to pay such excessive rents. (The bill) if enacted will produce excessively high housing which workers in the area will not be able to afford, and the total risk of . . . investment therein will be carried by the U. S. Treasury."

Reuther's letter made no use of the caustic criticisms of other features of "608." Last week Columnist Marquis Childs pointed out that a builder can, under the program, spend not a cent of his own money and come out with a handsome profit. The bank also can make a profit. Only the federal government—i.e., the taxpayer—takes the risk.

(The government, because it has insured the mortgage issued by the bank, is sometimes forced to protect its investment in section "608" housing.

(So, in many communities, federal housing authorities are putting pressure on tenants of government-built, low-rental, temporary housing units to move out of them and into vacant "608" privately-owned projects at much higher rentals.)

Reuther said that the Atomic Energy Commission had been relying on passage of this bill to meet the housing problem involved in construction of its new facilities at Aiken, S. C., Paducah, Ky. and Denver, Colo. The AEC had, therefore, failed to take steps to secure housing by other means, the CIO officials said.

"AS A RESULT of the failure to make adequate provision for such employe housing," Reuther added, "scandalous land speculation has already taken place, and the invitation to corruption, which neglect of the problem invites, has already been revealed."

"By returning this bill to committee the atmosphere would be cleared," he continued, "so that the AEC could proceed to arrange for the construction of the essential housing needed."

The real estate lobby is very much interested in getting the mortgage insurance feature of the bill passed.

For example, Levitt and Sons, Inc., of Long Island, N. Y., one of the biggest builders in the country, has retained the fabulously high-priced Carl Byoir public relations firm for a fee of $36,000 plus expenses to lobby the section through.

OTHER SECTIONS, however, displease the builders' lobby. To nobody's surprise, they object to a provision calling for construction of $50 million worth of government-built housing.

This amount would permit the construction of only 5000 dwelling units for the whole U. S.

Small as it is, though, the real estate lobby is planning to kill the section entirely—and would like to increase the mortgage insurance section to $3 billion.

CIO Protests Jim Crow Draft Law Amendment

THE CIO last week called upon members of the House to eliminate from the new selective service bill an amendment permitting inductees to join racially segregated military units.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, said in a letter to members of the House that the segregation amendment weakens the efforts of the Administration, the Dept. of Defense and of "all those who desire to strengthen our armed forces."

"Stalin himself could not have written an amendment more disastrous to the position of our country in the world of nations," Cowan's letter declared.

"This amendment would weaken, not strengthen, our armed forces; it would divide, not unite, our peoples; most important of all, it would seriously impair our position in the United Nations, where the United States is looked upon for leadership by nations representing all races of mankind."

The amendment, Cowan said, would permit "self-anointed 'first-class citizens' . . . to hang out a 'for whites only' sign over their unit designations."

The amendment appears as Section 4 of S. 1, the selective service bill. In urging members of the House to vote against it, Cowan wrote that "by so doing, you will eliminate from this proposed act an undemocratic, discriminatory and un-American amendment."

Two CIO affiliates, the Auto Workers and the Electrical Workers, a few weeks ago had issued vigorous protests against the amendment.

Cowan suggested other changes in the bill which he said would make it "a more effective instrument for our national security." He recommended that:

1. Authority to call up the reserves should be exercised by a "predominantly civilian board." Noting that millions of men possessing critical occupational skills will be in the reserves, Cowan said that "such a large and important segment" of the civilian labor force should not be subject to being called to active duty solely by the military authority.

2. Trainees in the National Security Training Corps should be paid the "regular rate" for inductees, rather than the proposed $30 a month.

3. The right of veterans to participate in promotions, social insurance and pension benefits in their civilian jobs should be guaranteed by the law.

4. The Defense Dept.'s program for deferment, after completion of basic training, of 75,000 persons yearly, in order that they may study in colleges, should be restored. The CIO official urged that stipends for advanced training should be made available for "gifted youths from low income families and from minority groups" so that they may participate fully in the program.

5. The Defense Dept.'s program for rehabilitation should be restored to the bill, since its "costs would be small and its contribution to both the armed forces and our civilian economy would be immeasurable."

6. The President's authority to defer married men with children should be continued.

Educator Says Race Relations Better

"There is improvement in race relations throughout the country and particularly in the South," according to Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.

Speaking at Columbia Univ. Dr. Johnson declared this "notable progress" is due in part to worldwide condemnation of discrimination and to the growing challenge of Soviet ideology which may have "prompted measures to correct weakenesses in the functioning of our system and way of life."

Taft Is NOT 'Mr. Young Republican'

ROBERT A. TAFT may be "Mr. Republican" in the eyes of the nation but delegates to the recent Young Republican Conference at Charlottesville, Va., didn't see him that way.

The Ohio Senator turned up to give the "keynote" speech.

Nevertheless, the youthful GOPsters from 31 eastern and southern colleges and universities chose that day to take the following anti-Taft actions:

1. Heave out their permanent chairman, Richard E. Frame of Virginia, because he was a Taft man and because Taft's friend, Rep. Reece (R. Tenn.), lobbied for him.

2. Approve a report of Gen. Eisenhower's program for Europe which Taft strongly opposes.

3. Reject a resolution calling for Secy. of State Acheson's resignation, although Taft has been pushing for Acheson's ouster.

4. Reject a proposal to limit the size of the armed forces, although Taft favors such a proposal.

Ship Union Postpones Strike For 30 Days

The CIO Shipbuilding Workers agreed Apr. 2 to postpone for 30 days a strike of 50,000 workers scheduled to start that night. The union had negotiated a 15% wage increase, which was turned down by Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston because it exceeded the 10% ceiling under the wage control formula.

ECA Gives Awards To Labor, Management On 3d Anniversary

ON THE third anniversary of the adoption of the European Recovery Program, labor and management last week received awards and praise for their assistance to the program.

Keynote for the occasion was sounded by William C. Foster, administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration, which handles the multi-billion-dollar 16-nation program.

"If we lived in a peaceful world, today," Foster said, "I think we might well be able to say that the job of European recovery has been virtually accomplished. But . . . the brutal fact is that we do not live in a peaceful world today. We live in a world that may be plunged into total, atomic war by one of the most ruthless, imperialistic powers in history.

"The ERP countries are still not strong enough to sustain by themselves the kind of defense program that the Soviet menace requires without seriously impairing the living standard they have so recently restored. To reduce those living standards now . . . would be to jeopardize the gains we have scored during the first three years of the plan."

FOSTER thanked both labor and management particularly for their support of the Technical Assistance Program, under which teams of Western European management and labor have come to the U. S. to study our production methods.

Michael Ross, director of the CIO Dept. of International Affairs, received a certificate of appreciation in behalf of the national CIO, at a luncheon given at Washington's Carlton Hotel. The Washington ceremonies were duplicated all over the nation as awards were presented to local unions, joint boards and regional offices, and local plant managements.

PLANS FOR NEW ENGLAND'S future industrial security drew this group and others to a conference of government, industry and labor leaders at Montpelier, Vt. Left to right, Bernard Goldfine, New England industrialist who was host to the conference; Gov. Lee E. Emerson of Vermont; John Chupka, director of the woolen and worsted division of the CIO Textile Workers; J. William Belanger, TWUA Massachusetts director, and Philip Kramer, official of the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers. Prosperity of the region was the common aim.

Senate OK's Bill Assuring High Cost Rental Housing

THE SENATE last week gave its O.K. to a defense housing bill which does very little more than give the private building industry another $1365 billion pipeline into the U. S. Treasury.

The housing produced under the bill is expected to rent to defense workers for sums which will vary according to area and climate, but which will be high.

For instance, government experts favoring the bill guess that in an average area, a two-bedroom house or apartment will rent for $58.50 a month, plus the cost of heat, electricity, water, gas, and garbage disposal. In an "average" area, these items add another $23 to $24 a month.

Also tucked into the bill is enough money for direct government construction of approximately 5000 dwelling units, which would be rented at cost—averaging probably $30 a month less than the rental of the same building erected by private industry.

BUT THESE few units can be built only in isolated areas, and then only after private industry has been given 90 days to decide whether it will build there or not. The entire sum could be used up in building just some of the housing needed for just one of the new atomic installations.

The bill forbids the government to rent dwelling space in existing public housing projects to defense workers, unless the workers' incomes are lower than the ceiling set for the project. The few public housing units for lowest-income families are already filled in most areas.

The $1365 billion item is in the form of government-guaranteed mortgage insurance — by which the builder can get a bank loan for 90% of the estimated cost of what he wants to build.

THE BANK takes no risk because the government agrees to assume the debt if the builder fails to pay the banker. To get on the receiving end of this pipeline, the builder agrees to build according to government standards and set government-approved rents.

Might sound fair on paper, but in operation, it amounts to a direct government subsidy of exorbitant profits as well as legitimate costs.

A scandalous number of builders, last time such a program was in effect, laid out not a penny of their own money, got bank loans amounting to 120 to 150% of the actual cost of buying the land and erecting the project.

Then they settled back to collect the government-approved rents, which are set high enough to allow the builder to pay back the bank loan and collect a "reasonable" profit on the inflated "costs."

A good many shoestring operators suddenly become rich in this way.

This is the system the Senate has decided will get housing built for defense workers, at rentals they can afford to pay.

True, there are a few safeguards written into this bill, but they don't change the picture.

But Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) commented: "This is a matter of getting into the public treasury, not with a teaspoon but with a scoop shovel . . . It's been revised and slightly deodorized, but not much. It still smells.

"The breezes from the Potomac are not always filled with the odor of cherry blossoms."

The House refused to consider the bill at all, a while back. Whether it will change its mind now is uncertain.

8 Ways Used By Builders To Chisel On Uncle Sam

HERE ARE eight ways in which thousands of builders have inflated the "necessary costs" of building defense housing projects and thus obtained government-insured bank loans for much more than they actually spent:

1. He is allowed 5% of total cost for "general contractor's profit" although nine times out of 10 he, himself, is also the general (or prime) contractor. (The Senate voted to leave this particular bonanza out of the bill this time.)

2. He is allowed 5% of total cost for architects' fees. This actually runs to 1½% or so, for the bigger firms. (The Senate made no change here.)

3. He is allowed 2 to 3% for "contractors' overhead"—he can save most or all of this if he, himself, is also the contractor. (The Senate did nothing about this one.)

4. He is allowed the full cost of "attorneys' fees and services." If he has an attorney on a retainer basis anyway, this item is pure profit. (No change voted by the Senate.)

5. Subcontractors' profits are also figured into cost. There are a variety of ways in which this can be finagled.

6. He is allowed to figure in the cost of the land after the government has approved it as a building site. He can make a 500 to 600% profit on land costs right here, by buying the land first, at a low figure, and then getting government approval, which sends the land value soaring. He then gets the loan on the inflated value. (This the Senate disallowed.)

7. The government, in setting the rentals on the project, allows a 12 to 18-month building period during which the builder theoretically collects no rent and therefore is not required to make any loan payments. If the builder completes the project in six months, he can collect every penny of the rentals for six months to a year, before starting payments to the bank. (The Senate didn't touch this one.)

8. Since material and labor costs are estimates only, the builder—particularly if he is also the prime contractor—can inflate every item, in order to get a larger loan, and then can turn around and cut every known corner, pocketing the difference. (No change voted by the Senate.)

Two CWA Members Bring Aid To Stricken Woman

Quick action on the part of two CIO telephone installers is credited with probably saving the life of an elderly Washington, D. C., woman.

The two men, Walter W. Baker and William Raugh, Jr., both members of CIO Communications Workers Local 2336, were making a routine installation call at the residence of Mrs. Annie Haith recently.

When they received no response to knocking on the front door of her home, Baker looked through the glass pane and saw Mrs. Haith lying on the floor of the living room.

Baker and Raugh entered the house through the back door. They covered the unconscious woman, who is 84 years old, with a blanket and then began a telephone canvass of the neighborhood in search of a doctor.

They finally located an available physician and waited until he arrived before leaving for their next job. The doctor diagnosed the trouble as an acute attack of neuralgia, and said Mrs. Haight might have taken pneumonia if she had not been covered.

Mrs. Haith is the mother-in-law of Marion Haith, a telephone operator at CIO Headquarters in Washington.

CIO Advisers Named To ILO Conference

THE CIO will participate in the American delegation to the annual conference of the Intl. Labor Organization—opening June 6 in Geneva, Switzerland—for the first time since 1946, Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin announced Apr. 11.

The CIO and AFL joined in nominating an equal number of advisers to the delegation.

Nominated by the CIO were Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO Intl. Committee and president of the Clothing Workers; Michael Ross, committee secretary; William Pollock, secretary-treasurer of the Textile Workers, and Boyd Wilson, Steelworkers' staff member.

The ILO was created in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles, which prescribed the peace terms that ended World War I. The United States joined in 1934. The organization has a membership of 62 countries, including every major nation except Soviet Russia. Workers and employers, as well as governments, take part in its activities.

Tobin described the CIO's role in the forthcoming ILO meeting as "another significant step in American labor's united approach toward world affairs."

"In 1949," he recalled, "the AFL and CIO were prime movers in forming the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, free labor's answer to the Communist-controlled World Federation of Trade Unions.

"THROUGH the ICFTU the united American labor movement is cooperating with its democratic counterparts in 50 countries to raise standards of living and promote the legitimate interests of free trade unions everywhere in an all-out effort to defeat the forces of communism.

"This agreement to work together in the ILO is another milestone on the road towards international labor cooperation. The ILO is one of the most effective international instruments for building the economic and social foundations of world peace. . . .

"Communism feeds on poverty and misery. In attacking the source of such conditions and helping eliminate them, the ILO is making a direct contribution toward the strengthening of democracy and freedom."

CIO Says Economic Report Group Tries To Support Foes Of Social Progress

THE CIO last week bluntly attacked the recent report of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report as an attempt to justify "the position of reactionary forces who have been fighting every step toward social progress since the inauguration of President Roosevelt in 1933."

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy and president of the CIO Textile Workers, described the report as a move away from the committee's previous "enlightened economic viewpoints." His statement on the CIO position was made in a letter to Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), chairman of the committee.

"We agree that an adequate tax program is vitally important at this time . . ." Rieve wrote.

"But a tax program and "economy' in the federal government do not alone answer the problems of inflation.

"A hard-hitting, over-all stabilization program is necessary—including expansion of production, credit controls, price and wage stabilization, rent control, and a savings program, excess profits taxes, as well as enlightened over-all tax and fiscal policies.

"Your report fails, in my opinion, to indicate—let alone to present—such an over-all program to the American people.

"In an effort to maintain a balanced federal budget at any cost, your committee suggests completely unwarranted fiscal proposals to undermine federal programs that are basic to the long-run preservation of the human and physical resources of this nation.

"THE report confuses basic social programs, such as federal aid to education, health service, the St. Lawrence Seaway and improved unemployment insurance benefits, with wasteful and unnecessary goverment expenditures.

"I do not believe that the current inflationary situation can be effectively combatted, or the mobilization effort aided, by a policy which robs the common people of the social gains of the last two decades and deprives them of hope that other necessary programs for the development of human and physical resources will ever be fulfilled . . .

"FURTHERMORE, the report's description of wage escalator clauses, based on the cost-of-living, as providing 'a basis to push up prices' is recognized even by foes of labor as an erroneous concept.

"Such clauses in collective bargaining agreements take recognition of past increases in living costs. When living costs become stable, the escalator clauses cease to operate.

"Wage escalator adjustments never fully compensate a worker for his real wage losses.

"Simple justice demands that living costs be stabilized as a first step in stabilizing wage rates.

"To freeze wages and salaries while living costs continue to move upwards would be grossly unjust to millions of middle and low-income families who are already bearing an unjust share of the burdens of our defense effort."

Dental Goods Pay Minimum Lifted

The U. S. Dept. of Labor has amended its minimum wage determination for the dental goods and equipment manufacturing industry which applies on contracts of more than $10,000, let by the government under provisions of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin said the amendment will require payment of at least 90c an hour in the durable goods branch of the industry. In the consumable goods branch, a minimum of 75c will continue to apply. Minimums for both branches have been 75c since Jan. 25, 1950.

MEBA Will Open Dry Cargo Pact

The CIO Marine Engineers at a recent conference of Atlantic and Gulf Coast district representatives in Washington, decided to open the national MEBA Atlantic and Gulf Coast district dry cargo agreement, which expires June 15.

Basic proposals for a new contract will include wage increases, a 40-hour week at sea, an employment clause providing that all engineers, except the chief engineer, shall be hired through MEBA local offices, and other general improvements in working conditions.

What Price Fighting?

Workmen's compensation doesn't cover fighting on the job, the Connecticut Supreme Court of Errors has ruled.

The decision, written by Chief Justice Allyn L. Brown, dismissed an appeal by Jeffrie L. Willis, who was struck on the arm by a rake during a fight with another worker in the Taylor & Fenn plant at Hartford.

Hope Of Wage Board Revived By Advisers

HOPE—BUT no predictions—for setting up a new Wage Stabilization Board was voiced at the White House last week, after President Truman's new defense advisory board wound up its second meeting.

The 17-man National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy—including four representatives each from labor, management, agriculture and the public—met in two long sessions. The first was with President Truman; at the second, Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson presided.

On April 12, after the second meeting, the White House press secretary quoted Wilson as voicing belief that "substantial progress" had been made toward getting agreement on a reconstituted wage board.

A major stumbling block has been the question of whether a reconstituted board should handle non-economic disputes—questions like union security, seniority, grievances and other contract matters that do not directly involve the wage scale.

The United Labor Policy Committee has repeatedly insisted that no effective stabilization program is possible without machinery for handling these disputes.

The business groups—and particularly the National Association of Manufacturers — have been strongly opposed to such disputes being considered by the Wage Stabilization Board.

The new defense advisory board, which will meet frequently with President Truman, met for more than two hours in the White House Cabinet Room for its first session. It was a closed session.

But it is known Pres. Truman discussed the Korean war, and he called for the "complete cooperation of every segment of our population." Later, a White House spokesman indicated that the President is concerned about three major problems:

1. "Aggression"—by Soviet-controlled governments anywhere in the world.

2. "Inflation"—which can seriously damage the U. S. defense effort.

3. "Relaxation"—by the American people from the job of building the country's military strength.

Members of the board are:

Labor: CIO Pres. Philip Murray; Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Auto Workers; AFL Pres. William Green; AFL Sec.-Treas. George Meany.

Industry: Pres. Otto Seyferth of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce; Chairman Claude Putnam of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers; Marion B. Folsom, Committee on Economic Development; and Samuel A. Smith, Boston businessman.

Agriculture: D. W. Brooks, president of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperatives, Atlanta, Ga.; James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers' Union, Denver, Col.; Herschel D. Newson, master of the National Grange, Columbus, Ind.; one to be named.

Public: Paul Porter, lawyer; George Mead, industrialist; John Lord O'Brian, lawyer; William H. Davis, lawyer.

Rumely Contempt Trial On; Freedom Of Press Pleaded

EDWARD A. RUMELY, the collecting colossal of the Committee for Constitutional Government, went on trial Apr. 12 in U. S. District Court in Washington on a charge of contempt of Congress.

Rumely, executive secretary and guiding genius of the anti-labor, anti-New Deal CCG, was indicted for refusing to tell the House Lobby Investigating Committee where he got the money to flood the country with reactionary Republican propaganda.

The CCG has a nice little trick under which it refuses gifts of more than $490. Donations of $500 and more must be listed in reports to Congress under the Lobby Control Act.

SO IF A big corporation wants to plant anti-union or anti-Fair Deal propaganda, it "buys" books from the CCG—often thousands of dollars worth of them. The CCG sends the publications to the places where it thinks they will do the most good—and all the donor has to do is to pick up the check.

Rumely refused to tell the lobby probers where the checks come from. He based his refusal and his trial defense on the contention that the CCG is in the publishing business, and that to force it to disclose the names of its customers would be contrary to the First and Fourth Amendments to the Constitution, involving freedom of the press.

MacArthur Ouster Focuses Issues Of 1952 Campaign

A GLIMPSE OF the 1952 election campaign came into focus last week, in the political storm following President Truman's removal of Gen. Douglas MacArthur from his far eastern command.

Reaction was largely along political party lines. Most Republican spokesmen attacked the President, with some going so far as to scream for impeachment.

Supporters of Fair Deal policies, and many southern Democrats, stood by President Truman.

Some of the varied reactions:

CIO PRES. MURRAY: "President Truman is to be congratulated" for reaffirming the "traditional relationship" between civilian democratic government and the armed services.

FORMER PRES. HERBERT HOOVER (under whom Gen. MacArthur routed out the 1932 bonus army from Washington with teargas and guns): "This action can bring great tragedy . . ."

CIO SECY.-TREAS. JAMES B. CAREY: "MacArthur's willfully disobedient statements and actions" could have provoked a global war "long before this nation was in a position to defend itself effectively, or assist world democracy's successful defense."

CIO-PAC DIRECTOR JACK KROLL predicted that President Truman's action would bring him few new enemies and win him many new friends.

The American Legion said it was "shocked," but both the American Veterans' Committee and Amvets hailed the President's action as necessary in view of MacArthur's frequently - voiced disapproval of the government's foreign policy.

That view was also taken by a few Republicans on Capitol Hill—among them Sen. Lodge (Mass.) and Sen. Duff (Pa.).

Col. Robert (Bertie) McCormick's violently anti-Truman Chicago Tribune called for the President's "impeachment and conviction"—though grounds for any such action seem entirely lacking, and wiser G.O.P. heads were in effect telling Republican stalwarts to pipe down on impeachment talk.

(Article II, Sec. 4, of the Constitution provides that the President may be convicted in impeachment proceedings and removed from office only for "treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors."

(Article II, Sec. 2, of the Constitution provides that the President "shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.")

The staunchly Republican New York Herald Tribune, on the other hand, pointed out that MacArthur "virtually forced his own removal."

"A general is entitled to his own beliefs," the Herald Trib declared, "so long as he effectively serves the over-all strategy."

It added that MacArthur's decision to go over the head of the President to seek a change in foreign policy had reached a point where it was "seriously undermining and paralyzing" American military strategy.

IT WAS clear that the "MacArthur incident" and the statements of the Taft-Wherry wing of the Republican party will make foreign policy a primary matter in the 1952 elections.

That will make for some curious contradictions. Taft, working hard for the GOP presidential nomination, has said many times that America made a mistake in going into the Korean fight.

But MacArthur—who will probably be close to Taft in the political campaigning ahead—not only wants continued campaigns in Korea, but a broadening out of the Asiatic conflict.

Our Objective: To Repel Attack, Restore Peace

Here are some excerpts from President Truman's foreign policy address Apr. 11:

The whole Communist imperialism is back of the attack on peace in the Far East. It was the Soviet Union that trained and equipped the North Koreans for aggression. The Chinese Communists massed 44 well-trained and well-equipped divisions on the Korean frontier. These were the troops they threw into battle when the North Korean Communists were beaten.

The question we have had to face is whether the Communist plan of conquest can be stopped without general war. Our government and other countries associated with us in the United Nations believe that the best chance of stopping it without war is to meet the attack in Korea and defeat it there.

That is what we have been doing. It is a difficult and bitter task.

But so far it has been successful.

So far, we have prevented World War III.

So far, by fighting a limited war in Korea, we have prevented aggression from succeeding, and bringing on a general war. And the ability of the whole free world to resist Communist aggression has been greatly improved. . . .

But you may ask why can't we take other steps to punish the aggressor. Why don't we bomb Manchuria and China itself? Why don't we assist Chinese Nationalist troops to land on the mainland of China?

If we were to do these things we would be running a very grave risk of starting a general war. If that were to happen, we would have brought about the exact situation we are trying to prevent.

If we were to do these things we would become entangled in a vast conflict on the continent of Asia and our task would become immeasurably more difficult all over the world. . . .

That is our military objective—to repel attack and to restore peace.

Murray Supports HST On Ouster

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week issued the following statement:

"President Truman is to be congratulated upon his forthright and courageous re-affirmation of the traditional relationship between the democratic civilian government of this Republic and its military forces.

"Americans have high regard for the excellence of our military service and for the outstanding abilities of the military leadership in their field. But Americans rightly have an instinctive resistance to any effort by the military to gain control of the policy-making powers of government, which the Constitution lodges in the President and the Congress.

"This is the issue. There is no question that the overwhelming mass of American citizens will recognize it, and I am certain they will support the President's removal of General MacArthur on the grounds of this sound democratic principle."

SHOUTING AND TUMULT

Comes now the shouting and the tumult.

They will continue—probably with increasing shrillness—until Election Day in 1952. We can expect that the routine will include frequent calls for the impeachment or resignation of the President, or for the restoration of Gen. MacArthur to his Far Eastern command.

Many of the new-born military experts who now are flaying President Truman wouldn't know a mortar from a machine gun. Their talk of "military strategy" must be taken with a grain of salt, for they are talking politics—anti-Fair Deal politics.

That political talk cannot hide the fact that in relieving MacArthur of his command, the President was taking an action essential to the preservation of democratic government. When the military makes policy, dictatorship hovers close at hand.

It was increasingly obvious that the President could not continue to tolerate a situation in which MacArthur continued to voice policy viewpoints in direct opposition to those of the President.

President Truman acted with courage and vigor in cutting through to a solution of this problem. He did so knowing well that the "hate Truman" crowd would have a field day. It is a curious conglomeration of voices that is now singing the praise of MacArthur's policy.

Senators and Congressmen who a few days ago were insisting that they must be consulted before any company of soldiers could be sent overseas, now complain because whole new armies are not despatched to the Far East.

Isolationists, who have been advocating that America get out of Korea, now would have us launch a war on the Chinese mainland.

Self-proclaimed advocates of "peace" are suggesting that American forces bomb Manchuria or other Asiatic areas—forgetting that China or Russia might in turn attack our bases in Japan or Okinawa, or our long Pacific supply line.

These contradictions can be explained only in one way: Gen. MacArthur has become a handy club for those who hate the Fair Deal and who want to elect a Republican presidential candidate in 1952.

President Truman, on the other hand, has shown statesmanlike qualities in seeking to limit, not to spread, the conflict in Asia, and to find a means of restoring peace without appeasement.

A GOOD MOVE

The 82nd Congress—which has rolled up an almost unsurpassed record of doing nothing—deserves congratulations for refusing to knuckle under to those who would divide and confuse.

The 178-126 vote by which the House knocked out a provision of the draft bill to reinstitute segregation practices in the army will benefit America at home and abroad. A democracy committed to improving civil rights has no business cutting down on civil rights in its armed forces or anywhere else in the government.

Equally important, the House vote will be a disappointment to the Kremlin. The Moscow propagandists are always ready to broadcast to the world any of our failures to practice the democracy we preach.

Justice Douglas On Asia:

'It Is Not Too Late'

Justice William O. Douglas of the U. S. Supreme Court has, among other things, climbed the highest mountains of Iran—for which the Russians promptly branded him as an "imperialist spy." He has also traveled through the low places of Asia, and seen its squalor, poverty and hope.

In a recent speech at Tucson, Ariz., he talked about what he had seen—and offered some advice to democratic Americans about the problems of Asia. Excerpts from that speech:

THERE ARE rumblings in every village from the Mediterranean to the Pacific. A force is gathering for a mighty effort. We think of that force as Communistic. Communists exploit the situation, stirring every discontent and making the pot boil. The revolutions which are brewing are not, however, Communist in origin—nor will they end even if Soviet Russia is crushed through war.

The spirit which motivates these people is pretty much the same as the one which inspired the French and the American Revolutions.

The abuses against which our American forebearers protested in 1776 were piled high. They are listed in our Declaration of Independence: dissolution by the king of legislative bodies; corruption of judges; maintenance of a standing army and quartering of troops among the people; imposition of taxes without the consent of the colonies; transporting citizens beyond the seas for trial of offenses committed here.

The complaints of the peasants of Asia are just as specific as those in our own Declaration of Independence; and to the people involved they are just as important. I have talked with them in many places across this wide belt and found them alive not only to their problems, but to the solutions as well. These people, though illiterate, are intelligent.

The people of Asia have a catalogue of specific complaints. The absence of medical care always comes first. The absence of schools is always second. Then comes land reform. These people have a passion for land-ownership that Americans can understand. We expressed it in our homestead laws and in the great westward movement that built a nation out of the wilderness. Next comes the desire to learn how to farm the modern way.

The right to vote, the right to elect representative government, the power to expel and punish corrupt officials—these too are important claims to reform. Finally, they have a new sense of nationalism . . .

These are professional agitators who stir this brew of discontent; but the force comes from the masses. I have not seen a village between the Mediterranean and the Pacific that was not stirring uneasily . . .

AMERICA IS fitted by tradition for directing and guiding the revolutions that sweep the earth. We won our freedom by revolution and set the example which today inspires the peasants of Asia. We cannot remake the world in our image; but we can help those who are seeking an escape from squalor to find alternatives to Communism.

We cannot do it by talking democracy to these people. We can do it only by making our foreign policy understandable in terms of their aspirations: medical care, education, distribution of land to peasants, modern agriculture, free elections, independence from foreign domination.

The Philippines, already the showcase of Asia, could be transformed into a healthy, prosperous, democratic community. India and Israel are examples of the strength and stability that democratic forces can mobilize. These nations have domestic programs that make Communism internally an empty threat.

There are liberal forces in practically all of the Asiatic countries which can do the same. At times they are either in a minority position in the cabinet or outside the government completely.

But each country has men who have the dream of a new freedom for their people, who have the character and ability to rid the nation of the feudal system that has existed from time out of mind.

We must be, and remain, strong as a military power in case Russia shifts from political to military action. But meanwhile our only real defense against Communism is a political offensive, a political offensive with action rather than with rhetoric.

The hour is late; but so long as World War III has not struck, it is not too late.

'Your Worthless Servants Request A 10c Increase'

Canadian unions were recently taken to task by the conservative Toronto Globe and Mail for being uncouth and presumptuous in setting forth their demands for economic benefits.

The editorial prompted Barry Mather, columnist for the Vancouver, B. C., Sun, to put his tongue well into his cheek and produce two "form letters" for unions. Mather suggested the Oriental-style letters might produce more etiquette, if not better results:

Form Letter for Bargaining Committee when Asking Raise:

Our Revered Benefactor: May we, your utterly worthless servants, dare to presume upon the too tolerant nature of you, our esteemed patron, and have the termerity to place before you a matter whose sordidness leaves us in abysmal shame?

If we may it is solely because of the past evidences we have had of the measureless patience which you have shown in such bountiful measure when assisting the ingrates to whom you have given employment.

Incredible as it seems, the misguided members of your staff have instructed us to place before you a humble request for a 10c an hour increase in the already too generous honorarium which your kind heart has seen fit to provide them!

Knowing that the sum mentioned is so fantastic as to test even your own hitherto measureless good nature and generosity, we, the bargaining committee, hasten to inform you that an increase of one-tenth of that amount would be sheer philanthropy.

Signed: Your Humble Servants, The Bargaining Committee.

Form Letter for use by Unionists Presenting Brief to Governments:

Your Esteemed Eminences: We, your abject subjects, representing the uncouth masses who have the ill-merited good fortune to dwell in this your highnesses' domain, are overwhelmed by your magnanimous gesture in admitting us to your august presence.

May it please our lords, we have here with us a crude document which the illiterate ingrates, the workers, have the presumption to believe expresses their suggestions for a more harmonious administration of your country, but which, in truth, merely reveals their utter ignorance of the conditions which prevail and with which your lordships are dealing in such matchless wisdom.

The main point, if it may be called such, made by this brief is that you take steps to reduce the cost of living, a proposition so ridiculous as, we know, will merit a stern rebuff from your highnesses.

It is our earnest plea that, for the well being of the workers themselves, you disregard this request and continue to administer your country as you so well see fit.

Signed: Your Humble Servants, The Brief Committee.

Labor Comes Of Age; Rates Issue Of Scholars' Mag

ORGANIZED LABOR has come of age in America —and the latest issue of the important and scholarly Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences devotes more than 200 pages to the subject: "Labor in the American Economy."

The Annals is not the sort of publication you're apt to read on the streetcar en route to work —but the current issue deserves a place on union bookshelves for study and reference.

Contributors for the CIO include Pres. Murray, Pres. Reuther of the Auto Workers, and PAC Director Jack Kroll. But most of the articles were written by social scientists outside the ranks of labor. Their writing covers such varied subjects as "Why Workers Join Unions" and "Private Investment in a Laboristic Economy."

The three CIO contributions discuss labor and communism (Murray); practical aims of U. S. unions (Reuther); and labor's political role (Kroll).

Murray's article is partly based on the successful fight waged by the CIO to rid itself of the Communist-dominated unions, a fight which he vividly describes.

Having gone through that fight, he does not see the need of "sweeping, loosely-worded legislation or loyalty oaths, which seem to under-estimate the intelligence of our citizenry and to lead us along a blundering course of creating martyrs out of the very individuals whose influence we seek to minimize."

Murray expresses the belief that Communist influence "will continue to wane both in the labor movement and in our society. . . .

"That will continue to be the case as long as our American society fully recognizes the obligation of democratic government to provide a healthy climate for all the people.

UAW Pres. Reuther, like Murray, finds his experience the basis for faith in people and democracy.

HE TELLS how the UAW in 15 years won job security, old age pensions financed by industry, health and insurance plans, recognition of seniority, and grievance procedure. But he also knows the importance of political action.

"It is time the American people learned the political facts of life," Reuther writes. "Politics is as much a bread-and-butter matter as are wage negotiations. Wage negotiations determine how much goes into pay envelopes, but prices and taxes determine what the worker is able to buy.

"Workers cannot hope to solve their basic problems unless they build an organization and carry out a joint program in the political and economic fields. In its political activities, labor must cooperate with other progressive and liberal forces working for social and economic progress for all the American people. . . . "

Kroll, reviewing recent labor political trends, concludes:

"IT WAS the Taft-Hartley Act, against the background of previous legislative assaults on labor organizations, that made trade union members . . . conscious of the necessity for political action."

Kroll credits labor's participation in politics with making voters "more conscious of the records of their candidates than ever before" and with having "a greater knowledge of the issues than they ever had before."

He says that the other major change brought about by labor on the political scene is "the increased voter participation in elections."

Kroll realized, of course, that labor's foes have likewise stepped up their political activities. Speaking of the last national election, he says that in some states the Communist issue was fanned to serve political ends, while in the Southern states the racial issues were played to the hilt.

'Children Of Misfortune'

Report Spotlights Hardship Of The Migrant Worker

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

FOR YEARS the conscience of America has been uneasy about the way migrant farm labor, one of the nation's most useful groups of workers, has been treated.

In the thirties, John Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath," the dramatic novel of the "Okies" driven from their homes by dust storms and depression, created a furor by calling national attention to a tragic group of migrants of that period.

During the past 50 years, all kinds of investigations and reports have been made by various governmental and private agencies, exposing the misery and injustice done to the men, women and particularly the children who toil long hours at starvation wages to help feed the nation.

Americans certainly have been told plenty about the unfair lot of migrant workers, and yet little has been done to help them. There are about one million of them today, making up 7% of the nation's farm manpower.

Latest of the reports dealing with the subject was issued last week by the President's Commission on Migratory Labor, which held extended hearings in agricultural centers throughout the country for months following its appointment in June, 1950. The committee heard testimony of hundreds of public and private officials as well as that of many migrant workers.

Hope For Action

In a letter to President Truman, the five-man commission, headed by Chairman Maurice T. Van Hecke, professor of Law, Univ. of North Carolina, comments that "not much has been accomplished" by the investigations of the past 50 years, but expresses the earnest hope that this time something will really be done.

It is only in agriculture that migratory labor has become a problem of such size as to call for repeated investigations, says the report. Why is this? Foremost reason for migrancy, it states, is necessity, for "many people find it impossible to make a living in a single location and hence have had to become migratory."

Explaining who migratory workers are and why we have them, the commission states in the opening chapter of the report:

"Migrants are children of misfortune. They are the rejects of those sectors of agriculture and of other industries undergoing change.

"We depend on misfortune to build up our force of migratory workers and when the supply is low because there is not enough misfortune at home, we rely on misfortune abroad to replenish the supply."

Much social progress has been made during the past half century, but migratory workers are still at the bottom of the ladder, helpless and exploited, states the report. They are excluded from benefits and privileges enjoyed by resident workers, because they do not live in the communities where they work, and state, county and township—practically "every unit of government—seeks to evade responsibility for these migratory workers."

No Protection

Domestic migratory workers not only lack the protection they might have through collective bargaining, the report says, "but employers as a rule refuse to give to them the guarantees they extend to alien contract workers whom they import.

(The report does not mention it, but both the CIO and the AFL have organized some migrant labor groups. CIO representatives testified last summer at hearings held by the commission in Arizona, urging decent wages and improved recruiting methods for fruit and vegetable workers, both natives and aliens.

(In a series of National Labor Relations Board elections held later during last fall and winter, the CIO was chosen as a collective bargaining agent for some 10,000 fruit, vegetable, lettuce shed employes and other seasonal farm workers in Arizona and California.

(However, these are but a fraction of the million migrant farm laborers who would benefit if the difficult job of organizing workers who follow the crops from place to place could be accomplished.)

The report mentions that the commission encountered only two instances of union contracts covering farm workers currently in force. One was signed by the CIO Packinghouse Workers with the Fellsmere Sugar Producers Association, a cane-sugar producing and processing concern in Florida; the other was between an AFL meat and cannery local, and Seabrook Farms, Trenton, N. J.

'Cheap' Foreign Labor

An important part of the report of special concern to unions deals with "cheap" foreign labor and to what extent it undermines wages and working conditions of native Americans. The commission criticizes the U. S. for failure to adopt policies which would prevent this.

"We have used the institution of government to procure alien labor willing to work under obsolete and backward conditions and thus to perpetuate those very conditions," it states.

"Cheap foreign labor is advantageous to the owners of the large-scale farms which employ 'stoop' labor in great quantities. Such farms are only 2% of the nation's farm units, approximately 125,000, and only a fraction of this small number employs most of the alien farm workers."

It is hardly consistent, adds the report, "for our Government to encourage a family type of agriculture and at the same time give direct assistance to the operators of large-scale farms in recruiting and employing low-wage foreign workers whose products compete with those of the family-type farms."

The report points out that the principal source of foreign labor has been Mexico. Both legal and illegal immigrants from Mexico have been pouring across the border for several decades.

The report reviews the story of "wetbacks," the Mexican workers who come across the border illegally, many by wading or swimming the Rio Grande river.

Others walk or come secretly by car, but the term "wetback" is used for all illegal entrants regardless of the way they get across the border.

Wartime Measure

Nearly 220,000 Mexican agricultural workers were brought into the U. S. from 1943 through 1947 at government expense under a wartime emergency farm labor program, and 55,000 illegal Mexican aliens in Texas were given a legal status in the summer of 1947.

Other foreign workers admitted under the emergency program during the same years included 50,600 Jamaicans, 15,000 Bahamians, 18,000 Canadians and several thousand nationals of other countries.

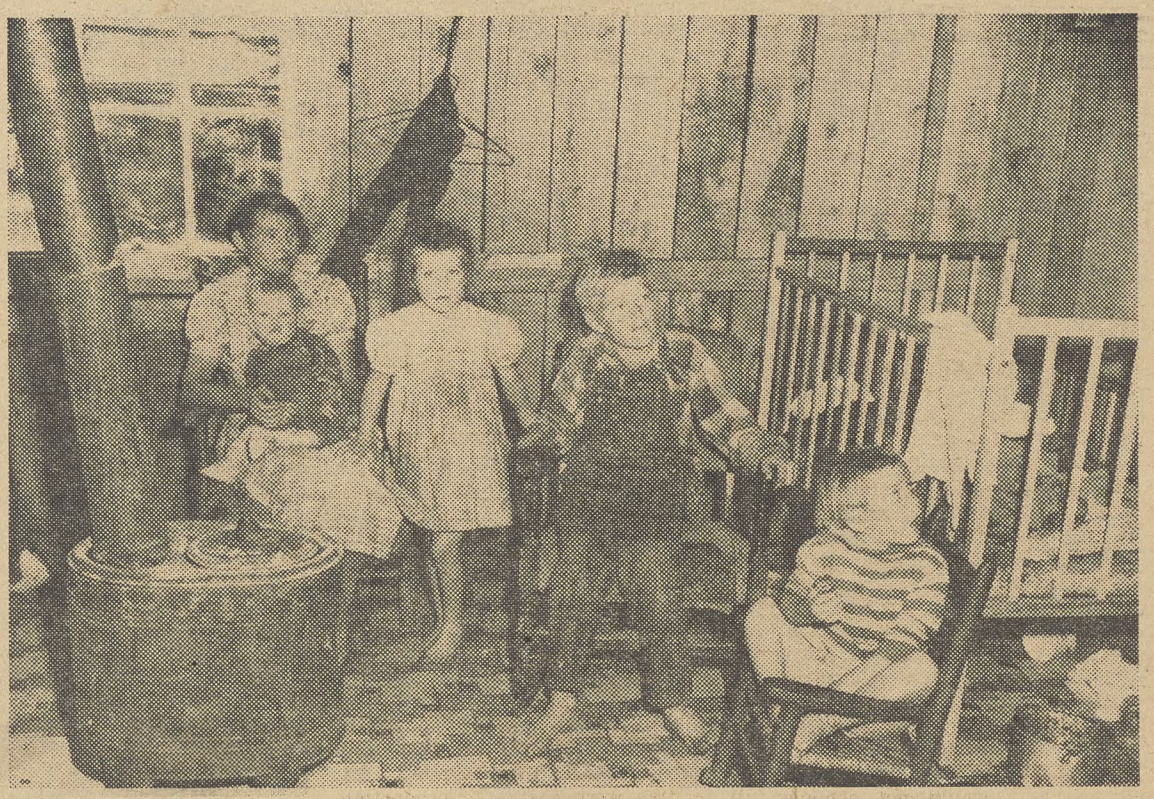
Weak spot of the program, says the report, was the neglect of the Puerto Ricans, who were available in large numbers but were not fully utilized.

In recent years, however, Puerto Ricans who now are U. S. citizens and free to come or leave this country at will, have been drawn increasingly into the seasonal farm labor force. The report recommends that they be given preference over foreign labor in such employment as they are willing and suited to fill.

(The CIO also advocates, as provided in the Chavez Bill, S. 949, and the Yorty Bill, HR. 2955, that "American workers, including Puerto Ricans, should have the first opportunity to accept the agricultural jobs.

"If foreigners need to be brought into this country to perform the work, they should be given decent treatment, and their wages and other conditions should not be permitted to undermine American standards.")

MEXICAN "WETBACKS" and their families often live in ramshackle huts like these. This picture was taken on a ranch near Fresno, Cal. Note the debris and the household goods in front of the shacks, and auto tire on the roof.



THE PLIGHT of families such as appear in this picture was the concern of the Commission on Migratory Labor which reported recently to President Truman. The mother is holding one of her family of eight children, four of whom are not in the photo, which was taken at a migrant farm-workers' camp in San Joaquin Valley near Tulare, Cal.

395,000 Children Work On Farms

One of the darkest pictures of migrant life shows up in the child labor chapter of the report of the President's Commission on Migrant Labor. Only in agriculture, it states, does employment of children remain a serious problem. The commission found that children sometimes as young as five and six years of age work along with adult members of the family at such "stoop" labor as picking beans and peas.

In August, 1950, Bureau of the Census figures showed that 190,000 children from 10 to 14, and 205,000 in the 14 and 15 age group, were working for pay in agriculture. For October, 1950, when schools were in session, the bureau estimated that 150,000 to 165,000 children 10-15 years old, were working.

Farm Laborers Get Third Of Factory Pay

Average employment for the more continuous migrant workers is 135 days for men and 82 for women, according to the President's Commission in Migrant Labor. To show how farm wages have dropped behind in recent years, the report compares the hourly earnings of farm laborers and factory workers.

This shows that during 1910-14, the period selected by Congress as the base for the farm parity price system, farm wages were two-thirds of factory wages. Today they are only a little over one-third.

UE Returns To Work On GE's Own Terms

When striking members of Local 1412, United Electrical Workers, returned to work April 2 at the East Oakland, Cal., plant of General Electric, they accepted a company offer they rejected last February. The offer calls for payment on an incentive basis. UE was ousted from the CIO for following the Communist line.

White Collar ICFTU Meet This Week

THE World Congress of Professional Employes, called by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to consider the problems of white collar workers, will meet Apr. 18 to 21 in the Palais d'Egmont in Brussels, Belgium.

The conference is expected to draw some 200 delegates of salaried workers who belong to unions in such fields as journalism, entertainment, civil service, the arts, sciences, administration, supervision and public services. Union groups in the United States, Belgium, Sweden, France, Holland, Norway, Germany, Denmark, Luxumbourg and Malaya have agreed to send representatives.

CIO Represented

John J. Moran, vice president of the CIO Communications Workers, and Mrs. Helen Rachlin, president of Local 1707, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, will attend from this country. Harry Martin, president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, who is serving as labor information chief in the Paris office of the Economic Cooperation Administration, also will be present.

The ICFTU set up an international committee a year ago to study questions relating to the welfare of white collar and nonmanual workers.

Co-Determination

In another action, the ICFTU recently protested efforts of foreigners to sabotage the co-determination agreement recently worked out by the German federal government and the trade unions in some basic industries. Objections have been lodged with the German government by some American industrialists, the French high commissioner in Germany and representatives of the Benelux governments.

"The ICFTU vigorously protests against these attempts of foreign industrialists to interfere with a plan agreed upon by the German trade unions and the government to further social progress in their country," said the ICFTU statement.

"Democratization of German industry is in the interest of democracy everywhere. The free trade unions of the world are, therefore, warmly supporting the struggle of German workers to win the right of participation in the management of industries."

Tunisians Join

The ICFTU has also announced that the Union Generale des Travailleurs de Tunisie (General Union of Tunisian Workers) voted at its national congress to affiliate.

The vote, by secret ballot, was 287 for affiliation and 96 against. The organization represents 90,000 workers and has been affiliated with the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

Walter Schevenels, secretary of the ICFTU European Regional Organization, took over his duties on Apr. 1. His headquarters are in Brussels. Schevenels, a Belgian, has been active in the international labor movement for many years.

WESTERN EUROPE is being told how increased production should be reflected in more money in pay envelops. Here Elwood D. Phelps, education director of the CIO Oil Workers, (man in center wearing light suit) is receiving a favorable response at the Force Ouvriere Workers Education school in Paris. European workers are being asked to produce more.

U. S. Idea Gaining In Western Europe: More Production Means Better Pay

By GERVASE N. LOVE

EUROPEAN workers are becoming more and more aware of two significant factors about American production.

They are:

1. Americans out-produce the rest of the world because of their superior mechanical equipment and manufacturing methods.

2. American workers, through their unions, share in the benefits of this high production.

The people who work in the industries of Western Europe are being urged to produce more. They are told that higher production holds the answer to improved standards of living, and is necessary if the free world is to meet and hurl back the challenge of Communist totalitarianism.

They are gradually coming to the realization that a greater output is desirable—but they insist on getting something out of it.

Frenchman's View

That sums up the attitude of Jean Prottin, a French steel worker who has just returned home after visiting the United States under the European Cooperation Administration technical assistance program.

"To buy new machinery," he said, "management must make money. To make money, it must sell at a profit. To increase the profit, it should have higher productivity.

"But higher productivity will not be gained until the confidence of the workers is earned. Thereafter, productivity will be something which grows upon itself."

Adrien Auberson, another member of the team, said that labor-management relations hold the answer to the problem of greater productivity.

"It can be solved without great expenditures for new equipment," he declared. "It is an attitude of mind carefully nurtured in America. Without it, American steel workers would not achieve full utilization of their equipment during every working hour."

He said French management should copy the American system, with careful decentralization and definition of responsibility at all levels; add job incentives for workers; restore normal competition to stimulate the use of improved techniques, and utilize all facilities more fully.

Oil Workers Speak

What the American worker thinks about high productivity is being told French workers by three workers' education experts now abroad as guests of the free French trade unions.

They are Elwood D. Phelps, education director of the CIO Oil Workers; John D. Connors, director of the AFL Workers' Education Bureau, and Frank McCallister, head of the Labor Division of Roosevelt College, Chicago.

Members of the Force Ouvriere, the Christian Workers Union (CFTC) and the Foremen's Union (CGC) are bombarding them with questions. They want to know how Americans produce so much, and how they feel about constantly increasing production.

Phelps summarized the attitude of the Americans when he said that union members in this country favor higher productivity so long as management demonstrates a willingness to share its fruits with them in the form of higher wages or other benefits.

An example of how French workers are learning to harness higher production to higher wages is the new national textile collective bargaining agreement which covers the big Rhodiaceta plant at Lyons, along with some 4000 other establishments with about 630,000 employes.

The contract, signed by the Force Ouvriere, won fierce opposition from the Communist General Confederation of Labor—which later signed the same document—because of its productivity clause. The CGT opposition was entirely political.

Attitude Changes

"The agreement is progress," said Luz Guiboud, Rhodiaceta foreman who signed it on behalf of FO. "It ensures substantial advantages to the workers . . .

"We were hostile to production as long as it meant suppressing jobs, speeding up the work tempo, and larger profits for the employers, while all the workers got was the risk of unemployment and greater tiredness at the end of the day. But once the employers gave us guarantees concerning dismissals and wage advantages resulting from a productivity increase, we could not stick any longer to old attitudes."

Rhodiaceta workers are among the best paid in the French textile industry, with unskilled labor getting a minimum of about 19,000 francs, or $54, a month. Much of the machinery is new, purchased with Marshall Plan funds. Working conditions are good.

A group of Dutch labor leaders representing the three free union groups—the NVV, non-secretarian and largely Socialist; the KAB, Catholic, and the CNV, Protestant—has just returned to Holland after visiting this country under ECA auspices.

They also were much impressed by American production methods.

"Without regard to tradition, all expedients for higher production are tried," said Hendrik Korte, Jr., general secretary of NVV.

"And thanks to the power of the trade unions, the American worker shares in the profits of higher output."

The group described American production performance and possibilities as "amazing." They reported the American worker generally works no harder than his counterpart in the Netherlands, but that he produces more because of technical improvements.

THE CIO RECEIVES a certificate of appreciation for its assistance to the European Recovery Program at a luncheon at Washington marking the program's third anniversary. Michael Ross (left), director of the CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, receives the award from William C. Foster, ECA administrator.

TWUA Strikers Crack Mills' Solid Front In South

THE CIO Textile Workers last week cracked the solid front of employer resistance in the strike of 40,000 members in six Southern states by signing a contract with the Gold-Tex Corp., Rock Hill, S. C.

A joint statement by the union and the company released Apr. 11 said that operations would be resumed at once. Basis of the settlement was agreement on a 13c an hour package wage increase, including benefits and a wage escalator provision.

Terms of the agreement are subject to the approval of the Wage Stabilization Board.

The 500 Gold-Tex workers ratified the agreement and returned to work the next day.

The 13c package provides a 10c general wage increase, 1c an hour for additional insurance, two additional paid holidays making a total of three, and retirement-severance pay.

The severance pay will be one week's pay for each year's service for workers with 15 years' service who voluntarily retire at the age of 65, with a maximum of 20 weeks.

The cost-of-living escalator provides for adjustment of 1c per hour for each 1.14 point rise in the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumer price index. The adjustments will be based upon the index for Feb. 15, 1951, and will be computed quarterly, with the first adjustment on July 1.

The new minimum wage will be $1.12 per hour. Upon approval, the agreement will be retroactive to Apr. 12.

Negotiators

In the negotiations the union was represented by Mariano S Bishop, TWUA cotton director; Charles Auslander, South Carolina director; Rene Berthiaume, manager of the Joint Board in Rock Hill, and a committee from the local union.

In 46 other Southern textile mills, however, the strike entered the third week.

Twenty-four-hour picket lines are being maintained at the Cone Mills, Greensboro, N. C.; Fieldcrest Mills, Spray, N. C.; Erwin Mills, Durham, N. C.; Dan River, Mills Danville, Va., and Lowenstein Mills in several states.

The Fieldcrest chain and all struck plants in the Charlotte, N. C., area locked their gates and did not attempt to operate. Some scabs were getting into the Dan River Mill and one Cone plant, but no cloth was coming off the looms or going out of the mills.

Attempts to herd scabs into the mills produced some peculiar incidents. In the Cooleemee (N.C.) mill of the Erwin chain, railroad workers started to fuss about a box car of starch sitting on the plant siding.

The company finally requested the striking union to permit moving of the car. The pickets agreed to the moving, but only if they were satisfied that the contents of the car were really starch and not cloth.

The company invited the entire picket line into the yard to investigate the car. Seventy-five pickets marched in. As soon as the last picket was inside the fence, company agents slammed shut the gates and locked them. However, the reluctant workers complained of "involuntary servitude" and were released.

The bosses' solidarity in this strike may yet founder on the rock of inter-scab competition.

Recruiting Scabs

The Dan River mills sent letters to striking Fieldcrest, N. C. workers in Spray—27 miles away—offering "some nice jobs" in Dan River.

Cone Mills at Greensboro, N. C., has tried everything. One boss has been talking to mothers of high school students telling them of the wonderful opportunities for careers in the mill. He wanted the students to quit school immediately and go to work.

In the same mills supervisory employes were complaining of overwork. Cone was taking foremen from one mill after their regular shift and making them work another shift in a struck mill.

Mills attempting to operate are trying the old gag of rushing scabs in through Gate 1, out of Gate 3, into Gate 5, and so on. This produces a lot of headaches for the union spotters trying to count the scabs, but it has yet to produce a yard of yarn.

This technique confused even the company. A week after the strike started, Dan River had to pay the workers their last checks. Believing their own propaganda figures, the company announced that the payoff for strikers would take place at the local ball park and invited the press and civic leaders to see how few workers turned up. Red faces among Dan River officials were plentiful when the ball park was filled to capacity, and crowds milled around the gates waiting for the real payoff.

Commissaries are being set up in each striking local. Some are already in operation. William Pollock, TWUA secretary-treasurer, announced that the union is preparing to spend $250,000 a week feeding the strikers.

GOP Judge Doesn't Like TWUA Pickets, His Fines Show

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

JUSTICE is a term that appears to have some curious definitions when Judge P. Warren Green of the Common Pleas Court in Wilmington, Del., sits in judgment on striking CIO Textile Workers.

Acting on grounds that the Republican jurist just doesn't like labor unions, and that his verdicts against strikers are one-sided, Textile Workers attorneys sought unsuccessfully to have Judge Green barred from sitting on future picketing cases.

CIO officials in the capital city of the DuPont industrial preserve have a briefcase full of complaints against the judge.

Sam Glickman, TWUA representative in charge of the strike, said he had heard Judge Green declare in court on Mar. 20 that "unions are not entitled to picket."

He further quoted Green as saying that "this (Delaware) is a small state and a peaceful state, and in this intolerable situation, you people have no right to be picketing and preventing people from going to work who want to go to work."

Later after he had acquitted one of the strikebreakers of an assault charge, Judge Green lashed out at what he termed "windmill picketing."

He claimed it "is unlawful and illegal" for that type of picketing to take place in front of a plant "where people want to work."

He suggested that "some restraining order" should be issued by the courts. At that point, Assistant Attorney General Januar D. Bove, Jr., advised him that there had been no complaint from the company regarding violations involving the strike or the picket line.

The company attorney — who was in court representing a strikebreaker—pointed out that he was not there to secure injunctions or restraining orders, but solely to represent his client.

On Apr. 3, when a TWUA member and a strikebreaker appeared before Judge Green after a minor picket line altercation, the prosecutor asked for the conviction of both, but the judge had other ideas. He exonerated the scab, fined the striker $50 and costs.

(He invariably fines the strikers an amount less than $100 because, unless the fine exceeds that amount, the verdict cannot be appealed.)

Incidents like these — growing out of a eight-week strike by TWUA Local 115 at the Wilmington plant of the Ludlow Manufacturing & Sales Co.—led the union to seek a "writ of prohibition" against Judge Green. Granting of the writ would have kept him from presiding at hearings on picketing cases.

THE petition—filed by TWUA Attorney William E. Taylor, Jr. — was turned down after Judge Green denied that he had said in effect that union members have no right to picket.

(One of the state superior court judges who upheld Green was James B. Carey—a man NOT related to the CIO secretary-treasurer.)

The strike was called by the TWUA local on Feb. 27, as a result of the company's refusal to grant any kind of an increase after the contract had been reopened by the union on wages. The company took this position despite the fact that the minimum hourly wage at Wilmington was some 20c an hour below the northern average.

The reason given by management for its refusal to raise wages was that all wages had been frozen by the Wage Stabilization Board.

Glickman says that before the strike was called, company officials had told workers privately that automatic 5c hourly wage increases, written into the contract, could not be granted because of the wage freeze.

This took place in face of the konwn fact that the company, which makes jute products, burlap sacking, webbing and cord, showed a profit of more than $232 million after taxes last year.

The company, which also has plants in Ludlow, Mass., and Allentown, Pa., both under TWUA contract, has been doing an all-out job of playing one plant against the other. In the Wilmington undertaking, Judge Green has furnished a welcome assist.

At the present time, all three plants are shut down by strikes and TWUA officials are determined to press for an over-all settlement at all three.

URW Policy Group To Meet Apr. 30

The CIO Rubber Workers' international policy committee will hold a two-day meeting in Detroit beginning Apr. 30 to determine the union's economic goals for 1951.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said the policy group is also expected to work out a program "to meet the problems presented by mobilization."

TRUMAN AND BARKLEY are names familiar to every American. There is an additional reason why the names are household words for textile workers on strike at the Ludlow Mfg. and Sales Co. plant in Wilmington, Del. TWUA Representative Sam Glickman takes a pledge from John BARKLEY (center) and R. S. TRUMAN, two of the strikers, that they will stay away from work until the company signs an acceptable agreement. Barkley is a picket captain and Truman has charge of the union commissary.

OTHER TWUA PICKETS follow Eileen Snyder as she carries a picket sign at the Ludlow Co. plant gate in Wilmington, Del., where workers have been on strike for eight weeks. Company plants at Ludlow, Mass., and Allentown, Pa., have also been shut down by walkouts of TWUA members.

Florida Case Convictions Reversed

THE U. S. Supreme Court last week unanimously reversed the rape convictions of two Florida Negroes, now under sentence of death at the State Prison at Raiford, Fla.

The court majority issued no formal opinion, but Justices Jackson and Frankfurter made a statement of their own in which they went beyond the issues raised by the defense attorneys to lambaste what they termed the prejudging and preconviction of the defendants by the Florida press.

FOUR Negroes originally were arrested for the alleged rape of a 17-year-old white girl in Groveland, Fla., in 1949. One died attempting to escape, and one—who was only 16 when the incident took place — escaped the death sentence and is now serving a life term on a chain gang. The appeal was brought on behalf of the other two.

The atmosphere surrounding the trial was such that the defense attorneys asked to have it postponed and moved to another jurisdiction. Both pleas were refused. An all-white jury heard the case and brought the convictions.

Before the trial, the two justices said, newspapers and radio stations publicized an alleged confession by the defendants, which was released by the arresting officer.

The confession was never introduced at the trial. "The only rational explanations are . . . that the story was false or that the confession was obtained under circumstances which made it inadmissible or its use inexpedient. . . . The defense offered, and the court rejected, evidence of brutal, inhuman beatings of the defendants by state officers," the justices commented.

Because the confessions were never introduced in court, they were not technically before the jury.

THE justices said that . . . "It is hard to imagine a more prejudicial influence than a press release by the officer . . . charged with the defendants' custody, stating that they had confessed, and here just such a statement, unsworn, to unseen, uncrossexamined, and uncontradicted, was conveyed by the press to the jury."

Nor was this all. The defendants narrowly escaped lynching and were moved under heavy guard to the state penitentiary.

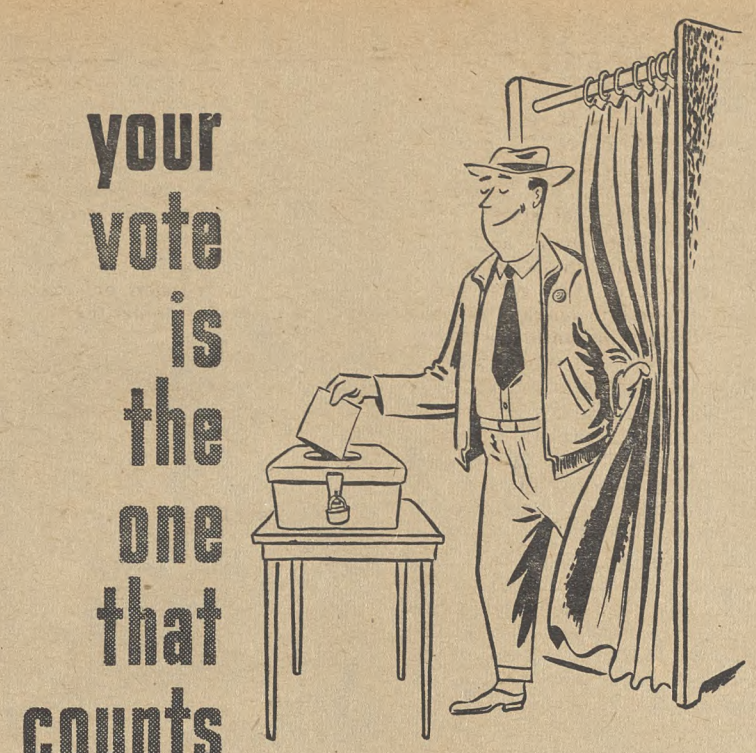
A mob burned the parental home of one of the defendants, and two other Negro houses. The National Guard was called out and so was the 116th Field Artillery. Finally, all Negroes of the community abandoned their homes and fled.

"Every detail of these passion-rousing events was reported by the press," continued the justices. "Yet the Court refused either to delay the trial or to change its location."

Was NW Bell Action Only A Reaction?

The CIO Communications Workers notified the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. that it will ask higher wages in its new contract.

J. H. Kremers, company vice president, agreed that higher wages are in order. The same day the company filed a plea for higher rates with the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission. The reason? It said the union was seeking a wage raise.



PAC's big orange colored poster, which hangs in thousands of union halls across the country, is a prize winner. Judges pinned the first prize blue ribbon on it last week in a contest sponsored by the Advertising Club of Washington, D. C. The poster copped the honors in competition with entries from the United Nations, the American Association of Railroads, Capital Airlines and numerous other similar organizations.

U. S. Action Stops Rent Boost For Two Million

TWENTY per cent rent increases for approximately two million Northeastern New Jersey tenants were prevented, largely as a result of protests filed by the New Jersey CIO and AFL with the Office of Housing Expediter.

The increase had been voted by the Northeastern New Jersey Rent Advisory Board, without prior hearings. It would have covered all landlords owning four or fewer rental units and would have gone into effect even if the landlords had previously received increases.

Housing Expediter Tighe Woods reversed the board's decision because it was made without hearings, and was voted by less than a majority of the board. The Board has 10 members: seven attended the meeting, and four voted for the increase.

Carl Holderman, president of the New Jersey CIO, estimated that the jump would have benefited some 600,000 landlords

35 Groups Ask HST To Set Up FEPC

OFFICIALS of 35 national organizations have urged President Truman to create a Fair Employment Practices Commission by executive order.

Action stemmed from the National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference at Washington Mar. 1 and 2, which was attended by representatives of 79 organizations. The clearing house isn't authorized to pass resolutions or institute petitions, but 35 of the 79 organizations acted independently. Their petition was transmitted to the White House Apr. 6 by E. Raymond Wilson, clearing house chairman.

Supporters of the petition included representatives of the following CIO unions: Auto Workers, Textile Workers, Clothing Workers, Electrical Workers and Communications Workers.

MEANWHILE Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said in New York that Negro leaders were becoming dissatisfied with President Truman's recent record in civil rights matters.

He cited the President's reluctance to issue an order creating an FEPC, his failure to act on a five-point program presented by Negro leaders, and the appointments of Millard F. Caldwell, former Florida governor, as Federal Administrator of Civil Defense, and of Robert Ramspeck, former representative from Georgia, as chairman of the Civil Service Commission.

White described Caldwell as a "man with an unbroken record of hostility towards Negroes as citizens." He said he'd rejected an invitation from the civil defense boss to send four Negro leaders to the capital to participate in a conference.

He also said he didn't expect the Civil Service Commission's own "little FEPC" to be heard from very often during Ramspeck's regime. LPA

Profit Snatch Blamed For Apathy

IF THERE is a decline in public morale, such as mobilization officials have contended, it is due to the American people's "growing disgust" with profiteering and the domination of the defense program by profiteers.

That's what CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey told the D. C. League of Women Voters last week. Carey said:

"We of organized labor declare to the big business directors of our mobilization effort: give the American people confidence in the defense program and you will see how morale will rise.

"Give the American people really democratic leadership, give them the knowledge that they are really partners in democracy's defense and you will find that the morale problem no longer exists.

"Give the American people the conviction that there is genuine 'equality of sacrifice' and there will be no more indifference.

"Drive the profiteers out of Washington, drive them out of industry, establish price and rent controls that really are price and rent controls—do these things and you will never have to complain about public apathy."

Franco Target Of Growing Catholic Ire

THE SPANISH weekly paper Tu (Thou), official publication of the Workers Brotherhood of Catholic Action, has suspended publication in a dispute with the Franco government over the recent Barcelona strike.

The brotherhood is part of the government-dominated union setup. Its paper, however, has insisted on its right to print pretty much what it wants.

The disagreement with the Franco regime started over an editorial prepared for Tu declaring it obvious that the Barcelona strike was not caused by the Communists, as the government had contended. The editorial added that it is just as obvious that something must be done to give the Spanish worker a fair deal.

The censorship refused to permit publication of the editorial. Rather than bow, the brotherhood suspended publication of its paper.

Before and during the civil war Barcelona was regarded as a stronghold of the Socialists, rather than of the Communists or Franco's Falangists.

A story in the New York Times of April 8 said the dispute between Tu and Franco was the second recent indication that the Catholic Church, to which practically all Spaniards belong, is taking an increasingly dim view of the Franco regime.

On Mar. 10, it said, the magazine Ecclesia, organ of the Catholic Action movement in Spain, demanded that the government do more than merely talk about the difficulties of combatting inflation.

Univ. Of Cal. Loyalty Oath Ruled Invalid, 18 Professors Winning Reinstatement

IN A ringing decision, California's Third District Court of Appeals has held that the Univ. of California's special non-Communist oath violates the state constitution.

The court ordered the university to reinstate 18 professors who had been fired last Aug. 25 for refusal to take the oath, which required them to swear they are not members of the Communist Party or of any party seeking to overthrow the United States government.

The university has admitted that it knew of no Communist on the staff. The professors fought the case on grounds it limits their academic freedom.

All California state employes are required to take an oath of allegiance to the state and the nation.

The court ruled that this pledge is sufficient and "is the highest loyalty that can be demonstrated by any citizen . . . the exacting of any other test of loyalty would be antithetical to our fundamental conception of freedom.

"Any other conclusion would be to approve that which from the beginning of our government has been denounced as the most effective means by which one special brand of political or economic philosophy can entrench and perpetuate itself to the eventual exclusion of all others."

During the 14 months since the special oath has been required, friction developed on the faculty between its advocates and opponents. So many faculty members quit that the university is desperately in need of instructors.

Throughout the country teachers were aroused by the threat to their traditional academic freedom. The American Association of University Professors vigorously opposed the oath.

THE pledge had been recommended to the university's board of regents by university Pres. Robert Z. Sproul in an effort to head off action by the State Legislature.

John F. Neylan, president of the university board of regents and attorney for Publisher William R. Hearst, led the fight for the oath and for firing those who refused to take it.

A move made by Gov. Earl Warren and other members of the board to scrap the pledge lost by one vote. Sproul, who saw the harmful effects of the oath, changed his position and opposed it.

Md. Loyalty Oath Ruled Legal

The constitutionality of Maryland's Ober Act, which requires loyalty oaths from candidates for city and state offices, was upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court Apr. 12 in an unusual midweek action.

There was no formal opinion, but a statement was issued to which there were no dissents. It noted that a candidate need only make an oath that he isn't trying to overthrow the government or is a member of an organization engaged in such attempt.

During the argument in the Maryland Court of Appeals, it continued, Atty. Gen. Hall Hammond of Maryland promised to advise state authorities to accept affidavits.

"Under these circumstances and with this understanding," the statement concluded, "the judgment of the Maryland court is affirmed."

Anti-Red Oath Act Signed In Okla.

Oklahoma has joined the states requiring non-Communist oaths by state, county and municipal employes, and employes of school districts.

Gov. Johnston Murray has signed a bill requiring such employes to swear they are not Communists, do not belong to a Communist-front group, and would bear arms in defense of their country. All affected must sign by May 9 or be fired.

Minnesota Legislators Dish It Out, Can't Take It From Labor Papers

Minnesota's legislators, reveling in an anti-labor orgy without parallel in recent history, are pretty thin-skinned about it.

They are now trying to ram through a law which would make it a gross misdeameanor—a year in jail and/or $1000 fine—for any publication "falsely to state the vote or position" of any legislator.

They are upset by two labor publications—Minnesota Labor, the CIO bi-weekly newspaper, and Minnesota Facts, AFL pre-campaign pamphlet widely distributed among farmers.

The bill, whipped through by Roy Dunn, Republican majority leader, passed the House, 79 to 34. It now is in the Senate.

The labor searchlight on the legislators' votes in 1949 helped defeat 30 of them in the last election. The legislators apparently are afraid of what will happen next time.

State labor leaders have pointed out that their reports are taken from official Legislature records. Not a single legislator attacked, they point out, has sued for damages under the libel law.

The catch in the proposed law is, of course, the question of what a legislator's "position" is on any measure. Most of the Minnesota solons can be found on three or four sides of any issue at one time.

Ann Arbor Rent Lid Lifted, No Hearing

The Rent Advisory Board at Ann Arbor, Mich., voted 5 to 3 in a closed meeting to knock off rent controls from 8300 houses and 8500 rooms. Wilson White, head of the board, blew up when word of its secret action leaked out.

"All you'd have is a rat race," he said in denouncing demands for a public hearing. "Holding a hearing may be the democratic way to do it, but nothing could be proved."

The public was even madder than White. One reason was that landlords got a 25% rent boost only three months ago. Another is that White himself owns many of the dwellings that would be affected with elimination of controls.

Chicago CIO Ponders Wages, Prices, Taxes

THE CHICAGO Industrial Union Council marked another year of expanding community work at its sixth annual banquet and conference on Apr. 7.

More than 400 persons—representatives of CIO unions and of public and private community agencies — attended a day-long panel conference on "Wages, Prices and Taxes in 1951" and a banquet in the evening. The Welfare Council of Metropolitan Chicago was co-sponsor.

Alex Elson, former Office of Price Administration regional attorney, was moderator of the panel discussion.

Maynard Kreuger, associate professor of social science at the Univ. of Chicago, one of the participants, said that unless the expansion of bank credit is halted and Congress enacts equitable tax boosts as military expenditures increase, "no program of price control or wage control is going to work."

Marvin Miller, assistant research director of the CIO Steelworkers, maintained that inflation is not spurred by a wage increase which corresponds to an increase in production, or by "a deferred payment which goes into a pension fund instead of being spent now."

SAM JACOBS, of the CIO Auto Workers Dept. of Research and Education, declared that effective price control is impossible unless the staff in the field believes in what it is doing and the housewife has a published list of price ceilings to check against purchases.

The council presented eight Philip Murray Awards and the Chicago CIO Council Award.

Five Philip Murray Awards for outstanding community relations work went to local unions—Rubber Workers' Local 323 and Steelworkers' Locals 2608, 65, 1422 and 3485.

Philip Murray Awards in human relations, presented for the first time, went to Local 1006, Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, and Local 15, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employees Union.

The council's award for outstanding all-around service to the community was presented jointly to a husband and wife, Dr. Arthur G. Falls and Mrs. Lillian Proctor Falls, for their promotion of better human relations, improved housing and high standards of health and welfare services.

Council Pres. Albert J. Towers said the award was a "long overdue honor and a recognition of the debt that all of us have to the devoted and unselfish work of Dr. and Mrs. Falls in making our community a better place."

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, the banquet speaker, praised the Chicago Council for its community activities. He said that such a conference "should be part of the program of every CIO Council in the country."

"It is through such events that CIO demonstrates its solidarity with other groups and individuals who are working for a better, more democratic way of life," he said.

"There are still many places in our country where working people and community leaders cannot meet together as brothers regardless of race, creed or origin. But through the work of the CIO and others who believe as we do and who join in our efforts, these barriers between people are being broken down."

Seek Draft Exemption For Merchant Seamen

The Maritime Administration, an arm of the Dept. of Commerce, has urged that merchant seamen be deferred from the draft.

The request was in line with the demands of both maritime labor and ship operators. Presumably, deferment would be limited to active seamen as it was during World War II.

Dewey Gives Big Biz $600 Million of Jobless Aid Fund

GOV. DEWEY of New York, the hope of some Republicans who call themselves "liberal," turned two-thirds of the State's unemployment insurance reserve fund over to big employers last week.

On Apr. 10 he signed into law the Hughes-Brees Act, which installs in New York's unemployment compensation insurance the same merit-rating system that has turned things into a mess in every state where it has been tried.

By it he turned over to the biggest firms in the State some $600 million of the $900 million in the reserve fund—split between such industrial behemoths as General Motors, General Electric, Standard Oils of New York and New Jersey, big insurance companies and banks, and other large employers.

Get Off Cheap

In addition, the big shots get a reasonable guarantee that their unemployment compensation in the long run may cost them nothing—or so close to it as to be virtually meaningless. At the same time, the act serves notice on the smaller employers and those operating in seasonal industries that they may be called upon to pay for operating the whole unemployment compensation system.

The act was pushed through the Legislature by a big business plunderbund sparked by R. L. Hibbard, General Motors tax expert, and Harry G. Waltner, Jr., of Standard Oil of New Jersey, whose firms made the greatest profits in their history last year. They practically rewrote the unemployment compensation law.

The New York State CIO Council and the AFL New York State Federation of Labor joined forces in a bitter fight to defeat the legislation when it was still pending at Albany, but were defeated by the big business combine.

Credits Given

Basically, the new act takes the $600 million out of the jobless pay reserve fund—the property of the people of New York State—and turns it over to the big employers in the form of credits. Each employer has a separate account. Every unemployment compensation payment to a jobless worker is subtracted from the employer's account.

With the reserve pool destroyed, each employer's tax will depend on how much is paid in benefits to the jobless who have worked for him. If unemployed workers get comparatively few or low benefits, as would be the case with year-round, large employers, the tax will be lower. If the benefits are comparatively large, as in the case of small and seasonal employers, the tax will be increased.

It works this way: If an employer has four workers and lays off one, 25% of his work force would get unemployment compensation benefits. With such a large percentage of his employes on the streets, proponents of the Hughes-Brees Act contend, he should pay a higher tax. But if a firm that employs 1000 persons lays off one, only one-tenth of 1% of his staff collects. Therefore, they say, his tax should be lower.

And that's the way the new act makes it.

A complicated formula is set up which permits the largest corporations to pay the lowest taxes in good times, when the rainy day fund should really be growing because they can afford to build it up. And it forces small and seasonal employers to pay the highest taxes in bad times, when they can least afford it.

The CIO and AFL, in a joint statement, said the act leaves only "bits and pieces" of the "solid rampart protecting the wheels of industry and jobs." They describe it as "a wide open door to depression any time defense production starts to slow down."

The labor organizations are vitally concerned over the law because they view it as a danger to small employers that may well drive them out of the state and cut down the number of available jobs.

Of the 170,000 employers subject to unemployment compensation coverage, some 103,000, or about 60%, give jobs to 10 workers or fewer. If those employing 50 or less are added, the total becomes about 153,000, or 90% of all bosses covered.

It is the remaining 17,000 bosses who'll split the bulk of the $600 million steal.

What the new law means is that every employer will have good reason to fight every claim for unemployment benefits that may be filed by his laid-off workers, because the less that's paid out of his "account," the less he'll have to pay in. Workers will get hearings instead of benefits, the CIO and AFL warned.

It also means that employers will have an incentive to fight any improvement in benefits, and to support amendments making it tougher for the jobless to collect—for the same reason.

Other Clinkers

New York State has had a modified system of merit rating since 1945.

The new merit system and the $600 million steal aren't the only things wrong with the Hughes-Brees Act. It cuts payments to many workers under cover of increasing them to some.

It raises the maximum benefit from $26 to $30 weekly—which means nothing to people earning less than $52 a week. But it requires that a jobless worker have had covered employment in 20 weeks of the base period instead of 13 weeks, as under the old law—a gimmick that robs 15% of the State's workers of their eligibility for benefits.

On top of that, it requires the jobless workers to have earned an "average" of $15 a week, a demand that will exclude additional thousands from eligibility and make payments to other thousands smaller. Even if an employe works less than a full week, that week will be added in with his normal earnings to arrive at the "average."

The way this can work out makes it look pretty silly. If an irregular worker has a job for a few hours during each of the required 20 weeks and earns in all the minimum of $300, he can collect benefits when he loses his job. But if another has 19 weeks of full employment and earns, say, $2000, he can't collect a dime.

Unions See Peril

The CIO and AFL claim this formula throws workers out of the benefit system more rapidly during a period of economic decline, when they would need benefits most.

Even if the federal government were inclined to fight the $600 million steal or the depriving of thousands of workers of the right to benefits, it couldn't do much.

The notorious Knowland Amendment to the Social Security Act revisions of 1950 compels the U. S. to keep up payments to states failing to meet adequate standards until the dispute is cleared through the courts—a process of three years at best.

N. J. CIO Hits 2 Bills As Aiding Tax Fraud

The New Jersey CIO Council is opposing two bills before the state Legislature which, it says, would encourage employer tax fraud and discourage collection of unemployment and sickness benefits by workers entitled to them.

Harry Kranz, legislative director of the council, said that the bills would cause unemployed or sick workers to receive reduced weekly benefits despite a proposed increase in the maximum weekly payments.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer had the pleasure of attending and addressing the conventions of both the United Automobile Workers in Cleveland, O., and the Communications Workers of America in Grand Rapids, Mich. These were both great gatherings reflecting the CIO in action. While at the UAW convention, the writer met and talked with some of the workers who have been able to retire as a result of UAW contracts with the automotive industry. These retired workers are just a few of the many who will in the future benefit by CIO insistence upon security for those who contribute so much to their industry and country.

Allan Haywood

I observed at this UAW convention more unity than ever heretofore. Pres. Walter Reuther is to be complimented on his fine work of knitting together a tremendous organization. The program adopted by the convention will go far to making the UAW an even greater and powerful force.

R. J. Thomas and Richard Leonard, former UAW president and vice-president respectively, were presented to the convention.

The CWA convention was a real classic. The issues before the delegates were debated cleanly and wholesomely. It was a wonderful feeling to watch the young men and women of the telephone industry stand up and discuss and express their views and feelings. These workers are determined to make the CWA-CIO one of the biggest and best unions in this country. They voted for establishing a two-level structure, which will mean a simpler, stronger, more closely knit organization. The delegates also voted to raise the union dues and per capita tax.

All top officers were reelected. An executive board of 11 district directors and the five top union officers was also elected.

The writer then went on to Chicago, where he attended and spoke during a banquet held by the Chicago Industrial Union Council. The banquet was held for various rank-and-file civic and organizational committees that meet annually to discuss important community problems. These committees consist of all representatives of communities, not just CIO members.

At the end of all-day sessions, a banquet is held to present awards to the outstanding local union for exceptional service to the community. This year's individual award was unique in that it was presented to a man and wife team, Dr. Arthur G. Falls and Lillian Proctor Falls.

This work by the Chicago Council shows the active part CIO plays in community life. The CIO is interested in preserving the American way of life, and this interest is expressed at all levels. The banquet was presided over by Secy. Al Towers and Reg. Dir. Michael Mann. A very nice affair, well attended by civic and charitable groups.

Reg. Dir. Mann reports that in a representation election at the John Gillen Co., Cicero, Ill., the workers voted 35 to 13 in favor of the CIO Steelworkers. The following union security elections were also reported: Parrish-Alford Fence and Machine Co. (subsidiary of Northwestern Steel & Wire Co.), Rocky Falls, Ill., USA-CIO 156, against 7; Ostberg Seed Co., Chicago, Ill., USA-CIO 31, against 3; Otten Manufacturing Co., Chicago, USA-CIO 32, against 1; Hospital Liquids, Inc., Chicago, USA-CIO 39, against 1; Northwestern Steel & Wire Co., Sterling, Ill., USA-CIO 1314, against 143; Chicago Expansion Bolt Co., Chicago, USA-CIO 22, against 0; Chicago Pump Co., Chicago, USA-CIO 138, against 2; McAlear Manufacturing Co., Chicago, USA-CIO 36, against 3, and Schneider Metal Co., Cicero, Ill., USA-CIO 43, against 1.

Fleet Perrine, organizational director of the CIO Rubber Workers, reports the following union shop elections won: Local 25, Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., Cumberland, Md., 1075 yes, 132 no; Local 336, Firestone Tire Rubber Co., Pottstown, Pa., 1408 yes, 132 no.

Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports that in a representation election at the North Hudson Woodcraft Co., Dolgeville, N. Y., the IUE-CIO was victorious by a vote of 98 to 49 for no union. The campaign was conducted by Martin Stanton and Harold Martin.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports the following representation elections: Baltimore Brick Co., Baltimore, Md., United Stone & Allied Workers 75, against 43; Hillemic Brothers (Cafeteria in Bethlehem steel mill), Sparrows Point, Md., Steelworkers 51, against 11; Cafeteria Workers (Sparrows Point Pipe & Wire Mill), Steelworkers 19, against 3. Rep. Joe Healey was in charge of the Baltimore Brick Co. campaign. The following union shop elections were also held; Wolfe and Mann Co., Shipbuilding Workers, 67, against 4; Tenney Engineering Co., IUMSWA-CIO 78, against 10.

Pres. Harry Sayre, United Paperworkers, reports that the UPA-CIO won a major victory in winning a representation election at the Fleming & Sons Paper Mill, Dallas, Tex., by a vote of 174 to 118 against.

Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports that in a representation election at the McCrory Chain Store, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., the CIO-RWDSU won by a vote of 33 to 2 against.

Al Hartnett, secretary-treasurer of IUE-CIO, reports winning the following representation elections: Kool-Aire, St. Paul, Minn., IUE-CIO 57, no union 3; engineering unit of Federal Telephone Co. Communications Laboratory, Nutley, N. J., IUE-CIO 120, UOPWA 38, void 8, challenged 6.

Rep. W. H. Sefton of the Steelworkers, reports that the USA-CIO won an important election victory at the Macassa Gold Mine, Kirkland Lake, Ont., by the following vote: eligible 263, USA-CIO 149, Mine Mill 73, spoiled ballots 30. The victory is key to 10 other mines in this location.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports two important representation election victories for CIO Oil Workers at the Standard Oil Co. of California, El Segundo, Calif., production unit, Local 547 OWIU-CIO 539, IUPW 411; electricians' unit, Local 547 OWIU-CIO 21, IUPW 7, AFL 4. OWIU Reg. Dir. Charles Armin was in charge of this campaign. DeShetler also reports that the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union won a representation election at three Federal Department Stores, Los Angeles, by a vote of 27 to 0 against. Bus. Mgr. Leonard Levy of Local 55-D was in charge of the campaign.

Erasure Spoils NLRB Ballot

In a unanimous decision, the National Labor Relations Board ruled April 8 that a marred ballot in a representation election is void.

An election involving the CIO Steelworkers at the Whitinsville (Mass.) Spinning Ring Co. resulted in 39 votes for the union, 38 against, and one challenged ballot. That one showed an erasure in the "yes" (for CIO) box and a cross in the "no" box. The company claimed it was a vote against the union and the election a tie. The board held the ballot invalid and directed the company to bargain with the union.

House Slashes Voice Of America Funds 90%

THE HOUSE voted on Apr. 11 to strangle the Voice of America—48 hours after an impartial commission had urged Congress to give it the money it needs for an all-out war of ideas.

On recommendation of its Appropriations Committee, the House voted to slash the supplemental $97.5 million the State Dept. had asked to expand its facilities for the "Campaign of Truth" by 90% — down to $9,533,939.

The money was listed in a supplemental appropriation bill representing House action on numerous requests by federal agencies for additional funds for use until the new fiscal year starts July 1. The House tentatively approved the slashed Voice appropriation on Apr. 9, gave it final approval the next day and sent the bill to the Senate.

AT NEITHER session did the administration make a major fight to recapture any of the money. Leaders said the fight will be made in the Senate, where the Voice is more highly regarded. A greater appropriation there would throw the bill into conference with the House, with a compromise probably inevitable.

The whole appropriations bill was slashed by 43%—a record—to $487.5 million.

The Appropriations Committee view, which the House accepted, was that the State Dept. information programs are poor and the planning vague. It blamed increased costs of construction for which the Voice sought additional funds on "lack of proper planning, poor management and avoidable delays in the execution of plans and contracts."

THE STATE DEPT. contended that definite plans, in some cases, could not be made public without endangering the effectiveness of Voice programs. In other cases, it said, they had to wait for appropriations before they could be fully developed.

Refusal of the plea for additional funds undoubtedly heartened the Kremlin, which has gone to great extremes to jam programs beamed to audiences behind the Iron Curtain.

It also ran counter to the recommendations of the Advisory Commission on Information, which was set up by Congress in 1948 to recommend information policies and programs to the State Dept. Its semi-annual report was made public between the time the Appropriations Committee made its recommendation and the House acted.

ASSERTING that the United States is in a "more dangerous" situation than six months ago, the committee said:

"Therefore we strongly urge that Congress keep right on providing enough ammunition and manpower with which to wage the war of ideas. To cut down the information program at this critical moment would be to court new disasters.

"Although the tide of Communist influence in western Europe has been turned back, it is manifest that in the vast uncommitted areas of the world, the United States has a long way to go in clarifying its motives and its meaning to peoples. Such clarification requires a major information program. We must not stop or slow up now."

The commission is headed by Edwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor.

U.S. Closing Low Rent Housing Units To Protect Luxury Investment

FRONT ROYAL, VA., workers can see for themselves the lack of overall policy in the government housing agencies.

The lack which comes partly from having to administer different programs approved by different Congresses, and partly from sheer lack of imagination in the agencies themselves.

The situation affects hundreds of members of the CIO Textile Workers' Union employed by the American Viscose Corp.

There is in Front Royal a 120-unit demountable housing project built during the war with government funds. There is also a large luxury-type apartment project near the plant built after the war, with a government-guaranteed mortgage. Rentals in the demountable project average around $35 a month. Rentals in the newer project are twice as high. In addition, the apartments are too small for the average textile worker's family.

The demountable project has community facilities—schools and playgrounds and stores. The newer and more expensive one has none.

As a result, the new project is only about 30% occupied.

The town's Housing Committee includes the realtor who owns the new project. TWUA is also represented on the committee.

At a meeting to which the TWUA was not invited, the Housing Committee voted to recommend that 120 of the demountable units be demolished. TWUA objected. But at this point the Housing and Home Finance Agency stepped in and issued eviction notices to the 120 families, effective May 1.

THE HHFA is supposed to protect the government's investment in the new project—and the government will have to pay for the project if the realtor defaults on his mortgage because he can't rent it. Therefore TWUA sees in the eviction move a deliberate attempt to force tenants out of the demountables and into the new project.

HHFA, however, says there will be no evictions if "hardship" can be proved.

Meanwhile, quite a few textile workers have moved their families out of the demountable project because of fear of eviction. Not a single one has moved into the new apartments.

Commies' Confusion Grows & Grows

Communist faces sometimes get as red as their flags, what with the zigs and the zags of the party line and the fact that sometimes one left hand doesn't tell the other what it's doing.

West Germany: The Bavarian Communist Party had a convention scheduled for Munich.
